I Alone Level-Up

Only I Level Up • Solo Leveling • 나 혼자만 레벨업

10 years ago, after “the Gate” that connected the real world with the monster world opened, some of the ordinary, everyday people received the power to hunt monsters within the Gate. They are known as “Hunters”. However, not all Hunters are powerful. My name is Sung Jin-Woo, an E-rank Hunter. I’m someone who has to risk his life in the lowliest of dungeons, the “World’s Weakest”. Having no skills whatsoever to display, I barely earned the required money by fighting in low-leveled dungeons... at least until I found a hidden dungeon with the hardest difficulty within the D-rank dungeons! In the end, as I was accepting death, I suddenly received a strange power, a quest log that only I could see, a secret to leveling up that only I know about! If I trained in accordance with my quests and hunted monsters, my level would rise. Changing from the weakest Hunter to the strongest S-rank Hunter!

Part 0: Prologue

[Daily Quest is now available.]

An articulate voice of a young female.

This was definitely not a game. Of course, it wasn't a dream, either.

But, her voice definitely resounded within my head. Hell, I could even see the quest window floating in mid-air, too.

‘Could it be... Even today?’

While fervently praying in my head, I cautiously opened the information window.

Ttiring....

[Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong]

Press-up, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

Sit-up, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

Squat, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

Running, 10 km: Incomplete (0/10)

As soon as I got to confirm the contents of the Daily Quest, I began cussing out reflexively.

“Awww... Just how many days has it been already?!”

Part 1: Rank E Hunter

Rank E Hunter, Seong Jin-Woo.

No matter where he went, this title always followed him around.

Jin-Woo's overall strength was almost the same as a regular human being.

With the exception of being a bit stronger and his wounds healing slightly faster, Jin-Woo was about the same as regular people in every other aspect.

It was par for the course then, that he'd always end up getting injured. He nearly died several times, too.

Of course, it wasn't as if Seong Jin-Woo liked being a Hunter.

The work was dangerous, others made fun of him, and to confound the matters even further, the pay was pretty pathetic, as well.

If it weren't for the medical aid paid out by the Hunter Association to the Hunters in their "payroll", he'd have turned in his hunter licence and quit by now, and live his life like a regular person.

Unfortunately, someone like Seong Jin-Woo, in his mid-twenties and lacking in any tangible job skills, there was no other way but to remain as a Hunter if he wanted to pay for his mother's hospital fee of millions of won every month.

Should one say that he had no choice in the matter?

That was why, even though he didn't want to, he simply had to participate in the raid supervised by the Association.

Hunters operating within the same area tended to know each other pretty well. In the event of a Gate opening up, all the Hunters in that district would be asked to come, that's why.

The Hunters who had arrived early sipped on the cups of coffee handed out by the Association's employee and shared cordial greetings with each other.

"Oh, hey. Mister Kim, Over here. Here."

"Oh? Mister Park, what are you doing here? I thought you were giving up on being a Hunter?"

"Well, that... My wife is pregnant with our second child."

"Hahahaha, is that so. Yeah, for a Hunter to earn big in one go, participating in a raid is the best, isn't it."

Mister Kim jovially burst out in laughter. Mister Park followed suit with a sheepish chuckle, before asking Kim.

"By the way, why do I feel like that the Association is calling on us less and less nowadays? Did the number of Gates decrease or something?"

"Eii, of course not. That's only because the Guilds are getting all worked up over clearing the Gates; it's got nothing to do with the Association. I hear that various Guilds are jumping in with both feet since there is big profit involved in this whole thing."

"Well, in that case, since this raid is being supervised by the Association, it should be safe, no?"

Mister Park took a glance around as if he was getting nervous.

If a Guild was not involved today, that meant there wasn't enough profit to be had, and if there wasn't enough profit to be had, then that could only mean that this particular Gate's difficulty would be low.

Of course, nothing in this world was 100% absolute.

It wasn't just Mister Park; other Hunters were nervously glancing around as well.

"Hmm. I wonder..."

Mister Kim finished the rest of his coffee while avoiding answering his friend, before spotting a certain someone and raised his hand in happiness.

"Uh! He's here. Hey, Mister Seong!! Mister Seong!"

Other Hunters also displayed joy at discovering that young man.

"Ah, hello."

It was none other than Seong Jin-Woo.

Jin-Woo performed a simple nod of the head at the joyous Mister Kim and walked by.

After making sure Jin-Woo was well out of earshot, Mister Kim began sniggering while confidently speaking up.

"So, Jin-Woo showed up. Then it's going to okay today, too."

Mister Park's eyes widened up and he hurriedly asked Kim.

"What was that? Is that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo really strong?"

"Ahh. Right, of course, you wouldn't know who he is. He's a Hunter who started working shortly after you left, you see. However, every Hunter here knows who that kid is by now."

"He's really that strong? Wait, why is he working for the Association, then? Why not for a Guild or as a freelancer?"

Kim sniggered some more before narrowing his eyes.

"You know what that guy's nickname is?"

“How should I know that? C’mon, man. Just tell me already.”

“Humanity’s weakest weapon.”

“...Weakest? Not something like, the ultimate weapon?”

“Dude, that’s the nickname for the rank S Hunter Choi Jong-In. That kid is the ‘weakest weapon’. I’m pretty sure he’s the weakest Hunter in the Republic of Korea.”

“Really?”

Park began frowning deeply.

Why would other Hunters greet this Seong Jin-Woo if he was really that weak? After all, didn’t they need someone to trust their backs if things went south?

Park couldn’t really understand the reactions of other Hunters.

When Park’s head tilted this way and that, Kim chuckled and poked the side of Park with his elbow.

“Eii! The raids Seong Jin-Woo participates in will only have low difficulty because he’s so weak. The Association would never entrust him with a tough job, don’t you get that? They don’t want to see him get killed, right?”

Only then did Park’s expression brightened up.

“R-right. Yeah.”

His wife was deeply worried about him since this would be his first raid in quite a while. Honestly, even he himself was worried, too. However, now that he listened to Kim’s words, he felt like a weight was lifted off his mind.

Kim continued on.

“That guy, there was a rumour not too long ago that said, he got injured participating in a raid of a rank E Gate and spent a week in the hospital.”

“A Hunter got injured by a rank E Gate?”

“That’s right. No one expected to see a Hunter getting injured during a rank E Gate raid, so they didn’t even bring along a Healer, apparently!”

“That’s why he spent a week in a hospital?! Pu-hahaha!”

When Park began guffawing too loudly, Kim hurriedly hushed him.

“Stop it, man. Mister Seong might hear you.”

“Aigoo. I didn’t think of that.”

Park cautiously checked Jin-Woo's reactions as he continued to giggle.

Thankfully, the distance was far enough and the youth didn't seem to have heard them.

Of course, they were mistaken.

'I can hear everything, you geezers.'

A bitter smile formed on Jin-Woo as he tried hard to ignore them. At times like today, he couldn't help but blame his unusually-acute sense of hearing.

It seemed that he arrived too early and the raid was yet to commence.

'Did I arrive too early?'

Jin-Woo looked around to while away the waiting time, spotted the Association employee handing out warm coffee, and walked closer.

"Can I get a cup of coffee as well?"

"Oh. Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim... I'm really sorry, but we ran out of coffee just now."

"....."

The cold Winter breeze brushed past the tip of his nose.

Jin-Woo quietly wiped his nose with his index finger.

What a sad day it was, for the coffee to run out as soon as it was his turn to get one.

"Why do you persist on being a Hunter, Mister Seong Jin-Woo?"

"I'm sorry."

Jin-Woo lowered his head and apologised.

The young, beautiful girl using healing magic in front of Jin-Woo, Yi Ju-Hui showed how unhappy she was with a pouting expression.

"I'm not trying to get you to apologise, you know? I'm only worried about you. If you continue fighting this way, sooner or later you'll be faced with a truly dangerous situation."

Jin-Woo glanced past Yi Ju-Hui's shoulders and took a look at other Hunters fighting over yonder.

When one entered through the Gate, one would arrive at a place called 'dungeon'. The rank of this particular dungeon should be around D.

A dozen-plus Hunters were taking care of the monsters inside this dungeon without so much as breaking a sweat.

Unfortunately, for a rank E, such a feat was nearly impossible.

Normally, the job of healing the injured Hunters from the back fell on the Healers. Since he always got injured during raids, Jin-Woo was rather well-known among the Healers.

Yi Ju-Hui cautiously asked him.

“Perchance, is there a reason why you can’t give up being a Hunter?”

Jin-Woo resolutely shook his head.

He didn’t want to reveal anything personal to other people.

“I’m only doing this as a hobby. If I don’t do this, I’ll probably die of boredom, actually.”

Yi Ju-Hui pouted even more.

“If you continue on with this hobby of yours, soon you’d be raiding a dungeon in the netherworld, you know?”

Jin-Woo was taken off-guard from her remark and ended up chuckling out loudly.

Thanks to that, Yi Ju-Hui’s nagging intensified.

“Ah, ahh!! Don’t laugh! Don’t! Your injuries might get worse!!”

Jin-Woo giggled before asking her.

“Where did you even learn to say stuff like that?”

“What do you mean, where? It’s from Mister Kim waaay over there.”

“Aigoo, that ahjussi really went and did it, didn’t he....”

As they chatted and laughed, his treatment was almost over.

It was already too late by then, though. It seemed that the raid was pretty much over now.

Jin-Woo’s expression hardened.

‘I only killed a single monster today.’

A rank E creature, no less. Seong Jin-Woo began fidgeting with the rank E magic crystal in his hand.

The lowest grade magic crystal from a rank E monster fetched less than hundred thousand won. For something he bet his life to earn, it was a pathetically small amount. (TL: Just over $88.)

‘A magic crystal from a rank C monster can sell for over ten million won, though....’ (TL: $8830+)

Too bad, a rank E Hunter such as himself couldn’t even attempt to kill a monster with a rank as high as C.

Out of the blue, someone shouted out.

“Uh? Hey, there’s another entrance over here.”

The nearby Hunters rushed over there.

“Huh, it’s true.”

“There really is another path?”

Just as that Hunter said, there was an entrance hidden within the dungeon itself.

“A dual dungeon, is it... So, such a thing actually exists for real....”

Mister Song, possessing over ten years’ experience as a Hunter, looked into the hidden entrance and displayed how surprised he was.

The interior of the hidden, cave-like passage was dark and nothing could be seen. Mister Song activated his speciality, flame magic, and tossed it further forward into the passage.

The flame flew forward and illuminated the interior. The passageway seemed to go on forever. Soon enough, the flame lost its forward momentum, fell to the ground and smouldered for a bit before flickering out of existence.

The passage was shrouded in darkness once more.

“Hmm..... Everyone, gather around. Let’s have a meeting.”

The unspoken leader of this raid, Mister Song, called for other Hunters to gather around. Jin-Woo’s treatment was over by then, so he and Yi Ju-Hui also joined in.

Song spoke up while sweeping his gaze over the gathered Hunters.

“As you know very well, a Gate will not close unless the dungeon’s boss is killed. Since the Gate itself is still intact even though we took care of all the monsters here, that can only mean that the boss is beyond that passageway.”

Song pointed towards the hidden entrance.

Hunters exchanged meaningful glances and nodded their heads. No one could disagree with that notion.

Song continued on.

“Now normally, we’re supposed to relay this information back to the Association and wait for their decision first, but... But, if we do that, we might end up handing over the task of killing the boss to other Hunters, and our takings for today’s raid would decrease by a lot.”

The expressions of the Hunters crumpled.

Park’s face hardened more than anyone else since he needed a lot of cash for his wife’s pregnancy.

‘Postnatal care eats up so much cash nowadays, you know...’

At this rate, there’d be no meaning behind him risking his life to participate in this raid.

“That’s why I’d prefer if we took care of the boss before leaving this dungeon... So, what do you all think?”

Hunters fell into a deep contemplation.

“....”

“....”

The truth was, no one here could figure out the current situation and so, their safety could not be guaranteed. However, the difficulty of this particular dungeon proved to be very low.

So, the hidden dungeon within it couldn’t have been that difficult, either.

“Hmm, hmm.”

Song coughed to draw everyone’s attention to himself.

“Since we have seventeen people here, let’s put this to a vote, shall we? Once the decision has been made, no one complains. So? How about it?”

Others nodded their heads after hearing Song’s suggestion. No one was disagreeing with him.

“I vote for going ahead.”

Song raised his hand.

And then, other Hunters began raising their hands one by one.

“Me too.”

“Count me in as well.”

Park was the first to raise his hand, followed shortly after by Kim and a few other Hunters.

Of course, those disagreeing were plentiful, too.

“I feel that it’d be better to wait for the Association’s decision.”

The two opposing camps were neck and neck and eventually, the final votes came down to Jin-Woo and Yi Ju-Hui.

“I’m sorry....”

Yi Ju-Hui bowed to Song and added her vote to ‘retreat’ camp.

And so, the vote count for ‘go ahead’ and ‘retreat’ was at 8:8.

A deadlock.

Song asked the hesitant Seong Jin-Woo next.

“And you, Mister Seong?”

REPORT

Everything now depended on Seong Jin-Woo's decision.

Jin-Woo's fingers grasped tight the rank E magic crystal in his hand as he took a glance next to him.

Yi Ju-Hui was shaking her head at him. It looked like she was deeply worried.

Actually, Jin-Woo was worried inwardly as well. Now normally, he would never try to take on any unnecessary risk. Not only did he lack the abilities to do so, but he was also not brave enough, too.

However, Jin-Woo had a younger sister who was about to become a university student in the coming months.

'I've no money saved up....'

Currently, Jin-Woo was twenty-four years old.

He was at an age where he should be concentrating on his academic pursuits, but he gave up on that dream because, well, he had no money. He sure as hell didn't want his little sister to go through the same sacrifice, the same pain as he did.

Right now, every cent was precious to him.

It wasn't only Mister Park who needed a big score today.

Jin-Woo raised his hand up high.

"I vote for going ahead."

It was then, he heard a soft sigh of resignation coming from his side.

Part 2: The Dual Dungeon

The passageway went on and on forever.

In front, Mister Song and other strong Hunters had taken the lead. Song had summoned a small flame on top of his palm to illuminate the way forward.

Mister Kim asked him as he walked alongside Song.

"We've walked really far, haven't we? Shouldn't we consider the time we need to escape from here as well?"

“How long have we been walking?”

Kim looked at his wristwatch.

“Around.... forty minutes.”

“A Gate shuts down completely one hour after the boss is killed, so we have a window of twenty minutes left or so.”

“If we can’t see the boss in the next twenty minutes, I suggest that we should just give up.”

“I guess so.”

Song nodded his head for a while, before pointing to his back with his thumb.

“Mister Kim? It’s dark out in front, so why don’t you position yourself behind me?”

Kim stared at Song’s flames for a second or two, before he wordlessly pulled out his smartphone and switched on the screen.

And then, the passageway got illuminated rather brightly.

Song alternated his gaze between his flame and the smartphone, before he too wordlessly began searching for his own phone.

The very back of the group was the spot reserved for Seong Jin-Woo, who was injured pretty badly not too long ago, and Yi Ju-Hui, who didn’t possess any combat skills whatsoever.

Jin-Woo scratched the back of his neck.

“Pardon me, I... I’m really sorry.”

“About what?”

“About, you know, dragging you here against your wishes.”

“I’m fine with it, so you don’t need to mind me.”

Jin-Woo cautiously studied Ju-Hui’s expression. She definitely did not look fine at all.

Jin-Woo tilted his head this way and that while trying to read her mood better, before he asked her again, even more cautious than before.

“Are you... really fine?”

That prompted Ju-Hui to shift her gaze towards him.

“Of course I’m not. Are you of a sane mind?! If you were stabbed a couple of inches higher, you’d have a hole in your heart by now! And, what about those injuries on your arms and legs? I worked so hard to heal you somehow, yet you wish to throw yourself into yet another dungeon?? Plus, you don’t even know where we’re going, too!”

She spoke so quickly that Jin-Woo felt like his mind was getting numb from hearing her.

However, she was right about everything.

If it weren’t for the presence of the outstanding Healer ranked B, Yi Ju-Hui, Jin-Woo wouldn’t have been able to carry on living unaffected, never mind working as a Hunter. It was a small wonder why such high ranked and hard-to-find Healers were valued so greatly within the halls of the Association.

‘Wait, now that I think about it, I owe Miss Ju-Hui a lot, don’t I?’

Ju-Hui was a Healer-type Hunter, a rarest of the rare breeds.

Not only that, she was a genius ranked at ‘B’ as well.

The Association always asked her to heal the injured Hunters whenever a Gate opened up. And whenever Jin-Woo participated in a raid, he’d almost always end up sitting down next to her.

“Are you in pain? Please hold on for a little while longer.”

“Haven’t I seen you before....? By any chance, are you the person from the last time?”

“You’re injured again?”

“It’s like, we’re running into each other quite often nowadays, isn’t it?”

“You said that your name is Mister Jin-Woo? Well, that... Is it going to be alright?”

“Maybe, uhm, this life of a Hunter doesn’t really suit you....”

“...You’re here again.”

“Show me your arm. No, not that one. Use bandages on that arm. I meant the other one with the bone fracture.”

At the moment, it was way past the point of Jin-Woo feeling grateful for everything she had done, and firmly into the territory of him being apologetic for inconveniencing her.

When Jin-Woo looked dispirited, Ju-Hui also felt a bit bad about scolding him just now and her attitude softened up considerably.

“You’re really sorry?”

“Yes, I am.”

Ju-Hui fell into a deep contemplation for a bit, before she began gazing at him with the corner of her eyes and her lips slowly arched up.

“If you’re really sorry, then... how about you buy me dinner sometime?”

Now that was a totally unexpected offer.

Jin-Woo looked at her with an expression of surprise and found a teasing smile etched on her face like a teenage girl.

‘A teen girl, huh.....’

The truth was, Ju-Hui was still a young girl who had barely entered her twenties.

Didn’t she say that she’d be twenty-one next year?

If her long hair was replaced with something shorter, and her current attire was swapped out for a school uniform, she’d completely look like high school senior.

His wandering mind pictured the image of Ju-Hui in a school uniform and his face reddened up somewhat.

When Jin-Woo hesitated with his answer, Ju-Hui’s cheeks began puffing up like a balloon.

“What the... You don’t want to buy me dinner?”

It happened, right then.

Suddenly, it became quite hectic out in front.

“We found it!!”

Jin-Woo and Ju-Hui’s gazes automatically shifted to the front.

And they saw a huge stone door blocking the passage.

Hunters immediately surrounded this door.

“What is this? Why is there a door at the end of the cavern?”

“Have we ever encountered a boss chamber with a door before?”

“This is definitely the first time, I’m sure of it.”

“This... Doesn’t this feel strangely dangerous?”

Hunters began to express their doubts and fears one at the time.

Since their own lives were on the line here, they had to be cautious and meticulous.

However, if one were to become too cautious, one would end up failing to grasp the heaven-sent opportunity in the first place. Mister Song figured this was one such case.

“Are you all planning to return empty-handed after coming this far?”

Song placed his hands on the door.

“If that’s what you want, knock yourselves out. I’m pushing ahead, even if it means I’ll be going alone.”

Song was a rank C Hunter with ten years of experience.

If it weren’t for his age, which was over sixty, he’d be making a killing in a big Guild by now thanks to his excellent skills.

And when a Hunter like that voiced his opinion with such confidence, others began to feel less anxious than before.

“Wait a minute.”

A couple of Hunters began recalling rumours of dual dungeons.

“I heard that there are incredible treasures hidden within dual dungeons.”

“Yeah, I heard that a certain small to medium Guild found a dual dungeon and grew into a large Guild almost overnight.”

“Monsters inside a dungeon always possess roughly the similar ranks no matter where they are located, so the hunt itself should not be too difficult...”

What if there were incredible treasures hidden with the dual dungeon just as the rumours said, and the monsters beyond this door were about the same difficulty as the rank D, E creatures they fought until now?

‘I can’t let that old man monopolise all the treasure.’

‘No freaking way.’

‘Postnatal care, the school fee for the first born kid, and let’s not forget, this month’s rent is almost due, too....’

The opinions of the Hunters were now on the same page.

Jin-Woo, too, steeled himself.

‘I can’t return home with just a single rank E magic crystal. At a bare minimum, I gotta kill a rank D, no, one more rank E monster!!’

It didn’t even have to be a monster, too.

‘If it’s treasure instead....’

Treasures or rare loot found in a dungeon would normally be divided equally among all the participants in a raid. It was quite a different way of sharing the rewards where one could only take possession of magic crystals one procured by themselves.

‘If we score big today, then things might improve at home for a while.’

Jin-Woo nervously swallowed down his saliva.

Ju-Hui saw his determined expression and asked him.

“Is that how the expression of someone who’s a Hunter as a hobby looks like?”

Jin-Woo shrugged his shoulders.

“Who’d bet their lives in their main line of profession nowadays? Unless it’s a hobby, obviously.”

“.....Eh?”

Just as a dumbfounded expression formed on Ju-Hui’s face, Song pushed the dungeon’s door and it creaked open.

There must’ve been some sort of mechanism installed on the heavy-looking door, since the physical strength of a sixty-year-old man was enough to easily open it.

Slam!

Now that the door was wide open, the huge open interior revealed itself. Hunters hurriedly rushed in.

“Let’s go in as well.”

Jin-Woo feared that he’d fall behind, so he grasped Ju-Hui’s hand and took the lead.

“Ah....”

Ju-Hui’s face reddened slightly as she followed after him.

As soon as Hunters sat foot inside, flames erupted on the numerous torches packed tightly on the walls all at the same time. Thanks to that, the interior brightened up considerably.

“What’s the heck? The lights came on by themselves?”

“First time seeing a dungeon like this one.”

“Something’s.... different about this place.”

Hunters cautiously studied their surroundings. The overall atmosphere of the place was similar to that of an ancient temple.

Not only that, an old and somewhat decrepit temple, something that might be buried and hidden beneath the ground; moss and weed could be seen sporadically on the floor, walls and the ceiling.

Several Hunters shrunk back and shuddered slightly.

“it’s a bit creepy in here, isn’t it?”

“Doesn’t it feel like we’re being watched by someone?”

Leaving behind the scared Hunters, the three, four strongest of the group went in deeper.

“Tsk! Don’t say something that might jinx us, will ya?”

“Let’s end this quickly and go home.”

The interior was nonsensically huge. The chamber was shaped like a giant dome. It was as large as several Olympic stadiums, the one found in Seoul, were put together – no, maybe it was even bigger than that.

However, one couldn’t help but feel that it was still inadequate.

The reason for that was rather obvious.

“That.... that thing over there....”

“N-no freaking way that thing’s the boss, right?”

In the deepest part of the dome, something so logic-defyingly humongous sat on a throne just as big as itself. It was none other than a huge stone statue of a god!

“Oh, my god....”

“Wow.”

Shocked gasps leaked out from the Hunters.

The first image popping up in Jin-Woo’s head was of the Statue of Liberty in New York. If that statue sat down on a chair, wouldn’t it be as big as that statue of the unknown god?

Well, Liberty was a woman, while the one sitting on the throne was a dude, though.

‘No, hang on. Maybe it’s even bigger than that...’

Hunters began nervously swallowing their saliva near the foot of the god statue. The taut and heavy apprehension and anxiety were clear to see on their faces as they worried about this statue being the dungeon’s boss.

‘.....’

However, the statue did not budge an inch.

What a fortunate thing that was.

“Whew....”

Even Song spat out a sigh of relief.

“Okay, everyone. Spread out.”

Now that they found some leeway, Hunters split among themselves and began searching around the vicinity.

“I don’t think there’s a single monster in here.”

“You think so, too?”

“Never mind a monster, I can’t even see a single bug, too.”

The chamber of the stone god statue might have been massive, yet its actual inner structure was on the simpler side. On the walls, countless torches could be found there. And in front of these walls, more stone statues, slightly taller than a human being, stood tall and unmoving. There were lots of them here as well, found at a certain distance from one another.

“They are all rather beautiful, aren’t they?”

Objects held by each of the stone statues were varied and different.

Some held weapons, there was one with a book, some carried musical instruments, and even torches.

“They are like statues of a holy temple or something.”

Song finished what Kim wanted to say.

“Mm?”

Then, Song found something beneath his feet.

“This... Isn’t this a magic formation?”

He found a magic formation that he had never seen before located in the middle of this temple.

It was then.

“Excuse me, Mister Song? Ahjussi, something’s written here. Can you come over here and take a look?”

One of the Hunters discovered a statue that was different from others and called out to Song.

Song stopped studying the magic formation and got up from the floor. Other Hunters all gathered around the statue Song was headed off to.

Only this statue featured a pair of wings and carried a stone slate. What the Hunters focused on was the letters carved into this slate. Song took a sweeping look at the slate and muttered to no one in particular.

The Rune ‘alphabet’.

Words that could not be found anywhere on Earth, and found only within dungeons; only the Hunters who had ‘awakened’ the magic-related professions could decipher them.

“The laws of the Karutenon temple.”

Song read the very first verse.

With a deeply nervous face, Jin-Woo listened to the contents of the slate, as read out by Mister Song.

However, someone suddenly tugged at his arm.

When he looked back, he spotted Ju-Hui and her deathly-pale complexion.

REPORT

Ju-Hui's complexion was incredibly poor; Seong Jin-Woo was deeply taken aback by this sight.

“What’s wrong? Are you ill somewhere?”

“T-there. Over there.”

Jin-Woo's eyes followed Ju-Hui's trembling pointing finger. She was pointing at the giant god statue. More specifically, she was pointing at the god statue's face.

Jin-Woo could only tilt his head in confusion because it looked pretty much the same as before.

“...?”

Ju-Hui stuttered some words out.

“Pardon me?”

Jin-Woo looked again several times, but nothing seemed to have changed. There was no visible change to the god statue.

“Eii... I’m sure you’ve made a mistake.”

However, it seemed like Ju-Hui didn't hear him; her head stayed lowered, and as she held onto Jin-Woo's arm, her entire body trembled even harder.

‘Hang on a sec here.’

Even Jin-Woo picked up on this strange but ominous sensation now. The world was eerily quiet. So much so, it felt just too bizarre.

‘No sounds....?’

Even the sounds of the flames burning on the torches could not be heard anymore.

“First law.”

In the meantime, Song's voice continued on as he read the contents of the slate.

“Worship the god. Second law. Exalt the god. Third law. Prove your piety. Those who do not keep to these laws shall not leave this place alive.”

It was then.

SLAM!!

Everyone was jolted back to their senses at the sudden explosion of noise.

“What, what was that?!”

“Where did that sudden noise come from?!”

The first person to notice the change in the situation was none other than Jin-Woo. Because his senses were running at full tilt already, he could tell where the noise was coming from right away.

“The door!! The door is closed!!”

As soon as Jin-Woo shouted out, everyone shifted their gazes towards the doorway. The door they left open was now firmly shut close.

“God d*mn it! I can’t stand this!”

The Hunter who was the first to oppose the idea of continued exploration of the dungeon began spitting out curses as he took large strides towards the door.

“I’m going home, so you all can have fun with a boss or treasures or whatever.”

That Hunter glared at Song with an expression that contained all of his dissatisfaction before he spun his head around and angrily grabbed the door handle.

It happened, then.

Song’s eyes grew extra large.

“No!!”

Splash!

The area above the Hunter’s neck suddenly vanished. The headless body powerlessly collapsed to the ground.

“K, kkkkyaaachk?!”

“Uwaa?! Uwaak!!”

Hunters began screaming their heads off.

The stone statue that smashed a human’s head apart with a steel mace returned to its original spot next to the door, as if nothing important had happened, its body completely covered in fresh blood.

“That, that thing can move?!”

“What the hell?? Does that mean every statue in here can move, too?!”

“We gotta fight against these things?”

“I couldn’t even see that d*mn thing swing the mace, so how can I?!”

Unlike others here, though, Jin-Woo knew the truth.

...Their troubles only had just begun.

Didn’t Ju-Hui say it earlier?

“The, the eyes... The eyes of the god statue moved towards us. Just now.”

‘If what she said is true....’

A chill rapidly ran down his spine.

Jin-Woo forced his stiff neck to turn around so he could look behind him.

The stone statue of the god was looking down at him.

Part 3: Commencement of the attack

It was then, the god statue’s two black eyes changed to red.

Was this the instincts of a Hunter?

No, the instincts of a living being were sending out urgent warning signals.

Something was coming.

Something none of them could contend with!

Jin-Woo turned towards the other Hunters and cried out as loudly as he could.

“Get down!!”

Almost at the same time, red beams of light shot out from the eyes of the god statue. Jin-Woo hugged Ju-Hui and threw their bodies to the floor.

BUZZZ!!

The beam shot right by the spot Jin-Woo had been standing.

A tenth of a second.

No, he survived by one-hundredth of a second.

That was definitely too close for comfort.

Unfortunately, not everyone was as lucky as Jin-Woo.

“Uwaaahk?!”

“Euh-ahahack!!”

Those who were swallowed up by the red light evaporated where they stood. Only the ashes of what used to be human Hunters remained where the beam flew past.

The screams came not from the dead Hunters, but those who witnessed their final moments from the sidelines, actually.

“What the f*ck was that?!”

“Euh, euh-euh...”

“How, how can such a thing even be...”

The remaining Hunters began freaking out.

Out of the seventeen Hunters, only eleven survived.

Not one of them had ever experienced such a powerful attack before in their lives.

‘I barely made it because he told me to get down.’

‘If it wasn’t for Mister Seong’s shouts....’

Hunters stared at Jin-Woo while nervously swallowing their saliva. Jin-Woo turned out to be their unlikely saviour. Without his timely warning, they could only imagine what would’ve happened to them and that thought sent chills down their spines.

“.....”

While still lying prostrate on the ground, Jin-Woo glared at the god statue.

Its eyes were still glowing in red, but it did not attack again.

‘Is the attack... over?’

Jin-Woo looked underneath him. The scared-silly Yi Ju-Hui was trembling in his arms.

This was the reason why she worked for the Association and not for a big Guild, and participated in simple raids like this one, even though she was nominally an excellent Hunter with a rank as high as ‘B’.

Ju-Hui’s breathing was getting rougher by the second.

He couldn’t let her be like this. He had to do something.

Jin-Woo was about to raise his body up, thinking that he gotta do something here, but then, someone grabbed his shoulders and pushed him back down, hard.

“Don’t get up.”

It was Mister Song, somehow next to the youth before anyone had noticed it. Jin-Woo was flustered, but still did as he was told.

Song then shouted at the other Hunters.

“Nobody move! Stay exactly where you are!”

Song looked around before focusing on Jin-Woo.

“Only those that moved got killed. Those who listened to you and got down survived.”

“It seems that way.”

Song tilted his head slightly.

“I thought you warned us because you figured something out?”

“No, well, I just felt something dangerous was coming, so....”

A flash of light brushed past Song’s eyes just then.

‘His instincts are pretty good, in other words. He’s a rank E Hunter? If only his abilities were a bit higher....’

Just as Song stared at Jin-Woo with a rueful expression, Jin-Woo too found a little bit of leeway to check out the older Hunter’s condition.

And the youth’s eyes opened up wider after finding something pretty terrible.

“A-ahjussi, your, your... Your arm?!”

“This is nothing. I can still hold on.”

“But, but, still....”

Jin-Woo swallowed down his saliva.

Song’s other hand that wasn’t pressing down on Jin-Woo’s shoulder, his left arm, was gone.

“...”

Song studied Ju-Hui’s conditions for a bit, before he took off the T-shirt he was wearing, and while not even showing the enormous amount of pain he must be feeling, he wrapped up what was left of his left arm.

“Help me tie up the end, please? It’s difficult to do with only one hand.”

Jin-Woo could only nod his head then.

They were able to somehow stop the bleeding for now.

Rather than a scream or a pained moan, Song let out a long sigh. It was a sigh containing ten years’ worth of experience as a Hunter.

“Fuu.....”

Now that the first-aid was over, Song’s gaze became a level sharper as he studied his surroundings. Although the god statue stopped attacking them, their situation hadn’t improved in the slightest.

And like so, seconds continued to tick by.

“Sob, sob....”

“Just why do we have to suffer like this, this.....”

A few Hunters even began shedding tears now.

“We can’t stay like this forever!!”

The patience of the other Hunters was running out as well. Jin-Woo agreed with that sentiment, though.

‘Right, we can’t stay here forever.’

But, what could he possibly do here? If Song’s suspicion was correct, then the moment they moved, they’d get attacked.

And, even if they got lucky and managed to evade the beams and reach the door, there were the two stone statues guarding the doorway to worry about, as well.

They were a big problem too, actually.

The movements of the doorkeepers were so fast that he couldn’t see it with his eyes. Could he or anyone else open the door and escape before those statues attacked them?

It sounded completely impossible.

Which meant that the annihilation of the Hunters was just a matter of time.

‘Wait..... A matter of time?’

When his thoughts arrived there, a strong sense of disharmony filled him up.

An event that couldn’t have happened, but it happened anyway.

But no one else seemed to have picked up on “it” yet.

‘Something... We missed something here.’

Without a doubt, the answer to their salvation hid in that ‘something’.

It was then.

“Don’t move!”

Song shouted at Mister Joo, who was at the far end of the group.

“Shut up! Who knows when that thing will start attacking us again!! But you want me to stay here and wait?!”

Mister Joo was a close-combat type Hunter.

These types of Hunters possessed far, far superior physical abilities than regular human beings. On top of this, Joo was about to sign up with a big Guild after his skills were acknowledged by them not too long ago as well.

“I’ll not die here today.”

While keeping low to the ground, Joo put all his strength down to his legs.

His aim was at the doorway.

The muscles on his legs were swelling up fast.

“D*mn it....”

Song could only mutter out to himself.

Right then, Joo kicked the ground and exploded forward.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo hurriedly turned his head to look at the god statue. Just as he suspected, the eyes of the statue were fixed on the back of mister Joo.

And then, the chilling red ray shot out from those eyes.

BUZZ!!

The beam slammed on the back of Mister Joo.

“Kkyaaahck!!”

The female Hunter screamed at the top of her lungs.

She must’ve developed a leak, because a puddle of yellow liquid formed where she was squatting on the ground.

The expressions of the Hunters froze, hard.

“Oh my god....”

Mister Joo no longer stood where the red beam flew past. Only the pair of ownerless ankles could be seen now.

One of the men with a weaker constitution began emptying the contents of his stomach.

“B-bergh!!”

Jin-Woo’s expression also crumpled as well.

As expected, the god statue could easily finish them off if it felt like it. It’d be easier than stepping on squirming bugs, actually.

‘If that’s the case, then.... Why hadn’t it?’

It could kill them, yet it hadn’t done that.

This was a completely different pattern of behaviour compared to the monsters that attacked as soon as spotting human Hunters in their vicinity.

These statues only moved if certain conditions were met: the doorkeepers that only attacked if someone approached the door; the eyes of the god statue firing that red beam if someone moved.

It was like a game with a set regulation.

‘Hang on... Could there be some kind of rules in this chamber?’

It was here that a piece of puzzle found its place in Jin-Woo’s head. He began recalling the contents of the stone slate Song was reading not too long ago, that was why.

‘The laws of the... Karutenon temple, was it?’

‘Regulation’ was ‘rules’, and ‘rules’ could be ‘laws’ as well.

The key to their safe escape from this chamber had to be buried within those warnings found on the stone slate.

“....Worship the god.”

That was the first law.

“Mm? Did you just say something?”

Song shifted his gaze back to Jin-Woo.

Instead of a reply, Jin-Woo simply placed his index finger on his lips. It was a sign asking for a bit of time to think.

‘If my thoughts are right...’

Jin-Woo slowly rose up.

Song hurriedly tried to stop the youth, but Jin-Woo shook his head while carrying a determined expression.

‘...Doesn’t look like he gave up on living.’

Song nodded his head.

Jin-Woo kept his eyes trained squarely at the god statue and carefully stood up.

Almost right away, the eyes of the statue were fixed on Jin-Woo.

BUZZZ!!

And as expected, the red beam was fired in his direction.

If he got down to the ground a moment slower, it’d be his face melting away, instead of a few strands of hair on top of his head!

Lying face down on the ground, Jin-Woo breathed in and out quite heavily.

“Heok, heok, heok, heok.”

He nearly died just then. The moment the statue’s eyes met his, he thought he was going to die for sure. He somehow did dodge it, but his legs wouldn’t stop shaking from the fear.

‘Still...’

Still, he learned something important just now.

‘It’s not attacking someone who’s moving around.’

As long as he was squatting low to the ground, he could go anywhere he wanted to and the statue’s eyes would remain still.

However, if one stood up, then the red beam would be fired without hesitation.

‘The d*mn thing only attacks if we breach a certain height.’

That was why Jin-Woo bet his life on proving this theory right just now.

And now, he was sure of it.

The meaning behind the first law, that was!

Part 4: The Three Laws

Jin-Woo shouted out towards the rest of the Hunters.

“Everyone!”

Their attention shifted towards him in an instant.

Jin-Woo spoke as he met their gazes.

“You must kowtow towards the god statue!”

Hunters began tilting their heads after hearing him.

“Kowtow....?”

“You want us to kowtow to that statue?”

Hunters exchanged glances with each other, before loudly cussing out at Jin-Woo.

“F*ck you! What bullsh*t are you spewing here?!”

“What the hell! How can you say something like that under the current circumstances?!”

“Have you lost your mind, Seong Jin-Woo?!”

Kim’s face became boiling-red as he began snorting like a bull.

“I had no idea you, Mister Seong, would be like this! If I could move, then I’d have punched you in the face already!!”

Jin-Woo bit on his lower lip.

Six of their comrades were killed by the god statue. So, it was rather obvious that the surviving Hunters would cuss him out when he told them to kowtow towards that abominable thing.

It wasn’t hard to understand what these Hunters were feeling at the moment.

‘And, the most important thing is....’

The most important thing was, he had no logical evidence to back his theory up. He only had his gut feelings.

Indeed, that was the only way to describe it.

However...

“I’ll do as you say.”

That voice came from Jin-Woo’s back. Everyone’s eyes immediately shifted there.

It was Mister Song, effectively the leader of this group.

“Mister Song ahjussi?”

“You are going to kowtow to that f*cking statue?”

Just as other Hunters began to freak out, Song looked straight at Jin-Woo.

“Young man. You’ve discovered something, haven’t you?”

Jin-Woo resolutely nodded his head.

“Is it your instinct again?”

“.....Yes. For the time being.”

“I see.”

Just now, eleven people survived thanks to Jin-Woo’s instincts.

Well, with the death of Mister Joo, there were ten now, but still – if it was Jin-Woo’s instincts, then wouldn’t it be worth believing it at least once more?

That’s what Song thought.

When Song knelt down and kowtowed towards the god statue, the mood had become solemn and silent.

“...He’s really doing it.”

Seizing upon this opportunity, Jin-Woo shouted out once more.

“Everyone, I beg of you! Please kneel before the god statue. We might be able to get out of here alive!”

Might live.

Might be able to get out alive.

The impact those simple words carried was quite explosive.

‘We might live?’

‘We can get out of here?’

‘With just one kowtow?!’

The hesitant Hunters began to plop down to the ground, as if they were really kowtowing. The number of them performing the act gradually increased. In the end, even the complaining Kim bowed his head towards the statue.

However, there was no visible change to the god statue. Indeed, those chilling red light still shone from the eyes of the statue.

Jin-Woo felt his heart go cold.

‘Was I wrong?’

It was here that his gaze shifted to Ju-Hui next to him.

No matter how generous one was, it was difficult to describe her posture of squatting on the ground shivering, while holding her head in her hands as her kowtowing.

‘What if....’

Jin-Woo carefully grasped Ju-Hui’s wrist.

She raised her head like a scared cat. Seeing her, Jin-Woo wordlessly nodded his head. Only then did she relax her muscles somewhat.

With that, Jin-Woo was able to slowly change her posture.

‘Done.’

There was only one person remaining now. And that would be him.

Jin-Woo knelt down towards the god statue, placed his hands on the ground, and slowly lowered his head.

Finally, something began to change.

“Huh? Uh, uhh?!”

Hunters who had noticed the change first raised their voices.

“The god statue!! Look at the statue!!”

The red light buzzing in its eyes was gradually weakening.

“What the hell? Is this really going to work??”

Eventually, the red light completely vanished.

“Oh!! Ohhh!!”

Hunters began rejoicing loudly.

“The red light is gone!!”

“We made it!!”

The excited Hunters began standing up one at the time. Even then, the statue didn't fire the red beam.

Jin-Woo belatedly raised his head and spat out a sigh of relief.

Just as he suspected – this chamber operated strictly within the set regulations.

‘If that’s the case....’

Then, this game was far from over. Two more ‘laws’ still remained. The second law, exalt the god. And the third law, prove one’s piety.

It was then.

RUMBLE!!

Accompanied by a goosebump-inducing noise, the entire chamber began to shake.

Jin-Woo’s expression hardened immediately.

‘As I thought....’

His suspicions proved to be correct once more.

Things were only getting started.

The humongous god statue was slowly rising up from the stone throne.

“Huh?! Huhhh???”

Hunters were hugging each other while shedding tears of joy until then, but when they realised this turn of events, they all froze up like statues themselves.

“What.... what the hell!! It wasn’t over yet?!”

“This, this can’t be!!”

None of them could articulate what they wanted to say. Despair rapidly dyed their expressions.

“Ah....Ah, ah...”

Soon, the god statue completely stood up from the throne.

The ‘creature’ swept its gaze around once, and began walking towards the Hunters.

THUD!!

Every time the god statue stepped on the ground, the whole world seemed to shake.

THUD!!

It was so tall that its head was almost scraping against the chamber's indescribably high ceiling.

THUD!!

Even when the Hunters were overwhelmed by the statue's sheer size, the thing was gradually closing its distance to them.

“Mister Seong!! Mister Seong Jin-Woo!!”

“What can we do??”

The Hunters who were cussing at Jin-Woo only a short while ago hurriedly began crowding around him.

“Is there a way out of this?”

“Say something!!”

All these adults were forming tearful expressions as if they'd start breaking down in sobs and wails very soon.

Currently, Jin-Woo was their only hope.

Jin-Woo helped the frozen-stiff Ju-Hui up from the ground and began talking about the second law.

“Exalt the god. That's the key.”

“Wait, isn't that...?!”

Kim suddenly butted in as if he knew something others didn't.

“Isn't that what's written on the slate?”

“Correct. Worship the god. Exalt the god. And finally, prove your piety. We need to satisfy all three laws.”

Jin-Woo began speaking faster and faster.

Why? The god statue was already a stone's throw away from them.

THUD!!

Everyone's complexion paled as the gigantic shadow loomed over them.

“Let, let me try something.”

A young male Hunter who usually kept to himself suddenly took a step forward.

“What the?! What are you trying to do?”

“I’ve been in a church choir. I’m confident if it’s about ‘exalting’ something.”

The young Hunter slowly stepped forward towards the statue while disregarding the dissuasion of Kim. He regulated his breathing while looking up at the god statue before he took a large gulp of air.

“I come to you, Lord....”

His clear voice began reverberating within the chamber.

“....Renew my faith once more..... Bless me with your grace, Lord...”

The statue stopped its march in front of the singing Hunter.

“Oh!! Ohhh!!”

Hunters began gasping out in elation. The god statue didn’t move from the spot as if it was absorbed by the singing.

All the other noises in the room vanished. Only the young man’s voice could be heard in the chamber’s interior.

The young Hunter was encouraged by this and carried on.

“All the weakness found in me... Through your love, I shall overcome...”

Among the Hunters, only Jin-Woo was shuddering from this ominous sensation filling him up.

‘This... this is wrong.’

Jin-Woo swallowed up his words several times.

The chamber featured its own set of rules. But the young Hunter was ‘exalting’ the god statue with the ‘rule’ of Christianity, not with the rules of this chamber.

Thankfully, the statue wasn’t moving – but, could singing that hymn qualify as upholding the rules?

Jin-Woo shook his head.

The only reason why he didn’t say anything was solely because he couldn’t think of a better way to stop the god statue himself.

It was right then!

THUD!!

The weighty noise reverberated throughout the chamber.

“K, kkkkyyyyaaahhk!!”

The female Hunter screamed at the top of her lungs.

When the stone statue lifted its leg up, bloody mess of what used to be the young Hunter could be found on the ground as well as on the bottom of its foot.

Other Hunters began screaming in panic and shock, too.

“Ahhhhh?!”

“Uwa, uwaaaahk!!”

The face of the statue, emotionless until then, was now crumpled in pure rage.

“Run, run away!!”

Hunters dispersed away from the statue in a hurry.

Unfortunately for the female Hunter, she lost her reasoning and stood on the spot while screaming loudly after personally witnessing the death of the young male Hunter.

“K, kyaaachk!!”

‘D*mn it.....’

Jin-Woo was running away while carrying Ju-Hui in his arms, but he turned around so he could go and help that woman out.

But then, Song stopped the youth.

“But, ahjussi...?”

As if slapping a fly down, the god statue slammed its palm down at the female Hunter.

SLAM!!

“Keuk...”

Jin-Woo inadvertently shifted his gaze away. It was a truly gruesome sight and he couldn’t bear to watch it unfold.

“There is no time to waste like this. Are you planning to let this girl die, too?”

Song’s words sobered Jin-Woo up in an instant.

It was as he said.

THUD!!

“Uwaahk!!”

THUD!

THUD!!!

“Help me!!”

The statue was not walking around anymore.

No, it was actually running around and stepping on the humans it found nearby. Whenever the thing stepped on the ground, the entire chamber shook around, hard.

THUD!! THUD!!

Jin-Woo gritted his teeth and began running again. Ju-Hui squeezed her eyes shut and held onto him for her dear life.

“Let’s split up!”

“Yes!”

Thinking that moving around together was dangerous, Jin-Woo and Song ran in separate directions.

Jin-Woo made sure to run towards the furthest corner from the frenzied god statue. However, there was another Hunter who had arrived there before he did.

It was Mister Park.

Park was running with everything he had.

Tears formed on the edges of his eyes when he recalled his family.

“Sob...”

Back home, a son who resembled him so much and a wife pregnant with their second child was waiting for him. He couldn’t die here, not like this.

Perhaps because he ran with everything he had, he was able to run the furthest away from the statue out of everyone here.

“Pant, pant....”

As Park tried to control his heavy breathing in the corner, his friend Kim urgently shouted at him.

“Mister Park!!”

Park raised his head after hearing the familiar voice.

“Yeah?”

Kim pointed at the spot behind Park and cried out.

“Your back!! Look behind you!!”

It was then, something sharp gleamed coldly behind Mister Park.

“Uh...?”

Slice!

Park was sliced in half from the top of his head right down to his groin. His cleanly-cut two halves fell to the ground.

“PARK!!”

The stone statue that killed Park with its greatsword returned to its position as if nothing had happened, exactly like how the doorkeeper did before.

Kim began tearing up after witnessing this scene.

“You sons of b*tches....!!”

THUD!!

THUD!!

Behind him, the humongous god statue was stepping on and killing humans one at the time, and if you ran towards the corner in order to avoid it, then the stone statues located there would start attacking you.

“U, uwaaaah!!”

“My arm!! My armmmm!!”

The interior of the chamber swiftly fell into chaos.

“Heok, heok....”

Cold sweat dripped down from Jin-Woo’s forehead.

His legs were getting heavier. His breathing was getting rougher and rougher. However, his head was filled with only one chain of thought.

‘Exalt the god. Exalt the god. Exalt the god....’

The words of the second law circulated in his brain non-stop. The key to unravelling this mystery definitely existed within this chamber.

Something within this chamber that they could use!

However, when the Hunters first entered this place, they had searched every nook and cranny, but didn't find a single contraption nor things that might be some kind of tools.

'No, back then or now, the only things here that can move are the stone statues.'

It was then.

A thought raced past Jin-Woo's brain just then.

'Only things moving in here are the statues?'

D*mn it.

Jin-Woo's eyes widened.

"Why haven't I thought of that before?!"

If the only things that could move were the stone statues, then the only thing he could use had to be them, too.

These statues activated when humans got near them, meaning he had to take advantage of this rule.

'What if....!'

Even though he was running short of breath, Jin-Woo roared out loud enough to shake the entire chamber.

"Run towards the statues holding musical instruments!!"

Chapter 5 Fin

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

All the Hunters still alive heard Jin-Woo's voice.

"!!"

"Instruments?"

A ray of hope found its way into the eyes of the Hunters.

Quite different to back when he told them to kowtow, everyone moved unbelievably quickly. If Jin-Woo was wrong about this, then as soon as arriving near one, they would be killed by the stone statues holding the musical instruments. However, no one here questioned Jin-Woo's words.

Song was the first one to arrive in front of a statue carrying a musical instrument.

Song controlled his heavy breathing and raised his head to look at the statue. And as if it was a lie, the fingers of the statue moved and strummed on the harp.

Cling, clang...

A beautiful melody flowed out.

"It's working!!"

"Hurry to the statues with instruments!!"

Hunters ran towards the nearest correct statues in hurried footsteps.

The statue with a trumpet began blowing it triumphantly; one with a flute began playing with it; the one holding the lyre strummed on its strings.

"Heok, heok, heok...."

While sensing the approach of his physical limit, Kim somehow arrived in front of the statue that held a buzuka and plopped down to the ground. (TL: I don't know what this buzuka could be. TLed as is from the raw.) (ED: Probably either a Bazooka or a Bouzouki, both from the 1900's.)

Ttiring, ttring....

As soon as the statue began playing the instrument, the god statue stopped chasing after Kim. He must've been overcome with emotions, because Kim then began shedding tears while he stayed down on his knees.

“Sob.... Sob....”

Meanwhile, the god statue turned around. The ‘creature’ searched around and soon enough, found its next prey.

“God d*mn it.”

Jin-Woo spat out a cuss as his gaze met the god statue’s.

He then began running hard – so hard that his heart might explode. His back was already soaked through in sweat.

‘Why?! Why isn’t it working?!’

Jin-Woo’s resentful glare landed on the stone statue in front of him. The statue holding a drum showed no signs of moving at all.

THUD!! THUD!! THUD!!

The god statue closed in with frightening speed. He was practically on the other side of the chamber from the d*mn thing, yet the distance between the two shortened in no time at all.

Jin-Woo swallowed down his saliva.

‘Could it be that the statue won’t play because there are two people here? Me and Miss Ju-Hui?’

He couldn’t think of anything else. Why? Because, other statues were playing music just fine as soon a Hunter stood in front of it.

‘There is no time to think anymore.’

Jin-Woo put Ju-Hui down and got ready to run to somewhere else.

“M, Mister Jin-Woo....”

Still terrified out of her mind, Ju-Hui clung onto Jin-Woo’s sleeve. Jin-Woo calmly whispered in her ear.

“We’ll both die if we stay together.”

Tears began forming on Ju-Hui’s eyes. Her fingers trembled as they held onto his clothes. Unfortunately, there was no time to explain to her in detail. Jin-Woo carefully pried her hand away and began running in the opposite direction as hard as he could.

Boom, boom, boom....

When he glanced back, the statue behind Ju-Hui began beating its drum in a slow but steady rhythm.

‘What a relief.’

There was only one thing remaining now: to run to the other statue without getting killed!

Only Jin-Woo hadn’t received the protection of the music-playing statues. Quite obviously, the rage of the god statue was solely directed to Jin-Woo and him alone.

Jin-Woo did his best to avoid the foot of the thing that rivalled a building in size and crossed the room in a hurry.

THUD!

THUD!!

He fell and rolled around but still, he somehow managed to avoid getting flattened by the god statue’s foot.

“Heok, heok.”

He might only have been a rank E, but he was still a close-combat type Hunter so his physique came in handy in situations like this.

‘Just a little bit further!! A bit more!’

Jin-Woo kept an eye out on the god statue’s movements and ran even harder.

His speed increased.

And when the distance remaining between him and the stone statue was mere a dozen feet...

“No, that’s the wrong one!!”

...Mister Song cried out to him.

Jin-Woo had been paying attention to the god statue only; he was stunned by the shout and hurriedly turned his head take a look at his front.

“Ahh!!”

It’s not a statue with an instrument?

He belatedly realised that the thing that looked like a musical instrument from afar was actually a shield, instead. And sure enough, the statue mercilessly stabbed down with its shield.

“Heok!”

Jin-Woo hurriedly threw himself to the side.

“Kkyahhk!!”

Ju-Hui screamed.

Jin-Woo rolled on the ground and when he came to a stop, he raised his head to see the god statue standing right in front of his nose.

His forehead must’ve been torn from him rolling on the ground, because blood was flowing down and blurred his vision. His view was restricted and he couldn’t look too far away.

Jin-Woo quickly searched around his vicinity.

‘An instrument.... an instrument....’

However, no matter how hard he looked, he couldn’t see a single statue holding an instrument nearby.

Meanwhile, the god statue raised its leg over Jin-Woo’s position.

“Heok!”

THUD!!

Jin-Woo threw himself again and somehow avoided the foot of the statue again.

But he had reached his limit.

A powerful dizziness was assaulting him and for some reason, he couldn’t even balance himself.

‘Please....’

If there was a real god, he thought that he’d start praying right about now.

It was then, Jin-Woo spotted a stone statue that held neither a weapon or a musical instrument.

‘Is that...?’

Jin-Woo decided to bet everything on that statue. He crawled on the ground and arrived in front of the statue in question. He then managed to flip his body around and lied down on the ground so he could see the god statue.

He no longer had any energy to move.

“Pant, pant....”

Jin-Woo stared at the approaching god statue and continued to roughly breathe in and out.

The expression of the god statue was far more contorted compared to before as if it got infuriated further by Jin-Woo's continued evasion.

The god statue now stopped in front of Jin-Woo. Seeing a 'creature' as big as a high-rise blocking his entire view, Jin-Woo felt like he couldn't breathe anymore.

“Pant, pant.....”

Did it think he was nothing more than a cornered rat? The god statue simply looked down at him and didn't do anything else.

‘This is the end....’

Jin-Woo sensed his own unavoidable death approaching closer after looking straight into the eyes of the god statue.

However...

Wu-wu-wu....

From somewhere behind him, a beautiful and otherworldly voice came out.

Jin-Woo turned his head around to see what was going on.

Wu-wu, wu-wu-wu....

The lips of the stone statue holding a book moved, and whenever they did, a divine song flowed out and filled the interior of the massive chamber.

Wu-wu-wu, wu....

The crumpled expression of the god statue slowly reverted back to the emotionless state. Soon, all those horrifyingly contorted facial muscles of the stature smoothed out.

When the song of the stone statues came to its eventual end, the god statue turned around. Then, just how other stone statues had done until now, it returned to its throne and settled down as if things that happened until now were nothing but a lie.

THUD!!

The noise of the god statue sitting down on the throne resounded throughout the chamber.

“Pant, pant..... Barely, made, it...”

A thin smile formed on Jin-Woo's lips.

Meanwhile, Ju-Hui began running from her position at the far end of the chamber.

“Mister Jin-Woo!!”

She ran with all her might and knelt down next to him as tears streamed down on her face.

“What can I do.... What am I supposed to....”

She summoned all of her magical energy and activated her healing magic. However, nothing seemed to improve.

The dispersed Hunters gathered around Jin-Woo one by one. Every single one of them carried a dark expression.

“What... Mister Jin-Woo....”

Even then, only Ju-Hui was crying in sorrow.

Why was everyone acting like this?

Jin-Woo’s lips bobbed up and down. He wanted to ask what was going on, but he couldn’t really summon forth his own voice.

Sensing that he had no choice, he tried to prop himself up.

“....?”

Then, he noticed the pool of blood around his lower torso. Only then did he belatedly realise the change to his body.

Below his right knee was gone.

Jin-Woo’s eyes reflexively shifted toward the stone statue holding the shield. He then saw the trail of blood clearly visible on the end of the shield.

And the rest of his right leg was just below that.

Drip. Drip.

Drops of blood started falling from Ju-Hui’s nose. That was the sign of her reaching the limits of her physical stamina.

The healing magic from a rank B Healer was unable to recover missing limbs. Meaning, what she was doing was basically pouring water into a broken jug. Her stamina rapidly bottomed out in the end.

“It’s fine now... Miss Ju-Hui. You can stop....”

“I’m going to heal you!! I’ll fix you as good as new!”

Hunters stared at the two of them while forming miserable expressions.

Out of the seventeen who initially entered this chamber only six remained now. And from this group of six, two of them had suffered horrible, grievous wounds. Song had lost his arm, while Jin-Woo lost his leg.

They might have survived, but none of them felt like rejoicing at the moment. It was then, yet another strange noise rocked the chamber.

RUMBLE....!!

The middle of the temple, where that strange magic formation could be found, suddenly rose up above the ground.

Jin-Woo inwardly thought that it had finally come.

‘Prove your piety, is it....’

He already had a rough idea as to what those words could mean.

Part 5: Final Trial

The circular magic formation in the centre of the temple began rising up noisily and only stopped after reaching the height of a couple of steps.

“An altar...”

Hunters displayed alert reactions as soon as Jin-Woo muttered out.

‘An altar....?’

‘He just said it’s an altar....’

The person who had rescued them from the two preceding crises was not some high ranked Hunter, but rank E Jin-Woo, who used to be the butt of their jokes most of the time.

‘If it weren’t for Mister Seong, all of us would have been....’

Hunters were thinking this exact same thought. Under the current circumstances, Jin-Woo’s words were their lifeline.

And now, that Jin-Woo had muttered out a word ‘altar’.

Kim always was quick on the uptake and so, he caught onto the meaning first before anyone else had the chance to do so.

“I get it now. I see how it is.”

Kim then unsheathed the sword hanging on his hips.

Now originally, this weapon would be used to cut various monsters down. But for now, it’d have to be utilised for a different purpose altogether.

“Even if I’m a dumb b*stard, I can more or less get what you’re trying to say here.”

Hunters nervously swallowed their saliva while looking at the sharp, coldly-gleaming blade.

“Oii, Mister Kim. Why are you pulling your sword out like that?”

“Why don’t we talk about this first? Let’s talk first.”

The highest ranked member among the group, rank C Hunter Song was heavily injured, meaning there was no one here that could potentially stop Kim, who boasted a pretty powerful set of skills himself even within the D rank.

Kim pointed towards the altar with his sword.

“The final law, prove your piety. And there’s an altar appearing out of nowhere in the middle of this place.”

Kim’s gaze then shifted to Jin-Woo.

“So, aren’t we supposed to offer up a sacrifice? Mister Seong?”

Jin-Woo slowly nodded his head. That was what the youth thought as well. One of the surviving six had to act as a sacrifice.

‘That’s what the last law probably meant....’

Jin-Woo came to this conclusion.

He sensed more disturbance and raised his head, and realised that the eyes of Mister Kim as he approached closer did not look friendly at all.

A long sweatdrop glided down Jin-Woo’s forehead.

“Ahjussi... What....?”

“You, young man, don’t say anything and be still!!”

Kim angrily shouted out and pointed his sword at Mister Song, who was squatting next to Jin-Woo in order to check out the youth’s condition.

“Just who was it that dragged us to this place? Wasn’t it this guy? Yes, it was Mister Song! So, don’t you think it’s only right for Mister Song to take the ultimate responsibility?”

“Ahjussi!”

Jin-Woo tried to get up in a fit of anger, but then, Song’s hand that resembled the bark of an aged tree stopped the youth.

Jin-Woo looked at Song in disbelief.

“....”

Song wordlessly shook his head. His eyes were pleading with Jin-Woo, asking the youth to not say anything else. Of course, Jin-Woo had lots of things to say, but he kept them down for now.

Song slowly raised his body up.

“What Mister Kim said is right. I should take the blame for today.”

“Old man, I guess we are now finally on the same page.”

Kim used the tip of his sword to point towards the altar.

“If you get it now, then let’s get going already. Over ten people died here because of you, old man.”

REPORT

One of the dead Hunters today happened to be Mister Park, a personal friend to Mister Kim.

Exploring the dual dungeon was decided with the vote involving everyone, but Kim had already erased that memory off his head after losing much of his reasoning.

Mister Song spoke to Kim.

“I’d like to walk on my own volition, so can you put the sword away?”

Of course, Kim refused right away.

“How can I trust you, old man? Stop wasting time and start moving already.”

Song sighed softly under his breath and walked towards the altar. Kim pointed his sword at the older man’s back and followed on afterwards.

Jin-Woo bit his lower lip while watching the two men walk away.

‘This isn’t the fault of Mister Song.’

More than half of the group agreed to do it together. Just because things had gone south, blaming Song for everything was simply too cowardly, he thought.

‘But, I....’

Jin-Woo unfortunately did not possess enough strength to stop Kim here.

Kim, thought to be one of the best among the rank D, and Seong Jin-Woo, easily the worst of the rank E. The difference in their strengths was all too clear for him to see. Not only that, Jin-Woo had even lost a leg.

If he tried to confront Kim as he was now, there was a chance that him and even Ju-Hui, who had been focusing solely on healing him, could meet with disaster.

“D*mn it.”

Jin-Woo squeezed his eyes shut. He never hated his own powerlessness as much as he did today.

In the meantime, Song had stepped up on the raised altar.

Suddenly, a red flame lit up near the outer perimeter of the altar as soon as he did. Everyone nervously swallowed their saliva and observed the unfolding situation carefully.

However, nothing else happened. Just a single flame came to life, and that was it.

“...?”

They waited for a while but there was no visible change at all. Not only Kim, but everyone else got flustered by this situation.

Kim quickly turned his head and spoke to Jin-Woo.

“Look here, Mister Seong. This wasn’t it?”

Jin-Woo also shook his head.

“Even I...”

He too thought that once a person chosen as the sacrifice stepped up on the altar, the third law of ‘prove one’s piety’ would be completed.

‘It’s not about offering up a sacrifice?’

If so, then it was not necessarily bad news. If the law was not about sacrifices, then it meant Mister Song could still be saved.

Jin-Woo’s expression brightened somewhat.

He sweated bucket-loads as he tried to stand up, and two Hunters nearby quickly lent their assistance.

“Please take me closer to the altar so I can study it.”

“Mister Jin-Woo, your injuries are....”

Ju-Hui also got up from her spot to follow after Jin-Woo. Her complexion was rather pale after expending too much of her magical energy.

But because she had worked so hard, Jin-Woo’s blood loss had been temporarily halted and the pain he felt was reduced to a barely noticeable degree.

‘I gotta hurry up.’

The current condition of Ju-Hui, Kim’s boiling rage, Song’s injuries, and the frightened Hunters – he didn’t have a lot of time here.

Jin-Woo eventually arrived at the altar with the help from other Hunters.

“Let’s climb up on the altar.”

The two Hunters flinched from his statement, but they trusted Jin-Woo and stepped up. Then, three more flames lit up. Right away, Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed brightly.

'It's the same number as the people on the altar.'

Mister Song and Jin-Woo, plus two others who helped the youth – indeed, the flames lit up to match the number of people standing on the altar.

And it kind of looked like that these four flames were drawing a circle outside the altar.

'If I take into consideration the space between the flames, two more will complete the circle.'

It seemed that all the remaining people had to climb up on the altar for something, anything, to get started. Jin-Woo turned his head to ask Song.

"If we wait here, do you think other Hunters will come to rescue us?"

Song shook his head.

"Today is the seventh day since the Gate showed up. These things will start moving first before the help arrives."

"Because it's a Gate ranked D, I see that it's been left alone for far too long."

"Well, that's how the Association operates, isn't it."

A Gate would open up fully after the seventh day. The real meaning of a raid was to kill the dungeon's boss monster and therefore close the Gate before that happened. When failing to do so, the monsters trapped in the dungeons would be set free from the dungeon and they would be able to roam the outside world.

Jin-Woo looked behind him.

The giant god statue was still looking down on them with an overbearing, arrogant expression from its throne.

'If that thing manages to go outside, then....'

The ensuing chaos would be unimaginable. Of course, before that happened, Hunters coming to this chamber to rescue them would all be killed by the statues first.

He was now sure of the fact that they could not wait here forever. Jin-Woo called out to Ju-Hui and Kim.

"Both of you, climb up."

Ju-Hui stepped up on the altar first. The hesitant Kim also followed suit soon afterwards. Two more flames lit up and the circle was now complete.

And then....

Hunters were grandly stunned by what happened next.

“What the hell?!”

“What’s going on here?”

As Jin-Woo had suspected, yet another change took place.

From the outer most edge of the altar, small blue flames floated upwards and began drawing a circle of their own as well. There looked to be at least thirty of these blue flames, placed real tightly next to each other.

‘34. 35. 36....’

Jin-Woo quickly counted them all as the blue flames completed the circle and he realised that there were 36 of them.

‘The six red flames that lit up to match the number of people. And the 36 blue flames that appeared outside them. What could be the significance behind that number?’

It was then.

CLANG!

Without a warning, the resolutely-shut door suddenly opened up wide. Hunters reflexively flinched.

“Euk...!”

They all wanted so bad to run towards the wide-open doorway, but having seen the final moments of the choirboy Hunter, they found it hard to take the first step. If one tried to be the first, just who knew what might happen to them?

Everyone’s gaze fixed on Jin-Woo as if to demand an answer from him. However, Jin-Woo’s lips remained tightly shut.

“...”

He couldn’t come up with a guess at the moment. He didn’t know whether the open door was a trap, or they were now allowed to go out after they upheld the final law successfully.

Too bad for him, just as everyone was looking at Jin-Woo, a horrifying noise filled up the entire chamber.

Creak....

Creeeaaaak....

The heads of all six Hunters quickly snapped around to look.

“What was that?!”

“It, it’s coming closer!!”

“Those d*mn things are all moving now!!”

Hunters’ breathing quickened in an instant.

The stone statues that had only moved when a person got near were now several steps closer to the group. Jin-Woo only needed a short moment to figure out what happened, of course.

‘No, the statues didn’t move. It’s the plinths below them that moved.’

That horrifying screech from earlier on most likely came from the plinths beneath the statues grating against the stone floor.

“...They are not moving anymore?”

Kim wiped the droplets of sweat on his forehead as he spoke.

While everyone was still staring at the statues, Jin-Woo’s focus was on the blue flames. They had been going out one by one, and three of them had flickered out of existence already.

Creaaakkkk...

Hearing that screech, someone cried out.

“Wha-what was that?! Where did it come from?”

Jin-Woo quickly raised his head. The noise had come from his general direction. The stone statues facing him had moved a little bit closer.

‘Why only my side....?’

Was it because he looked at somewhere else briefly?

In order to confirm, Jin-Woo closed his eyes.

The noise resounded out again.

Creeaaaakkkk...

As soon as he opened his eyes, the noise stopped.

“What the f*ck is going on here?!”

“What, what are we supposed to do about this?!”

Jin-Woo quickly shouted at others.

“Don’t take your eyes off the statues, no matter what!”

When he thought about it, he realised that the statues first began moving closer to the group when others were busy looking at him.

‘They creep closer when we are not looking at them.’

It was right then, another blue flame disappeared. However, there was still no discernible change to either the group or the statues.

‘Could it be...?’

Cautiously raising his arm, Jin-Woo did his best not to take his eyes off the statues while checking the time with his wristwatch.

‘As I thought.’

At an interval of one minute, a blue flame was being extinguished.

‘The blue flames are the timer.’

It was quite likely that one of the main points of the third law was to stay within the altar until all 36 blue flames died out.

In other words, as long as everyone was keeping close watch on the statues, they’d be safe. It was quite possible that no one had to die at this final huddle.

Wanting to be more accurate about the remaining time, Jin-Woo began recounting the number of blue flames once more.

‘There are thirty remaining....’

They only needed to endure thirty more minutes!

Unfortunately, Jin-Woo made a huge mistake, just then.

While he was counting the number of blue flames, his eyes wandered away for a brief moment, and that resulted in the statues creeping closer...

Creeeakkkk....

“Euuuh, uwaaaahhh!!”

The man standing on the opposite side screamed and ran towards the door. He simply couldn’t hold on any longer as the horrifying screeching noise coming from his back frightened him so much.

As soon as he left the altar, one of the red flames disappeared.

Jin-Woo cried out urgently.

However, the man running as if he had gone crazy escaped through the open doorway without meeting a grizzly fate, which took everyone by surprise.

“What, what the hell?! Mister Seong! What’s going on? That guy made it out alive!”

Kim shouted out, flustered.

Jin-Woo was standing with his back to the doorway so he couldn’t really tell what was going on.

“Did something change?”

“The door.... The door has closed just a little.”

“The door’s closing?”

“No, no. After that guy left, the door moved a little bit, but then stopped.”

Jin-Woo then recalled one of the red flames disappearing as soon as that man left the altar.

He immediately felt his heart go cold.

One of the questions that he couldn’t quite figure out until now as he stood on top of this altar finally had an answer.

How could standing on an altar be a proof of one’s piety?

Indeed, he now had the answer to this quandary.

And that answer was probably the worst one for Jin-Woo, who had only one leg now and needed other’s help just to keep his balance.

That ‘open’ doorway was a trap.

A false hope right in front of one’s eyes!

If people saw the open door and climbed off the altar at the same time, the red flames would’ve gone out and the doorway would be closed shut again. And then, the banquet of raining blood and screams would inevitably follow next.

On the other hand, the ‘altar’ was the proverbial promised land.

If each one did what they had to do in their positions until the timer ran out, then their survival would be guaranteed.

So, it was between the false hope right in front of one's eyes, or the unseen promise of salvation.

The third law was a test to see if one could defend one's position without falling into the sweet temptation over yonder while constantly being under the encroaching threat of death.

However, two flies in the ointment happened in this situation.

The first one was Jin-Woo.

Originally, the remaining group of people would've ran straight for the open door, but they stopped first to listen to what Jin-Woo had to say and that helped them avoid the trap being sprung in the first place.

'We got lucky there.'

Indeed, that had to be the only explanation.

Such a thing was only possible because Jin-Woo managed to figure out the first two laws all by himself and earned the trust of others.

Unfortunately for him, the second fly also happened – something he didn't foresee: a deserter had appeared among their midst.

How would human beings react when there was a hope of survival right in front of their eyes? It was way too obvious.

The man helping Jin-Woo up abandoned the youth and bolted as well. Song hurriedly reached out and propped Jin-Woo up from his back.

Poof.

When that man left the altar, yet another red flame disappeared and as expected, the door closed a little bit more.

Creeaaaakkk...

"Huh?!Uh!!"

Kim dazedly pointed at the second deserter, but just like the first person to abandon them, he too safely escaped past the doorway.

Jin-Woo confirmed the number of remaining red flames and shouted out.

"We must not move! Any more than this, then it'll be the end!"

Front, back, left, and right.

In order to secure all four directions, four people were the bare minimum required.

Jin-Woo himself, Ju-Hui, Mister Song and finally, Mister Kim. A single person leaving now would result in a gap within the field of vision.

Kim wiped the sweat off his forehead and asked urgently.

“Mister Seong, just what is going on here? Explain it to me properly.”

“We’ll make it as long as we wait here! Only until all the blue flames are extinguished!”

Jin-Woo spat out everything he had deduced so far. Kim nodded his head as his ears perked up.

Jin-Woo quickly ended his explanation and added one more thing at the end.

“Remember, everyone here can get out of here alive.”

The laws of this chamber always left open a path for one’s survival. The final law would not deviate from that. Jin-Woo was certain of no one else needing to die as long as the remaining people trusted each other.

“....”

Too bad, Kim’s thoughts were quite different from the youth’s. The older Hunter asked hesitantly.

“Look here, Mister Seong... you could be right on this one, but... could the door close shut instead when the timer runs out?”

“...”

Jin-Woo couldn’t answer that one.

He came to his conclusion after considering several variables, but until the result was in, he couldn’t be 100% certain of anything.

However, what Kim wanted was a definite assurance. Rather than an uncertain promise of everyone’s survival, the definite survival of his own self had proved to be far more alluring in the end.

“I’m sorry about this, but... I don’t think I can stay here anymore.”

“Ahjussi!”

“Sorry.”

With that parting word, Kim stepped down from the altar. He then ignored Jin-Woo’s urgent calling and ran towards the door. He stopped and looked for a brief moment just outside the door, but Kim did not step back inside the chamber again.

Grit.

Jin-Woo gritted his teeth.

He had saved the lives of others, but what he got in return was definitely not something like gratefulness or friendship.

His entire body shuddered from the pain of betrayal.

Just as he suspected, as soon as Kim had abandoned them, a gap within the surveillance had been created. It was impossible for three people to guard all four directions.

And so, the statues positioned in the blindspots began creeping closer to the altar.

Creeaaaakkkk...

Creeaakkk...

The encirclement of the stone statue was gradually tightening. Song took a look around and then, spoke to Jin-Woo and Ju-Hui.

“Both of you, you should leave now.”

His voice was full of resignation. Jin-Woo looked at the old man.

“But, ahjussi....?”

“Just as Kim had said, I was the one who dragged us all in here. If someone has to remain behind, then it’d be only right that I’m the one.”

“But, still!!”

“You two with a better future ahead of you should be the ones to survive today.”

Song began smiling, then. He was thinking of these two young people’s hearts as they would have to abandon him here.

“...”

Jin-Woo helplessly nodded his head. He was uncomfortable about this whole thing, but there was no time left to argue back and forth who should remain in here.

Song then tried to ask Ju-Hui to take care of Jin-Woo.

“Miss Ju-Hui, can you help out Mister Seong here for a bit?”

“Y-yes.”

However, just as she was about to prop him up, Ju-Hui plopped down to the floor.

“Ah.....”

Ju-Hui tried to get up, but then, tears began forming around the edges of her eyes.

“My legs... I, I can’t move my legs....”

Both the expressions of Jin-Woo and Mister Song hardened in an instant.

Ju-Hui’s current physical condition did look terrible even from a casual glance. Her lips were in the shade of pale blue, while her entire body continued to tremble ever so imperceptibly.

She was suffering from the side-effects of overusing her magic energy when she was already at her physical limit.

‘Because she tried to heal my leg....’

Jin-Woo felt his chest tighten and couldn’t say anything. However, they really didn’t have any time left now.

Creeeeaaaakkkk.....

The stone statues were relentlessly approaching them without a moment of rest even now.

Jin-Woo shoved Song’s hand away and plopped down to the ground himself. Seeing this, Song’s eyes grew wider.

“Y-young man.....?”

Jin-Woo spoke up with a determined expression on his face.

“Ahjussi, please take Ju-Hui and get out of this place.”

“I told you, I’ll be the one staying behind.”

“In that case, who’s going to help Ju-Hui?”

It was pretty much impossible for him to take Ju-Hui, who couldn't even stand properly, and leave through the door within the time limit.

'Of course....'

There was the other choice of abandoning Ju-Hui behind, as well. However, Ju-Hui had saved his life several times already, and the only reason why she was in this state was because she tried to help him with all her might.

He definitely did not want to suffer the guilty conscience of abandoning such a person behind in this godforsaken place.

"There is no time left. Please leave now."

"..."

Song's expression remained hardened as he helped Ju-Hui up. She shook her head desperately while tears streamed down on her face.

"No, you can't... Mister Jin-Woo can still survive, you know? Let me...."

"I promised to buy you a dinner, didn't I?"

Jin-Woo pulled out the rank E magic crystal from his pocket and placed it in her hand.

"Please, use this and enjoy one on me. When I get out of here, I'll be coming around to collect the change, you see."

A smile formed on Jin-Woo's face, prompting Ju-Hui to cry out in anger.

"How can you crack a joke in this situation, Mister Jin-Woo?!"

It was at this moment that Jin-Woo signalled to Mister Song with a nod. The older man then lightly chopped on the back of Ju-Hui's neck.

"Ah...."

With that, Ju-Hui lost her consciousness. Song picked up the unconscious girl and placed her over his shoulder.

"....I'm really sorry about this."

"This is my choice, so it's fine."

Mister Song bowed his head to Jin-Woo.

With that goodbye, Song quickly left the altar.

Creeaakk....

Creeeeeeaaaaakkkk....

During the time the three of them were chatting, the statues had arrived at the proverbial stone's throw away.

Jin-Woo got on his knees and took several deep breaths.

“Fuu-woo. Fuu-woo....”

He spotted the sword Kim had left behind next to him. So, he reached out and picked it up.

‘Now that it had come down to this, I’ll take at least one down with me.’

When he looked behind him, Jin-Woo saw Mister Song safely leaving through the doorway with unconscious Ju-Hui still perched upon his shoulder.

What a relief that was.

‘Only I’ll die here now....’

He wasn't doing this because of some noble determination to sacrifice himself or anything like that. No, there certainly was an element of him calculating the best possible outcome in his decision.

Even if he survived and got out of here today, he would have to live as a cripple for the rest of his life.

Obviously, carrying on as a Hunter would be impossible, then. And it was also questionable whether he'd be able to live normally as well. He was only a high-school graduate, and since he didn't have any discernible job skills, he simply didn't have too many options left to put food on the table.

‘Mom’s hospital fees... and my sister’s school fees, too.’

If that were the case, then he might as well make sure his family would receive a better compensation from the Association, even if it was just a single cent more.

‘Was the compensation paid out to the family members 300 million Won or 400, when one dies during a raid?’ (TL: Between $267,000 and $356,000)

That was a huge amount for a worthless life of a rank E Hunter.

Creeaakk....

Creeakk...

Clang.

Finally, the statues arrived.

The first one to arrive climbed up on the altar. Jin-Woo glared at it and lifted the sword up.

“Come.”

Unfortunately, the expected attack didn't come from the front, but his back.
Stab!

A long spear penetrated into Jin-Woo's back and exited out of his chest.

“Keok!”

Jin-Woo spat out a mouthful of blood.

An unimaginable amount of pain rushed in like a tsunami wave.

“If you were stabbed a couple of inches higher, you'd have a hole in your heart by now!”

Ju-Hui's nagging he heard only a few hours ago slipped past his mind like a scene from a revolving lantern.

“U, uwaaaahck!!”

The stone statue lifted up the spear. Jin-Woo was lifted up along into the air, still pierced through by that spear. He only got to struggle for a brief moment, though – because the statue slammed him down on the altar.

SLAM!!

“Keok!”

Sounds of bones breaking could be heard from all corners of his body.

He shrunk away from the intense pain.

“Euh..... Euh, euh.....”

As he began trembling, the stone statues slowly surrounded him. They formed a encirclement around him. Jin-Woo raised his head and glared at them, his entire being shuddering non-stop.

‘I... I don't want to die like this.’

Now that he was facing his final moments, tears pooled on his eyes.

He recalled the faces of his family. He even recalled the face of Ju-Hui, her face full of anxiety and worry for his safety...

‘I don't want to die...’

He didn't want to end his short twenty-four years of life in this place.

Step.

The stone statue wielding a sword took a step closer without a hint of emotion. Then, it raised its sword up high.

Even though he was shaking hard, Jin-Woo did not avert his gaze away from this b*stard.

Finally, the statue's sword slashed down.

Swiiiiishhh....

'Only if, only if I had one more chance!'

Jin-Woo's eyes shot open wider.

It happened then.

SFX for the statue's movements suddenly stopping

As if someone had pressed the 'pause' button, the scarily-fast moving sword suddenly stopped in mid-air.

No, that wasn't actually correct; it hadn't stopped at all. It simply had slowed down so much that he ended up thinking that way.

One millimetre in one minute?

It was very slow, but the sword was still definitely coming down.

'Wha-what's going on here?'

Jin-Woo couldn't hide his astonishment.

It was then, a voice of a female he had never heard of before resounded within his head.

[Completion requirements for the 'Secret Quest: the Courage of the Powerless' has been met.]

Secret quest? Completion requirements were met?

Jin-Woo couldn't understand any of that.

'No, hang on a minute. Besides all that, where did that voice come from?'

Too bad for him, the voice ignored Jin-Woo's questions and continued on regardless.

[You have acquired the rights to become a Player. Will you accept?]

He had acquired a right? Accept what, exactly?

'Sounds like I'll be given something....'

He grew up dirt poor since his childhood, so he had never refused freebies until now. However, that was a story for when he was still alive. What use was there for free stuff when he was dead?

'.....'

When Jin-Woo hesitated and didn't answer, the voice in his head asked again as if to urge him on.

[There is not enough time left for you to make your decision. Your heart will cease functioning precisely 0.02 seconds after you refuse to accept. Will you accept?]

He couldn't tell whether he was hallucinating or not, but he still got to figure out that he was only a moment away from dying for good. He finally spotted countless other weapons headed in his direction, beside that d*mn sword, that was how.

Now that the things had devolved to such a degree, he might as well.

'...If you're giving it to me, then just give it to me already.'

There was no need to utter anything out at all. He simply thought about it in his head. Even then, the voice of the female replied to him immediately.

[Congratulations on becoming a 'Player'.]

FLASH!!

A blinding light suddenly wrapped around Jin-Woo's body – and at the same time, he lost his consciousness.

Part 6: Penalty

He opened his eyes.

He saw a white ceiling, and his nose stung from the odour of disinfectants. He also felt the sensation of a hard mattress against his back.

Jin-Woo immediately recognised where he was.

'A hospital?'

Ever since he met the rank B Healer, Ju-Hui, the frequency of him staying in one had decreased somewhat, but still, hospitals were familiar places for Jin-Woo, just as he'd be with a local convenience store.

So much so that, he even heard a rumour of there being a special seat reserved for himself at the Hunter's hospital, too.

Jin-Woo raised his upper torso up. He then placed his hand on his chest and felt the vibrations coming from there. His heart was beating without a problem.

'I... survived?'

It wasn't only that, though. Unlike before, his entire being felt light and airy. He'd be feeling heavy-headed and fatigued whenever he woke up from a hospital bed.

But, it was a different story now. No, it was as if he had woken up in his own bed after a night of a good rest.

‘What’s going on....?’

This shouldn’t have been possible when he thought back to the moments before he lost his consciousness.

A sword was falling on his head right before his eyes.

Even if he got lucky and the sword missed, he was still surrounded by countless scary enemies. Those d*mn things were strong enough to give the assault team formed solely from the rank A – no, rank S Hunters a genuinely hard time.

‘But, I came out of that situation alive?’

Was he dreaming things, then?

Fortunately, there was a good way of confirming it for himself.

Jin-Woo pulled away the blanket covering him.

If that situation had been real, then his leg would still be gone, and if he had been dreaming, then his leg would be...

“You’ve finally woken up.”

REPORT

Jin-Woo was surprised by the weighty voice coming from the corner of the hospital room, and hurriedly turned his head to look.

“I apologise if we took you by surprise.”

“Unfortunately, we are unable to wait any longer.”

Two men kitted out in black business suits approached Jin-Woo’s bed. The youth tilted his head and asked them.

“Who.... are you?”

He had never seen these two’s faces before.

One of them with the close-cropped hair like a soldier and wearing a pair of sunglasses presented him with a business card.

“This is who we are.”

Jin-Woo received the business card and read what was written on it.

‘Woo Jin-Cheol, the section chief of the Monitoring Division, the Korean Hunter’s Association?’

The Monitoring Division was the only department in the Hunter’s Association with many strong Hunters in their payroll. Well, since this department was tasked with managing the country’s Hunters so, quite obviously, they would employ many high-class Hunters to facilitate that purpose.

“What does the Monitoring Division want from me?”

Woo Jin-Cheol dragged a chair closer to the bed and sat down. The other man, who must’ve been his subordinate, stood behind him.

The unspoken pressure emanating from the two buff guys staring down in close vicinity was quite heavy. The story they conveyed was rather surprising, though.

“I was unconscious for four days?!”

“By any chance, do you remember what happened before you blacked out?”

“Yes, I do.”

“Please tell us everything you can remember.”

Jin-Woo told them everything truthfully, minus the strange hallucinatory words he heard before he lost his consciousness.

“And that’s when you lost your consciousness... Is that all?”

“Yes. I open my eyes next, and I’m in a hospital.”

Woo Jin-Cheol and his lackey exchanged meaningful glances. For some reason, they seemed to be troubled by Jin-Woo’s lack of knowledge.

Actually, Jin-Woo was the one who wanted to find out what happened the most in this room.

“Just how did I get to this hospital? Did a large Guild participate and kill those d*mn things?”

“Well, actually....”

Woo Jin-Cheol awkwardly opened his mouth.

“By the time the agents of the Monitoring Division and the White Tiger Guild arrived at the scene after being briefed by the survivors....”

The White Tiger Guild was a super-massive Guild and also one of the top five in the country. The Association had recognised the danger, hence they requested the aid of such a huge Guild as the White Tiger Guild in the first place.

Just what did happen back there?

Jin-Woo nervously swallowed a dry spit.

“By the time....?”

“....Everything was ‘gone’. The only thing to be found within that open space was you, Mister Seong Jin-Woo. There was not one trace of the god statue nor the stone statues.”

“Come again?!”

Jin-Woo displayed a shocked, disbelieving face.

“It’s hard for us to believe it as well. If there had been any inconsistencies in the testimonies of the survivors, or if we had failed to find the remains of the victims in the chamber, we might have suspected something fishy was going on.”

Woo Jin-Cheol scratched his chin.

It'd been six years since he got ranked as an 'A' and started working for the Monitoring Division. He could confidently say that he had witnessed and experienced pretty much everything during his tenure. However, this kind of situation was a first even for him.

He had asked other Guilds as well as the Associations in other countries, but the end result was nothing worthy to speak about.

That was why...

“So, this is what we’ve been thinking...”

Woo Jin-Cheol carefully opened his mouth.

“There were powerful creatures in that chamber, without a doubt. But, they were taken care of by an unknown group, or an unknown person. Because, no otherworldly beings escaped from the Gate before it was closed, you see.”

They had to consider all the possibilities. Even if the odds were low, they had to confirm them all. The head honchos of the Association deliberated, and then deliberated for some more, and finally came up with a theory.

Woo Jin-Cheol carefully studied Jin-Woo's reactions as he continued on.

“We... suspect that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo-nim might have gone through another Awakening.”

Another Awakening!

Jin-Woo's eyes shot open wide.

Although extremely rare, there had been instances of a human who had awakened his or her abilities as a Hunter going through yet another Awakening.

Often referred to as 'Re-Awakening', those who undergo this process would normally become extremely powerful compared to before.

Originally, once a Hunter's rank was assigned at the beginning, it rarely changed. A Hunter's abilities were determined the moment one went through an Awakening, that was why.

However, it was a different story for those going through the Re-Awakening process.

Jumping past their own limitations to rise up from, say, rank C to A, or even from B to S, such things had happened before.

Woo Jin-Cheol nervously swallowed his saliva.

‘Seong Jin-Woo.... If he went through a Re-Awakening and became a rank S, no, maybe even exceeding that, then it’s possible for him to kill those monsters all by himself.’

The god statue was said to have melted rank C Hunters with nothing but its eyes, according to the survivors.

If one were able to kill such a creature even while unconscious, just how powerful one could possibly be?

To prepare for this unlikeliest possibility, Woo Jin-Cheol labelled this incident as ‘top secret’ and made sure everyone involved would keep their mouths shut.

This was also the reason why Seong Jin-Woo found himself in a hospital room all alone, as well as being looked after by some of the finest medical practitioners in the nation.

Woo Jin-Cheol’s chest began beating real fast.

‘Could Korea finally have a Hunter on the level of an international powerhouse....?’

There were less than ten people in the entire world that could truly be described as a global powerhouse. But, what if Korea were to possess a powerhouse that were said to rival a nuclear warhead in terms of pure firepower?

Of course, confirming the truth of the Re-Awakening wasn’t difficult at all. Didn’t the wise elders once say to make hay while the sun still shines?

Woo Jin-Cheol signalled to his lackey.

“Bring it here.”

Then, the lackey went to the corner of the room and began rummaging through a briefcase placed there.

“That is...?”

Before Jin-Woo could finish his question, Woo Jin-Cheol explained first.

He added that, although this device had been miniaturised, its efficiency or accuracy did not fall short of the actual full-size measuring device located in the Hunter’s Association.

“All you have to do is to place your hand on this magic crystal over here.”

On top of a circular plate, there was a fist-sized magic crystal embedded in the middle. Its colour was pitch-black, as if it was a black hole that wanted to suck him in!

It was one of the highest quality magic crystals that cost as much as a billion won, not to mention that could only be found in monsters ranked A or higher. (TL: Almost $900,000)

When Jin-Woo stared at the magic crystal without saying anything, Woo Jin-Cheol formed a dignified, serious expression and spoke up.

“This is a necessary step during our investigation, so please, cooperate with us.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

If he indeed had undergone a Re-Awakening, then his life would do a 180 in an instant. And they were going to test it out for him for free, so who was he to refuse?

Jin-Woo placed his hand on top of the black crystal and soon enough, warm rays of light oozed out from it.

Cold sweat drops formed on the foreheads of Woo Jin-Cheol and his lackey.

SFX for a beam of light dissipating

Not too long after then, the light surrounding the crystal dissipated.

Woo Jin-Cheol hurriedly took off his sunglasses and confirmed the numbers.

Right away, a small earthquake rocked Woo Jin-Cheol’s eyes.

“How can this be?!”

He rechecked the numbers, but it remained the same.

‘How can....’

How could a person holding a Hunter licence possess the magic energy value of only 10?!

When considering the fact that the lowest average value for rank E – the bottom rank – was around 70 to 100, Seong Jin-Woo was no different from a regular person.

“Is it really a Re-Awakening? If it is, what could be my new rank now?”

Jin-Woo’s hands were soaked in the sweat of anticipation.

Seeing the suspicious reactions of the two Monitoring Division agents, the result must've been somewhat beyond their expectations.

Meanwhile, Woo Jin-Cheol was comparing the existing data on Jin-Woo with the new measurement.

'His first measurement returned the value of 12. Four years later, it's 10. It has decreased by 2, but it is within the margin of error.'

In other words, the magic energy measuring device was working fine. Instead, it was Seong Jin-Woo's magic energy that happened to be just illogically, nonsensically low.

It was a miracle that he had survived until now.

Woo Jin-Cheol rapidly realised that being here was a waste of time, so he got up from his seat.

"Let's go."

"Yes, sir."

Woo Jin-Cheol and his lackey quickly packed up to leave.

"Uhm, excuse me. Can you tell me what is...."

Just as Jin-Woo was about to ask, Woo Jin-Cheol bowed his head slightly.

"Thank you for your cooperation. If you remember anything else, please give us a call anytime."

As if their rear ends were on fire, two men-in-black rapidly left the room as soon as they put away the device.

The hospital room that felt rather small suddenly became quiet and lonely.

"..."

Jin-Woo scratched the back of his neck.

'I guess that was a no, then.'

Well, if he thought about it, besides him feeling refreshed, there didn't seem to be any change to him at all. Even if he did go through a Re-Awakening, it'd still be difficult for him to kill all those statue b*stards, anyways.

'Maybe, you might have a chance against them if you were either the ultimate weapon, Hunter Choi Jong-In, or the rank SS Hunter Goh Gun-Hui.'

Of course, him speculating like this was meaningless, since he had never seen them in action before. There was always a thick veil of secrecy draped over the Hunters ranked S.

They were more like clouds in the sky to him, actually.

He thought up to here and inadvertently raised his head up. And that's when he saw 'it'.

'Huh?!'

He looked up without thinking, and then, saw 'words' floating in the air.

[You have several unread messages.]

".....?"

He closed his eyes and opened them again.

The words remained floating up there without a single change. He shook his head hard a few times and even rubbed his eyes, but they were still there.

Jin-Woo massaged his aching forehead and lowered his head.

'It hadn't been a long time since I started hearing weird things, but now, I'm even seeing them, too....'

Could something in his head really be broken?

There was a condition called PTSD, after all. People who experienced a huge accident or a traumatic event usually suffered from this condition.

It was only a few days ago since he witnessed the deaths of many of his comrades, not to mention he himself nearly died as well, so it would not be so strange to hear or see weird things as a possible side effect.

'However....'

However, there were a couple of things that prevented him from dismissing this out of hand.

Jin-Woo's sight lowered to his leg – the leg that got cut in half by the shield of the stone statue was now all fine and dandy.

The voice he heard out of the blue inside the underground temple hidden within the depths of the dual dungeon; his completely-cured (?) leg; and now, those words floating in front of his eyes.

Too many weird things were happening all at once.

'What if....?'

There was a chance that all these things were not isolated events but linked to one another. When his thoughts arrived here, his aching head felt just a bit clearer.

‘Okay, fine.’

Jin-Woo slowly raised his head.

Once the confusion in his heart died down and he felt calmer, he became quite curious about the contents of those so-called unread messages. There might be answers to his questions found within those messages, after all.

In order to confirm the messages, he reached out towards the words.

And his hand simply went past them.

It seemed that he got way too used to how a smartphone worked. He couldn’t think of any other way to access the messages other than tapping on the ‘icon’, though.

While he was deliberating on the means to access the messages, he recalled the memories from the moments before he blacked out.

“Right. That happened.”

Back then, he could only get his intentions across to that unknown voice by ‘talking’ to it.

‘Just like back then, I should either form the words in my head or speak it out loud.’

Thinking that this must be the case, Jin-Woo then began to mutter the potential combination of words one by one.

“Confirm.”

“Messages.”

“Reading.”

“I want to read.”

“I want to look.”

“Hey, show me already, will ya?!”

It was then.

“.....Just what is it that you wish to see that bad?”

He felt a cold, probing stare coming from the side, so he turned his head to look. And, spotted his little sister in her school uniform looking at him from the gap of the half-open door.

“Uhm.....”

Jin-Woo became speechless.

Her oppa, busy glaring at the ceiling while demanding someone to show something to him – he simply didn’t know how to explain this one to her.

“Maybe, you hurt your head really bad?”

The younger sister stood at a distance away and asked Jin-Woo, prompting him to shake his head vigorously.

“No, that’s not it.”

Even though he denied it, Jin-Woo’s younger sibling, Seong Jin-Ah’s eyes remained suspicious.

“Are you really okay?”

“Yes, I’m telling you the truth.”

Jin-Ah blankly swept her gaze all over Jin-Woo, before she came closer while her breathing became uneven, angry. And then, as soon as Jin-Woo assumed a defensive posture, she began punching him in all the unguarded parts.

“I told you to stop getting hurt!! You have any idea how worried I was?!”

“.....I’m sorry.”

“Other people walk away fine, but how come it’s only you who gets hurt all the time?!”

“....Sorry.”

The strength behind Jin-Ah’s punches gradually seeped away. She soon stopped, and as her head fell, began crying. Jin-Woo slowly patted the back of his sobbing sister.

His own nostrils stung quite a bit then.

‘I was thinking of leaving behind this kid alone and dying, wasn’t I....’

What a relief that he made it out alive.

When he looked back, there had been way too many brushes with death for comfort back then.

It was as if he had experienced one hell of a terrifying nightmare.

Jin-Woo’s gaze shifted ever so slightly towards the words floating in the air.

‘It still feels like I haven’t completely woken up from that nightmare just yet, doesn’t it?’

There were so many things he couldn’t understand.

But, so what?

The most important thing was that he came back alive, and he got to see his little sister again.

“Sniff.”

Thankfully, his strong-willed sister stopped crying after a short while. Unfortunately for him, though, her nagging continued on for over one hour afterwards.

“Do you hear me? If you get hurt one more time, I’m going to give up on studying, find a job, and make sure you don’t work as a Hunter ever again.”

Jin-Ah’s sharp glare didn’t really suit her pretty face, but that was a biological trait she had shared with her older brother.

“Okay, okay. I hear you.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head as if he’d given up.

Only after she was able to extract his assurance several times more did she display a hint of satisfaction, and stood up from the seat.

“You going somewhere?”

“Yeah. To school. I got permission to leave so I could check up on you. So I gotta go back.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

“Right, the university entrance exams are next year.”

She might never have received a private tutoring nor did she ever attend extra classes, but she always got ranked within the top ten in her school until now.

Jin-Ah dreamed of becoming a doctor.

Only until a few years ago, she just loved to waste time on video games and stuff like that, but then, after their mother fell ill, she swore to become a doctor and never stopped studying since.

Jin-Woo dearly wished to make her dream come true, no matter what.

Hang on a minute.... playing video games?

Suddenly, Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed a bit dangerously.

"Okay, I'm going now."

Just as Jin-Ah was leaving his room, Jin-Woo urgently called out to her.

"Hey, Jin-Ah?"

"Yeah?"

"When you are playing video games...."

Jin-Ah smirked softly.

"I don't play games anymore. The third year of high school is only a few days away, you know."

"I know, I know. There's something I want to ask you, though."

"Oh, really? Like? I didn't know Oppa played video games, though?"

Jin-Ah suddenly displayed an intense interest as a subject she was deeply intimate with once upon a time was brought up.

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance at the still-floating 'message' in the air and asked her.

"When there are unread messages in a game, what should I do access them?"

"You gotta open the mailbox first."

"I gotta 'open' the mailbox?"

Tti-ring!

As soon as Jin-Woo said the word 'open', a clear beep entered his head and the hidden messages revealed themselves.

[There are two unread messages.]

- Congratulations on becoming a [Player] (unread)

- [Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong] is now available. (unread)

Jin-Woo smiled brightly.

'Finally!'

Seeing her older brother's complexion suddenly brighten like that, Jin-Ah felt something was wrong and quickly asked him.

"What's up? What game is it? You need my help?"

Jin-Woo firmly shook his head.

“Nope, no need. I’ll do it alone.”

How would his younger sibling react if he told her what had been happening to him right now?

‘I really don’t want to be labelled as a loon by her.’

Jin-Woo swallowed back the things he wanted to say for the time being.

While pretending to see her out, Jin-Woo confirmed her getting on the elevator, and quickly returned to his room.

‘I can’t repeat the same mistake again.’

Click.

To prevent eyewitnesses intruding on him, he even locked the door. Finishing with his preparations, Jin-Woo sat on the bed and read the titles of the messages available to read.

- Congratulations on becoming a [Player] (unread)

- [Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong] is now available. (unread)

He thought that the first message sounded familiar, as if he heard it before from somewhere.

‘Where have I heard it from? I know I have.’

So, the first message, then.

- Congratulations on becoming a [Player] (unread)

‘Confirm.’

Tti-ring!

[This System will support the growth of the ‘Player.’]

[Your rewards have been delivered.]

“Ahh.”

He belatedly remembered this.

He heard those words just before he lost his consciousness.

‘Back then, it was talking about a Player this and that, no?’

Of course, back then or even now, he still couldn't really understand what on earth was going here.

The 'System', 'growth', 'penalties', and finally, 'rewards'.

The words with unknown meanings fell on his lap one after the other.

'Just what will it help grow, and what will it reward me with?'

Seeing the words that could only be found in a video game appearing before his eyes without any prior explanations, only served to confound him even further.

He decided to worry about the confusing words later and calmly opened the next message.

- [Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong] is now available. (unread)

Gulp.

Jin-Woo unconsciously swallowed his saliva after reading that rather suggestive title. His heart began to beat faster in anticipation.

'Confirm.'

Tti-ring.

Sit-up, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

Squat, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

※Warning: Incompletion of Daily Quests will result in appropriate levels of punishment.

Jin-Woo reflexively spat out a dumbfounded chuckle after confirming the contents of the message.

"Ha, haha..... Seriously, man."

Should this be the feelings of disappointment?

To think, what the grand-sounding Daily Quest, the one titled 'Preparations to become strong', was nothing more than a list of physical exercises to train his body....

Well, for sure, if he did as the quest said, then his body might get a bit tougher.

Was this what that growth and reward thing the System was talking about?

'Now that I think about it....'

He recalled reading a quote of 'a person with an inner problem should pay attention to the inner voice' from some book in the past.

'In other words, one would see what they wanted to see, eventually....'

Just how desperately did he want to become stronger that he ended up seeing this stupid hallucination?

Although it was funny, he also felt a bit lonely inside.

"If anyone could become stronger by doing these exercises, who would be willing to go through that much hardship, then...?"

Jin-Woo shook his head.

He suddenly thought that he was a fool for searching for answers to his many questions from a d*mn hallucination.

'Urgh. I don't care anymore.'

Jin-Woo lied down spread-eagled on the bed. He wordlessly stared at the ceiling.

"....."

He wasn't doing anything important, yet the time continued to tick by.

Just as he began to feel the weight of the stillness filling up his hospital room....

Jin-Woo abruptly raised his torso off the bed.

'But, what if....'

What if something could change?

As his thoughts were filled half with the uncertain expectation and the other half by unconvinced curiosity, he began wondering whether he should at least give 'it' a shot.

'Well, I've got nothing to lose, anyways.'

There would be no reason not to try it out, if he treated as a light workout to stretch his muscles or something, no?

He made up his mind.

'Fine. Let's try it.'

Jin-Woo climbed off the bed and stretched himself for a bit, before leaning against the corner of the bed and slowly performed the ‘press-up’.

“One, two, three.....”

The count started from ‘one’ and quickly climbed upwards.

“.....97, 98, 99, 100.”

Since he started this thing, he decided to do all 100, but quite different from his expectation, nothing happened when he was finished.

...Other than his arms aching just a little, that was.

“Just what the hell am I doing....”

Jin-Woo smirked helplessly and stood straight up.

- Congratulations on becoming a [Player] (read)

- [Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong] is now available. (read)

The messages were now marked as ‘read’.

There were no more words of ‘unread messages’ popping up in his view, and he also didn’t feel like humouring this hallucination anymore, either

He had enough of this, in other words.

Jin-Woo closed the mailbox without regret.

“Yawn....”

Jin-Woo yawned out at length and climbed back up on the bed. He felt sleepy as if he had pushed himself too hard.

The sky outside the window was already dyed in the colours of the sunset.

The Monitoring Division agents said earlier that his hospital fees would be taken care of by the Association.

He figured that it wouldn’t be too late to leave after receiving a thorough examination of his body and get the all-clear from the doctors first. Jin-Woo laid down comfortably while thinking as such.

‘I’m sure these hallucinations and weird things I hear will eventually go away with time....’

His eyelids slowly closed shut. And Jin-Woo drifted away into a deep slumber.

Tick, tock.

Even when Jin-Woo was softly snoring to himself, the needles of the clock hanging by the wall continued to tick away.

The needles spun and spun around until they indicated 11:59:57 PM.

Tick, tock, tick.

58, 59, 60....

The needles stopped moving precisely as they touched 12:00:00.

Tti-ring.

[You've failed to complete the Daily Quest. You'll be transferred to the 'Penalty Zone' for a set period of time.]

RUMBLE!!!

Jin-Woo's eyes shot right open from the violent tremor that shook his entire body.

"An earthquake?!"

Jin-Woo sat right up and grabbed the edges of the bed. The shaking was so bad that he couldn't maintain his balance.

RUMBLE!!

The shaking got progressively worse as the seconds ticked by. It happened then.

SFX for things turning into powder and falling to the floor

One of the steel bars on the bed he held on for dear life suddenly broke. No, it didn't break per se, but simply 'disappeared'. Jin-Woo hurriedly looked at his palm. No steel bar there, just grains of sand.

'Sand?!'

SFX for things turning into powder and falling to the floor

The other steel bar also transformed into sand as well.

Meanwhile, the 'earthquake' became even more violent.

RUUUUMBLE!!!

"Uwaaahk!!"

In the end, Jin-Woo was thrown off from the bed. He bounced around all over the hospital room and screamed out. Even when that was happening, items within the room was turning into sand one at the time.

"Uwaaaahhhh!!"

....Plop.

Jin-Woo was flung away and got deposited rather unceremoniously.

He felt something soft against his fingertips. They happened to be ultra-fine grains of sand.

And the accursed earthquake had stopped.

“Ptooi! Ptooi!!”

Jin-Woo spat out the sand in his mouth and hurriedly raised his head up.

“...?!”

His eyes caught the sight on an endless plain of nothing but sand.

Jin-Woo frowned heavily and got up. All the sand that found its way inside his clothes poured out. He dusted the sand caked on his chest while taking a look around him.

Indeed, all he could see was sand. And more sand.

“A desert...?!”

This couldn't be real.

Until a few moments ago, he was sleeping on a bed inside a hospital located in the middle of Seoul. But now, as soon as he opened his eyes, he was in the middle of a massive desert?

Jin-Woo scooped up a handful of sand, and let it slip through his fingers. The fine grains fell straight down to the ground.

‘There is not a single breeze here.’

It wasn't just the breeze, though – when he raised his head up to look, the sky didn't have a sun, a moon, or any stars for that matter.

It was an empty sky, as if it was filled up with black ink and nothing else.

However, for some reason, he had no trouble seeing at all.

“Just where is this place?”

Chapter 10 Fin.

REPORT

It happened then.

Shururururu.....

Suddenly, the sandy ground next to him caved in and a deep pit formed there.

“Huh? Uh, uh!”

Jin-Woo desperately ran away so he could avoid getting sucked in down there. The sandy pit grew wider and wider, and eventually, Jin-Woo had to crawl on all fours just to pull himself out.

“Pant, pant, pant....”

He plopped down on his butt, panted heavily and stared at the bottom of the pit. Quite bizarrely, he could see that the sand at the bottom was ‘boiling’.

Realising that just one misstep would have resulted in him falling in there sent shivers down his spine.

“Hang on a minute....”

Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed in suspicion.

“....It’s not actually boiling, is it?”

When he took a closer look, he spotted ‘something’ pretty big wiggling down there.

Jin-Woo instinctively forced himself up. He was getting a really bad premonition right about now.

Sure enough, just as Jin-Woo took a step back, the sand within the pit suddenly exploded upwards.

Phushu-!!

The falling sand emitted the roar of a waterfall.

Jin-Woo’s eyes went extra round in the meantime.

“An... an insect?”

The identity of the thing that exploded out from the sand was a giant centipede.

Kiiiiieehhk!!

When fully revealed, the d*mn thing's head almost reached the height equaling that of a five-story building.

Jin-Woo anxiously swallowed his saliva.

'This is unreal....'

For sure, the b*stard was unrealistically huge. He had never heard of a centipede this big existing in the world before. But the size of the centipede wasn't the only thing that shocked Jin-Woo.

"Why is there a... name floating on top of that monster?"

Was he dreaming again?

Jin-Woo closed and opened his eyes again, yet nothing had changed. Even now, there were five red words floating on top of the monster's head.

...Just like a monster from a video game might have.

'The Poison-Fanged Giant Desert Centipede.'

Just like its horrendous and bizarre appearance, its name too was something he'd like to avoid at all cost. What drew his attention the most was the two letters "poison" and "fanged".

He spotted a pair of fangs as large as a child jutting out just below the b*stard's jaw. It didn't take a genius to figure out what might happen if he got stabbed by those fangs simply from its name alone.

Seeing those large fangs and its jaw constantly opening and closing, it was as if....

"It's busy licking its lips, right?"

It was then, the sound went off in his head again.

Tti-ring.

[Penalty Quest: Survival]

Goal: Please survive until the end of the time limit.

Time limit: 4 hours

Remaining time: 4 hours 0 minutes 0 seconds

'Are you kidding me....?'

However, as soon as the 'remaining time' changed to 3 hours, 59 minutes, and 59 seconds, the centipede parted sand and rushed towards him as if it couldn't wait any longer.

SFX for sand parting ways

“Wha-what the hell?!”

Jin-Woo hurriedly spun around and ran for his life.

There was no time to deliberate on things.

If he wanted to live, then he had to run!

That was the only thought racing in his head.

However, even before he had taken several steps, another pillar of sand exploded upwards not too far from his position.

Boom!!

“Euh-ahhck?!”

Jin-Woo fell on his rear from the powerful shockwave. He rolled on the sandy ground before urgently getting back up. He swiped the sand off his face before his eyes shot open even wider.

This time, it wasn't just one or two of them.

Boom!!

Boooooom!!

Before he had even noticed it, there were seven sand centipedes jutting out from the sand and they were all glaring at him.

Kiiiiieechhk!!

Kiieeek!!

As the centipedes issued shrill cries, Jin-Woo's complexion changed for the worse. A lot worse.

“God d*mn it....”

Jin-Woo reappeared in the hospital room exactly four hours later.

Plop.

Jin-Woo keeled over on the floor and painfully wheezed out.

“Cough, cough!! Ptooi, ptooi!!”

His mouth felt full with this coarse, grainy taste. His eyes stung badly too, seemingly like sand particles got in there.

Jin-Woo whimpered and groaned for a long time, before powerlessly falling flat on his back. He didn't have any energy left to lift even a finger.

“Pant.... Pant.... Just.... What was that....?”

Jin-Woo continued to pant heavily when a new message appeared before him.

Tti-ring.

[You've completed the 'Penalty Quest.']

Jin-Woo's expression crumpled into something unsightly.

A 'Penalty Quest'?

Did he do something worthy of being punished?

Jin-Woo carefully retreaded his memories until he recalled the [Daily Quest] he abandoned mid-way yesterday.

‘Could it be...?’

Now that he thought about it, it definitely said that if the quest was not completed, he'd be hit with a corresponding penalty.

“Pant, pant, that.... That was not a hallucination?!”

Indeed, it was not a hallucination nor was it a dream.

There was no need to pinch his cheeks to confirm whether this was a dream or reality.

When he was running around, the shortness of breath felt so suffocatingly harsh, and the pain he felt when he got grazed by the centipede's leg still felt fresh in his mind.

Everything happened for real.

He nearly died back there.

“This is way too much.... Pant... pant....”

The so-called penalty turned out to be him being thrown into a d*mn execution ground!

At the same time, another ominous premonition rushed into his mind. If this event was indeed caused by the 'Daily Quest' thing, then without a doubt, this would not be the last time.

Sure enough, he got to hear yet another mechanical beep going off in his head.

Tti-ring.

He flinched in surprise, but thankfully, it was not about another quest or anything like that.

[Rewards for completing the Penalty Quest is now available.]

[Would you like to confirm the rewards?] (Y/N)

‘Rewards....?’

The word ‘rewards’ jumped right out. Too bad, the problem was, he currently didn’t have any energy left whatsoever to confirm this and that.

His situation simply didn’t allow that.

‘Never mind giving me rewards or not.... Let me take a break first....’

His sights gradually blurred.

Soon, Jin-Woo fell into a deep slumber akin to a blackout.

“Oh my gosh?! What happened in here?”

morning.

A nurse entered Jin-Woo’s room, only for her eyes to open up wide in surprise.

The patient was lying sprawled on the floor, while sand was everywhere as far as she could see. Not only that, the patient too was full of sand as well.

She threw the medical chart on the bed and urgently pressed the emergency buzzer.

“Please, someone get over here right away!”

Soon, the doctor in charge rushed into the room.

“What happened? What’s the matter with Mister Seong Jin-Woo?”

“I don’t know. Everything was fine until last night, yet this morning....”

“For now, let’s relocate him back on the bed. One, two!”

Two people lifted Jin-Woo off the floor and placed him back on the bed. During the process, the back of Jin-Woo’s hand got scratched by the edge of the medical chart left on the bed and his skin tore just a little, but no one noticed that.

“Let’s take a look.”

The doctor then carefully examined Jin-Woo’s condition. However, he couldn't find anything wrong with the youth.

“What the heck.... Isn't he just in a deep sleep?”

The doctor spat out a sigh of relief.

The Hunter's Association had requested the hospital to pay a special attention to this particular patient. Understandably, the doctor was scared almost out of his wits while thinking that something bad had happened here.

“For now, let's let him be. Looks like he's in a really deep slumber at the moment.”

The doctor in charge spoke to the nurse and was about to leave, but then, he took a look around the room and scratched the side of his head.

“By the way, this room... might need a thorough cleaning. Miss Yu-Rah, please take care of tidying this place up.”

“Yes. I shall, doctor.”

The doctor left the room and the nurse, Choi Yu-Rah, patted her chest down.

What a relief that it turned out to be nothing to worry about.

Sure, they might not be the patient or the relatives of one themselves, but you wouldn't find a doctor or a nurse who wished ill on those they were in charge of.

The Hunter's hospital especially saw many heavily-injured patients every day. At the bare minimum, she'd like to never see another one of patients she was looking after get worse under her care.

“Whew...”

She had calmed down a little now, and began worrying about where should she start tidying this room up, but then, her eyes spotted drops of blood on the floor.

“Oh my?”

The blood droplets were coming from the tip of patient's hand that fell outside the bed.

She got stunned by this and hurriedly searched for the wound on Jin-Woo's hand, before flipping it around.

There definitely was a trace of flowing blood, but she could not find a single wound. She wiped the blood clean, yet the expected wound was not there.

‘Wait.... Could his injury heal in that short time?’

Yu-Rah’s heart began beating faster as she cautiously studied Jin-Woo’s complexion.

He was still submerged in a deep, deep sleep even now.

Part 7: Daily Quest

Tti-ring.

[Daily Quest is now available.]

Jin-Woo’s eyes shot right open.

He quickly raised himself up and the first thing he did was to check the time. The needles of the clock just went past 16:30.

Meaning, there was the leeway of seven hours and thirty minutes before midnight.

‘Good.’

Jin-Woo opened the mailbox.

Tti-ring.

[Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong]

Press-up, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

Sit-up, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

Squat, 100 times: Incomplete (0/100)

Running, 10 km: Incomplete (0/10)

※Warning: Incompletion of Daily Quests will result in appropriate levels of punishment.

He groaned out almost reflexively.

No, perhaps this was for the better. Rather than a quest with impossible or hard-to-understand goals, this was far more preferable, instead.

Well, as long as he had enough time, he’d be able to complete this quest after all, although his body might suffer for a bit. Jin-Woo got down to the floor this time and began the press-up.

“One.”

Obviously, he was not planning on being dragged to yet another suspicious place and get almost killed there.

“Two.”

He got lucky the previous night and survived, but there was no guarantee that would happen tonight as well.

“Three.”

He raised his head a little and confirmed the contents of the quest, and noticed that every time he performed a press-up, it was being recorded in real time as well.

Tti-ring.

[You’ve completed one press-up.]

[Press-up 100 times: Incomplete (7/100)]

Tti-ring.

[You’ve completed one press-up.]

[Press-up 100 times: Incomplete (8/100)]

He wanted to make sure, so he only went down half-way and got back up, but as expected, that didn’t count. Now he finally realised why the so-called press-ups of yesterday didn’t count. He had to perform the proper press-ups or it wouldn’t be counted at all.

‘Huh.... Gimme a break.’

Jin-Woo was dumbfounded, but didn’t stop the exercise.

He still had 50 more press-ups to go.

After that, sit-ups, squats and running were waiting for him.

....And, three hours later.

Press-up, 100 times: Complete (100/100)

Sit-up, 100 times: Complete (100/100)

Squat, 100 times: Complete (100/100)

Running, 10 km: Incomplete (9/10)

“Pant, pant, pant, pant...”

Jin-Woo lapped the outer perimeter of the hospital once and arrived back in front of his room. He was currently bent over and panting out heavily. His heart felt like it might explode at any second, but he couldn’t give up yet.

‘I worked so crazy hard until now, so no way I would....’

He somehow managed to open the door and took a step forward.

When he did that....

Tti-ring.

[Total distance ran: 10 km.]

[You’ve completed Running, 10 km.]

It was finally over.

“Pant.... Pant...”

Jin-Woo fell down to his knees. His breath reeked of something sweet and bitter. His face and back were soaked in sweat.

“Pant.... Pant....”

As Jin-Woo tried to regulate his heavy, rough breathing while thick sweat drops continuously dripped down, a familiar message popped up in front of his eyes.

Tti-ring.

[You’ve completed ‘Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong’.]

[Completion rewards have arrived.]

[Would you like to confirm?] (Y/N)

Jin-Woo momentarily thought about forgetting about everything and simply laying down in defeat, but quickly changed his mind. At least for now, he wanted to confirm what these reward things could actually be with his own eyes first.

“Confirm.”

Tti-ring.

[The following rewards are available.]

Reward 1. Full recovery of the current physical condition

Reward 3. One random box

[Would you like to collect them all?]

‘Why are there so many of them?’

That was the first thought to enter his dazed mind after he took a gander at the contents of his rewards.

But, when he thought about it a little deeper, one of those rewards seemed rather useful right now, and there was also one that made him curious about what it could actually mean.

For now, he urgently needed the first reward available. He was on the brink of collapsing here.

Since there really was a penalty for failure, the odds of completion rewards being real were pretty d*mn high as well.

Well, trying wouldn't hurt anyways, right?

Seriously, this 'thing' wouldn't throw him back into the penalty zone again after it said it'd give him the rewards, now would it?

REPORT

As soon as he muttered that out, a gentle blue aura enveloped him.

‘Uh... isn’t this sensation.... that?’

Right away, he recalled Yi Ju-Hui’s face. When he was getting healed by her, he felt the sensation similar to what he was feeling right now.

If he were to put this feeling into words, then it’d be like a refreshing blast of air entering his lungs before leaving again – something like that?

Shu....

He felt the blue aura slowly dissipating. For some reason, he kinda felt a bit rueful.

Jin-Woo got up from the floor and lightly jumped up and down on the spot and stretched his body this way and that.

“How can this be?!”

His heart that felt like it might explode was beating calmly now, and his rough breathing had stabilised as well. He didn’t even feel a speck of fatigue. His body that was on the brink of collapsing, felt refreshed as if he just got up from a night of good rest.

The effect, in other words, was top-notch.

‘Isn’t this really amazing?’

Jin-Woo’s eyes now resembled circles. He wasn’t sure whether this was some kind of magic or not, but this phenomenon could change him in the most astonishing way, without a doubt.

In that case, would those ‘Stat points’ be the same?

When Jin-Woo shifted his gaze around, he spotted a small box resting on top of the bed as well as his own Stat Window floating in the air.

‘I guess that thing over there is the random box....’

The important thing was his Stat Window, though. This window displayed simple information about himself.

Name: Seong Jin-Woo

Level: 1

Class: None

Title: None

HP: 100

MP: 10

Tiredness: 0

[Stat]

Strength: 10

Stamina: 10

Agility: 10

Intelligence: 10

Perception: 10

(Available points to distribute: 3)

[Skills]

Passive skills:

- (Unknown) Lv. Max

- Tenacity Lv. 1

Active skills:

- Dash Lv. 1

The stat he saw was quite similar to a starting character from an online game he used to play many moons ago.

‘Is this my current Stat value?’

His current level was 1. All of his stats were also at the bottom of the heap, too.

If he thought about the current reality of what he was like, the one where he was ranked as the weakest even among the rank E Hunters, then there was nothing to be surprised about there.

What he paid attention to was the ‘Skills’ column.

A passive skill called ‘Tenacity’ and an active one called ‘Dash’.

For some reason, he felt rather familiar with them.

“Ah. I remember now. Yesterday....”

Yesterday, or to be more precise, back in the early dawn of this morning, he remembered hearing those words while being chased around by the centipedes in the penalty zone.

It happened probably after three hours of him constantly running for his dear life. He was suddenly greeted by a couple of new messages.

[‘Skill: Dash Lv. 1’ has been learned.]

[‘Skill: Tenacity Lv. 1’ has been learned.]

Back then, he was far too busy running to think about what they could mean, but it was a different story now. Jin-Woo confirmed the explanations available for the skills.

[Skill: Dash Lv. 1]

Active skill.

Mana required to activate: 5

The constant running fortified your legs. When this skill is activated, your movement speed will increase by 30%. During its activation, 1 Mana will be spent every minute.

[Skill: Tenacity Lv. 1]

Passive skill.

Mana required to activate: None.

You possess untiring tenacity. When your stamina drops below 30%, this skill will automatically activate and reduce all damage received by 50%.

‘Did I learn ‘Dash’ and ‘Tenacity’ because I stubbornly ran around like there’s no tomorrow?’

That seemed to be about right.

In other words, if he kept on repeating a certain action over and over again, and happen to meet the requirement conditions, he would be able to learn new skills.

“Holy cow!”

Wasn’t this an incredible advantage?

The thing was, the skills individual Hunters used were acquired when they went through the Awakening process, or learnt through the items called ‘Rune’ Stones that dropped very rarely from monsters ranked A and above.

Understandably, the prices of these Rune Stones would start from the lowest of several hundred thousand Won to dozens of billion Wons at the top end.

At the last auction, the most expensive Rune Stone was sold for around ₩70,000,000,000. (TL: over $62 million)

Apparently, this Rune Stone contained a skill that could revert many injured people back to their original conditions in one go, and it was snapped up by an anonymous overseas rank S Healer who had reputedly emptied out his entire life savings.

Jin-Woo's heart began beating faster.

A skill that increased his movement speed, as well as another that decreased the amount of damage received.

Sure, they weren't as good as those skills that sold for billions of Won, but they were still amazing to him regardless. And he got to learn those for free, too!

His overall magic energy value was too low, so it'd be hard to use them properly, but still, it was better than not knowing them, wasn't it?

'Besides, the Tenacity skill doesn't even need Mana to activate, too.....'

It seemed that this Mana thing was his magic energy. If that was the case, then even though he didn't have a lot of magic energy, he'd be able to freely use the Tenacity skill. That alone was a huge gain.

"By the way... what could this 'unknown' thing be?"

[Skills]

Passive skills:

- (Unknown) Lv. Max

The 'Unknown' that occupied one whole slot of the passive skills column.

Since it was located in the passive column, that meant it activated automatically, but there was not one explanation or any information on it.

'Not even a single clue, huh.'

The amount of information he could learn was just too limited. Even if he burst his brain trying to figure it out, he knew there wouldn't be any answers. So, Jin-Woo shifted his gaze to elsewhere.

'Stat points, is it....?'

Three additional Stat points he got as a reward remained there, still to be distributed.

[Stat]

Strength: 10

Stamina: 10

Agility: 10

Intelligence: 10

Perception: 10

‘I’m sure this means I can increase any one of my Stats by three points, right?’

There were five categories in the list of Stats. Maybe because he was a mere level 1, the values of each stat were ‘simple’, to say the least. However, if he considered how reality operated, he couldn’t take these stats lightly at all.

If his abilities changed for real with a moment’s decision, then who in this world would be able to casually make such choices?

Jin-Woo’s expression became serious.

‘Strength is no doubt talking about my physical power....’

He could more or less figure out what ‘Strength’, ‘Stamina’ and ‘Agility’ could mean. After all, those were the kind of ‘Stats’ one would often encounter in video games.

The question was with the last two Stats, ‘Intelligence’ and ‘Perception’, then. And just like before, the unfriendly System didn’t provide any answers whatsoever.

If he increased ‘Intelligence’ would he get actually smarter, for instance? And, if he increased ‘Perception’, then would he become more sensitive?

Whatever the case may have been, he felt that those two Stats didn’t really seem all that useful to him right now.

He was a melee-type Hunter, to begin with. What he needed was power, speed, or even stamina.

‘If you were to ask me to choose between the three, I’d inevitably go with Strength.’

If he got physically stronger, many things would become that much easier for him.

Also, he wanted to find out what kind of change would take place with his body once the Stat values had been increased. Since he thought that this change would be much more prominent with the increase in the Strength stat, he ended up investing all three points on it.

“All three points to the Strength stat.”

Tti-ring.

[Stat]

Strength: 13

Stamina: 10

Agility: 10

Intelligence: 10

Perception: 10

(Available points to distribute: 0)

‘Is that... all?’

Indeed, it looked like it.

The only change he could tell was the Strength stat value floating in front of his eyes like hologram projection changing from 10 to 13. Unlike how it was in cartoons or movies, his body didn't feel like it was overflowing with uncontrollable power or anything like that.

“Did anything actually change or not?”

He decided to use his muscles to find out. Jin-Woo stood next to the bed and lifted it. He felt a bit of weight, but he was able to pick it up easier than he thought. However, he found it impossible to tell whether this was because of the bed being light, or his Strength having been improved.

‘I should’ve lifted the bed first before spending the d*mn points....’

Since he had already spent all the points before confirming, it was hard to tell the difference between ‘before’ and ‘after’.

‘Only if I had some more points to spend....’

Jin-Woo licked his lips in regret only for a certain memory to jump out at him.

“The rewards from the Penalty Quest!”

Today wasn't the only time he got to ‘complete’ the Daily Quests. He might have nearly died, but he sure as hell did complete the Penalty Quest, and he remembered seeing the message about the rewards being available as well.

Jin-Woo hurriedly opened the mailbox.

[Would you like to confirm the rewards?] (Y/N)

“I knew it!”

Jin-Woo clenched his fists tightly.

Of course, it’s a resounding “Yes!”

[The following rewards are available.]

Reward 2. One random box

Unlike the Daily Quest rewards, the option of the full status recovery was absent, but well, what he needed right now was the additional Stat points anyways.

He was momentarily worried about there being a huge difference in rewards since they were from a Penalty Quest and all, but he was relieved to find three points waiting for him.

Jin-Woo hummed joyously to himself.

“Add all three points to the Strength stat.”

Tti-ring.

[Stat]

Strength: 16

Stamina: 10

Agility: 10

Intelligence: 10

Perception: 10

His Strength jumped up from 13 to 16.

Jin-Woo stood next to the bed again and put some strength in his arms. And he was able to lift up the bed a lot easier than before. He could definitely tell the difference now.

His physical strength had really improved.

If he were to consider the change purely through the Stats alone, then the starting value of 10 had increased by 60% so how could he fail to notice the improvement?

Now feeling completely elated, he went around the room and began picking up not just the bed, but everything he could lay his hands on, and generally made a mess of things inside.

Only after the chief nurse passing by heard the commotion and scolded him did he stop his tomfoolery.

“...I’m very sorry.”

As soon as the chief nurse left his room, Jin-Woo spat out a sigh of relief.

“Whew.”

However, he couldn’t calm down at all. His heart was beating like crazy.

Thud, thud. Thud, thud!

As a matter of fact, his chest actually hurt.

The Daily Quest that would continue to show up every day, and the Stat points as the reward!

As long as this unexplainable phenomenon didn’t come to a sudden end, he’d be able to live a completely different life to the one he’d been leading until now.

This was an unbelievable opportunity for him.

Besides that, the Stat Window also showed his ‘level’.

‘Does this mean I can also increase my level, too?’

Eventually, though – Jin-Woo shook his head.

‘Eiii, there’s no way.’

Now that would be too good to be true. He wasn’t hoping that far, anyway. The rewards from the quests alone were plenty enough for him.

He’d use the Stat points to increase his abilities. Every day he’d grow to be stronger – compared to yesterday, he’d be stronger today; compared to today, he’d be stronger tomorrow.

‘Me, getting stronger? The rank E Hunter, and also, always mocked as the weakest weapon?’

He didn't even think about climbing up as far as the rank S or A. Even the notion of getting to rank C or D, like those Hunters he'd been working with, would surely be seen as a laughable one.

Indeed, they'd disparagingly point their fingers at him and guffaw their heads off.

Seong Jin-Woo was getting stronger? That Seong Jin-Woo, the one and only on this planet?

However, he didn't care if they laughed at him. No, he was already used to being the butt of many jokes. He was just happy that an opportunity had fallen on his lap, that was all.

Suddenly, a question mark floated over his head.

‘Could this be the process of my Re-Awakening?’

Although extremely rare, the cases of bottom-tier Hunters climbing up to the top through Re-Awakening had happened before, for sure.

If so, then could those Hunters who got stronger through Re-Awakening experience a similar sort of situation as he was in?

‘Let's find out.’

Feeling genuinely curious now, Jin-Woo settled down in front of a computer located at the corner of the hospital room.

Since he was staying in a VIP room provided free of charge by the Hunter's Association, this computer wasn't the only item of convenience found here.

Taptaptaptap....

Jin-Woo's fingers typed rapidly on the keyboard.

Searching, searching, and then, more searching.....

He visited countless websites.

He even entered those websites that one couldn't even get anywhere near without a Hunter's licence. He even resorted to paying for information and continued to rummage through every document and article he found.

However, rather than finding similar events as his, he couldn't even find a single mention of a precedence, either.

‘It's different....’

His Re-Awakening was completely different from the normal ones, as it turned out.

Most other Hunters who underwent Re-Awakening process gained their new found strength through roughly the similar process as their first Awakening as a Hunter.

Not one of them had experienced hearing weird voices at the brink of death, nor did they get to increase their strength through Stat values and such.

REPORT

‘Still, I can’t be certain, so....’

To be 100% sure, Seong Jin-Woo anonymously opened a thread on the internet forum exclusive to licenced Hunters.

[Title: Something weird has happened to me.]

[Description: I can suddenly see my Stats in numbers like in a video game, and I can even increase their values, too. Is there anyone who has experienced something similar to me?]

Below that OG post, comments figuratively exploded forth.

↳Anon: LOL Why dontcha stop f*cking around, dude.

↳Anon: Isn’t he just a loon?

↳Anon: Lost his d*mn mind.

↳Anon: Maybe you’ve played too many games.....

↳Anon: By any chance, are you a cartoonist?

↳Anon: Go visit the nearest hospital, ‘k?

↳Anon: I’d like to hear the details first.

↳Anon: Stop accepting all sorts of trash just because they hold the Hunter licence; this forum needs to go through a cleansing, seriously now... (TL: I removed all the pure-Korean internet slangs/emojis from the raw. Learned my lesson from my previous novel....)

Dozens of comments all with roughly the similar contents flooded in.

“Eh-whew....”

Jin-Woo spat out a groan.

He had spent a long time looking around but he had nothing to show for his troubles. He got called a loon in the forum and people disparaged him. He did all this, yet seeing that there was no information to gather....

“I guess that my case is really a unique one.”

He was the only one under the heavens.

The most unique Hunter in the whole world!

He still needed some time to figure out how much of a help this strange phenomenon would provide, and just how far he could actually grow through it, but at least, he got a good feeling about this whole thing.

When he took a look outside, the night had deepened quite considerably.

“When did the time get so late....?”

Jin-Woo frowned deeply.

His eyes ached a bit after staring into a computer monitor for so long.

Jin-Woo massaged his forehead and stood up from the chair to loosen his body with a bout of light stretching. He moved his body this way and that for a while. He bent his body 90 degrees and that’s when he discovered two small boxes lying forgotten on the floor.

“...Ah.”

The ‘random boxes’.

Two boxes wrapped in the monotone gift wrappers and topped off with a ribbon – exactly like the ones in video games.

‘They must’ve fallen off from the bed when I was making a mess of the room earlier.’

He had completely forgotten about them after receiving those as his rewards. Jin-Woo picked up the closest box and opened its lid.

“...A band-aid?!”

He dumbfoundedly stared at the ‘thing’ that looked exactly like the regular band-aid for a while, only for the information about it to float up above in green letters.

[Item: Band-Aid]

A regular band-aid. Useful in patching up small wounds. Can be stored inside your Inventory.

“It IS a band-aid....”

He was hopeful that this thing might possess some kind of a special attribute like the treasures found within the dungeons, but he wasn’t so lucky today.

‘Of course, I haven’t heard of someone finding band-aids inside a dungeon, to begin with....’

With his mind half in disappointment and the other half in anticipation, he opened the remaining box.

And he got himself a brand new ball-point pen.

He studied it from all sorts of angles and even clicked on the tip so the ball-point would come out, but it was still your average pen.

[Item: Ball-point pen]

An average ball-point pen. Can be stored inside your Inventory.

It was quite likely that, as its name implied, all sorts of random junk would come out from the random boxes.

“Hmm.....”

Well, it wasn't as if he was left empty-handed anyway.

Sure, he didn't really have any needs for either the band-aid or the pen right now, but thanks to them, he got to learn about the existence of the thing called the 'Inventory'.

Also, seeing that the information on other objects found in the room did not show up, he figured that only the info on the items from the random box could be read.

“Inventory.”

As soon as he called out for his Inventory, a graphical representation of a storage unit with dozens of slots appeared in the air.

As fitting the storage unit of a level 1 user, it was.... not as empty as he thought. He thought there would be nothing in there, but inside the first slot, he found a rather familiar object.

“Isn't that....?”

Jin-Woo took that out immediately.

Tti-ring.

[Item: Kim Sang-Sik's steel longsword]

Attack +10

It was precisely Mister Kim's sword that Jin-Woo picked up back in the underground temple. He assumed that it was left behind inside the Gate, though.

“Hey, nice to see you, too.”

A smile formed on Jin-Woo's face.

He felt happy seeing this thing again, what with both of them having survived that hellish death trap. Besides, it was too wasteful to just be abandoned in a different dimension, wasn't it?

'Didn't Mister Kim ahjussi say he bought this for around ₩3,000,000?' (TL: over $2,600)

The weapons of Hunters outwardly looked rather plain, but the truth was anything but.

Monsters couldn't be damaged with weapons that did not carry the wielder's magic energy. So, weapons crafted especially for the purpose of dealing with those b*stards would always be quite pricey.

'Looks like I'll have to rely on this guy for a while.'

He had been fighting with his bare hands until now because he couldn't afford to buy a proper weapon.

Although it was a cheap sword, he was still rather grateful for it.

'You're mine now.'

If Mister Kim saw this sword in his hands in the future, he might start foaming at the mouth and angrily demand its return. Well, he was a selfish man who readily discarded the saviour of his life, so it was rather a good possibility.

However, both this sword and this 'opportunity' were given to him in return for sacrificing his life. So, he wasn't planning to give it back that easily.

Jin-Woo's eyes sharpened considerably.

He had learned two things about reality back in that temple.

Firstly, he needed to become far, far stronger.

He was weak and almost died several times as a result.

That wasn't all.

He knew what the results would be, yet he couldn't stop that choirboy Hunter from stepping forward, and also, he knew Mister Kim was in the wrong, but he could not help Mister Song at all.

Because he wanted to survive, he turned his gaze away even though he knew what was right. If he didn't want to be ashamed of himself again, then he simply had to become stronger.

And finally....

'There is no room for unnecessary kindness.'

What he got after his acts of kindness was the betrayal of his comrades.

Three of them abandoned him, who couldn't even move properly, and ran away. He desperately called out to them but none returned to help him.

None of them could remember just who had saved their lives only a few moments ago.

'...Give and take.'

He swore not to take on any unnecessary risk out of some unconditional act of kindness. The most important thing at the end of the day was his own life, after all.

Those were two important life lessons Jin-Woo got to engrave in his heart after experiencing a near-death event.

To become stronger than before, and to become more selfish than before.

"I can do this."

Jin-Woo was one of those types of people who would never forget what he had been taught.

Inside a certain 'pojangmacha'. (TL: the Korean-style covered street stall)

The nurse Choi Yu-Rah was busy chatting to a friend she hadn't seen in a long time as the night wore on.

"Ahh, I almost forgot."

Yu-Rah belatedly recalled that her friend was an employee of the Hunter's Association. The reason for her finding work in the Hunter's hospital was in no small part due to this friend.

"You know a lot about Hunters, right?"

"Well, more than most people, sure. What's up?"

"Is there a Hunter with an ability to heal their own wounds really quickly?"

"Aren't those Healer-type Hunters? One healing spell later, every wound goes bye-bye~!!"

"No, no, not like magic and stuff. I mean, like, unconsciously."

"Like, unconsciously?"

"For example, when the person has lost consciousness, or when... he's in the middle of sleep."

Yu-Rah's friend shook her head.

“Eii~. There's no way. That'd be something like regeneration, and that's an incredible ability, you know? That's a unique trait only the rarest of all top-tier monsters exceeding the ranks of 'A' possess.”

“There's no human who possesses it, though?”

“Ng. I've never heard of a Hunter who has such an ability.”

“R-really?”

Could she have made a mistake, then?

Yu-Rah slowly nodded her head.

It was at this point that her friend spoke again.

“But, then again... I don't know. Maybe it's possible if you're talking about S-ranked Hunters.”

Hearing her friend's words, Yu-Rah raised her head.

“S ranks?”

“There are plenty of freakish monsters within the S-ranked Hunters, and also, not much is known about them, right? What were they saying? Right, the Hunter Baek Yun-Ho from the White Tiger Guild can apparently morph into a real monster.”

However, Seong Jin-Woo was supposedly a Hunter ranked E.

The ranks of the Hunters were publicly viewable on the Association's website, so if anyone were interested, they could take a look. Yu-Rah became curious from the morning's incident and she searched for Seong Jin-Woo's information.

‘His rank is too low for him to possess such a unique abi.... Ah!’

The Re-Awakening of a Hunter!

She then remembered hearing hushed whispers of 'Re-Awakening' coming from Jin-Woo's room when she was walking past it yesterday.

‘Could it be that he had gone through a Re-Awakening?’

For most regular people, it was truly impossible to befriend an S-ranked Hunter, never mind encountering one. Not only were there too few of them, but they also happened to be crazy busy most of the time as well.

So, just what kind of a situation was this? Someone as amazing as that was a patient she was looking after. A guy who just entered the S rank having moved up from the lowly E.

'If there are only a few people who realise his true value, then....'

If she scored some points with him now, wouldn't it be more likely that she'd be awarded more opportunities later down the line?

A chance to become acquaintances with a rank S Hunter didn't happen every day, after all. They were an existence that people couldn't easily meet even if they were prepared to shell out lots of money.

As her imagination took flight, a bright smile slowly bloomed on Yu-Rah's face.

"Oh my gosh?! You girl, did something nice happen? Why are you suddenly grinning like that out of the blue?"

"Oh, uh, it's nothing, you know. Nothing much."

Yu-Rah continued to shake her head, but the smile on her lips didn't want to go away that easily.

Part 8: Level up!

"Oh my goodness. Look at that guy's physique."

"Was that patient's body that good before?"

Two young female nurses walking in the corridor whispered to each other as soon as they spotted Seong Jin-Woo.

He pretended to have not heard them and quietly returned to his room.

It had been a week since he started taking on the Daily Quests. Several changes took place during this time. One of them happened to be the transformation of his body.

Jin-Woo stood before the mirror mounted on the hospital room's wall by the corner.

"Hmm. Hmm."

He checked out his entire body in front of this full-length mirror.

He got a bit embarrassed by doing something that a female university student would more likely end up doing, and only after clearing his throat twice was he able to stare straight at the mirror.

The thing was, though.... He had definitely changed.

His body was in the middle of a transformation.

'I've got muscles now.'

The most eye-catching change was the drastic increase of his muscles. The normal-looking flabby flesh was gradually disappearing, only to be replaced by hard muscles. Thanks to that, his shoulders had widened more and his overall frame had grown bigger as well.

‘Even then, doesn’t seem heavy and slow.’

Only the necessary amount of muscles in the necessary places. If he were to describe the overall impression his body gave off, then would it be kinda like ‘looking swift and athletic’?

He was a guy and even he found this rather appealing, so it wasn’t such a strange thing for young nurses to whisper about him.

‘And it’s all due to this guy over here.’

Jin-Woo summoned his Stat Window.

His Strength stat had gone past 30 already.

Since he thought that it'd be hard to tell the kind of effects the increases in other Stats would bring, he ended up investing all the points he earned on the Strength Stat, which seemed to be the easiest way to feel the change taking place within.

Besides, Strength played a key role when fighting monsters, so that was like killing two birds with one stone.

'My body wouldn't have transformed by this much just because I exercised for a few days.'

In that case, there could be only one explanation.

With his Strength value continuously rising up, the muscles were changing their shapes in order to display the maximum amount of effect, too.

He couldn't think of any other reason besides that one.

He was inwardly worried about investing too many points to the Strength Stat, but after seeing his transformed body, he became rather happy and all the worries in his mind were forgotten for now.

'However, it is way too eye-catching, isn't it?'

The number of times he was mentioned by the nurses was constantly on the rise. It was quite likely that, since their job involved looking after human bodies, their levels of discernment could have been higher than most.

Jin-Woo possessed quite a keen sense of hearing, so whenever his name was mentioned in the vicinity, he took note of it.

'I guess it's time for me to leave this hospital, no?'

Chapter 13 Fin.

REPORT

It was not good to be the centre of attention.

Not only would he feel uncomfortable being placed under the spotlight, but he also didn't want to let others know of this strange phenomenon.

Didn't the old saying go something like, scratching unnecessarily results in more flakes to clean up, or something like that?

He wanted to increase his Stat points as quietly as possible.

'And it shouldn't be a problem for me to leave the hospital now, too.'

Thankfully, tests had shown that he was normal and healthy. Meaning, he could leave at any time he wanted. No, hang on a minute, it kinda felt like that both the hospital and the Association wanted him to leave in the first place.

Well, it'd be a waste to spend that much money as hospital fee on a measly rank E like him.

One of the special privileges the S-ranked Hunters enjoyed was the government paying for all of their health-related expenses. Of course, that was a story happening in another cosmos as far as Jin-Woo was concerned.

So, he figured that it wouldn't be such a bad idea to leave this hospital right about now.

And there was something he wanted to confirm as well.

"Now, where did I put it...?"

Jin-Woo rummaged around his pockets and brought something out. It was a key gleaming in a golden hue. It featured such a simple design that it could be passed off as an accessory at a casual glance.

Jin-Woo observed the key for a long time before he secured it back inside his pocket.

While he was in the middle of being discharged, a certain young female nurse hurriedly ran to where he was.

"Pant, pant!! Mister Seong Jin-Woo, are you getting ready to be discharged today?"

“Pardon? Ah, yes, I am.”

She was the nurse in charge of his care, Choi Yu-Rah.

Yu-Rah formed a rueful expression when she heard his affirmation.

Jin-Woo didn't know why, so he could only stand there looking rather confused. He wondered if he had made a mistake somewhere, but he couldn't think of anything.

Yu-Rah hesitated slightly, before pulling out a small memo pad.

“Will be okay if you give me your contact numbers?”

“My contact numbers?”

“Yes.... Only if you're okay with it.”

Could there be some test results that needed to be sent at a later date or something? Jin-Woo didn't think too much about it and took the memo pad. However, all he got from her was just that, a memo pad and nothing else.

When Jin-Woo stared at her, her face reddened.

“W-what's the matter?”

“Uhm, well.... About a pen....”

“Ah? Ah, please wait.”

She must've forgotten in her rush to get here; Yu-Rah became flustered and hurriedly turned around.

‘Uh? Hang on a minute. A pen, is it....?’

He didn't have to think for long. Before anyone noticed it, he was already holding a pen. The moment he thought about the pen nestled quietly within his Inventory, it automatically appeared in his hand.

Once an item was placed within the Inventory, he could retrieve it freely with his thoughts alone.

What a convenient feature of the Inventory that was.

Confirming the pen in his hand, Jin-Woo called out to Yu-Rah.

“Wait. I looked and luckily enough, I had a pen on me.”

“Oh, really? Whew, what a relief.”

Yu-Rah placed a hand on her chest and sighed out in relief.

Jin-Woo smiled at that and he jotted down his phone number.

This happened all the time now – the items that came out of the random box always saw some sort of usage pretty soon after he got them.

When a raincoat came out, rain fell the next day. He got a cup the day before the hospital inexplicably ran out of paper cups. Of course, stuff like a band-aid with no clear uses sometimes popped out, but most of the time, they did come in handy.

“Here it is.”

Yu-Rah received the memo pad back from Jin-Woo with an elated expression etched on her face.

She then bowed her head as well.

“Please take care of me from now on.”

“Oh, uh, sure thing. Me too.”

Yu-Rah spun around and hurriedly disappeared to somewhere. Jin-Woo looked at her departing back and tilted his head this way and that.

‘By the way.... how does she expect me to take care of her?’

She was such a cute nurse, to begin with, yet she was even courteous as well. Jin-Woo thought as such and left the hospital with a refreshed, airy mind.

The first place he visited was the HQ of the Hunter’s Association, located in the district of Guro in Seoul.

The smartphones used by the Hunters were designed with special components so, in order to get one, he had to apply for it at the Association.

The Association employee spoke while looking at the computer monitor.

“Looks like your phone will become available only after two weeks, Hunter-nim.”

“Pardon me? Why so long?”

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened up wider.

His old phone was smashed to bits when he was getting chased around by the god statue. However, he now had to wait for two weeks for a new phone to arrive?

“If you need a phone right away, we can loan you one on a temporary basis, but the fee for each usage is ₩50,000.” (TL: Just over $44)

50,000 Won.... He wasn’t even buying one, just renting it for a little while, yet it cost that much?

If he thought about his current financial status, that was way too big an expense.

‘Well, it’s not like someone will contact me, anyway.’

If the Association failed to get a hold of someone on his or her smartphone, they’d call the house, instead. So, there was no real reason for him to spend money and get himself a temp phone right now.

Jin-Woo shook his head.

“I’ll just wait.”

“I understand. As soon as your replacement phone arrives, we will send it straight to your residence.”

“Thank you.”

Jin-Woo got up to leave. His business was done here.

He had already completed the Daily Quest that never failed to show up every day, and the application for the new phone at the Association also ended faster than he expected.

Jin-Woo exited from the Association building and pulled the golden key out again.

‘Is it now time to check this little guy out, then?’

The information on the key floated up in green letters.

[Item: Dungeon Key]

Rarity: E (ED: also reflects the difficulty in acquiring the item)

Type: Key

A key that transfers you to an instant dungeon. Can be used at the 3rd exit of the Hapjeong subway station.

He found this key inside one of the random boxes he got as the Daily Quest rewards.

At first, he wondered why a key would come out from there, but once he saw the ‘rarity’ category, he immediately realised that this was no ordinary item.

This was one of the reasons prompting him to get discharged from the hospital as well.

‘An entrance key to the instant dungeon, huh....’

Whether it was called ‘instant’ or not, a dungeon was a dungeon.

If it was about dungeons, then he had plenty of painful memories regarding those.

This one time, he participated in a raid ranked E and ended up getting wounded so badly that he had to stay in the hospital for over a week.

Back then, he was able to survive because of the comrades that went with him, but....

But, if he used this key to enter a dungeon, then it meant that he had to enter it all alone. He deliberated for a long time, before making up his mind.

‘I’m sure there will be no problems as long as I just take a quick peek inside.’

If things looked bad, all he had to do was run away, after all.

He’d been running 10 kilometres every day for a while now, so he was pretty confident of running away, actually.

Annnd, it was his mistake for taking it too lightly.

Slam, slam!

“Is there.... a wall blocking me?”

He pounded on the invisible wall and shouted at the outside, but no one replied back. People continued to carry on with their own lives, that was all.

Sometimes, someone approached the Hapjeong station, but they simply vanished as soon as coming in contact with this invisible ‘wall’. It was quite likely that the place he was in and the outside world were two separate dimensions.

Jin-Woo tried his hardest to force his way out of this place, which prompted a new alert message to pop up.

Tti-ring.

[You can not exit the dungeon. Please defeat the boss first or find the return crystal.]

It was the same message as before.

The key in his possession disappeared as soon as he set foot inside the 3rd exit of the subway station and, by the time Jin-Woo realised things had gone rather awry and hurriedly turned around to leave, it was already too late.

He was thinking of finding a hidden Gate or some kind of a doorway within the 3rd exit that would transport him to a dungeon, but his expectation was completely off the mark. And quite different from the regular dungeons, he couldn't even leave as he pleased, too.

Jin-Woo spat out a long groan and looked behind him. What he could see now was the interior of the subway station that had transformed into a jungle.

Walls were thick with twisting vines, and rancid odour akin to rotting corpses assaulted his senses. Hell, he even heard the cries of what sounded like wild beasts from afar every now and then, too.

“....”

It wasn't that there was a hidden entrance somewhere near the entrance of the Hapjeong station, but the entire station had become a dungeon, instead.

Jin-Woo pulled the steel longsword out from his Inventory.

Tti-ring.

[Item: Kim Sang-Sik’s steel longsword]

Attack +10

His back was blocked off, and he had no method of contacting outside, so the only option left was to go forward.

Jin-Woo nervously swallowed his saliva and slowly descended the steps. He held his breath and surveyed his surroundings, but he couldn't sense anything particular.

However, it was truly forbidden to underestimate the dangers in a dungeon.

Among the low-ranked monsters, there were quite a few that knew how to mask and hide their presence very well. No, maybe because they were so low ranked that they had no choice but to hide and wait to ambush their prey.

Past the toilets, he entered deeper and encountered the underground shopping centre.

Shops were worn down and in complete disarray, looking more like a ruin than anything else. Seeing the human-less ruined shells of the shops dimly illuminated by the flickering overhead lamps, something felt rather ominously creepy and sinister.

Flicker, flicker....

A few of the lamps continued to flicker as if their life was nearing the end.

Jin-Woo carefully stepped on the overgrown weeds jutting out from between the cracked floor tiles and continued on forward, but he picked up on a general aura of unease and scanned his surroundings.

“...”

Everything seemed so quiet and still, but he did sense a gaze of something.

And then, there was this smell, too.

A seriously rotten odour of an animal carcass with flies buzzing around was coming from somewhere. For Jin-Woo, who had frequently entered dungeons, this was a rather familiar smell.

‘This smell... An animal-type monster.’

However, he still couldn’t find its whereabouts at all. Just like how a predator would stalk its a prey.

‘Oh, so you want to remain hidden and wait for your chance, is that it?’

In that case, he should give it one.

Jin-Woo deliberately turned around and presented his back. And very slowly, retread the path he had taken until now. An animal would try pounce on the prey as soon as its back was shown. An animal-type monster would be no different.

And so, it happened when he took his third step.

Smash!!

The shop window of a clothing store behind him shattered into pieces and something jumped out. And this something, as soon as it landed on the ground, leapt towards Jin-Woo’s exposed neck in one go.

“Roar!”

Jin-Woo had been getting ready for a sneak attack like this one, so almost immediately, he swung the sword in the direction of the sound.

It was a perfectly-executed instinctive counter!

Swish!

The sharp edge of the blade sliced open the creature’s maw.

The monster spat out a pained cry as it flew away from Jin-Woo and crashed on the ground, rolling around in a heap.

SFX for a dog-type whimpering, repeated

It was a huge wolf with a reddish coat of fur.

The wolf with its maw sliced away wiggled around and threw a seizure-like fit as if it was under a great deal of pain. When he took a closer look, its name also appeared on top of its head, just like the centipedes from the penalty zone.

'Iron-Fanged Lycan.'

However, unlike before, its name was in white letters, not red.

'There is no time to waste here!'

This was the perfect opportunity while the monster could not move from its wound. Jin-Woo threw his body forward.

He ran hard and fast, and chopped down with his sword, separating the creature's head from its body.

"Rawr!"

Lycan spat out the final roar and stopped breathing afterwards.

[You've killed an Iron-Fanged Lycan.]

"Good!"

However, the joy of victory was temporary!

Two more Lycans jumped out from their hiding place from behind the shop's darkness.

'D*mn it, it was in a pack?'

Jin-Woo's eyes grew wider.

They bared their big fangs and closed the distance in an instant.

Jin-Woo's expression crumpled dismally.

He must've chopped down too hard from all the excitement, because the sword was lodged on the ground too deep and it stubbornly refused to come out.

'It's stuck somewhere.'

It was at this moment that one of the Lycans aimed for his face and leapt up.

"D*mn it!!"

Jin-Woo ducked low. The Lycan flew over his head and landed face-first on the ground after failing to stop in time.

Stab!!

When its fangs stabbed into the stone floor, cracks instantly formed on the hard surface.

‘I guess it’s not called Iron-Fanged for nothing, huh.’

Of course, he didn’t have the leeway to stay there and admire this scene. One more monster was still running towards his front at the moment, too. His sword showed no signs of coming free from its earthly prison for the time being.

“Screw this!”

Jin-Woo had no choice but to give up on the sword for now and threw a hard punch at the Lycan closing in.

WHOOSH!!

Accompanied by a bone-chilling sound of wind parting ways, his fist flew straight forward.

POW!!

It took just one hit and the head of the Lycan simply exploded.

The corpse of the now-headless Lycan slammed into the ceiling above and then, powerlessly fell down to the ground.

Thud!

“...??”

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened up very wide and he stared dumbfoundedly at his own fist.

What an unexpected destructive power that was.

REPORT

The sole surviving Lycan, the one that flew over Jin-Woo's head just now, lowered its tail after seeing this scene and began taking faltering steps backwards.

“Huh....?”

Was this the result from him raising his Strength Stat?

The utterly stunned Seong Jin-Woo couldn't close his slack jaw as the headless Lycan's legs shook like a leaf, before its movement stopped for good.

That was when he heard the familiar mechanical beep going off again.

Tti-ring.

[You've killed an Iron-Fanged Lycan.]

[Level up!]

“My level rose up?”

To make sure that he didn't mishear that, Jin-Woo hurriedly accessed his Status Window.

His level really did go up.

And when a level went up, a single point was added to all of his Stats.

As it turned out, it wasn't only the quest rewards that could impact the values of his Stats. It was also possible to improve his Stats through levelling up, too.

'To think, I can actually level up!'

He only carried a vague expectation, but it actually became reality. His heart began to beat faster and faster.

'On top of that, I get more additional points from levelling up.'

The Stat points he got from the quest rewards were 3. Meanwhile, he got 5 from levelling up once.

Although he didn't like the fact that he couldn't freely distribute those points the way he liked to, but still, his growth through levelling up was much greater.

Also, there was the thing about quests only being available once per day, but there was a good chance that levelling up wouldn't suffer from such restrictions.

'I only killed two, but my level rose up.'

This was the same as in video games. When his level was low, he could raise it up by a lot during a short space of time.

And currently, Jin-Woo was only a level 2. It was not an exaggeration to say that he was right at the bottom of the pile. However, he was not what one would call a normal low-level player, either. His Strength stat already exceeded 30.

If the Strength stat rose up by one point every time one levelled up, then the Stat value of Jin-Woo's Strength was equivalent to level 20 or higher.

What if a 'user' possessing level 20's worth of Strength stat hunted in the 'level 1' beginner's hunting area?

'In other words, explosive levelling up....'

As if to prove his guess, the destructive might behind that punch easily exceeded his own expectations.

'The Strength stat might have been multiplied by just over three times, but... The difference in actual, physical strength was well beyond that.'

Jin-Woo's original Strength value was 10.

There was the difference of three times the value between the Strength stat of 10 and 30, but the difference between the actual forces produced was well beyond that.

'Could it be....?'

What if, as the Stat's value rose up, the weight was also added as well? If that was the case, then such a destructive power output could easily be explained away.

Besides that, his movement speed had increased as well.

If it was in the past, there was no way he'd be able to lightly evade the all-out attack of an animal, nor could his punch move fast enough to produce the sound of the air splitting apart.

"Right, the physical strength in my muscles has increased so, obviously my speed would have increased along the way, too."

Simply by raising his Strength stat higher, both his power and speed had gone up. The battle against the Lycans proved this.

So, what would happen if he increased his Agility, instead?

His curiosity was at its peak, but he didn't have any method to find out at the moment. If he wanted to satisfy his burning curiosity, then he simply had to increase his Stats, ASAP.

'Even still....'

He couldn't help but think that investing points he got as quest rewards in the Agility Stat kinda felt a bit wasteful. If he shored up his Strength Stat, both his power and speed would go up anyway, so what was the point of investing in the Agility Stat?

Since his thoughts were as such, there was only one way to go forward here.

‘I gotta level up lots of times, really fast.’

Indeed, he’d raise the Agility Stat through levelling up. Every little cent saved would eventually net him a buck later down the line. If he increased the values one point at a time, he’d feel the difference sooner or later.

Jin-Woo pried loose the sword off the ground.

‘In that case, shall I get started for real, then?’

There was one more monster he needed to kill, after all.

“By the way.... Where did it disappear to?”

The Lycan that was definitely somewhere nearby had gone with the wind before he had noticed it. Jin-Woo hurriedly scanned his surroundings, but he couldn’t find a single trace of the creature.

Quite likely, it had turned tail and ran away while he was immersed in the Status Windows. Well, he should’ve known something was up when it lowered its tail and cautiously studied his ‘mood’.

“Tsk.”

Jin-Woo smacked his lips, realising that a bundle of experience points had just escaped from his grasp.

‘Hang on, do these things give away things like magic crystals, too?’

The sudden thought popping up in his head stopped him in his tracks.

Monsters appearing within the Gates all possessed one, or sometimes, several, magic crystals in them. If one got lucky, a Rune stone might drop, too.

Magic crystals could be used for a variety of purposes and they alone exchanged hands for princely sums; no need to even mention the Rune stones, which could be used by Hunters to learn brand new skills.

It was not an exaggeration to say that the reasons why Hunters participated in raids was not just because of the promised payment from the related organisations, but also these magic crystals, as well.

Jin-Woo was also a Hunter.

He was successful in killing these monsters, so not being rewarded for his work kind of felt a bit like he was wronged somehow.

Feeling a little rueful, he sliced open the Lycan's stomach, but it turned out to be a waste of time. It seemed that these creatures were fundamentally different from the regular monsters.

The thing was, he had entered quite a few different dungeons in his career so far, but he had never seen these wolf-like monsters before.

Jin-Woo dusted his hands and was about to stand back up, but then....

“Mm?”

He spotted something glittering within the dead Lycan's mouth. So, he opened the creature's maws. One of the Lycan's fangs was emitting a beam of light. When Jin-Woo reached out, a new message popped up before him.

[You found the 'Item: The Canine of a Lycan'. Take it?]

“Sure thing.”

[Item: The Canine of a Lycan]

Rarity: None

Type: Miscellaneous

A large and sharp canine of a Lycan. Can be stored in the Inventory or can be sold at the Store.

Jin-Woo got flustered a bit while staring at the canine tooth.

‘There was a Store, too?!’

Where would you find a System less friendly than the one he was saddled with?!

To think, it was designed in such a way that the end user had to personally experience it with his own body before learning about any of its functions....

Hell, he wasn't given much of an explanation during the penalty quest and he almost died as a result back then.

Jin-Woo gnashed his teeth and tried to summon this 'Store' thing.

“Store.”

He couldn't help but feel his anticipation build up, wondering if a shop with a signboard declaring 'Store' and manned by an NPC merchant, kinda like from video games, might really appear before him.

However, what appeared instead was a bunch of green letters floating in the air like hologram projections, just like when he accessed his mailbox.

And there were only two words there, too.

‘Buy’ and ‘Sell’.

“.....”

What a simple-tastic Store this was.

Jin-Woo selected ‘Buy’.

He didn’t have a single cent in his pockets, but he was still curious about the stuff available within the Store.

Unfortunately for him, the Store turned out to be one cold customer.

[Your level is too low to access the ‘Buy’ function.]

He was already familiar with the cold-shoulder treatment from the places that required him to pay up, so this was fine.

“Sure, sure.”

Jin-Woo didn’t think too much about it and shifted his gaze away to ‘Sell’.

[Will you sell ‘Item: The Canine of a Lycan’?]

“Yup.”

With the clinging sounds of coins, his Inventory appeared next. Right at the bottom of the display, in the column saying ‘Gold’, he could see the number 20 appearing there. That space had been empty yesterday.

‘20 Gold, eh,’

He couldn’t really use that ‘money’ in real life, and he couldn’t even use the Store properly yet, so he had no idea just how much this 20 Gold was actually worth.

‘Oh well. A creature from the rank E dungeon wouldn’t have given me any decent loot, to begin with.’

Even if there was a difference between the dungeons found beyond the Gates and this so-called instant dungeon, it would be the same difference at the end of the day.

Still, Jin-Woo wanted to make sure, so he was about to collect the canine from the other dead Lycan, but he ended up doing a facepalm, instead.

“Ah. I blew away its entire head, didn’t I....”

Jin-Woo felt bitter as he turned around to go somewhere else.

20 Gold and its unknown worth were calling back to him, but he couldn’t waste time searching for a single canine that could’ve flown to pretty much anywhere under this dim lighting.

However, as soon as he turned around, the feelings of bitterness dissipated in an instant.

“Growl!!”

“Grrr....”

“Growl!!”

“Grrr!!!”

Well now, the Lycan he thought had ran way actually came back with a bunch of its friends!

A wonderfully bright smile bloomed on Jin-Woo’s face. Even at a casual glance, there must be over 20 of them here.

“Eureka!!”

Hang on a minute, was that the right word to use in this sort of situation?

Whatever.

It was definitely a word to express one’s joy, anyway.

Jin-Woo tightly grasped the sword and spoke up.

“With the exception of your canines, I’m gonna massacre all of you.”

When the chilling glare of a man who was obsessed about making money landed on the Lycans, they became intimidated and shuddered slightly.

It was at this point that Jin-Woo pounced on them without mercy.

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

As he expected, his levels rose up quite quickly.

Simply from searching every nook and cranny of the first floor and killing all the Lycans he could find, Jin-Woo’s level shot right up to 7.

He had jumped up five flights of stairs, in other words.

“Whimper.....”

When he caught up and killed the very last monster running desperately away from him, a strange message popped up into his view.

Tti-ring.

[You have acquired the ‘Title: Slaughterer of Wolves’.]

“A Title?”

[Title: Slaughterer of Wolves]

A Title given to a hunter skilled in hunting wolves. When facing animal-type monsters, all of your Stats will increase by 40%. (TL: the ‘hunter’ is a lower case here, because that’s what’s in the raw. The ‘Hunters’ until now had been written in English, actually.)

When he opened his Status Window to take a look, the ‘Title’ column indeed had been updated.

Name: Seong Jin-Woo

A bonus boost to his stats when fighting against animal-type monsters....

Although the effect was a bit restricted, still, having his Stats increase by 40%, now that didn't sound too bad at all.

'There are plenty of animal-type monsters out there, so would this apply to them as well?' (TL: the author had been using the Hanja word for monsters to describe those found in the Gate's dungeons until now, but the creatures found in the instant dungeon are written in the English word, 'monster'. That's why we get this line.)

If that was the case, then he'd be able to easily kill monsters when participating in the future raids.

However, he still earned big time even when disregarding his new Title.

'34 wolf canines, two rusted daggers, a set of traveller's clothes, and one return crystal.'

While killing these wolves, he learned that he could sometimes find loot from their bellies. Of course, none of them was all that useful.

The rusted daggers possessed lower attack power bonus compared to the sword he'd been using until now, and the traveller's clothes were not something he could actually wear, but just some random japtem (ED: 'Vendor Trash', essentially.) that he could hawk off to the Store.

When he sold them all off, he earned just over a thousand Gold.

[Current Gold: 1,060]

'...Even then, I can't really celebrate, can I?'

Well, no matter how much he hoarded this Gold thing, he couldn't use them anyways. At least not for now.

The only thing remaining, besides the Gold, was the return crystal. When he was trying desperately to escape from the dungeon back then, the message said he'd need a return crystal if he wanted to leave. And now, if he wanted to, he could escape at any time.

He found himself on a crossroads.

In front, the stairs leading down to the second floor.

And in his hand, a single return crystal grasped tightly.

'Do I continue on, or do I back out...?'

If it was in the past, he'd not hesitate and choose the latter. That was how he managed to survive all those raids with his pathetic Stats. Everyone said that him surviving until now was a miracle, but well, he was trying to be smart about his choices, actually.

However, the story was different now.

He didn't want to retreat here.

He felt that, if he turned away to leave now, then he'd never be able to take another step forward in his life.

“I've retreated enough times already, right?”

Wouldn't it be okay for him to jump in headlong, at least once in his life?

Jin-Woo pocketed the return crystal. His steps climbing down the steps to the 2nd floor was light.

REPORT

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

Unlike the dungeons of the Gates, there was a thing called ‘respawn’ within the instant dungeon. While he was sweeping away every single monster found on the second floor, all the monsters on the first respawned. While he went back upstairs to deal with them, monsters on the second floor respawned. So on and so forth.

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

Jin-Woo hopped between the first and second floor and killed monsters until his level no longer rose up.

‘Who knows when I’ll ever run into another opportunity like this one?’

Along the way, he got so used to this place that he was able to predict from where and how the monsters would try to attack him.

“A monkey, falling from the ceiling....”

He lightly evaded the claws of the monkey-type monster falling from the ceiling and stabbed it in the chest with his sword. And then....

“Kkiiiieeck!!”

...And then, he orderly sliced the necks of the black panther-like creatures jumping at him from his sides.

“Kyahk!”

“Kkahk!!”

[You’ve killed a ‘Blade-Claw Briga’.]

[You’ve killed a ‘Black-Shadow Razan’.]

[You’ve killed a ‘Black-Shadow Razan’.]

And with these three, he had arrived at the end of the second floor.

He had cleared out the second floor once more. However, his level hadn't been moving from 15 for a long time now. It seemed that reaching that high was the limit for the first two floors.

“Stats.”

[Stat]

Strength: 45

Agility: 24

Intelligence: 24

Perception: 24

With him being level 15, his Stats had risen up by quite a lot. His Agility was now almost at 25. He finally got to feel the difference between the Agility and the Strength Stat when the former hit the value of 20.

The Agility did not increase his speed, but rather, it was as if the opponent's movement had become far slower in his perception, instead.

‘Exactly like watching a slow-motion video.’

The scenes of the monkey falling from the ceiling and panthers pouncing on him played out in slow-motion.

Should he describe it as him being able to manipulate the time flow as he wished? It became easier to evade enemies' attacks, and it also became easier to hit them as well.

As the word implied, he had indeed become more 'agile'.

The so-called speed was wholly dependant on who was looking at it. The higher his Agility Stat, the bigger the difference between him and his enemies would become; from their perspective, he'd look as if he was moving at an unbelievably quick speed.

‘If both the Strength and Agility increase concurrently, their synergy should be pretty incredible.’

That was his final assessment of the Agility Stat.

“Besides all that...”

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze away.

“What should I do now....?”

He was looking at the stairs leading down to the third floor.

There was a reason why he continued to hunt in the first two floors even though there was a way to go even lower.

'It's giving me the creeps.'

With his Perception Stat so much higher, he could sense the aura of something ominous lurking down there far better than before. Without a doubt, something really strong was hiding somewhere down below.

He didn't have to see it to know.

Jin-Woo recalled the message he saw back by the entrance of this instant dungeon.

[You can not exit the dungeon. Please defeat the boss first or find the return crystal.]

The existence of the 'Boss'.

Jin-Woo had been roaming the first two floors in order to raise his levels until he couldn't anymore, all for the purpose of fighting this 'Boss'.

He had prepared himself as much as he could but, when the time to actually go down there came, he was getting all sweaty and nervous.

Jin-Woo lightly slapped both of his cheeks.

'I mean, I've entered a dungeon, so I can't just leave without taking a look at what this boss looks like, now can I?'

A certain amount of tension was a must in order to maintain the peak condition. And this amount was just about right for him.

Jin-Woo gripped the sword tightly with both of his hands slowly descended the steps. Could he have been mistaken when the steps felt unusually longer than before?

He swallowed dried saliva down.

The lighting was worse than the first two floors, but there was no problem with seeing where he was going.

'Is it because of my Perception Stat?'

He couldn't help but feel that his eyesight had improved greatly.

He cautiously climbed lower until eventually spotting the railway tunnel used by the subway trains.

No, he saw where the railway used to be.

The tunnel that should've been used by trains was now filled with jet-black liquid, instead.

'What is this?'

Rather than a subway tunnel, it was.... more like a lake or a river now.

Just as Jin-Woo took one more step forward to take a closer look....

A long log-like object shot out from the surface of the black 'water'.

Swish!!

'It's fast!'

The thing that arrived in front of his nose in the blink of an eye was not a log, but a snake with the thickness rivalling one, actually.

"Heop!!"

Taken by surprise, Jin-Woo could only swing the sword and strike the head of the snake away from him.

Clang!!

Jin-Woo's eyes opened wider.

"What the hell?!"

He did succeed in deviating that direction of the lunging snake, but his trusty steel longsword ended up breaking apart from the impact.

Jin-Woo looked back in surprise.

The snake must've been surprised by his counterattack as well because it didn't try to follow up right away, but instead chose to simply glare at him while coiling itself up a distance away.

'The ruler of the swamp, Poison-Fanged Blue Kasaka.'

Jin-Woo could clearly see the orange-coloured name of the monster.

It was a creature incomparably faster and hardier than those with their names written in white.

'Even then, for a sword reinforced with magic energy to break like that....'

Jin-Woo swallowed nervously and cautiously studied the Boss monster called Kasaka.

Blue scales covering its entire body gleamed in an oily manner. As if it had draped itself with thick armour, those scales had no gaps to speak of.

Sword strikes wouldn't have worked in the first place. It'd be the same story for punches, too.

When Jin-Woo's thoughts arrived there, the Kasaka must've finished its own analysis on its prey, because it finally lunged at him once more.

No matter how one looked at it, it was a frightening turn of speed, that's for sure.

Swwwiiiiish!!

Jin-Woo narrowed his eyes.

'It's coming!'

When he concentrated hard, he could now clearly see the attack of the Kasaka, which was something he couldn't even properly decipher in the beginning. This was all due to the increased Agility Stat.

Just before the Kasaka opened its maws wide and tried to swallow him, Jin-Woo swiftly sidestepped and let the attack brush past him. At the same time, he wrapped his arms around the creature and caught it in a headlock. He then tightened his grip.

SFX for bones breaking

Jin-Woo's Strength Stat was almost at 50.

An unbelievably powerful pressure tightened around the snake's main artery. The snake could not escape from his grip and thrashed around as if it was in pain. Jin-Woo gritted his teeth and strengthened his arms even more.

Slam!! Boom!!

Jin-Woo's body slammed against the walls and on the floor, but he never released his arms.

'If I didn't raise my levels as high as I could before coming here....'

There was literally no end to wondering about 'what-ifs' and 'what could have beens'.

However, all kinds of thoughts still swirled in Jin-Woo's head.

If he didn't raise his level to the limit....

If his Strength Stat wasn't so illogically high....

Then, he'd have gone through incredible hell in order to kill the Kasaka.

No, he might even have died here.

So, his decision not to come down right away proved to be the smart one.

His choice was indeed the right one.

Crack!!

Accompanied by a rather awful noise, the skull of Kasaka gave in and cracked apart.

[You have killed the ruler of the swamp, Poison-Fanged Blue Kasaka.]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

As expected of a boss mob.

His level rose up by 2 after killing the Kasaka.

Jin-Woo tightly clenched his fists.

The level that had been stagnating at 15 had jumped up to 17.

In just a single day, he crazily raised his level from 1 all the way up to 17.

‘However!’

No one hunted boss mobs for experience points!

Indeed, if it was a boss mob, then it’d be all about the loot drops!

When he started checking out the dead snake, two spots of light began gleaming from somewhere within its limp body.

‘Two items, because it was a boss?’

His expression one of elation, Jin-Woo reached out towards the spots of light.

Tti-ring.

[You have discovered ‘Item: Poison Fang of Kasaka’. Take it?]

[You have discovered ‘Item: Poison Sac of Kasaka’. Take it?]

“Take them all.”

As soon as he said those words, a dagger made out of a bone and a small pouch with liquid in it appeared on his palms.

[Item: Poison Fang of Kasaka]

Rarity: C

Type: Dagger

Attack +25

A dagger fashioned from the poison fang of the Kasaka. There are traces of the Kasaka's poison on it, so when attacking, it will cause Paralysis and Bleeding status effects. Can be stored in the Inventory, or can be sold at the Store.

Status effect 'Paralysis': the target will be unable to move. Success rate is fixed.

Status effect 'Bleeding': the target's stamina will be reduced by 1% per second.

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

'A dagger made not out of bone, but from the fang, huh. It's not a bad item with those options, yeah?'

up was the pouch.

[Item: Poison Sac of Kasaka]

Rarity: A

Type: Medicine

A pouch containing the refined poison of the Kasaka. Can be found very rarely when hunting Kasakas. Drinking this poison will give you strong skin, but the toxicity will permanently damage your muscles.

Effect 'The Iron Scales of Kasaka': 20% reduction in physical damage.

Side effect 'Damaged Muscles': Strength -35

Jin-Woo's expression alternated between joy and anguish.

The Poison Fang of Kasaka was a good weapon to replace the broken longsword. Not only did it possess over twice the attack power, but he really liked the two status effects of Paralysis and Bleeding, too.

'However, this poison sac is a bit....'

Initially, he was really pleased to find an item with the 'A' Rarity rating, but when reading the description, he realised this was not something he could feel completely chuffed about.

Of course, that effect of reducing all physical damage taken by 20% was a great option befitting an A-rank item. However, it also carried a fatal penalty of decreasing his Strength Stat by 35.

It'd be a really painful loss for him especially when he invested all of his points on increasing his Strength stat.

Was this the famed double-edged sword, then?

No, the expression of ‘chicken ribs’ suited this item far better, instead. (TL: a Korean idiom. It means something like ‘people not giving up on chicken ribs even though there isn’t all that much meat around there’.)

Maybe, he might be able to use this thing only when his Strength Stat had risen so high that the loss of 35 points wouldn’t affect him in the slightest, which should be in the distant future. It was impossible to drink it right now.

“....For the time being, I should just hold onto it.”

With a rueful expression, he stored both inside his Inventory.

Maybe, if an A rank dagger and a C rank medicine came out, then he might have felt not as bad as he did now. Well, he’d have just gotten rid of the C-rank medicine if it was useless, after all.

It was then, a new message popped up.

[With the death of the Boss, the interior of the dungeon will revert back to its original state.]

Suddenly, his sights blurred for a bit, and then, they were restored back to normal, along with a slight bit of dizziness assaulting his senses. When he took a look around, he found himself inside a normal subway station.

The lights overhead shone brightly, and the black liquid filling up the tunnel was all gone, too.

“....But, where is everyone?”

Not just people, but even trains were strangely absent.

He even checked the time while thinking that the trains had stopped running for the day because it was so late already, but the clock was indicating 10 PM.

He entered the Hapjeong station around the lunch hour, so he had spent over 9 hours inside that dungeon.

‘I was in there for a long time, wasn’t I?’

If it weren’t for his Tiredness Stat being refreshed every time he levelled up, he’d have keeled over from the accumulated fatigue several times by now.

‘Anyway. Isn’t it still too early for the trains to stop running?’

Jin-Woo tilted his head as not one train showed up, no matter how long he stood there waiting. He decided to leave the station for the time being.

While he was trudging towards the exit, he couldn’t spot a single person. But, as he climbed up the steps to get to the surface, someone shouted at Jin-

Woo from above.

“Who goes there?”

Who knew that the voice of another person would sound this welcoming?

Jin-Woo quickly raised his head. He saw a soldier wielding a rifle.

“Who are you? Why are you coming out from there? Haven’t you heard the broadcasts?”

The expression of the soldier was so serious that even Jin-Woo’s own expression hardened in an instant.

“Did something happen?”

“What the? How can you even say that?”

The soldier approached closer, but then, he spotted the broken sword in Jin-Woo’s hand.

After it broke, it could no longer be stored in the Inventory, and Jin-Woo didn’t feel like leaving it behind, so he just carried it outside like this.

Seeing that, the light within the soldier’s eyes changed rapidly. He then carefully studied Jin-Woo’s current appearance.

Now that this soldier had taken a closer look, Jin-Woo’s clothes displayed various hints of the youth participating in many fierce battles recently.

The crumpled expression of the soldier lightened up in an instant.

“Are you a Hunter by any chance?”

Chapter 16 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

“Yes, I am one, but...”

“Ahh, please forgive me. This way, please. Let me guide you there.”

“Ah.... Sure.”

Sensing that his troubles might get more complicated if he said “There’s been a misunderstanding here”, Seong Jin-Woo decided to quietly follow the soldier’s guidance for now.

Jin-Woo then swept his gaze around his vicinity.

‘Now that I see, it’s....’

The surrounding atmosphere felt rather suspicious.

The streets were totally deserted. The only people he could see were the soldiers and the members of the police.

Also, corpses belonging to monsters, destroyed cars, and buildings with cracks running up their walls....

Jin-Woo realised what had happened here.

‘A Gate must’ve opened up nearby.’

Something like that almost never happened nowadays with the well-established Hunter system in place, but sometimes, a Gate would appear in a remote area, and it’d go unnoticed for a while. As a result, no one would come around to close it in time.

When such an event unfolded, soldiers from the nearby bases were dispatched in order to buy some time until Hunters could arrive on the scene.

Of course, the weapons of soldiers didn’t work against the monsters. However, in order to facilitate the evacuation of civilians, someone had to be offered up as sacrifices. In other words, they were to become cannon fodder.

A role someone had no choice but to perform had been saddled on the shoulders of this nation’s youths.

“Thank you.”

The soldier walking up ahead thanked Jin-Woo out of the blue.

“Pardon me?”

“Well, because Hunters such as yourself fight hard, we are able to go home at the end of the day, you see.”

“Oh, uh....”

He said ‘thanks’.

That was something Jin-Woo wanted to say to the soldier, instead.

Soldiers to the Hunters, and Hunters to soldiers.

As befitting those fighting to protect someone, or even something, they were expressing their gratitude against each other.

Beep.

The soldier’s expression brightened after he received the radio transmission.

“I’ve received a word that the monsters in the vicinity have been dealt with, and only the biggest one remains.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

He didn’t need to hear the soldier’s explanation to know.

He could actually sense the presence of a powerful ‘lifeform’ nearby. And he could even sense several auras of Hunters surrounding it, too. The enhanced Perception Stat was transmitting crucial information in the form of sensations and feelings.

And that’s how Jin-Woo got to figure it out almost immediately.

‘That thing is the boss.’

Soon enough, the creature could be seen in the distance. In the empty, open space not too far from him, a dozen or so Hunters were surrounding a giant made out of rock. It was as tall as a telephone pole.

It was a Golem-type monster.

“Heok....”

The soldier spat out a gasp of fear as he took a step backwards.

Perhaps it was his first time seeing one, since the moment he saw it, his entire body had stiffened noticeably. But then again, most people would react in a similar fashion. The difference between seeing a monster for real and seeing it on a TV or a computer monitor was like heaven and earth, after all.

Unlike him, Jin-Woo remained calm and observed the unfolding situation.

“Healers! Concentrate your healing on the Tanker!”

“We’re also doing our best!!”

“Why isn’t it dying already?!”

“What are the damage dealers doing!! It’s not even remotely close enough to dying, is it?!”

“The monster’s defences are too strong! And we just don’t have enough magic-type Hunters in our group!”

Because they had been summoned out here in haste, none of them seemed to be high ranked Hunters. Both their defences and attacks didn’t look that effective at all.

Because of that, Hunters couldn’t avoid being embroiled in the protracted battle of attrition.

BOOM!!

When the Golem slammed its massive stone fist downward, the Hunter acting as the Tanker had no choice but to kneel down just for a brief second.

“Keo-heok!!”

The Tanker vomited out a mouthful of blood.

“N-no!!”

“The Tanker might die at this rate!!”

“What do you want me to do?! My magic energy reserve is completely empty, you know!!”

“Hasn’t the support from high-ranked Hunters arrive yet?!”

These Hunters looked like they had reached their limit.

Jin-Woo’s gaze, as he took all of these in, gleamed quite sharply.

‘If it’s only that much.... I can do this.’

Jin-Woo slowly took several steps back. This Golem-type boss might possess the high defence, but its rank was probably lower than its scary outer appearance might suggest.

Just from the aura it emitted, it was definitely weaker than the boss of the instant dungeon, the Poison-Fanged Blue whatever.

‘So, if I could just render its high defences to nothing....’

What’s needed right now was a powerful strike that could penetrate past that dumb rock giant’s defences.

Jin-Woo got to enough distance away and took a position of throwing something.

The muscles in the arm holding the broken sword began swelling up quite violently out of the blue. Thick, pulsing veins even popped up on the back of his hand, too.

All of his physical strength was concentrated in his right arm.

A short while after that, the arm pulled back taut like the string of a bow was shot forward at the speed of sound.

“Go!”

The view of the rank D Hunter, Lee Hahn-Soo, was turning dark.

He couldn't continue on anymore. His prized shield had begun developing cracks as well. As if their magic energy had been depleted, the amount of healing magic hitting him from the Healers had decreased quite noticeably.

At this rate, every single one of them would die for sure.

Lee Hahn-Soo had to make a decision, now.

The only feasible plan here was for him to buy enough time so the other Hunters could safely escape from here. And at a later time, Hunters with higher ranks show up to kill this Golem.

‘Or, we all die together here.’

Cold sweat drops formed on Lee Hahn-Soo's forehead.

He finally firmed up his resolve. Lee Hahn-Soo shouted out while looking back.

“Leave this to me and you all gotta...!”

It was at this moment that Lee Hahn-Soo saw it.

Something flew towards here as it gleamed coldly in the night air.

Actually, he could only 'sense' that he had seen something, but his eyes couldn't really pick up on anything tangible.

It was that fast.

KWAHANG!!

That 'something' slammed into the Golem's head and it grandly exploded.

“W-what the hell?!”

Lee-Hahn-Soo's eyes opened up super-wide.

The headless Golem began tottering dangerously. The Hunters began roaring out in elation only then. They focused their attacks once more.

“It's working!! Our attacks are working!!”

“It's falling!!”

“A little bit more!! Just a bit more and we'll win!!”

It seemed that none of them had noticed the object flying in from somewhere, because they were too focused on attacking the monster. With the sole exception of Lee Hahn-Soo standing right in front of the Golem, that was!

Rooooaaarr.....

In the end, the Golem toppled over.

Thud!

The heavy body fell down to the ground and kicked up a mighty dust storm.

Waaahhh!!

Hunters all cried out in elation and celebrated their victory.

“We did it!!”

“We killed it!”

Only Lee Hahn-Soo had seen everything unfold, and he slowly shook his head.

‘No, our attacks didn't even work on this guy.’

Lee Hahn-Soo hurriedly searched around the vicinity of the fallen Golem.

“Just what did destroy the head of this rock giant?”

Lee Hahn-Soo thought out aloud and searched around. Eventually, he discovered the remnants of a broken sword. Although there were some traces of magic energy within it, it was basically a cheap, plain steel sword.

‘What? Someone threw something this worthless and destroyed a boss level Golem capable of brushing off the combined attacks of ten plus Hunters?’

Suddenly, he forgot what he wanted to say. Lee Hahn-Soo silently alternated his gaze between the corpse of the Golem and the broken sword, before he ran past the cheering Hunters and in the direction the sword flew in from.

“Excuse me!!”

He found a dazed soldier standing there.

“Pardon? You talking to me?”

“That’s right, you!”

When a Hunter with a hulking physique hurriedly rushed towards him, the soldier couldn’t help but swallow nervously with a stiff face. That was how great the pressure a Hunter gave off to regular people.

Lee Hahn-Soo displayed the broken sword and asked.

“Did you throw this?”

“Oh, that. It’s actually....”

The soldier looked behind him, only for his eyes to go round in surprise.

“Huh? Uh? But, there was a Hunter standing right behind me, though?”

Of course, there was no one there now.

While the flustered soldier was looking around the vicinity, Lee Hahn-Soo scratched the back of his neck and stared at the broken sword.

‘That power, that destructive power.... Could it have been a high rank Hunter?’

He’d never know, since the protagonist had disappeared already.

Around the same time, Jin-Woo was on his way home. He turned around to leave as soon as the Golem began teetering about.

Indeed, he was the one who brought down the Golem. He was well aware of this fact.

Now originally, the loot and the profit arising from a dead monster belonged solely to the Hunter who managed to kill it. If he wanted to, he could contest for the rights to the Golem.

‘However, it’d become problematic when trying to prove that I am capable of bringing down a Golem like that.’

Who would believe the notion of a giant Golem crashing down because of an attack from a measly little rank E? He didn’t even have a proper evidence to back him up, too.

Jin-Woo figured that neither the broken sword or the soldier standing beside him would be of a great help in that endeavour.

And that would not be all. More importantly, he'd have to reveal the reason how his abilities had increased by so much that he could fell a Golem like that.

The harder he thought about it, he had more to lose than to gain.

The one and only ability in the entire world to level up.

He couldn't afford to slip up and reveal the existence of this unprecedented ability just for the sake of claiming the remains of a single Golem.

'It's a bit of a waste, but can't be helped.'

Still, it wasn't as if he walked away completely empty-handed, anyway.

No, rather than that, he earned pretty big, actually.

The message he heard the moment that giant Golem fell down....

[Level up!]

His level rose up by one because he had killed the Golem.

'Indeed, my levels will rise if I hunt the monsters from the normal dungeons.'

He had learned some valuable information. That alone was worth it.

An old and decrepit apartment located on the outskirts of the city – Jin-Woo's home was on the eighth floor of this building. (TL: I use the Commonwealth way of counting floors, so for all those who don't, it'd be the ninth floor for you.)

He found the key and entered the premises. It was dark inside.

'Jin-Ah's still studying hard, huh.'

It was quite likely that his little sister was still in the library, studying.

He found a bowl of rice and some soup on the dining table. Mom was in the hospital for a number of years now, and these dishes were from his little sister.

The piece of paper, a memo from her, contained a bunch of cutely written words.

- Don't starve yourself. I'mma check later if you ate them all.

She must've prepared them even though she was busy as a bee, after he told her of his plans to leave the hospital earlier today.

Jin-Woo grinned softly and settled down to eat. However, there was something he wanted to confirm first before doing that.

He thought that today had been a long one.

And thanks to this long day, he was now level 18.

His Strength was approaching 50, and other Stats also had increased significantly as well. He even figured out what the Agility and Perception Stats did, too.

‘On top of this, add to the fact that I found a very useful dagger with good options and all that Gold that I don’t know how to use just yet, then...’

Even if he disregarded the ‘special’ medicine he got, his conquest of the instant dungeon was a resounding success.

Part 9. Geckos

A person stepping outside the house in the early hours of dawn would inevitably be cautious in their movements. Well, they might end up accidentally waking up their family members, after all.

That was why Seong Jin-Ah was silently closing the front door to her home, so that her brother wouldn’t wake up from his sleep, as she was about to leave for school.

But, then....

“You going to school now?”

“Eh?”

She was taken by surprise when a voice came from near her, and she quickly turned around to look. And she saw Jin-Woo jogging towards her.

He was kitted out in tracksuit and sneakers. He had pulled the hood up high and looked as if he’d been on an early morning jog.

Jin-Ah’s eyes opened up real wide in shock.

“What the heck? Oppa, you were up already?”

“Yup, been a while since I was up, you know. Hey, have fun today and be careful on the road.”

“Uh.... Sure.”

Jin-Ah watched her brother’s back as he entered the apartment and tilted her head.

‘Now that is so strange. Oppa actually woke up before I did....’

One would never call Jin-Woo a lazy type, but Jin-Ah was always the first one to start the day until now simply because she was unusually industrious, which was quite unfitting for her age group.

‘Now that I think about it...’

Her older brother’s back seemed broader than before, for some reason.

‘Eii, no way that’s true.’

A human’s body wasn’t made out of some rubber band, so how could it make any sense for him to expand and contract in a space of a few days?

‘I’ve probably made a mistake.’

REPORT

Just as Jin-Ah shook her head, Jin-Woo suddenly pushed forward an umbrella to her.

“Why an umbrella?”

Jin-Ah received it and took a look at the sky. As it was still early dawn, the sky remained dark, but it seemed to be more or less clear and cloudless.

“But, it doesn’t look like it’s going to rain, though?”

“Take it anyway.”

“But, it’s heavy, you know?”

“Take it with you regardless. Besides, it’s a folding type umbrella so it doesn’t even weigh anything. Stop exaggerating, will ya?”

Slam.

Jin-Woo then closed the door.

“Che.... Acting as he feels like.”

Jin-Ah lightly kicked the door a couple of times to express her disgruntlement, folded the umbrella and shoved it inside the empty space in her school bag, and turned around to leave.

‘Hang on....’

Her steps came to an abrupt halt after she remembered the difference in the eye levels between her and her brother. Something was rather odd.

His eye level had definitely risen up higher compared to before.

“Do guys continue to grow taller even in their twenties?”

Eii, there was no way that could be true....

Jin-Ah shook her head again and hurriedly walked towards her school.

Click.

Jin-Woo locked the door and summoned his Inventory.

“Storage.”

Storage, ‘inven’, Inventory.

He discovered it through various experimentation and learned that the word used didn’t matter as long they meant the same thing.

It was the same story when accessing the mailbox.

As long as the word spoken meant ‘open’, the desired effect took place without fail. (TL: The author wrote ‘open’ three times in Korean and in English in this sentence. Thus I had to change it somewhat.)

Jin-Woo then shoved the umbrella he just got from the random box inside the ‘digital’ storage in front of his eyes. (TL: This is the direct translation from the raw. I didn’t make a mistake. This is what it really said....)

Four days had passed by since he cleared that instant dungeon.

He always remained hopeful whenever he got to open up a random box, praying for another dungeon key to pop out, but unfortunately, he hadn’t been lucky so far. It must’ve been a pretty rare item if it was this hard to get.

‘Well, that’s that, but now....’

Jin-Woo entered his room and sat on the edge of his bed. There was a matter he had resolve right away.

“Stats.”

[Stat]

Strength: 48

Intelligence: 27

Perception: 27

He had been saving up the Stat points earned from the quests of the past four days. He made sure to complete the daily quest every day. Of course, he also didn’t forget to always check his rewards, too.

However, he hadn’t distributed the points until now.

The issue was....

“....This is tough.”

Indeed, he found it rather difficult to come to a decision.

The ‘Strength’ Stat.

It was a wonderful Stat, that’s for sure. He hadn’t regretted it once, investing all of his points into this one back when he started this thing.

Agility.

This was also a pretty darn good Stat, too. Against weak enemies, it only helped a little, but as the levels of his opponents rose up in the future, no doubt he’d be relying on this Stat more and more.

Well, the ‘speed’ was a relative thing, after all.

And then, Stamina and Perception.

It’d be great if his Stamina was high, obviously. And this Perception turned out to be very useful as well.

Finally, ‘Intelligence’.

.....This was the problem child.

He hadn’t been able to figure out this Stat’s uses yet.

His level had increased by quite a lot, but he didn’t feel any smarter than before. His memories didn’t seem to have improved, nor did his ability to calculate quickly, either.

‘I think, it has to be related to magic....’

This Stat might be something he didn’t really need for the time being. Which left Strength, Stamina, Agility and Perception.

“....Even then, this is really tough.”

Although he now had one less Stat to choose from, he was still in a dilemma here.

He didn’t feel too confident at all.

At least he understood that the synergy between ‘Strength’ and ‘Agility’ was very good. Even if he could deal big damage, it would be meaningless if he couldn’t hit his target. On the flip side, even if he could hit accurately all the time, as long he could not deal enough damage, it’d be a waste of time, too.

In that regard, one could say that Strength and Agility formed a ‘set’.

‘Since my Strength Stat is so high, I should raise Agility up to match it.’

If he decided to raise his Agility Stat, then he had to delay raising Stamina, instead. Well, the synergy between Agility and Stamina wasn't so good, after all.

The thing was, when Agility was raised, the odds of getting struck by the enemy would decrease. But on the other hand, Stamina was a Stat that only displayed its true worth when the opponent actually damaged him.

'Of course, I do need at least the bare minimum of Stamina....'

But, raising both Agility and Stamina at the same time was a rather inefficient method, at least from his perspective.

After a lengthy deliberation, he decided on the order of priority.

The first one was Agility. The second, Perception. Finally, Stamina.

His Strength was plenty high enough so he'd defer it for now. And as he was planning to raise his Agility, Perception took priority over Stamina.

After deciding so, Jin-Woo spent 2 points on Strength.

Tti-ring.

[Stat]

Strength: 50

Intelligence: 27

Perception: 27

Well, he wanted to raise Strength to the round and even 50 for the time being. That was how normal human beings behaved, no?

Then, he spent 8 points on Agility.

[Stat]

Strength: 50

Intelligence: 27

Perception: 27

(Available points to distribute: 2)

The reason for that was also not that special.

He just wanted the last number to be a '5'.

'It's far more preferable to see the numbers ending in increments of 5....'

Strength 50, and Agility 35.

Seeing them end in the multiples of 5, he suddenly felt rather pleased with himself for no reason whatsoever.

'And as for the last 2 points....'

Jin-Woo invested them on Perception next.

With this, the points distribution had come to an end.

[Stat]

Strength: 50

Intelligence: 27

Perception: 29

(Available points to distribute: 0)

The only sticking point would be the fact that he couldn't quite bring Perception up to 30.

'Well, I don't have any more points left, so it can't be helped, I guess.'

Other than that, everything was okay. He figured that it'd be fine to raise Stamina and Agility through levelling up.

"So then, I guess that's it."

No matter who you were, you would be hard-pressed to feel 100% satisfied with everything. Since he had thought about his choices for a long while, he was more or less happy with them like this.

It was then, he could hear the telephone ringing from the living room.

Riiing, riiiiing....

'Is the Association calling me?'

In the past, he didn't want to participate in the raids so he did his best to ignore the calls until the last possible moment, but right now, he was raring to go and test out his raised abilities against various monsters.

Jin-Woo quickly snatched up the receiver.

“This is the Hunter Seong Jin-Woo.”

- “Aigoo, you finally picked up the phone.”

Too bad, it wasn't a call from the Association.

A rueful sigh leaked out of his mouth.

- “Learner Jin-Woo, why is it so difficult to get in touch with you lately?”

The voice coming from the speaker was a familiar one.

It'd been four years already since he graduated from high school and therefore stopped being a 'learner', but the owner of the building always attached that prefix in front of Jin-Woo's name ever since taking in both the Seong siblings when they were still young kids.

“I'm really sorry about that. I was admitted to the hospital because of an incident a few days ago.”

- “Tsk, tsk, so that's what happened. I should've known. Well, there's that and, learner Jin-Woo.... The rent for this month hadn't come in yet, so.... what should I do? If it's a bit too tough for you, should I delay it for a month or two?”

“Oh, no. It's fine. I'll send the money in a bit later.”

- “Okay. But, don't force yourself, you hear? Trying to look after your mom and your younger sister, you're going through so much hardship there. I know money is important, but don't forget to take care of your body, too.”

“Thank you. I won't forget that.”

The call ended there.

Jin-Woo pulled out the bank balance book from one of the drawers. The remaining amount in the account was only around ₩800,000. (TL: Just over $700.)

“Fuu....”

A groan leaked out from his mouth.

After paying the rent of ₩500,000, he'd have ₩300,000 left for the month's living expenses.

And the rent could be that low only because the apartment building was located on the remote outskirts of the city, as well as it being old and decrepit, plus the owner of the building taking into consideration Jin-Woo's troubles and not raising the amount for the last couple of years.

There was no way anyone would be able to find an apartment to rent for 500 grand per month nowadays.

And trying to survive on 300 grand for the whole month was even tougher.

“I gotta make some money first.”

Jin-Woo decided to take care of the urgent matters first.

He was no longer the same guy from a few days ago who couldn't even kill a single E-ranked monster and shiver in fear.

How did Hunters make money?

The best way was to kill monsters.

Hunters ranked S or A could get sponsorships, shoot commercials, make appearances in TV shows and the like to hoover up a lot of money, as much as some chaebols made, but their number was exceedingly few. (TL: Chaebols = owners of big corporations basically)

Indeed, there were too few of them.

Excluding those too few ones at the top, the majority of the Hunters had to go to a dungeon in order to make money.

The higher the rank...

The greater the experience....

The earnings would be decided by each individual's own capabilities.

For someone like Jin-Woo, who was ranked E, worked only for the Association, and had no experience in dungeons rated higher than C, such a condition was an incredibly tough one to overcome.

Jin-Woo's expression scrunched up into something unsightly.

‘Disregarding the conditions, for now, if I could just enter an assault team, now that would be great....’

He took a look at the job postings on the Hunter websites' bulletin boards and called a few numbers, but all of them turned out to be a waste of time. No one wanted to work with a Hunter ranked E.

Those Hunters seeking outside help via job postings were freelancers almost all of the time, which meant that they were responsible for preserving their own necks, so understandably, they paid close attention when forming a raid team or letting someone into theirs.

These people didn't possess enough abilities to enter big Guilds, but their ranks were too high to work for the Association.

They were all kind of stuck in-between a rock and a hard place, but unable to go either way.

'Even then, these Hunters still earn more than ₩10,000,000 a month, as far as I know.' (TL: Around $8830)

It was the case of 'High Risk, High Reward'.

Since they put their lives on the line, the profit they earned was just as big at the end of the day. It wasn't for nothing that Hunters were the targets of envy from the general populace.

From Jin-Woo's perspective, he could only get impatient, though.

'Should I just take the rank reassignment test and increase my rank right away?'

Eventually, Jin-Woo shook his head.

He knew that was a stupid thing to do, no matter how hard he thought about it.

A Hunter ranked E suddenly became a high-ranked one!

Whether that was A or B, or maybe even C, it didn't matter.

The Re-Awakening would always become a hot topic of conversation.

The masses loved nothing more than a good gossip, and Hunters just so happened to be a good subject to chew on.

The old saying went that, if there were five mouths, then there would be ten eyes. Meaning, the more people talked about you, the more eyes would be focused on you. His Stats would continue to rise up in the future, so it'd be only a matter of time before his 'special' constitution was discovered by the others.

"A Hunter who can raise his abilities up higher?"

"He becomes stronger as time goes by?"

"Who is this Hunter?"

"How can he do something like that?"

"What should we do to become like him?"

Without a doubt, many people would express their interest. After all, there hadn't been a Hunter like him before. And among those expressing interest, there would be those who try to use him, or reveal their hostile intentions towards him as well.

'If just one of those possesses incredible power, then....'

Just imagining it gave him the chills.

He was far too weak as he was now. Until he possessed enough power to protect himself, he didn't want the world to know of his existence. Meaning, taking the test to reassign his ranks was out of the question.

'But, I still need to make money here....'

However, that didn't mean he could go out and get a part-time job, either. He didn't know when the Association would call him for a raid.

By raiding a dungeon, he'd get to earn both money and experience, so how could he blow that important chance just to scrounge up a few bucks by working in a local store?

While he was seriously deliberating on what he needed to do, he spotted something in the bulletin board that caught his attention.

- Emergency! Searching for a single Hunter, regardless of the rank! Needs to come right away!

Jin-Woo's eyes shot right open. This posting had popped up literally a second ago.

When he hurriedly checked the contents of the posting, it wasn't too far from his home, too.

Jin-Woo quickly picked the phone up. The other side must've been in a hurry as well because he answered the call even before the first ringtone.

- "Hello?"

Jin-Woo stated his reasons for calling as precisely as possible and calmly waited for the answer.

- "Oh, you are an E rank?"

The response from the other side was better than expected.

- "It's fine. We just need someone to show up and fill up the headcount, that is all. However, it's a Gate ranked C so it'd be hard for you to hunt there. So, we'll just spilt the profits among ourselves and we just give you ₩2,000,000 in cash. How about it? Can you come right away?"

₩2,000,000 for a day's work! (TL: Around $1765)

It was a lot of money for simply being there to make up the numbers.

A rather tempting offer this was.

It was regrettable that he couldn't get to share the dungeon's loot, but he might end up losing out on making 2 million just by trying to be too greedy.

'For now, let's put out the urgent fires first.'

Such an opportunity wouldn't come around every day, after all.

2 million was enough for him and his sister's monthly living expenses.

Jin-Woo said yes to the offer.

"I'll be there in less than 15 minutes."

REPORT

Jin-Woo only needed one minute to get ready, quickly grabbed himself a taxi, and headed off to the meeting point. Nine people were already there, waiting for his arrival.

The man who looked like the leader of the group waved his hand at Jin-Woo.

“Heyyy! Over here.”

It was a bearded man with a fairly big physique. He smiled softly and walked closer while speaking to Jin-Woo.

“Are you Mister Seong Jin-Woo?”

“That’s correct.”

“Aigoo, it’s a relief that you found the right place so quickly. I guess this is fate, so how about we greet each other before we get started?”

The bearded man briefly introduced the members of his team.

The eight of them including himself were regular teammates that worked together all the time, while the remaining guy was someone who also came here to make up the numbers, just like Jin-Woo.

Jin-Woo greeted other team members and studied their countenance carefully. Thanks to his enhanced Perception Stat, he was able to more or less sense everyone’s capabilities.

‘Five with a similar rank. Four with a slightly lower rank than them. Five rank Cs and around four with D or lower.’

There was a regulation when attempting to clear a Gate rated C. The minimum number of a party had to be ten Hunters, and more than half had to be at least ranked C or higher. Only then did the Association issued a permit.

It seemed that them claiming to do all the hunting and he only needed to be there to make up the numbers didn’t sound like an empty boasting after all.

“Now we’re done with introductions, let me briefly explain the important points to remember.”

The bearded man introduced himself as Hwang Dong-Seok, a Tanker rated

C. He displayed a relaxed atmosphere as if he possessed plenty of experience raiding dungeons.

As he began describing the situations one had to keep an eye out for in the middle of a raid, someone came closer to Jin-Woo.

“Excuse me. Looks like we’re both pieces of fluff in this party, huh?”

He was none other than the other Hunter Hwang Dong-Seok had brought along in order to fill up the numbers. He was a young man with a bright expression. However, unlike Jin-Woo, he was actually going to participate in battles. He was ranked D, so he had the right to do so.

His name was Yu Jin-Ho, aged 22.

Jin-Woo lightly nodded his head as Yu Jin-Ho greeted him, before shifting his gaze away. Yu Jin-Ho seemingly wanted to carry on with the conversation, but ended up scratching the back of his head awkwardly. He soon returned to his spot.

“Hyung-nim, let’s stop here and go in already.” (TL: Hyung-nim = big brother, or a male addressing an older male. Used more as an honorific by gangsters to address someone higher up in the hierarchy. Most of the time, anyways.)

“We’ll be the ones to kill them all, so what’s the point of explaining it in detail like that?”

When the original team members all raised their voices, Hwang Dong-Seok laughed jovially and clapped his hands.

“Alright, then. Enough with the explanations, let’s get going.”

Everyone got ready to enter the Gate.

“Ah, before we enter, you two, take a look at these.”

Hwang Dong-Seok pushed forward a page of a document to Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho each. It turned out to be a simple contract.

“Write your names on the bottom and sign it, and we’re good to go.”

The contents said, he’d not participate in any hunting, he’d not participate in sharing of the loot, and when the raid was over, he’d be paid 2 million won right away.

The terms were the same as what he heard over the phone. However, they were not the ones to catch his attention.

‘I have to promise not to question them regardless of whatever incident happens inside the dungeon....?’

Unlike the raids organised by the Association, one would not be able to claim for compensation if something happened during a raid organised by the freelancers. One of the reasons why Hunters couldn’t get a life insurance, either.

One had to look after one’s own neck, in other words.

Only now did it feel real that Jin-Woo had entered an assault team.

While confirming the clauses, Jin-Woo sneaked a glance at Yu Jin-Ho’s contract. As expected, his was different; besides the promised 2 million, he was also going to share in the loot, as well.

Before signing the document, Jin-Woo asked Hwang Dong-Seok.

“What am I supposed to do when we’re inside?”

“Nothing too particular. Just follow us and help us carry the luggage, that’s all.”

“Your luggage....?”

Hwang Dong-Seok pointed at the huge backpack one of his ‘dongsaengs’ pulled out from the minivan. (TL: A “dongsaeng” is a gender-neutral term to denote a younger sibling. Can also be used as an honorific to denote a younger person.)

“You’ll be carrying around lunch boxes to eat when inside, several sets of clothing and equipment, first-aid kits and some other stuff.”

‘Wait, first-aid kits when entering a dungeon?’

Jin-Woo couldn’t help but question this.

“You are not entering with a Healer?”

“I’m sure you already know that it’s not easy to hire a Healer if you’re running your own assault party. Well, we’ve been doing things this way until now, so it’ll be fine.”

Hwang Dong-Seok smiled awkwardly.

To think, this team just barely met the required minimum number of Hunters, one of the additional members mistook a raid as a blind date or something, and the composition of the assault team only happened to feature a Tanker and damage dealers, and not one Healer...

Even after hearing that there was no Healer present, that oblivious additional member didn't seem too bothered by the revelation. It was the sure proof that he was a newbie.

Jin-Woo smirked inwardly.

'They are a bunch of wannabes.'

However, he still signed on the contract. Not because he needed that 2 million, but because he knew very well that he could protect himself now.

"Here it is."

"I'm done, too!"

Hwang Dong-Seok confirmed the signatures of both men and shouted out in a loud voice as if he was feeling really pleased today.

"Okay!! Let's get going, everyone!"

The party headed straight to the location of the Gate.

It was in the middle of the halted construction site for an apartment complex.

"The economy nowadays isn't so good, but still..."

Hwang Dong-Seok clicked his tongue.

Like large tombstones, unfinished apartment buildings stood still sporadically, imparting a certain sense of foreboding to all who looked at them. Could a cemetery of giants feel this way to observers?

"Did you know?"

Yu Jin-Ho had walked closer to Jin-Woo and whispered softly.

"... That, while the employees and the investors are going through hell at the moment, the CEO of the project ran off to overseas two months ago along with ₩900,000,000,000?"

"..."

Jin-Woo gave the other guy plenty of hints, But it seemed like Yu Jin-Ho didn't want to leave his side at all.

Well, with the exception of Jin-Woo here, all eight of them originally belonged to one team so it'd be hard to get along with them that easily.

"Hyung, are you always this quiet?" (TL: "Hyung" here is slightly different from "Hyung-nim" from earlier on. Still means older brother, but without the tough-guy connotation.)

Before anyone had noticed it, the honorific had become ‘hyung’. Jin-Woo couldn’t ignore this kid anymore.

“.....Don’t you know how to take the hint?”

“Well, I’ve never lived while worrying about taking hints, so... Ehehe.”

Was this guy simply a good-natured, or just brainless? Jin-Woo wordlessly scratched the side of his head as he stared at Yu Jin-Ho and that bright smile of his.

‘However, I....’

It was indeed true that Jin-Woo would get unusually nervous when he got nearer a Gate. But, it was par for the course, really.

To other Hunters, raids might come across as a legitimate source of income, but to Jin-Woo, each and every one he participated so far had been a desperate, bitter struggle to make ends meet.

He’d get tense because of all the painful memories stuck forever in his head.

Hwang Dong-Seok’s steps came to an end.

“Oh....”

The Hunters all let out a surprised gasp.

“Hwang hyung, is this really a Gate rated C? But, isn’t it too big?”

“You think the Association was lying to us? They said that investigators came around here twice already.”

A hole in the air, floating like a black hole. People took to calling it a Gate.

Its rank was assigned according to the waves of magical energy emission coming from inside. Folks from the Association would stop by first to assign a rank to each one.

After that, individuals or Guilds wanting to clear the Gate could follow the procedure and apply for a permit.

Gates ranked A or B were, most of the time, left to the big Guilds. Well, they were too difficult for freelancers to clear, after all.

So, assault parties formed by freelancers took care of the Gates ranked lower than that. Which meant that a Gate ranked C was effectively the hardest one for Hunters not affiliated with anyone to clear.

Hwang Dong-Seok stood in front of the Gate and looked back at his team.

“I’ll be entering first. Do your best to keep up, everyone.”

The Tanker entered first, and the other Hunters began entering one by one.

‘You never know, so...’

Jin-Woo lightly stretched himself just in case.

to him, Yu Jin-Ho began pulling out his own equipment from his bag. The sword and the shield coming out from his bag gleamed attractively under the light.

Even a casual glance could tell that they were very expensive. They were definitely not something a newbie Hunter could organise on his own.

‘Hang on, he said that he never had to take hints before, so does that mean he’s from a well-to-do family?’

Jin-Woo formed a surprised expression.

Perhaps sensing Jin-Woo’s gaze on him, Yu Jin-Woo confidently and bravely stood in front.

“Hyung, you said that you’re ranked E, right? Don’t worry, I’ll protect you. Just stick close by me.”

Jin-Woo scratched the back of his head.

Just who would protect who?

“...Okay. Thanks for the sentiment.”

“Let’s go in as well.”

Regardless of how Jin-Woo felt, they still followed in afterwards and safely entered the Gate.

The interior of the dungeon was eerily quiet.

“.....”

Not only that, but it was also completely dark, too.

Hwang Dong-Seok issued his first order.

“Hey, Gyu-Hwan? I need a light.”

“Alright.”

The magic-related Hunter Joh Gyu-Hwan created a ball of a light in mid-air. The surroundings became bright immediately.

Hwang Song-Seok lowered his shield and tilted his head slightly.

“What the hell? Where are all the monsters?”

“I wonder. There is no light in here, either.”

Now normally, there should have been luminous stones found here and there inside cave-like dungeons and emitted some light to illuminate the way forward. However, this dungeon didn't have those.

Yu Jin-Ho whispered to Jin-Woo from the side.

“Hyung, could there be a dungeon without monsters in it?”

“Shush.”

Jin-Woo gestured the younger man to keep quiet. Because, Jin-Woo's ears were twitching. He could hear lots of footsteps coming from the distance.

Jin-Woo spoke up.

“It's not that there aren't any, they just haven't arrived yet.”

Yu Jin-Ho swallowed nervously after hearing that.

Rumble....

Soon, the party could hear what Jin-Woo had heard earlier on.

Only then did Hwang Dong-Seok realise something was amiss here.

A dungeon with no luminous stones could mean.....?

“What moves around in groups, lives in darkness, and rushes towards a source of light?”

“Oh, crap!!”

The complexions of Hwang Dong-Seok and his dongsaengs became ashen all at the same time.

“It's bugs!!”

“Bugs are coming!!”

“F*ck it, man!! Why the hell did it have to be god d*mn bugs!!”

Hwang Dong-Seok cried out.

“Get into your positions!! They are coming! In front!!”

From the other side of this lone passage, 'somethings' were madly rushing towards them in a large group.

“Wait, could this be an ant hill?”

“Don’t say something that might jinx us, okay?”

Out of all the monster types, insects were the most troublesome to deal with. Their shells were quite hardy, they always moved around in large groups, and each individual possessed pretty high combat potential, as well.

And the worst of that lot just so happened to be the ant-types. Countless Hunters made a mistake and entered the ‘ant hills’ only to lose their lives very quickly.

Rumble, rumble!!

The sounds of the insect legs rustling on the ground noisily reverberated throughout the cave. It meant that they had come pretty close now.

Hwang Dong-Seok raised his shield right up below his chin. However, they couldn’t see any insects even then. His dongsaengs began raising a fuss from behind him.

“What’s going on here? Why can’t I see them?”

“But, they are close by, though?”

“Dong-Seok hyung, can you see anything out in front?”

It was at this time that Jin-Woo shouted out.

“Above you!”

‘What?!’

Hwang Dong-Seok reflexively looked up.

Rumble.....!

Huge insects were running towards them on the ceiling.

If they were discovered late even for a single second, those things would’ve jumped down on top of their heads.

When fighting against monsters such as these insect-types that formed large groups, the breaking down of the team’s formation would mean death for everyone involved.

‘If those were discovered too late, then....’

Hwang Dong-Seok felt a chill run down his spine.

The silver lining here was that he couldn’t spot a single ant-like creature among the various insects.

He raised his voice and shouted out.

“Fire!! Fire and bring them down!! Once they are on the ground, I’ll attract the aggro!”

Swish, pow!!

Boom!!

Kiiieehhk!!

Kiieehh...

When a few monsters fell down after getting struck by the attacks of the Hunters, the rest of them followed suit and landed back on the ground. Without a doubt, they were planning to engage the Hunters.

From here onwards, the capability of the Tanker would prove to be crucial. Hwang Dong-Seok activated his provocation skill to attract the gazes of all the monsters to himself.

And as if they had a prior agreement, monsters all turned their heads to glare at Hwang Dong-Seok at the same time.

“I’m over here, you d*mn bugs!!”

Kiieehhh!!

Dozens upon dozens of monsters rushed towards Hwang Dong-Seok’s position.

Slam!! Clang!!

Clllanng!!

Cling!! Clang!

His shield managed to defend against the attacks of the bugs without fail. The strong jaws and claws couldn’t tear the shield in half. The Tanker Hwang Dong-Seok defended commendably well from the front, all stable and unmoving.

“Standby, get in position, and get ready!!”

Hwang Dong-Seok waited for the right timing.

REPORT

Even when the bugs chomped and bit at him with terrifying intensity, Hwang Dong-Seok remained steadfast and waited for the chance to counter-attack.

...To make sure that the aggro wouldn't deviate from him even if the damage dealers landed a crippling blow to the enemies.

'This should be enough!'

With that thought, the real hunt had finally begun. To hunt, the real reason why the Hunters were called Hunters in the first place!

Hwang Dong-Seok roared out.

"Attack!"

Along with that short but manly shout, all the accumulated firepower of the team poured out on the marauding insect horde.

Kiiieehhk...

Kiieehhkk!!

The pained screams of the monsters rose up from here, there, and everywhere.

Jin-Woo stood at the back and observed this situation as it unfolded. That was the contractual obligation he had to adhere to for this raid.

He inwardly simulated how he'd fight alone as his eyes continued to take in the battle happening in front.

'How frustrating.'

Jin-Woo had to suppress his urges to rush out there several times already. He could see so many open gaps within the ranks of the monsters. And he also spotted the Hunters missing those gaps and continue to commit simple errors.

So, how could he not feel frustrated when he was not allowed to do anything and simply had to stand around?

Even then, the damage to Hwang Dong-Seok's team proved to be surprisingly non-existent. It was all because their teamwork was rather excellent.

It seemed that the relaxed demeanour of Hwang Dong-Seok before the raid began was not just for a show, after all.

“Jin-Seok-ah! 11 o’clock!”

“Hyung, they are coming from your right, too!”

“Joon-Tae, Seok-Min, Gyu-Hwan!! Take care of the right!”

“Okay!”

“Cheol-Jin, your wrist’s swollen up. Retreat to the rear.”

“Hwang hyung, this ain’t much to fret about.”

“You wanna go back only after sweeping clean the entrance? We don’t know how long this raid will take, so stop being hasty from the get-go. Control your pace, got that?”

“Roger that.”

Perhaps because they’ve been working together for so long, they were able to communicate quite smoothly. Being able to communicate quickly like this would inevitably result in an excellent teamwork as well.

It was a world apart from the ragtag bunch of Hunters brought together by the Association.

‘What’s more surprising is that this kid turns out to be pretty handy, too.’

Jin-Woo’s gaze shifted over to Yu Jin-Ho next.

When a monster bit into his shield, he kicked it away and swung his sword quickly at it. The expensive sword easily separated the monster’s head from its body.

For a newbie rank D Hunter, he was defending himself admirably well.

‘His kick-a*s gear is filling up the hole left behind by his lack of skills and experience, huh.’

Indeed, it was not for nothing that pretty much all Hunters struggled hard to get themselves good equipment.

When their gazes briefly met, Yu Jin-Ho quickly raised his thumb up.

“.....”

Because of his expressions that looked as if he was desperately pleading for a positive response, Jin-Woo was left with no choice but to reciprocate the same gesture as well.

Looking rather satisfied now, Yu Jin-Woo turned around.

Kiiiehhhk....!

Whatever the case may have been, the end of the battle was drawing nearer. Once the coast was more or less clear, Hwang Dong-Seok issued another order to his dongsaengs.

“Don’t forget the magic crystals! We split them exactly nine ways!”

“This is my favourite part of the raid.”

“Me too.”

Hwang Dong-Seok confirmed his giggling dongsaengs collecting the loot, and walked closer to Jin-Woo.

“Aigoo, we survived all thanks to you.”

“Excuse me?”

“Well, you were the first one to alert us about them monsters coming up from above, weren’t you? How did you know, though?”

“It was.... a gut feeling.”

Jin-Woo came up with a half-cooked story on the spot.

Quite obviously, he couldn’t come out and say that his Perception Stat was high, now could he?

“Oh, really? A gut feeling, huh.... Well, we got lucky today. I don’t even want to imagine what might have happened if we didn’t discover them in time... whew-woo.”

Hwang Dong-Seok patted his chest while speaking up.

It was then.

One of the Hunters rummaging through the carcass of the insect gestured at Hwang Dong-Seok to come closer.

“Hwang hyung, please come over here for a sec.”

The dongsaengs had all gathered in one spot. So, Hwang Dong-Seok went there to join them as well.

“Mm?”

“Something’s a bit off about these crawlies.”

The Hunters parted ways when Hwang Dong-Seok arrived, allowing the bearded man to squat down and take a look at the surroundings. He couldn't spot anything out of the ordinary, though. No matter where he looked, all he could see was the dead insects.

“What’s off about these?”

Hwang Dong-Seok tilted his head.

One of the dongsaengs pointed at the leg of the insect monster closest to him.

“I’m pretty sure that wound didn’t come from us.”

“.....”

Hwang Dong-Seok’s expression crumpled slightly. He took a closer look before raising his voice.

“Looks like.... something took a big bite out of it, doesn’t it?”

“Right? That’s not the only one with wounds like that, you see. Looky here. This one, that one over there, and over there, too. Looks like that one’s missing a pair of wings as well. Could these creepy crawlies have been beaten down already before fighting us?”

Hwang Dong-Seok’s expression hardened even more.

Now he realised why the battle went off so smoothly when compared to the number of the monsters they had to fight.

“Could it be that.... these things were fighting against something else?”

It was then.

Although it had been for the briefest of all brief moments, Jin-Woo still sensed the gazes of the several members of this team landing on him.

Their eyes shifted away as soon as Jin-Woo displayed a hint of sensing them. With this, he was certain now.

‘As I thought....’

His initial suspicions proved to be correct.

Seeing that their teamwork was so good, they must’ve been fighting together for a long, long time already. And without anyone dying, too.

However, would such a thing be possible without a Healer backing them up?

No matter how good Hunters were, they were still humans at the end of the day. Inevitably, they would slip up sooner or later. Well, only a short while ago, didn't their formation nearly break apart from the attacks of the bugs?

A bigger picture finally formed inside Jin-Woo's head and a subtle smile formed on his lips.

'Maybe.... I can use them to my advantage.'

As long as they acted within his calculations, that was.

Hwang Dong-Seok smiled and stood back up.

"Well, now. Why don't we go in a little bit deeper? We might be able to clear this dungeon rather quickly if this keeps up."

Hwang Dong-Seok deliberately spoke up with a loud voice.

He didn't do that for the sake of his dongsaengs. Well, the original members of the team were already surrounding him, to begin with.

In the meantime, Yu Jin-Ho smiled brightly and approached closer to Jin-Woo.

"Hyung, did you see it? You saw it, right? With this, I kicked some serious monster a*s today, didn't I?"

Yu Jin-Ho swung the sword around in the air. Seeing this, Jin-Woo quietly asked him.

"Hey, that sword and the shield, they are really expensive, right?"

"Pardon? Ahh, when I told my dad that I'd be participating in my first raid, he got them for me."

"Well, in that case, I think you should keep your wits about you, too."

Jin-Woo lightly patted Yu Jin-Ho on his shoulder and followed after the other Hunters walking deeper inside the dungeon.

"What is he talking about now, out of the blue?"

Yu Jin-Ho tilted his head in confusion before chasing after the departing group.

The cave seemed to go on forever. However, bizarrely enough, they hadn't come across a single monster as of yet.

Since the dungeon was shaped like a long cavern, there was no way that they'd miss each other, too.

"Could it be that the crawlies at the entrance were everything?"

"Eii, no way."

“Now that would be really strange.”

“Still, there should be a boss at the end, right?”

“Without one, why would a Gate remain open, then?”

The opinions of the Hunters were shared among themselves as they roam the expansive but empty interior of this big dungeon.

“Hold it.”

Hwang Dong-Seok in the lead suddenly stopped walking. He stopped so abruptly that people behind him ran into his back.

The Hunter whose nose had slammed into the head of the guy in front asked with a sullen expression.

“Ouch, what the heck.... Hwang hyung, what is it?”

“Gyu-Hwan-ah. I need a light over there.”

Joh Gyu-Hwan controlled the ball of light floating up in the air and redirected it further up ahead, exactly where Hwang Dong-Seok had been pointing at.

“Holy sh*t.”

“All these....?”

All the Hunters spat out low groans.

The torn wings, legs, torsos, and even heads of the bugs – remains of the various dead bugs were strewn about everywhere as far as the light shone. The further into the cave the light got to, the greater the amount of the remains they could see. And also, a huge chamber located at the end of it all.

“That’s the boss’s room.”

Someone muttered out softly. Hwang Dong-Seok nodded his head.

“Everyone, get your equipment ready.”

The Hunters quickly armed themselves. Nervousness was evident on the expressions of everyone present.

With Hwang Dong-Seok leading them in, the rest of the Hunters cautiously and silently entered the boss’s ‘room’. However, their silence only lasted for a few seconds afterwards.

“J-Jackpot!!”

The Hunter with a red nose cried out. He was none other than the guy whose nose slammed into someone’s back of the head.

Originally, it was forbidden to shout out too loudly inside a dungeon. Because there was a possibility that a monster they didn't have to fight might hear the noise and run towards where the Hunters were.

However, none of the others scolded the red-nose for his mistake.

“Wowsers.”

“How much could all of these be?”

“It is a real jackpot, innit?”

Everyone was way too busy gasping out in admiration and happiness, that was why.

“Wait a second.”

When Joh Gyu-Hwan fixed the beam of light high up in the middle of the air, the situation within the room became clear for all to see – as well as the jewel-like stones jutting out from one of the walls of the cave.

“They are mana stones!”

“The entire wall is made up of them!”

These mana stones reflected the light attractively and caused the eyes of the Hunters to sparkle brightly in greed as well.

Mana stones!

They were one of the treasures that could be found inside dungeons.

Although each stone possessed a lower amount of magic energy compared to a magic crystal extracted from a monster, they almost always were found in large quantity, so if one were able to mine them, one could earn a substantial profit.

Besides, the mana stone deposit they had discovered was incredibly large. The entire wall of the huge cave was actually filled up with these stones.

“Let's do a quick calculation.”

A Hunter with a mathematical brain began moving his fingers in a hurry.

“If we can mine them all, we could be earning as much as ₩1,000,000,000. Even if we split nine ways, we're looking at a payout of over ₩100,000,000 per head.”

“Ohh, ohh!”

Smiles formed on the faces of the Hunters.

Yu Jin-Ho had been staying at the back until then, and when he heard those words, he began poking Jin-Woo's side with his elbow.

“Hyung, show me your copy of the contract.”

“Why?”

“Just trust me on this one. I'm pretty knowledgeable when it comes to law, you see.”

Jin-Woo shrugged his shoulders once and handed over the contract as requested. Yu Jin-Ho walked over to Hwang Dong-Seok while carrying that.

“Excuse me, seniors? I wanna ask you about something.”

The eyes of the celebrating Hunters immediately focused on Yu Jin-Ho next. Yu Jin-Ho flapped open Jin-Woo's contract and showed it to them.

“Mister leader, this is Jin-Woo hyung's contract. As you can see, there is no clause about splitting the treasure beside the magic crystals earned from the hunting itself.”

Everyone there caught on to what Yu Jin-Ho was trying to say.

- It's customary to share the treasures or other rare items found in a dungeon equally among all the participants of the raid. The splitting of the profit, in this case, is different from monopolising the magic crystals of the monsters one hunted themselves.

In other words, the mana stones had to be split ten ways, not nine.

The light within the Hunters' eyes changed greatly, but Hwang Dong-Seok simply smiled and took a step forward.

“Of course, we'll be sharing them equally. I know the rules well. We still have some things to take care of before that, though.”

Hwang Dong-Seok raised his index finger and pointed to his front.

Yu Jin-Ho grandly flinched from that. He thought that he was the one being pointed at, actually.

He shuddered slightly and turned his head around to take a look, and finally spotted a spider as huge as a house quietly squatting way over there.

“Heok....!”

Yu Jin-Ho began taking hurried steps backwards and covered his mouth after seeing the spider's appearance. As if it was fast asleep, the huge spider didn't even budge an inch from the spot.

Around the creature, there were empty shells of the dead insects piled up as high as a mountain.

A fair few of them were 'half-eaten', and there were bodily fluids mixed in among them as well, basically resembling a trash pit full of food waste.

"That's the boss, huh."

"Did that thing eat the bugs inside the dungeon?"

"Well, it sure did eat a lot, didn't it?"

Hunters glared at the spider and passed their opinions one at the time.

Hwang Dong-Seok called the others to gather around. Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho, too, stood in front of Hwang Dong-Seok as well.

"As you all know very well, as soon as the boss is killed, the Gate will start closing up. So, before we kill the spider, let's mine the mana stones first."

Everyone nodded their heads.

"Cheol-Jin-ah, did you bring along the equipment for the job?"

The man named Lee Cheol-Jin shook his head.

"No. Who knew we'd find mana stones inside a C-ranked dungeon? All the mining equipment is back in the van."

"Oh, come on now, dude.... Didn't this hyung always tell you to keep it around just in case?"

"My bad, my bad. I'm really sorry about this."

Lee Cheol-Jin grinned brightly and began apologising to Hwang Dong-Seok, the rest of his teammates, and even to Jin-Woo.

Hwang Dong-Seok spoke up while scratching the back of his head.

"Aigoo. What a bother this has become. In that case, why don't you two stay here and wait? We'll go outside and fetch the equipment in the meantime."

REPORT

When the Hunters tried to leave all at the same time, Yu Jin-Ho formed a confused expression and quickly asked them.

“Are you telling me and Jin-Woo hyung to remain in the boss room?”

Hwang Dong-Seok smiled with his eyes and replied.

“The b*stard is yet to wake up even though we’ve been talking loudly for a while now. So, I’m sure nothing’s going to happen here. Well, there are some things I wanna speak to my boys, too, so we’ll take a short smoke break as well. But, don’t worry, it won’t take long.”

Jin-Woo listened to Hwang Dong-Seok’s rather detailed explanations and smirked inwardly.

‘You’ve finally revealed your true colours, huh. But all of you are leaving at the same time? Aren’t you fools taking us way too lightly?’

They were looking down on him because of his low rank, of course.

As Jin-Woo expected him to, Hwang Dong-Seok finally began to move. It was slightly different from the youth’s expectation, though.

It had been four years since he became a Hunter. During that time, he had met many Hunters. One of them was an ahjussi named Mister Oh.

He had retired from the life of a freelancer, but still showed up now and then to help out with the Association’s work.

“Be careful of geckos.”

Mister Oh used to say that rather often.

When one participated in raids, one would inevitably encounter a dangerous situation.

When such an event happened, some crooked, immoral Hunters would try to sacrifice someone who had been fighting alongside them until then, with some flimsy pretext of them not being in the same team, to begin with, or that the other party was simply weaker than they were.

All just to buy themselves some time for their safe escape.

It was exactly like a gecko cutting off its own tail and running away.

‘Cutting its tail off....’

Mister Oh took to calling those types of Hunters ‘geckos’, and such actions as cutting off one’s tail.

The regulation stated that in order to enter a Gate ranked C, the minimum number of participants had to be ten. Yet, Hwang Dong-Seok’s team only had eight members.

“I’m sure you already know that it’s not easy to hire a Healer if you’re running your own assault party. Well, we’ve been doing things this way until now, so it’ll be fine.”

Indeed, he stuck to only eight members, even though his team had entered countless Gates ranked C – so much so that he could say ‘this way until now’.

‘They obviously have no reason to fill the last two spots.’

They needed a tail that they could cut off at any given moment, after all. There was a reason why they were willing to accept anyone whether it was a Hunter ranked E or a newbie.

And now....

Hwang Dong-Seok had decided to abandon both Seong Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho for a slightly different reason than usual.

‘But, it’s a good thing for me.’

Jin-Woo had figured out Hwang Dong-Seok’s intentions pretty early on, but chose to say nothing. This was what he wanted, actually.

However, unlike Jin-Woo who was full of confidence, Yu Jin-Ho was quite different as he only started his work as a Hunter today.

Yu Jin-Ho spoke with a voice full of worries.

“No, wait a minute. That is just.... Why don’t we leave together?”

It was then, Jin-Woo spotted one of the Hunters at the back raise his hand towards his hips. So, he placed his hand on Yu Jin-Ho’s shoulder and spoke.

“It’ll be fine. We’ll guard this place.”

The Hunter’s hand heading towards his waist stopped.

“Hyung....?”

Yu Jin-Ho was quite surprised and confused, but Jin-Woo simply kept his mouth shut and lightly shook his head. Sure, the kid was noisy and got on his nerves just a tad, but Jin-Woo wasn’t planning to let him die here.

After all, didn't he try to get the fair share for Jin-Woo just now, although that would have ultimately put him in a disadvantageous position?

Hwang Dong-Seok formed a smile as he looked at the two youths.

“Our van isn't parked too far, so it shouldn't take long. Well, then.”

Hwang Dong-Seok and his lackeys quickly escaped from the boss room. And their footsteps rapidly got further and further away.

Yu Jin-Ho turned around and demanded answers from Jin-Woo.

“How could you say those things, hyung? What if that thing wakes up?”

Without a doubt, he was quite scared of that spider.

‘Looks like this kid hasn't grasped the situation quite yet.’

Jin-Woo inwardly clicked his tongue. It was too much of a bother to explain everything, too. Instead of an answer, he began loosening his body once more.

Around the same time, Hwang Dong-Seok turned around towards the boss room. The Hunters following him also came to a stop. They had arrived at a far-enough spot from the boss room now. At this sort of distance, there was no danger of being overheard.

Hwang Dong-Seok smiled deeply and signalled to Joh Gyu-Hwan next to him with his chin.

“Hey, Gyu-Hwan-ah? Block up the entrance to the boss room.”

“Should I blow it up?”

“That's right. But, don't block it up completely, okay? We gotta go in there a bit later, too.

Lee Cheol-Jin then asked him.

“Hwang hyung, is there a reason to beat around the bush like this? Why don't we just kill them now and get started right away?”

Hwang Dong-Seok's expression crumpled and glared at the other guy. There was no need for him to maintain the fake smile now. At least that was one less thing to worry about.

“M-my bad.”

Lee Cheol-Jin averted his gaze in fear. Hwang Dong-Seok tsk, tsked.

“What if we start fighting there and the spider wakes up? How will you mine those mana stones and carry them out then?”

“I’m sorry.”

Joh Gyu-Hwan butted in.

“Hwang hyung, since we are on that subject... Wouldn’t that thing wake up while we try to mine the mana stones? If so, we might end up losing big, you know.”

That creature was strong enough to prey on those already-scary insect-type monsters. If the team got sneak attacked in the middle of the mining operation, the losses they incur would be enormous.

“That is why....”

Hwang Dong-Seok smirked deeply.

“We’re trying to offer those two up as food, aren’t we?”

“Ahh.....”

Joh Gyu-Hwan nodded his head as if he had finally understood the plan.

Right now, no one knew just when the spider would wake up. It could be 10 hours from now, maybe one hour, or it could be a minute later. That was why they had to wake the spider up now and feed it.

No matter how dull that monster happened to be, it’d still wake up from the impact strong enough to cause the entrance to cave in.

Hwang Dong-Seok continued on.

“We mine the mana stones when the spider goes back to sleep with a full belly.”

The permit they got from the Association would last for five days. They still had over four and a half days of leeway, in other words.

They would wait and if the spider didn’t go back to sleep, they would simply dispose of it and mine as much as they could before the Gate closed shut.

They wouldn’t be able to mine everything within the hour, but with Seong Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho no longer in the picture, they should be able to avoid losing out too much.

Wouldn’t that be far more preferable than working under the constant fear? Their safety was the number one priority, after all.

‘Of course, that’s the worst possible scenario....’

If they were lucky, the profit would be divided eight ways, they mine all the mana stones, and even monopolise the spider, too. As an added bonus, those expensive-looking equipment on Yu Jin-Ho's body would become theirs, too!

'That sword and the shield, they have to be worth at least a few hundred million Won.'

They had nothing to lose from this transaction at all.

The corners of Hwang Dong-Seok's lips arched up.

"Block up the entrance, so we can go and take a smoke break. Quick."

"Yes, hyung."

Joh Gyu-Hwan replied as a blinding light began to gather on the tip of his fingers.

"....."

Yu Jin-Ho's gaze was fixed on the sleeping spider. Even his breathing was cautious. He then asked, his expression rigid with fear.

"That spider b*stard, it's not gonna suddenly wake up on us, right?"

"Who knows."

Jin-Woo remained economical with his words. He had more or less figured out what would happen next, but if he said out aloud his thoughts in full, then Yu Jin-Ho might faint from fear.

'Now that I think about it....'

Those words were the first to come out from Yu Jin-Ho's mouth in the past five minutes or so. It seemed that he was really scared right now. And he used to be so talkative, too.

Then, 'it' happened.

Kaboom!!!

With a loud explosion, the entrance of the boss room suddenly caved in.

"Uh, uh?! Huh!! Ahhh!!"

Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly ran towards the entrance.

Unfortunately for him, the entrance was completely blocked up by the fallen rocks. He pushed on with all his might, but not a single stone budged.

Jin-Woo slowly walked over there in the meantime.

“Groan~! Hyung, help me push this!”

Yu Jin-Ho was still giving his all to push the blockade of stones away.

‘He said his name was Joh Gyu-Hwan, huh.’

Before the explosion, there was a flash of light. A Sorcerer ranked C that controlled ‘light’. This was no doubt that b*stard’s handiwork.

Jin-Woo placed his hand on the fallen rocks.

‘If I want to, I can get out of here at any time.’

He could sense the weight of the stones through his hands. They weren’t as heavy as they looked. When he very slightly pushed, he felt the wall tremble gently. Of course, he wasn’t thinking of leaving at all, anyways.

“Ah!”

Yu Jin-Ho stopped pushing at the stones and cried out as if he had finally figured out the truth. His face now reddened in fury, Yu Jin-Ho shifted his gaze over to Jin-Woo.

“Those sons of b*tches are trying to kill us!! They don’t want to share the mana stones, so they blocked the exit and let the spider devour us!”

‘Wow, you figured that out so quickly, Sherlock.’

Jin-Woo was rolling his eyes in his head, but still played along for the time being.

“Looks that way. This is troublesome.”

“Heok!”

Suddenly, Yu Jin-Ho’s reddened complexion paled in an instant. Would that be the look of someone whose blood had gone cold?

No need to ask him what happened, there – the silhouette of the giant monster was oh-so-clearly reflected in Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes.

Jin-Woo turned around.

“Keurruuuk. Keururuk.”

The spider’s sleep had been interrupted by that loud explosion and it was slowly raising its massive body up.

The body the size of a house.

Dozens upon dozens of eyes.

That horrifying mouth.

Eight long, long legs.

Now that it had begun moving for real, it looked far more terrifying than when it was actually in a deep slumber.

“Euh....”

Yu Jin-Ho leaked out a fearful gasp. His body had frozen stiff like a statue.

On the other hand, Jin-Woo kept his sight firmly locked on the spider as he calmly summoned the ‘Poison Fang of Kasaka’ from his Inventory.

‘You’re mine.’

This was the perfect opportunity to test out his enhanced stats.

The Poison Fang of Kasaka appeared in his right hand....

Swiish.

....As if it had always been there.

Jin-Woo gripped the dagger’s hilt tightly. The reason why a Hunter was called a Hunter! From this moment on was when the true hunt would begin.

“H-hang on a second, hyung!!”

However, Yu Jin-Ho swiftly snatched up Jin-Woo’s sleeve just as the latter took a couple of steps towards the spider.

“Wha, what are you trying to do?!”

Yu Jin-Ho’s hands were shaking pretty bad. Jin-Woo used his left thumb to point over his shoulder.

“Obviously, I’m going to hunt that.”

Jin-Woo had been following around Hwang Dong-Seok’s group until now for that purpose.

....In order to monopolise the remaining monsters in the dungeon as soon as Hwang Dong-Seok cut the tail and ran away. This was a splendid opportunity to swallow whole all the experience points and magic crystals.

‘Well, only if the boss hadn’t devoured every monster in this dungeon, that is.’

If that hadn’t been the case, then he would’ve profited a lot more, though. What a missed opportunity that was.

However, Yu Jin-Ho’s facial expression clearly displayed his disbelief, as he had no idea about Jin-Woo’s special constitution.

‘What is this hyung rambling on about?!’

There was something he'd heard from someone somewhere before.

A person would stop thinking rationally the moment he or she received a mental shock beyond their capability to deal with.

The Hunter ranked E standing right in front said that he'd hunt the boss of a C-rank dungeon. If this was not an act of irrationality, that what else could it be?

Yu Jin-Ho asked again, this time looking rather dumbfounded.

“Hyung, you want to hunt that thing? For real?”

Jin-Woo scratched the top of his head, looking somewhat troubled, before replying back with a question of his own.

“What, you want to hunt it, then?”

Part 10. 'Give and Take'

Jin-Woo turned around even before Yu Jin-Ho had the chance to respond. There was no need to listen to his reply, anyway.

Even now, Yu Jin-Ho was barely managing to stand up straight as his legs continued to shudder.

From the get-go, he didn't expect anything from Yu Jin-Ho. Rather, he was relieved that the kid didn't follow after him while saying he'd lend his aid or some such.

‘He'll just get in my way, anyway.’

Jin-Woo slowly approached the spider.

The spider must've discovered the humans' presence as well, as it was changing its direction towards them while shuffling on its eight legs.

It was coming closer.

As if it found the never-before-seen prey rather strange, the spider didn't immediately rush out. Using its thick and long legs to push down on the ground, it inched closer and closer.

“Fuu-woo.”

As that giant monster slowly filled up his entire view, Jin-Woo's breathing became heavy. His heart began thumping faster and faster, too.

Thump-thump, thump-thump.

Jin-Woo controlled his wayward breathing and did his absolute best to calm himself down. He had to remain focused and steady here.

He recalled the exact feelings he felt when he stood at the end of the second floor of the Hapjeong station's instant dungeon.

He then recalled seeing the Poison-Fanged Blue Kasaka for the first time.

However, this giant spider in front of him didn't emit as much pressure as that snake did. Meaning, he could definitely do this.

From the get-go, if he thought that this boss was impossible to clear alone, he wouldn't even have stayed here.

“Keurururuk.”

They had gotten close enough that his face was now reflecting rather clearly on those smooth, jet-black eyes of the spider.

Jin-Woo's own eyes narrowed to a slit.

‘The exoskeleton looks pretty tough.... Can my dagger even damage it?’

Quite obviously, a dagger would have a shorter reach than a steel longsword Jin-Woo used before. So, if he wanted to cause a deep wound, he needed to strengthen his attacks.

Jin-Woo held the dagger in the reverse grip. He figured that it’d be easier to hurt the monster by holding the blade in this fashion.

“Keuruk.”

Finally, the spider stood before Jin-Woo. Then, it raised its two front legs up and bent them at an angle.

‘What is it trying to do?’

His curiosity lasted only for a brief moment – Jin-Woo’s eyes shot open wide next.

SLAM!!

If he didn’t instinctively tilt his body out of the way, the spider’s legs would’ve penetrated his chest just now. The spider’s legs stabbed into the ground behind him before rising up in the air, its joints folding back up. And from the ends of its legs, pieces of the rocky ground fell.

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance behind him.

The stone floor now had a pretty substantial hole in it.

‘If I got hit by that, it wouldn’t have ended with me feeling a bit of ache in my chest, huh.’

Jin-Woo’s glare sharpened even more. Now was the time he needed to concentrate even harder.

Swish!

The spider’s legs that initially resembled bullets being fired could now be captured in his eyes.

Left.

He ducked his head lower to evade the spider's left front leg.

Right.

He tilted his body back and let the spider's right leg brush past him, before he took a step closer.

Right.

He evaded the spider's leg that took aim at his head once more, and took two steps forward this time.

Left, right, right, left, right, right, right, left, left.

Slam! Boom! Kwahng! Kaboom! Slam! Boom! Kwahng! Kaboom!

The spider's legs stabbed and destroyed the ground so loudly that his ears actually felt numb from the pain.

Jin-Woo evaded the spider's attacks one by one and got closer and closer to the monster.

Meanwhile, Yu Jin-Ho couldn't quite believe his own eyes.

"Wha-what the hell is up with this guy?!"

Even though he was watching from afar, those attacks were so ferocious that all the hair on the back of his head was standing up.

However, that man was evading them all while standing right in front of the monster, not to mention he was actually getting closer too.

Seeing that efficient and calm movement, Yu Jin-Woo felt a chill run down his backside.

"And he's supposed to be an E rank?!"

There was no freaking way.

If it was him standing there and not Seong Jin-Woo, then he'd be torn into a rag by now. He didn't have any confidence whatsoever to dodge those attacks even once.

However, Jin-Woo was evading them without making a single mistake.

An E rank doing something that a D rank Hunter such as himself couldn't even dream of doing?

There could only be one explanation for this.

'.....He is a fake registrant!!'

Yu Jin-Ho's expression hardened.

Out of those highly talented Hunters, there were a few who could freely control his or her magical energy. If they felt like it, they could easily fake the results and get a lower ranking.

Hunters who got assigned lower ranks than what they should've got in the first place simply by hiding a portion of their magic energy – such people were labelled as 'fake registrants'.

And perhaps more alarmingly, most of those fake registrants carried around rather sinister motives for doing so.

'Such as, that serial killer whose hobby was to enter low ranked dungeons and murder all the other lower ranked Hunters....'

As only those who were present knew what happened inside a dungeon, there was no better place to commit crimes than the world behind the Gates.

Yu Jin-Ho nervously swallowed his saliva. Suddenly, Jin-Woo seemed far scarier than the spider.

'And just why did I have to insist on coming to this place....?'

Yu Jin-Ho felt like he'd break out in sobs at any moment now.

Swish! Swish! Swish!

In the meantime, the spider's attacks poured down without a break.

Jin-Woo dodged all of those attacks and grew confident of his victory. Having decreased the distance between them little by little, the head of the spider was almost within his reach now.

The attack pattern of the spider was rather simple so he could get close to it pretty easily.

'For now, I'll aim for its eyes.'

It was the basics of all basic rules to attack the monster's weak points. So, he decided to attack the eyes of the spider, which looked to be the weakest point in its defences.

'As soon as I stab my dagger in those eyes....!'

Just as Jin-Woo made up his mind....

He suddenly sensed that the spider's attacks had slowed down for some reason.

Swish! Swish!

Was it because his eyes had adjusted fully to the speed of its attacks?

Boom!! Slam!!

No, that wasn't it.

His eyes might've been misled, but his hearing could not be fooled. The loud noises coming from the exploding ground came to him a beat slower than before, since a few seconds ago.

Jin-Woo was already pretty confident of his rather excellent sense of hearing so he could feel this subtle change.

It was then, a certain ominous premonition flickered past in his brain.

When he took a closer look, the muscles around the vicinity of the spider's mouth were trembling quite imperceptibly.

'Why is it trying to open its mouth now?'

Jin-Woo had been getting ready to jump up three metres and reach the head of the spider, but he sensed something ominous was about to happen. Jin-Woo hurriedly changed the direction of his jump from forward to his rear.

And then....

Splash!!

From the mouth of the spider, dirty and turbid liquid spewed out.

Jin-Woo rolled on the floor for a second before regaining his balance. He quickly took a look behind him. The spot on the floor he had been standing only until a second ago was now emitting smoke as it got scorched black.

Sizzle....

Stones on the floor melted away powerlessly.

Jin-Woo swallowed his saliva after seeing that.

'If I had jumped forward just now....'

It wouldn't have been only the floor that was melting right now.

Perhaps sensing that Jin-Woo had been distracted, the spider rushed towards him in no time.

Rustle!!

Jin-Woo raised his head. By then, the spider was already right in front of his eyes.

Swish!

Jin-Woo jumped up to evade the giant spider's legs.

Slam!!

The b*stard's attacks had recommenced.

“D*mn it!!”

After that, Jin-Woo got near the monster's head several times more. Every time he did that, though, he had no choice but to retreat in order to evade that disgusting digestive juice.

When the spider's attack pattern had become two, it became that much harder to deal with it. If he got closer after evading all those snapping legs, the digestive juice spewed out. Its legs attacked again once he had to retreat to a distance because of the juices.

“Sh*t!”

Feeling frustrated now, he decided to attack the legs with his dagger.

Unfortunately, the legs were also covered in that thick exoskeleton and no matter how many times he cut it, he couldn't even nick it once.

Jin-Woo bit his lower lip.

‘This isn't going to work.’

The spider only needed its two front legs to attack him, but on the other hand, he needed to use his entire body to evade them. It was obvious who would tire out first here.

‘Tiredness.’

[Tiredness: 57]

As he thought, his Tiredness Stat was rapidly rising up.

When this Stat hit 70, his speed would decrease, and when it reaches 90, his breathing would become too heavy and it'd become that much harder to freely move about.

He was running out of time.

‘If I want to get closer to it, then.....’

Speed.

His speed was the issue.

Boom!! Boom!! Boom! Boom!!!

‘Wait. Speed, is it?’

As Jin-Woo continued to barely evade each of the legs raining down, a thought entered his head.

‘Yeah, I had that, didn’t I?’

He indeed possessed a single active skill. He had forgotten all about it because there was no need for him to use it, until now.

‘Dash!’

[You’ve activated ‘Skill: Dash’.]

[Your movement speed has increased by 30%. One Mana will be spent every minute during its activation.]

Along with those messages, Jin-Woo’s body became even faster as if a booster had been activated. Evading the spider’s legs had become even easier as a result.

Swish! Swish! Swish!

Boom! Boom! Boom!

He swiftly evaded the spider legs slamming down like lightning bolts and in the blink of an eye, arrived before the monster.

Taken by surprise, the spider hurriedly spewed out its digestive juice.

However, thanks to the increase in his speed, his movement had now this certain composure to it. Jin-Woo easily evaded the digestive juice and pounced towards the spider’s head.

Slash!

His dagger slashed at the spider’s eyes.

[‘Effect: Paralysis’ has been activated.]

[The effect has been cancelled due to the high resistance of the target.]

[‘Effect: Bleeding’ has been activated.]

[The target’s stamina will decrease by 1% per second.]

“Yes!”

One of the two special effects the Poison Fang of Kasaka possessed had activated successfully.

Rooooaaaar!!!

The spider roared out and staggered about.

Jin-Woo didn’t miss this opening.

The moment his two feet landed back on the ground, he jumped up again and climbed on the spider’s body to get to the top of its head.

The spider went crazy and swung its legs all over the place, but Jin-Woo wasn't going to let those blind attacks land on him.

Slam! Boom! Kaboom!

Holes continued to appear on the poor, blameless ground instead.

Now standing on top of the spider's head, Jin-Woo began stabbing the eyes of the spider with his dagger.

Stab! Stab! Staaab!!

ROOOAAARR!!!

Stab! Stab!!

ROOAARR?!!

The spider rampaged around this way and that, but Jin-Woo endured till the end and continued to shove his dagger into the head of the spider.

“Keu, keu-ru-ruk!”

The spider began tottering about dangerously. It was obviously getting damaged now. Seeing this, Jin-Woo's hands picked up speed.

And eventually, the huge body of the spider finally tilted to the side.

THUD!!!

However, Jin-Woo didn't stay his hand. No, he kept going at it, until the spider was dead for sure.

Stab! Stab!! Stab!!!

“Keuruk. Keureureureu....”

Along with the final gasps from the spider, several messages popped up in his view.

[You've killed the owner of this dungeon.]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

“I did it!”

While covered from head to toe in the spider blood, Jin-Woo raised his hands up high. Maybe because it was a boss monster, his level jumped up by three.

“Status Window.”

From level 18, he had jumped up to reach 21 in one go. And that wasn't even the end. Besides the level up messages, something else also popped up as well.

Tti-ring.

['Store: Buy' function is now available with your level having reached 20.]

'Oh, so I can finally spend those Gold things now, eh?'

That was a nice message, for sure. However, now wasn't the right time to relaxedly browse through the Store.

RUMBLE.....

The cave began to shake just a little.

[With the death of the dungeon's owner, the entrance of the dungeon will be destroyed in one hour.]

[Remaining time: 59 minutes 58 seconds.]

Indeed, he had to get out of this place before the Gate closed on him, after all. Browsing through the Store could be done once he was somewhere safe.

Just as Jin-Woo was about to climb down, he spotted something gleaming brightly in the middle of the spider's head.

'Is that an item?'

However, unlike the monsters from the instant dungeon, there was no message about recovered items, nor could he automatically claim them.

What could it be, then?

Jin-Woo pondered briefly before realising what it was.

'Ah, these things have magic crystals, don't they?'

No matter how busy he was, how could he forget something so valuable like that?

Jin-Woo extracted the magic crystal hidden deep inside the head of the dead spider. This was a C-rank magic crystal extracted from the boss monster, so it should at least go for around ten million Won, easy.

As the trophy for his glamorous victory, this would do very nicely.

Jin-Woo lightly jumped down from the dead spider's head.

Tap.

He landed lightly on the ground and turned around, and well, he discovered more gleaming lights, this time coming from the spider's belly.

Not only that, but several of them, even!

Jin-Woo was now feeling rather surprised.

He heard stories of some monsters possessing two, three magic crystals, but there were simply too many lights to say those could all be magic crystals.

'What could they be, then?'

He used the dagger to slice open the belly and continued on to its stomach, which resulted in half-digested remains of the insect-type monsters to pour out to the ground. And the lights were coming from those.

"No way....?!"

Jin-Woo rummaged through the dead insects one at the time.

And just as he suspected, they all possessed their magic crystals. Sure, a few of them had melted down and become smaller than before, but quite a lot of them had survived and remained as good as new.

When he collected the intact ones, he counted over ten.

“I really hit the jackpot this time!”

He came to earn this month’s rent, but at this rate, he’d be earning way more than that.

“H-hyung-nim.”

When Jin-Woo looked back, he saw Yu Jin-Ho there.

“Please, put them in here.”

Yu Jin-Ho then proceeded to carefully tuck in the magic crystals belonging to Jin-Woo inside his equipment bag. , he reached inside the corner of the same bag and pulled out a Thermos, before pouring the flask’s content on its lid.

“Hyung-nim, you must be feeling thirsty. Please, drink this. It’s water.”

Indeed, it was a cold, refreshing cup of water, filled right up to the edge.

‘Why is this kid doing something no one asked him to?’

Since Jin-Woo was feeling thirsty anyway, he took the Thermos lid to drink the water. But, his head never stopped tilting in the meantime.

Gulp, gulp.

The water slid down his throat and refreshed him quite nicely.

“Hyung-nim, did you enjoy it?”

Before he had noticed it, the honorific had changed to ‘hyung-nim’, too.

“Mm.... Yeah, it’s refreshing.”

Jin-Woo spoke his earnest opinion and handed the lid over to Yu Jin-Ho.

“And, the things you saw in here....”

Even before Jin-Woo could finish his sentence, Yu Jin-Ho quickly cut in, as if to say that there’s nothing to worry about.

“Of course! I won’t say anything to anyone and take this secret with me to my grave.”

“No, hang on. No need to take it to your grave....”

“But, of course, I will. It’ll be a promise between hyung-nim and I, after all.”

“Well, in that case..... Okay. If you say so.”

“You don’t have to worry about a thing, hyung-nim.”

It wasn’t as if anyone would believe the claim that a rank E solo’ed the boss of a rank C Gate anyway. Still, the kid was saying he’d voluntarily keep his mouth shut, and that would certainly make his life a bit easier.

‘I thought he didn’t know how to take a hint, but he’s pretty quick on the uptake on things like this, eh?’

“Is there anything else you’d like to tell me, hyung-nim?”

“....No, not particularly.”

Well, that sounded a bit suspect, there. Jin-Woo studied the overly-polite mannerism of Yu Jin-Ho and inwardly questioned his motives, before coming to a conclusion of his own.

‘Well, yeah. From Yu Jin-Ho’s perspective, I did save his life and all.’

Wasn’t it the most obvious thing in the world that you’d become really courteous and humble towards a person who saved your life?

When looked at that way, his attitude made more sense. The reality of the situation was slightly different from that, though.

Rumble....

The dungeon shook around for a bit again before its tremors stopped. That tremor was the reminder that the Gate would close in a little while.

The tremors would progressively get worse as time went by, and just before the Gate closed, it’d morph into a full-blown earthquake.

“Let’s get out of here.”

“Yes, hyung-nim.”

Jin-Woo began walking towards the entrance.

Before they reached it, though, there was a sudden flash of light, and the rocks blocking up the entrance collapsed.

Boom!

Afterwards, Hwang Dong-Seok and his goons rushed into the boss room. As soon as spotting the dead spider behind Jin-Woo, their expressions became dumbfounded.

“What the hell?! It’s really dead?!”

“Did those two hunt it?”

“That spider must’ve been nothing much, even with that big body and all.”

“Well, if a rank D and a rank E managed to kill it, then....”

“Hwang hyung, what should we do now?”

Hwang Dong-Seok scratched his chin while gazing at Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho.

With the spider dead, the Gate would soon close. It’d be too late to start mining the mana stones now. They hadn’t even finished getting ready, yet the remaining time was now less than an hour.

It was time for the ‘plan b’. So, he loudly called out to Yu Jin-Ho.

“Yu Jin-Ho!!”

Yu Jin-Ho flinched and took a step back. His face was full of nervous tension.

An oily smile floated up on Hwang Dong-Seok's face.

"I thought your gear looked real eye-catching, so we did a background check on ya, and it turns out that you're a son of a real bigshot. The son of the Yujin Construction's owner, Yu Myung-Han, no less."

"S-so what?"

"We'll give you a chance. I've got some stuff to discuss with your old man, you see. However, it'd get real troublesome for us if the matters of this place get out. So, if you wish to live, you better become our accomplice."

"An accomplice?"

Hwang Dong-Seok pointed at Jin-Woo with his chin.

Being on the receiving end of that disgusting stare, Jin-Woo's forehead creased for a second.

"Kill Seong Jin-Woo."

"What?!"

Yu Jin-Ho freaked out. And Hwang Dong-Seok chuckled as if he found that expression rather funny.

The thing was, he used his phone to do an online search and found out that Yu Jin-Ho's father was the owner of the top construction company in the country. Seeing that, a sinister scheme formed in his head.

He'd film the scene of Yu Jin-Ho killing Seong Jin-Woo and then, under the pretext of keeping his mouth shut, blackmail Yu Myung-Han.

'The known wealth of Yu Myung-Han is supposedly around 10 trillion Won, wasn't it? (TL: Almost $9 billion)

He might be able to reel in several times more money than mining these mana stones if he played his cards right.

"That's the only way you'll leave this place alive. As long as you kill Seong Jin-Woo with your own hands, we'll let you live. If not, we kill both of you."

Hwang Dong-Seok's eyes became very hostile right away.

"What are you hesitating for? No one will know what happens inside a dungeon, anyway. Wait, could it be that you're scared of a rank E, even though you're a rank D?"

Yu Jin-Ho turned his head to his side. Jin-Woo shrugged his shoulders as his answer. He was implying that Yu Jin-Ho should do whatever he felt like.

With a determined expression, Yu Jin-Ho unsheathed the sword on his hips.

‘Finally, he made up his mind, huh.’

A smile formed on Hwang Dong-Seok’s mouth. Unfortunately for him, his expectation was not met. Still holding that sword, Yu Jin-Ho stood alongside Jin-Woo.

“Ho-oh? So, you wanna team up with that guy and fight us, is that right?”

Hwang Dong-Seok muttered softly. A scion of a well-to-do family got lucky and killed a rank C boss, and it looked like his ego had become bloated somewhat as a result.

Joh Gyu-Hwan whispered from the side.

“Hyung, what should we do now?”

Hwang Dong-Seok lowered his voice so both Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho wouldn’t be able to hear him.

“For now, take care of Seong Jin-Woo first. We gotta hold onto that potential moneybag. Our losses today are pretty substantial after all.”

“Okay, will do.”

Joh Guy-Hwan’s hands began emitting bright light next.

Seeing this, Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed to a slit.

‘In the end, they want to have a go, huh.’

This would be his very first time fighting against other Hunters. However, he wasn’t planning to go easy on these b*stards that have aimed for his life several times already.

...But then, this happened.

Tti-ring.

There was that mechanical beep again.

[An Emergency Quest has been generated.]

‘An Emergency Quest?!’

Jin-Woo raised his head.

He didn’t even say anything about wanting to look at the contents, yet the quest window spread out before his eyes without his consent.

Now that was a first.

[Emergency Quest: Kill all the enemies!]

There are lifeforms holding murderous intentions towards the ‘Player’. Kill them all in order to secure your own safety. If you do not follow this instruction, a corresponding penalty will be given.

The number of enemies left to kill: 8

The number of killed enemies: 0

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened wider.

‘In order to complete the quest, Hwang Dong-Seok and his teammates must all die?!’

It was then, a beam of light flashed right before his eyes. The light beams left Joh Gyu-Hwan’s hands and flew straight at Jin-Woo.

Boom!!

Flung away by the explosion, Jin-Woo’s figure flew at a frightening speed and slammed into the cave wall.

Slam!!

A portion of the wall collapsed and fell on top of Jin-Woo.

Tumble...

“Hyung-nim!!”

Yu Jin-Ho froze on the spot from surprise.

“Don’t sweat over the dead guy and why don’t you come over here?”

Hwang Dong-Seok beckoned with his fingers.

Yu Jin-Ho stared at the spot where Jin-Woo was. Just like what Hwang Dong-Seok had implied, Jin-Woo wasn’t moving an inch as he remained buried under the debris.

“You... you murderers...”

Tears pooled around Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes.

Hwang Dong-Seok and his dongsaengs simply giggled at the label of ‘murderers’ thrown at their way. Well, that was the truth, to begin with, anyway. Just how many died by their hands inside many other dungeons?

While they were looking at Yu Jin-Ho and continued to smile, Jin-Woo was under the pile of rubble, doubting his own eyes at the moment.

The contents of the quest were slowly changing, that was why.

There are lifeforms holding murderous intentions towards the '&@##'. Kill them all in order to secure your own safety. If you do not follow this instruction, #$$%^%$#$%^!&#$$%^$.

The number of enemies left to kill: 8

A few words suddenly became illegible, before changing their shapes.

[Emergency Quest: Kill all the enemies!]

There are lifeforms holding murderous intentions towards you. Kill them all in order to secure your own safety. If you do not follow this instruction, your heart will cease functioning.

The number of enemies left to kill: 8

The number of killed enemies: 0

What a clear-cut threat that was.

If he didn't finish the quest as intended, 'it' would kill him, instead.

'Kill if I don't want to be killed, is that it?'

The contents were pretty shocking, but Jin-Woo's fluster didn't remain for long.

No, his flustered mind rapidly morphed into one of relief. Even he found it hard to believe, but that was the truth.

There was this fear that always lingered in his mind, starting from the day these quests popped up in front of his eyes alongside Stat values and such.

'What would happen to me if this mysterious phenomenon suddenly stopped?'

What if all these things only happened as a coincidence, and they could end at any given moment?

Such fear always accompanied him.

However, through this Emergency Quest, the truth became clear.

Things happening to him were not a coincidence nor were they some weird goodwill from someone. If the quest was generated by something holding some form of goodwill, then it should've just said "Overcome this danger", and not threaten him to kill him as a penalty.

The System had a clear purpose.

It was either ‘Make Seong Jin-Woo strong’ or ‘Need a strong Seong Jin-Woo’.

‘And, depending on the situation, me who could kill other Hunters at the drop of a hat, even....’

He could glean such intentions from the System now. Jin-Woo felt reassured by that revelation.

‘What a relief that....’

....That, it was not a coincidence.

....That, it definitely had a goal.

Whenever he found himself in danger, he yearned to be stronger. He so dearly wished to stop living the life where it was no different from dangling precariously on the edge of a cliff.

But, on that fateful day, during the most dangerous moments of his life, his opportunity came.

The goal of this System and Jin-Woo’s wishes lined up perfectly.

‘The System is using me, and I’m using the System.’

That was all there was to it.

As long as there was an end goal, a purpose, this phenomenon would never suddenly vanish from his eyes.

Jin-Woo slowly got up from the rubble.

[HP: 1360/2600]

As expected of a magic spell shot by a rank C Hunter; it was only a single hit, yet his HP had almost halved. There was no more room left to take it easy now.

Intense malice filled up Jin-Woo’s eyes.

He began walking towards Hwang Dong-Seok.

“What the heck?”

Hwang Dong-Seok and his goons had been surrounding the scared Yu Jin-Ho, so they ended up discovering Jin-Woo rather belatedly.

“What’s going on here? He’s still alive.”

“But, Gyu-Hwan hyung looks like a dead fish, though?”

“What an embarrassment this is. He’s a measly rank E, you know.”

Hwang Dong-Seok scratched his chin.

“Hey, Gyu-Hwan-ah, why didn’t you finish him properly the first time?”

Joh Gyu-Hwan’s face reddened somewhat.

“Yeah.... I should’ve.”

But, this wasn’t right.

He really did pour his all with that shot.

He had spent over a third of his overall magical energy, yet how could this kid stand back up? Could the attack not connect properly? But then, there wouldn’t have been such a loud explosion if that was the case.

Lots of questions formed in his head, but there was no time to ask them.

Because, Jin-Woo opened his mouth first.

“Since you’re playing around with people’s lives....”

The eyes of Hwang Dong-Seok’s group were now fixed to Jin-Woo. He came to a stop in front of them.

Yu Jin-Ho flinched in surprise, but the reactions of other Hunters were rather subdued. Some of them even began smirking in derision.

Jin-Woo spoke with a dry voice.

“...You’ve all sufficiently resolved yourselves, right?”

Hwang Dong-Seok let off a snort after hearing that.

“What the hell is this fool even saying?”

“Hyung-nim, let me handle this kid.”

A Hunter with tiny little eyes approached Jin-Woo and placed his arms around the latter’s neck.

“It looks like you Mister hasn’t really figured the situation out yet, but the thing is.... Eh?”

The expression of the tiny eyes became weirder and weirder as he strengthened his arms.

‘...What the hell? Why can’t I pull him down?’

He tried to perform a headlock with his physical strength, but no matter how hard he pulled, Jin-Woo’s upper body showed no sign of budging.

Wasn’t this b*stard supposed to be only a rank E?!

Cold sweat formed on the forehead of the tiny eyes.

‘How could he be this strong...’

It happened then.

Slice.

The head of the tiny eyes fell to the ground.

Thud.

“J-Joon-Tae!!”

Hwang Dong-Seok’s eyes trembled like an earthquake.

“Wha-what the hell?!”

“That knife, just when did he?!”

“Where did he get that?!”

Hwang Dong-Seok and his goons quickly took several steps back and yanked their weapons out. Jin-Woo’s hand was already holding the ‘Poison Fang of Kasaka’.

Blood dripped from the tip of the blade.

Tti-ring.

[The number of enemies left to kill: 7]

Chapter 23 Fin.

REPORT

Jin-Woo swept his gaze at Hwang Dong-Seok and his group like a predator eyeing his prey.

Hwang Dong-Seok swallowed his saliva. He was already pretty surprised by the dagger appearing in that man's hands, but more importantly, Park Joon-Tae's death shook him to the core rather greatly.

'How did an E-rank Hunter kill a D rank in one hit?!'

He had no idea what kind of a trick the other guy used, but from now on, underestimating his opponent was definitely forbidden. No, he had to be very meticulous here. Hwang Dong-Seok gave a signal with his eyes to his side.

'Gyu-Hwan-ah, hit him one more time.'

Joh Gyu-Hwan lightly nodded his head.

This time, he wouldn't make the same mistake again!

Joh Gyu-Hwan told himself such as lights began gathering in his hands again. But, even before the arrows of light could leave his fingertips, Jin-Woo appeared right in front of Joh Gyu-Hwan first.

"Uh? Huh?!"

Joh Gyu-Hwan's jaw hit the floor.

The light in Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed coldly.

'You first, the magic-type Hunter who possesses strong firepower but a weak body.'

Jin-Woo had finished his calculations already.

The dagger stabbed straight through Joh Gyu-Hwan's neck.

Stab!

"Keo-heok!!"

Joh Gyu-Hwan tried to cover the hole in his neck and collapsed to the floor.

Plop.

"Kill him!!"

“Uwaaahhh!!”

With that as a signal, the Hunters around him rushed towards Jin-Woo at once. Jin-Woo raised all his senses to the maximum and calmly focused on the movements of his enemies.

All sounds disappeared and time slowed down. The Agility Stat and its 38 points had begun displaying its worth. He then blocked or evaded swords, spears and arrows being thrust at him from the very short distance.

The eyes of the Hunters became incredibly large.

‘H-how can an E rank move like this?!’

‘Too fast!!’

‘I can’t hit him at all!’

The complexions of the Hunters became ashen.

Indeed, speed was a subjective thing. To their eyes, Jin-Woo’s movement was absurdly fast. Meanwhile, Jin-Woo waded in among the Hunters and calmly cut into their vital spots, one at the time.

[‘Effect: Paralysis’ has been activated.]

[‘Effect: Bleeding’ has been activated.]

[‘Effect: Paralysis’ has been activated.]

The special effects of the Poison Fang of Kasaka continued to activate and the Hunters all fell into a quagmire of confusion.

“I-I can’t move my body!! Uwaah?!”

“Magic?! Was that magic?!”

“You son of a b*tch!!”

[‘Effect: Bleeding’ has been activated.]

[‘Effect: Paralysis’ has been activated.]

[‘Effect: Paralysis’ has been activated.]

“Keok!!”

“Wha-what the hell is this guy’s real identity?!”

“Uwaaahk!!”

Screams resounded out without a break from here and there. Five Hunters surrounding Jin-Woo all crumpled down to the floor in no time at all.

Plop.

Plop.

Tti-ring.

[The number of enemies left to kill: 1]

[The number of killed enemies: 7]

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to the last remaining survivor.

And that was none other the big bearded man, Hwang Dong-Seok. He discarded his shield as an expression of determination formed on his face.

He then loudly roared out.

“Uuuhhhhhhaaaa!!”

Hwang Dong-Seok the kicked the ground and rushed forward.

Thump, thump, thump, thump!!!

His mind raced as he ran forward. He was a Tanker, and was considered one of the top even within the C rank.

His opponent most likely was a damage dealer.

Although that man seemed to be very agile, judged from his quick movements, there was no way he'd possess enough power to penetrate past Hwang Dong-Seok's 'Reinforcement' skill.

‘You can't fatally wound me with a measly little dagger!’

The one to be crushed when they collide would be Seong Jin-Woo, instead!

Their distance closed up in the blink of an eye, and Hwang Dong-Seok tackled with his shoulder.

“Reinforcement!!”

But then, his entire world seemed to spin around, and before he realised how, he was staring at the ceiling of the dungeon.

SLAM!!

His brain shook hard and a strong impact force was transmitted into his entire body.

He wanted to get up, but his body didn't listen to his commands. Hwang Dong-Seok tried very hard, but eventually gave up and lay sprawled on the ground.

“Cough!!”

He coughed out a mouthful of blood.

‘Did he... Did he throw me down to the floor?!’

Did Hwang Dong-Seok really lose in the contest of strength?

In a battle of physical strength?!

“How can a measly rank E....”

He was now so sure that something had gone terribly awry somewhere.

Five rank Cs and three rank Ds were knocked down in the blink of an eye. There was no way this b*stard was a rank E.

Jin-Woo stood next to Hwang Dong-Seok.

The bearded man couldn’t even properly move his body. His fate was quite obvious now.

If this was a sports match or a spar, then this battle would’ve ended right here. Too bad for the bearded man, though, Jin-Woo wasn’t planning to stop there.

“W-wait a minute.”

Hwang Dong-Seok raised his hand first.

“Le-let me go! If you, you want m-money, I’ll give it to ya. As long as you spare me....”

“Three times.”

Jin-Woo’s voice remained cold.

“Aren’t you a bit shameless, asking to be spared by someone you tried to kill three times already?”

First, by blocking the exit of the boss room.

Second, ordering Yu Jin-Ho to kill him.

And finally, Joh Gyu-Hwan’s magic.

Hwang Dong-Seok tried to kill Jin-Woo these three times – even after excluding the battle just now.

‘Give and take’.

When he returned alive from the underground temple, Jin-Woo resolved himself to return as much as he had received.

....Whether it was kindness or hostility.

He’d repay the acts of ill intents with an equal amount of malice. There would be no room for negotiation.

Realising that begging for his life wouldn't work, Hwang Dong-Seok's eyes shot wide open and foam bubbled around his mouth.

“You, you!! You think you’ll be okay after you laid your hands on me like this?! Do you have any idea who my younger brother is.....”

Shatter!

Hwang Dong-Seok could no longer continue with his words after his neck was broken.

“Keok.”

The whites of the bearded man's eyes were showing now.

Tti-ring.

[The number of enemies left to kill: 0]

[The number of killed enemies: 8]

Finally, this quest had come to an end.

“Whew-woo....”

Jin-Woo spat out a long sigh containing a myriad of emotions and lifted his hand away from Hwang Dong-Seok's head.

His gaze then stopped on his hands.

He might have one-sidedly bulldozed past his opponents, but for someone who had fought to the death against eight other people, his hands remained remarkably steady.

‘Is it okay to be like this?’

Jin-Woo placed his hand on his chest and felt for his beating heart.

Thump, thump, thump....

His heart was beating as calmly as if he had been taking a stroll.

‘What if.....’

For the first time ever, he began to think that, seeing the System wasn't the only change taking place within him after he returned alive from the underground temple.

However, his musings had to be kept brief. Soon, the familiar beep entered his head.

Tti-ring.

[You have completed ‘Emergency Quest: Kill all the enemies’.]

[Completion rewards are now available.]

[Would you like to confirm the rewards?] (Y/N)

He was half-expecting this to happen, and sure enough, he now had received rewards. Jin-Woo didn't even hesitate and chose 'yes'.

'Confirm.'

Tti-ring.

[The following rewards are available.]

Reward 1. Full recovery of the current physical condition

Reward 2. Ten additional Stat points

Reward 3. Skill: 'Intimidation'

'Not only ten points, but even a skill, too?'

Jin-Woo's eyes widened from the huge amount of available rewards. All those Stat points were one thing, but this new skill stole away almost all of his attention.

'If I didn't possess the Dash skill when fighting that spider.....'

The only reason why he managed to hunt the boss down was because of 'Dash'. There was no need to mention how important a skill was during a battle. It was not for nothing that a Rune stone, with which a person could learn a brand new skill, cost several hundreds of millions of Won.

Jin-Woo immediately checked this skill called 'Intimidation' out.

'Show me the third reward.'

Tti-ring.

[Skill: Intimidation Lv. 1]

Active skill.

Mana required to activate: 100.

Can render a designated target in a state of fear for one minute by using your powerful aura. Multiple targets can be selected.

Effect 'Fear': All Stats -50%

Although it was only active for a short time, it was still a rare skill that could decrease the opponent's Stats by a substantial amount.

Of course, exactly like other effects, if the opponent's resistance was high enough it would fail to activate. But, if it did work, then Jin-Woo thought that taking care of his enemies, regardless of who it was, would become as easy as pie.

And since it could be used against multiple opponents, the scope of this skill's usefulness seemed limitless, too.

'It's really good, isn't it?'

The rewards were just as good as the potential penalty was as bad.

'Hang on a sec.... Now that I think about it, it's not like that, is it?'

After all, his life was at stake here. And, was that all?

Jin-Woo took a look around him.

He frowned deeply after taking in the gruesome sight.

He had witnessed enough deaths of other Hunters, but even then, he'd never really get used to looking at the corpses of other people.

This was what this quest asked of him, though. But, for a quest that asked for many lives as its completion requirement, the rewards handed out felt rather cheap and not quite enough.

Well, even if it weren't for the quest, he'd still have to fight against Hwang Dong-Seok and his crew in the end, but still.

'And they say, a man's greed knows no bounds....'

Jin-Woo shook his head wryly.

It was then, the cave shook around once more.

RUMBLE.....

The tremor had become stronger than before. It was now the time to get out of the dungeon. But, before he could do that, there was something else he needed to take care of first.

And that happened to be Yu Jin-Ho. Jin-Woo's gaze drifted toward him.

Yu Jin-Ho had been pitifully frozen solid in his spot until then, and flinched rather grandly before hurriedly lowering his gaze to the ground.

'Now, what should I do with this kid....?'

Of course, he wasn't thinking of harming Yu Jin-Ho. There was no need to, nor was there a reason to do so, either.

However, if the events of this place got leaked out to the rest of the world, then there was a good chance that his life would become inconvenienced in a variety of ways.

‘So, I guess I should make sure he doesn’t talk, huh.’

Just as he thought that course of action would be for the best, Yu Jin-Ho rapidly ran towards him, knelt down, and bowed his head.

“Hyung-nim, please spare me!!”

“...”

Suddenly, Jin-Woo felt that the following conversation should unfold a lot more smoothly than his initial expectation.

Yu Jin-Ho was shaking like a wet dog. His complexion was pale, as well. Well, eight people died in the blink of an eye right in front of his face, so that was par for the course, really.

One of the most important tools in dealing with people was this – the ‘fear’. So, Jin-Woo decided to use this situation to his advantage.

“Why should I?”

“Hiiick!!”

Jin-Woo thought that he heard the sound of Yu Jin-Ho’s heart falling to the floor just now.

His guilty conscience that asked, “Was that too much?” only lasted for a second, though.

“If, if you want money, I can speak to my father, and....”

“Who do you think I am?!”

Jin-Woo’s expression crumpled unpleasantly.

Sure, he did grow up impoverished, but that didn’t mean he was corrupt enough to hold a person’s life hostage and extort money that way.

Wouldn’t he be no different from Hwang Dong-Seok if he did that?

“I-I’m truly sorry.”

If it weren’t for Yu Jin-Ho’s current state being absolutely terrified, Jin-Woo would have smacked the back of the kid’s head or something by now. He was holding back only because it looked like Yu Jin-Ho might keel over from a heart attack if he really did that.

Confirming how displeased Jin-Woo’s expression was, Yu Jin-Ho nervously swallowed some dried saliva.

‘Now that I think about it, even back when Hwang Dong-Seok offered him money..... Could he have abandoned all material desires and now only walks the path of bloodshed and murder?!'

Jin-Woo's image inside Yu Jin-Ho's head was being solidified in an even weirder direction.

However, it was too early to draw a conclusion yet.

'If that was the case, then why did hyung-nim extract those magic crystals?'

Not too long ago, Jin-Woo personally went and extracted all those magic stones, even going so far to dig through the spider's entrails.

Sure, it was used in a variety of ways, such as a source of high-density energy, as a raw material in manufacturing magic tools, etc. – but, to a Hunter, a magic crystal was simply another word for 'money'.

Yu Jin-Ho's mind spun at a quicker pace.

'So, that's how it was!'

Those crystals were the 'prize of blood'.

They were the deserved prize he earned through staining his hands with blood, and that was why he didn't mind digging through the stomach of a dead monster.

He'd not show a hint of mercy to those enemies who tried to harm him, but he was also the practitioner of the way of the blood. Meaning, he did not want anything to do with the monetary gain that he hadn't earned with his own hands.

'And I tried to buy his benevolence with money, so of course, he'd get p*ssed off at me....'

In that case, what Yu Jin-Ho needed here wasn't 'father's money', but the 'deserved profit' that could be earned if he managed to walk out of here alive.

When he sneaked a glance, Jin-Woo's expression was still distorted somewhat. Yu Jin-Ho quickly continued on with his words.

"Hyung-nim, if you spare me, then I'll hand over all the profit earned in this dungeon to you."

"Mm?"

As expected, Jin-Woo immediately displayed his interest.

"Please, think about it, hyung-nim. If you monopolise the profit meant for ten people after nine others are killed, others would definitely start questioning you.”

From Yu Jin-Ho’s perspective, Jin-Woo was, without a doubt, a fake registrant. Not only that, a highly-skilled fake registrant who enjoyed murdering people!

Obviously, he’d not want the attention of other folks landing on him.

“So what?”

“On the flip side, if we both walk out of here alive, then according to the contract, all the magic crystals from this dungeon belongs to me. Even if all the other teammates had died, since you don’t get a share in the first place, no one would suspect you.”

Of course, there’s was no way that Yu Jin-Ho would be suspected of foul play here. Well, his father owned one of the country’s top-ranked companies, after all.

The potential profit he’d earn from selling off the magic crystals would be like a pocket change to him.

“This money is something hyung-nim totally deserves. I mean, this is your deserved reward for saving me and getting rid of Hwang Dong-Seok and his lackeys, wouldn’t you agree?”

REPORT

Yu Jin-Ho empathised the words ‘deserved reward’ for some reason.

‘Yeah, for sure.....’

Certainly, that method was the safest way to dispose of the magic crystals.

These crystals no longer had any owners. No matter how avaricious Hwang Dong-Seok was, he still couldn’t take them to his grave. That left just one person, Yu Jin-Ho, as the sole claimant to the rights of these crystals.

However, such a guy was saying that he’d voluntarily offer them up.

Jin-Woo didn’t want anything to do with them if they were to be taken away forcibly, but.....

‘But, there’s no reason for me to refuse things that are willingly entering my pockets, no?’

Without his help, Yu Jin-Ho would either have been killed by now, or get dragged around as a hostage, instead. When looked at that way, the claims of them being ‘deserved reward’ made some sense.

Seeing that Jin-Woo’s expression lighten up, Yu Jin-Ho was now sure of his guesses being on the money.

‘As I thought, the magic crystals are the deserved reward of blood for hunting down Hwang Dong-Seok and his gang, so he’s not going to say no here.’

The meaning of the word ‘deserved’ as imagined by these two men had what you’d call a significant difference, but they had no way of knowing that.

“Okay.”

As soon as Jin-Woo agreed, Yu Jin-Ho’s face brightened up in an instant. Hell, Yu Jin-Ho was even feeling a bit awestruck by how steadfast Jin-Woo was with his personal beliefs.

However, Jin-Woo’s face became emotionless next.

“However, how do I trust you?”

Jin-Woo had recalled his initial goal once more.

He wasn't trying to scare the kid so he could line his pockets in the first place. No, he started this intimidation antics so he could avoid being inconvenienced later down the line.

“How can I betray you, hyung-nim, who saved my neck multiple times already?”

“You could ignore our promise and just yap on to anyone you meet, no?”

Actually, it wouldn't be too big of a hassle if the kid did that. Killing Hwang Dong-Seok and his goons were 100% acts of self-defence, after all.

There were eight of them, not to mention they were fully armed as well. Heck, they even attacked first with a powerful magic spell, too.

Laws had changed ever since the emergence of the Hunters, so Jin-Woo knew that he'd walk away scot-free only with that much justification.

Jin-Woo wanted to let things die down quietly in this manner. And Yu Jin-Ho's help would be needed to facilitate that. There might be a slight 'problem' with how he went about asking for that help, but as far as the end result was concerned, this was the best method available.

“So? Speak up.”

Jin-Woo stared at the other guy with eyes that demanded answers.

Yu Jin-Ho formed a determined, dignified expression.

“I will never do something so cowardly, hyung-nim. Especially for someone who has saved my life.”

‘Hang on a minute....’

Jin-Woo thought that he had seen those determined eyes from somewhere, before realising that they were rather similar to back when Yu Jin-Ho refused the 'suggestion' of Hwang Dong-Seok to become their accomplice not too long ago.

‘This kid.... He's being serious.’

The 'Give and Take'.

When his life was hanging in the balance, Yu Jin-Ho chose to stand with Jin-Woo. He trusted Jin-Woo and tried to go up against eight other Hunters.

That was why Jin-Woo decided to trust Yu Jin-Ho, at least once.

Of course, not right away, and not quite like this.... Maybe, after planting the fear of god into the kid first.

Jin-Woo reached down and picked up Hwang Dong-Seok's discarded shield.

“Hmm. The back of my head is still aching from Hwang Dong-Seok’s sneak hit, you know.”

Jin-Woo pretended to study the shield from this way and that, before powerfully flinging it towards the wall of the cave.

Kaboom!!!

More than half of the shield got buried deep inside that wall.

Cold sweat drops dripped down Yu Jin-Ho’s face as he nervously swallowed his saliva.

“I hope that ‘my dongsaeng’ isn’t going to disappoint me, too.”

“B-b-but, of course, hyung-nim.”

It happened then; the dungeon began shaking much harder this time.

RUMMMMMBBLLLEEE....

Their time was clearly running out. Jin-Woo never held any thoughts of harming Yu Jin-Ho from the get-go, so he figured that this much would be enough.

So, he ordered Yu Jin-Ho.

“Collect all the magic crystals. We’re leaving.”

“Thank you very much, hyung-nim!!”

Yu Jin-Ho stood back up and bowed his waist 90 degrees. A smile found its way back onto his face, too. While Yu Jin-Ho went around to fill up the bag, Jin-Woo began rummaging through Hwang Dong-Seok’s pockets.

‘I gotta get paid what’s mine, too.’

He was promised 2 million Won for the day’s work. And he couldn’t afford to let a single cent slip by.

Hwang Dong-Seok’s wallet was filled with lots of fifty thousand Won bills. When he counted, there were 45 of them. Just over two million, in other words.

The bearded man promised to pay in cash as soon as the raid was over, so he must’ve had them ready, just in case. Because, well, he wouldn’t have been able to cut the tail all the time.

“Thanks for the pay.”

Jin-Woo said the words of thanks to no one in particular and left the boss room first.

Yu Jin-Ho was almost finished packing up the magic crystals, but then, belatedly noticed that Jin-Woo had disappeared, and hurriedly began searching for him.

“H-hyung-nim?”

All he found were the rapidly-cooling corpses of the Hunters that lost their lives to Jin-Woo.

“Hiick!!”

Yu Jin-Ho and his deathly-pale complexion hurriedly chased after Jin-Woo as if he was scared of being alone.

The agent from the Association’s Investigation Department swiftly arrived at the location of the Gate.

The procedure to follow when there were casualties during a raid was rather simple. The remaining survivors only had to report the matter to the Association and let the investigators do their job. That was all.

The investigator for today was a strict-looking aunty.

“And your names are?”

“It’s Seong Jin-Woo.”

“My name is Yu Jin-Ho, ma’am.”

Hunters dying inside dungeons happened pretty much every single day so this procedure was more like a formality at this point. To be more precise, it was now more to do with record keeping, actually.

That was, if there were nothing to be suspicious about.

“...So, every rank C Hunter in the raid team was killed, yet how did one rank D and one rank E manage to escape unhurt?”

The investigator questioned the duo while adjusting her glasses. Her glaring eyes narrowed to a slit.

‘Now normally, it’d be the weakest Hunter in the team to die first, most of the time. Yet...’

She intensely scrutinised the two men before discovering something particular and raised her voice.

“Oh my gosh!!”

Her eyes began sparkling as she approached closer.

“Isn’t this the longsword ‘Kalion’ that’s been launched recently by the Maya Company? Oh my gosh, isn’t this one of the Royal Series shields crafted by the one and only master craftsman Gredos?”

Yu Jin-Ho’s face brightened immediately.

“You seemed to be well versed in weapons, ma’am!”

“Eii, it’s nothing to feel proud about, really. No, it’s only on the level of browsing through the catalogues every now and then. Ohohohohoho!”

The price of the longsword was around ₩700,000,000, while the shield was around ₩500,000,000. (TL: $620,000 and $443,000, respectively.)

These powerful armaments were crafted with magic crystals costing well over hundreds of millions of Won, as well as other expensive materials, and they were capable of boosting the abilities of a rank D Hunter past that of a rank C.

With this revelation, the agent began imagining the events that had taken place inside the dungeon.

‘With these types of armaments....’

A lone rank D Hunter managing to hunt down the boss monster seemed rather feasible now, even when considering that all the rank C Hunters had been annihilated along the way.

‘And that rank E probably hid in a corner somewhere and barely saved his life.’

Of course, the reality was opposite of that, but....

In any case, she came to a conclusion.

The odds of a man with enough financial wherewithal to purchase such armaments stabbing his comrades in the back for a handful of magic crystals were low at best.

On top of that, it was also impossible for a rank E to do anything to several rank C Hunters too, so the deaths of Hwang Dong-Seok and seven others could only be chalked up to an unfortunate accident.

“I understand what happened now.”

The investigator closed the case file with a satisfied face.

“The investigation will conclude with this, so you may go home now. I’m sure it had been a difficult day so far, so thank you for taking the time out to aid us with the investigation.”

“Thank you for your hard work.”

Jin-Woo said goodbyes on behalf of both men.

The investigator and her car left just as quickly as they had arrived.

“You also worked hard, hyung-nim.”

Yu Jin-Ho bent his waist 90 degrees once more. Even after they had exited the Gate, Yu Jin-Ho’s overly polite attitude didn’t change.

He must’ve been pretty darn scared, even now.

Jin-Woo inwardly clicked his tongue.

“Yeah, you too.”

“Well, I haven’t done much anyway. You did most of the work, hyung-nim. Oh, here are your magic crystals.”

Yu Jin-Ho very courteously handed the bag over to Jin-Woo with two hands. And indeed, the bag was filled to the brim with magic crystals.

The highest price a magic crystal from a rank C Gate could fetch was around ten million Won. Even the smallest ones fetched several millions.

Jin-Woo’s eyes scanned the number of crystals and he inwardly cried out in elation.

‘Just how much will these....?’

He tried so hard to suppress a grin from breaking out on his face.

It was then, a drop of water suddenly fell inside the bag.

Splash, splosh.

Jin-Woo raised his head.

They were raindrops falling from the sky that had been gradually getting darker as the afternoon rolled by.

‘It was a good thing... sending her off with an umbrella.’

Jin-Woo formed a subtle smile while thinking about his little sister.

Later in the evening.

Jin-Woo summoned his Status Window as soon as he arrived back home.

“Stats!!”

[Stats]

Strength: 53

Stamina: 30

Agility: 38

Intelligence: 30

Perception: 32

The ten points he got as a reward from the emergency quest still remained, waiting. His entire body was itching from the desire to spend them.

If he wanted to earn them through Daily Quests, then he'd have to spend the next three days and still had to find one more point from somewhere, and if he wanted to earn them through levelling up, then he had to raise it by two.

'The priority is with Agility, then Perception next.'

He spent 7 points on Agility, and the rest 3 on Perception.

[Stats]

Strength: 53

Stamina: 30

Agility: 45

Intelligence: 30

Perception: 35

(Available points to distribute: 0)

"Okay."

His Stat values looked more even now.

Agility had almost caught up with Strength, and Perception was already at 35. Once Agility's values got closer to Strength, he was planning to increase Stamina next.

Leaving alone the Stat of Intelligence and its unknown uses, for the time being, he wanted to raise all of his other Stats as uniformly as possible.

"Should I check out today's results?"

Name: Seong Jin-Woo

Level: 21

Class: None

Title: Slaughterer of Wolves

HP: 2600

MP: 390

Tiredness: 0

[Stat]

Strength: 53

Stamina: 30

Agility: 45

Intelligence: 30

Perception: 35

(Available points to distribute: 0)

[Skills]

Passive skills:

- (Unknown) Lv. Max
- Tenacity Lv. 1

Active skills:

- Dash Lv. 1
- Intimidation Lv. 1

The level that had risen up by three and the new skill ‘Intimidation’ caught his attention the most. And his Stats also had received a healthy boost from the ten extra points.

These alone would qualify today’s earning as quite spectacular, but there were more, weren’t there?

‘Two million Won I got for today’s work, and....’

And, all those magic crystals filling up the bag, as well.

Jin-Woo counted the number of the crystals once more.

‘11 from the spider, and 38 from Hwang Dong-Seok and his lackeys.’

In total, 49 of them!

If he asked five million for each, he’d still earn well over 200 million Won.

“200 mil from a single day’s hunt!!”

The profit that should’ve been shared by ten people – no, nine, had been swallowed up by him, so the amount had no choice but to balloon up. This was the same thing as the unexpected kiss of lady luck landing squarely on his cheeks.

‘All I have to do now is to sell these things.’

Selling magic crystals wasn’t difficult. Since the demand was so high, when he put them up for sale, they would all sell out pretty quickly.

The question was, though, where he should sell these.

There were several cases of a direct trading between individuals, and Guilds and corporations also bought them in large quantities, as well.

For his case, since there were so many of them, he figured that it’d be for the better to seek out the help of professionals, rather than try his hands on dealing with individuals or sell them online.

‘Can’t I just sell them to a store or something?’

It’d be so much more convenient for him if the Store bought his crystals at their retail value, as it would with the japtem.

While thinking this and that, Jin-Woo pushed the bag full of magic crystals to the corner of the room.

And then, he abruptly recalled one last fruit of today’s labour.

‘Right, the System said that I can start buying stuff from the Store.’

Jin-Woo immediately summoned the Store.

Although it wasn’t much, all the Gold he had saved up from the Hapjeong Station’s instant dungeon still waited for their turn inside his Inventory until now.

“Buy.”

Tti-ring.

Accompanied by the familiar beep, the list of purchasable items popped up in his view, and they continued to do so quite literally without an end.

Everything from cheap potions and trinkets, all the way up to absurdly expensive defensive items and eye-catching weapons could be found here. There were so, so many items that could be bought with Gold.

It was pretty obvious, but the more expensive an item was, the better its ‘options’ got. One of the best items available even cost as much as 10 billion

Gold.

“Whoa..... 10 billion, is it?”

His current Gold was just over 112 thousand. It was way too short to buy anything truly useful. But, there was no need for him to fret here.

Why? Because, he had plenty of time on hand.

‘I can buy any of these, as long as I have enough Gold, right?’

Jin-Woo hummed to himself and continued to browse through the list of really expensive items.

There was one more reason to seek out instant dungeons now.

Already, he couldn't wait to receive the prize of the Daily Quest for tomorrow, the random box.

REPORT

Part 11. Arrangement

Three days passed by since the incident of the C-ranked Gate.

Jin-Ah came home early from school as it was Saturday today. As soon as entering the apartment, she began sniffing the air and hurriedly removed her shoes.

“Oppa? What’s going on here? Did you order fried chicken?”

“Yeah, I ordered some takeaway to make sure it’d get here just in time for you.”

“Wow, really?!”

Jin-Woo beckoned her while sitting by the dining table, causing Jin-Ah’s eyes to open wider. She immediately ran towards him.

“Hiya~, what’s going on here? And you’re a serial Scrooge, too. Did something good happen lately?”

“Hey now. Put down your schoolbag first, will you? Why is a girl so hot-headed?”

“It’s fine. This bag ain’t that heavy, you know.”

And she was complaining not too long ago about her bag being too heavy and that she didn’t want to carry an umbrella around.... Jin-Woo tsk, tsked, but couldn’t really hide the smile creeping up on his face.

‘Asking me if there was anything good happening lately?’

Of course, there was.

The family’s bank balance had swelled up from 800 thousand Won all the way to ₩180,300,000 earlier today. (TL: Just under $160,000)

180 million was from the sale of the magic crystals, and 500 grand was used for the month’s rent.

Still, 180 million!

Just one raid and he was able to get his hands on an absurd amount of money, totalling 180 million.

He had been one for a while now, but this was the first time he felt like a real Hunter. Well, this was the era where a casual mention of Hunters instantly brought up the images of wealth, so that couldn't be helped.

Also, the face of the employee at the magic crystal exchange when Jin-Woo went there with his stash was still so vivid in his memories, too.

“D-did you hunt all these monsters?!”

“Things happened, and so, it’s something like that.”

“Holy moly.... How incredible.”

49 C-rank magic crystals.

The initial estimated price for the whole lot was just over 300 million Won.

But who knew that taxation would be so heartless?

“I gotta pay 40% as tax?!”

“Yes. When an individual is selling the crystals, 40% is taken as tax. However, when a Guild is selling them, it’s only 10%.”

“Is there a reason why there’s a reduction in tax for the Guilds?”

“Well, unlike freelancers and their teams, Guilds must cooperate without question when they are ordered to mobilise, you see.”

Indeed, when he searched through his memories, he remembered hearing about both the agents from the Monitoring Division of the Association and the White Tiger Guild coming to the location of the dual dungeon incident.

Because they were receiving special treatments, Guilds had to cooperate with the government and the Association when they asked for help.

The high tax rates caused Jin-Woo to ponder his choices for a little bit.

‘Should I just hold onto the crystals and sell them off after I enter a Guild?’

But, he made up his mind soon afterwards. By the time he entered a Guild and started working for them, the main objects of conquest would be Gates rated A and B. The magic crystals coming out from those Gates would incomparably be more valuable than those from a Gate ranked C.

And right now, he needed every cent he could get his hands.

‘Besides, I can’t just sign on with any ol’ Guild out there just to decrease tax, now can I?’

“Okay, fine. I will sell them.”

That's how he got his hands on 180 million.

Just as Jin-Ah had implied with her question, the chicken-and-beer meal was to celebrate the big earnings sitting pretty in the family bank account right at this moment.

“Thank you for this meal.”

Jin-Ah sneakily reached towards the beer can, but then, Jin-Woo's finger powerfully flicked her forehead.

“Ouch!!”

“For you, this.”

He then placed a can of cola in front of her.

“Hiing.... I was only joking, you know....”

Not minding Jin-Ah and her hands busy rubbing her reddened forehead, Jin-Woo popped the lid open on the refreshingly cold can of beer and poured the contents down his throat.

But then, this happened.

Tti-ring.

Jin-Woo couldn't help but react nervously when he heard the familiar beep.

‘Why a System message, all of a sudden?’

[Harmful substances have been detected.]

[Effects of ‘Buff: Detox’ will now commence.]

[3, 2, 1.... Detoxification has been completed.]

‘You detoxed harmful substances? Are you talking about alcohol?’

Jin-Woo drank up the remaining beer in the can, and popped open another just to make sure.

Gulp, gulp.

[Harmful substances have been detected.]

[Effects of ‘Buff: Detox’ will now commence.]

[3, 2, 1.... Detoxification has been completed.]

And the exact same messages appeared again.

He had drank up two cans of beer in one go, but he couldn't feel one hint of drunkenness come over.

Whatever this 'Buff' thing was, it was definitely working as intended.

'What's this?'

Jin-Woo tilted his head.

He had yet to meet a single Hunter capable of throwing Buffs around. Most of the Hunters possessing such specialised skill sets all worked for large Guilds.

As he was affiliated with the Association, there hadn't been a single opportunity for him to meet one so far.

'Even if someone sneaked a Buff on me, surely the System would've notified me of it.'

In that case, there could only be two possibilities.

Either he received the Buff while he was unconscious, or got it before the System was active.

Personally, he was more inclined towards the latter.

"Oppa? What's wrong? Is it indigestion? You should've been more careful, you know."

When Jin-Woo's expression became serious, Jin-Ah asked him with a worried voice.

"Nah, it's just that I remembered something pretty urgent, that's all. Eat without me while I take care of this, okay?"

Jin-Woo headed back into his room. He then began rummaging through every nook and cranny of his memories, trying to figure out if he had missed anything, even if it was small.

'Ah.'

Suddenly, he recalled something.

'Every quest has rewards, even penalty quests. But, there was one quest that I never got around to confirming the rewards, no?'

Jin-Woo hurriedly opened the mailbox.

At the time, he had no clue what the System was nor what rewards could mean, so glossed over them, but he definitely remembered reading the message that said he had met the conditions to clear the quest.

His heart began beating faster and faster.

Jin-Woo eventually discovered the messages sitting right at the bottom of the mailbox.

[Congratulations on becoming a ‘Player’.] (read)

Jin-Woo’s voice trembled as he spoke softly.

“Confirm.”

Tti-ring.

[This System will support the growth of the ‘Player.’]

[Your rewards have been delivered.]

As he thought.

There was the mention of rewards.

The voice he heard back inside the underground temple clearly said these words.

[Completion requirements for the ‘Secret Quest: the Courage of the Powerless’ has been met.]

A secret quest or not, it was still a quest, wasn’t it?

However, he hadn’t checked what kind of rewards he had received until now. Back then, he thought that it was all a hallucination, didn’t he?

[...will result in potential penalties.]

[Your rewards have been delivered.]

[Would you like to confirm your rewards?] (Y/N)

‘Yes.’

Tti-ring.

[Rewards for the ‘Secret Quest: the Courage of the Powerless’]

The blessings from the Grand Sorcerer, Kandiaru

The Grand Sorcerer Kandiaru has been deeply moved by your courage, and has gifted you with a special spell. When accompanied by the blessings of Kandiaru, you’ll get to enjoy a healthy and fulfilling life every day.

[“Let there be a bright future laying in wait for the challenger.”]

- One-time effect ‘Will to Recover’: All your damaged body parts will be recovered to their original state.

- Continuous effect 'Good Health and Long Life': You'll be immune to all types of diseases, poisonous substances, as well as all forms of status debuffs. During sleep, your recovery rate will increase exponentially.

Only now puzzle pieces fell to their places.

'That's why my leg was....'

It was all due to the quest reward that his sliced-off leg had reverted back to how it was before. Same thing for why he couldn't get drunk from a couple of cans of beer.

'Hang on. I'm immune to all types of poison, too?'

Jin-Woo's eyes abruptly shot open real wide.

If that was the case, then could it be....?

Jin-Woo hurriedly extracted a certain item out from his Inventory.

[Item: Poison Sac of Kasaka]

Rarity: A

Type: Medicine

A pouch containing the refined poison of the Kasaka. Can be found very rarely when hunting Kasakas. Drinking this poison will give you strong skin, but the toxicity will permanently damage your muscles.

Effect 'The Iron Scales of Kasaka': 20% reduction in physical damage.

Side effect 'Damaged Muscles': Strength -35

'My muscles are supposed to get damaged because of the toxin, but wouldn't this detox buff resist that?'

There was only one way to find out. Jin-Woo squeezed his eyes shut and drank the liquid contained within the pouch.

Gulp, gulp.

Sticky, yucky liquid slid down his throat.

The taste was oily and terrible, but he endured it.

'And they say what's good for you usually tastes bitter....'

When he finished drinking all of the poisoned liquid, messages popped up in his view.

[Harmful substances have been detected.]

[Effects of 'Buff: Detox' will now commence.]

[3, 2, 1.... Detoxification has been completed.]

[Side effect 'Damaged Muscles' has been nullified.]

"Yes!!"

Jin-Woo clenched his fists real tightly.

Still, he couldn't celebrate just yet so he quickly summoned his Status Window.

[Stats]

Strength: 53

Stamina: 30

Agility: 53

Intelligence: 30

Perception: 36

(Available points to distribute: 0)

Reduction in physical damage: 20%

As he expected, there was no decrease in his Strength Stat.

It still remained as 53 points, and then, he saw the new Stat called 'Reduction in physical damage', too

Sure, it might be limited in the category, but it still was a marvellous Stat that reduced all physical damage by 20%.

"Nice!!"

Just as Jin-Woo began celebrating the emergence of this new Stat, Jin-Ah called out to him from the living room.

"Oppa? You know a guy called Yu Jin-Ho? He's looking for you."

"No way, he can't be the same Yu Jin-Ho...."

Jin-Woo quickly went to the living room and snatched the phone's receiver off his little sister.

"Hello?"

- "Hyung-nim, it's me. Yu Jin-Ho."

Really now?

The voice coming from the other side sounded way too familiar.

"....How did you get this number?"

- “There was a person I know working for the Association, you see. You didn’t want to answer your smartphone, so I had no choice but to call you at home like this.”

“Details only.”

- “Ahh! Oops, my bad, hyung-nim. But, it’s not something we can discuss over the phone... May we meet up somewhere so I can tell you in person?”

Jin-Woo tilted his head slightly.

‘He still wants to meet me after going through such an ordeal?’

- “Hyung-nim, I really, really gotta ask you for this favour. Please.”

What a weird kid this guy was.

Jin-Woo eventually agreed to spare one hour after Yu Jin-Ho earnestly pleaded with him.

The meeting place was a franchise cafe located not too far from Jin-Woo’s home.

Even though it was a weekday, there were quite a few people inside the cafe, perhaps because they chose to meet right after the lunch hour.

“Hyung-nim, over here!”

Yu Jin-Ho greeted him rather enthusiastically.

Before entering the cafe, Jin-Woo focused his Perception to the max but he couldn’t sense any other Hunters inside the shop.

At the bare minimum, this meeting wasn’t for the purpose of revenge, it seemed. Although Jin-Woo couldn’t really remember doing anything that warranted such an ill will towards him and requiring a swift retribution.

Jin-Woo sat down on the other side of the table.

“Didn’t think we’d meet again.”

There was a half-eaten ice cream on top of the table belonging to Yu Jin-Ho.

Yu Jin-Ho spoke as he stood up.

“What would you like to order? Should I go and get you some coffee?”

“No, it’s fine.”

Yu Jin-Ho looked a bit crestfallen for some reason as he sat back down.

Jin-Woo opened his mouth first.

“So, what do you want?”

It was then.

“I’m telling you, this guy did it for real back then! It was so crazy, really!!”

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to his side.

The table next to his was occupied by three burly students with rather thuggish faces hailing from some local athletic club or the other, and they were busy chatting to three girls.

Jin-Woo tried to get back to his own conversation.

“As I was saying, what do you.....”

“And when did I ever do that?! Will you listen to this b*stard, busy inventing rubbish because we’re in front of girls?!”

“...Want from me....”

“But, you said it, didn’t you?! Wow, should I show you the pics, man? Should I like, release the evidence to the rest of the world or something?!”

The voices of the male students got louder and louder, and the laughter of the girls was just as loud as well.

“.....”

When the noise became too loud to carry on his own conversation, Jin-Woo was left with no choice but to stand up and silently walk over to the table next to his.

The eyes of the male students all focused on Jin-Woo.

“Will you please keep it down? There are other people in here, too.”

One of the male students scratched the back of his head and pretended to apologise a couple of times.

“Yes, yes. We’ll keep it down. Very sorry about this.”

Girls began giggling hoarsely from that sight.

“.....”

Jin-Woo quietly stared at them for a while, before turning around. But when he did, something flew in and tapped him in the back of his head. A rolled-up paper serviette fell to the floor.

“Puhahahahaha!”

“Kekeke!!”

“Hey, you shouldn’t do that.”

Male students began guffawing real hard, while girls pretended to scold the boys, even though mocking grins formed on their faces.

Witnessing this scene, Yu Jin-Ho’s expression gradually froze up.

“Hyu.... Hyung-nim....”

Jin-Woo picked up one of the unused spoons next to Yu Jin-Woo’s ice cream and walked over to the counter.

“Ohh, look, look. He’s going to tell on his mommy.”

“Mommy, they are making noise. Stop them ple~ase. Fuhut!”

In the meantime, those kids kept running their mouths off.

Jin-Woo asked the nervous-looking female employee behind the counter with a deadpan face.

“How much for this spoon?”

“M-my apologies, dear customer. We don’t sell spoons separately, you see....”

“It’s not more than ten thousand Won, yes?”

“Pardon? Ah, uh, uhm, I guess so.....?”

Jin-Woo placed a ten thousand Won bill on the counter and turned around.

“Dear customer? E, excuse me, customer?”

Jin-Woo ignored the calls of the female employee and headed straight to the table where the male students from some athletic club were.

When they noticed that Jin-Woo was displaying a suspicious behaviour, the three students slowly stood up from their seats.

“What you want now? What?”

The attention of everyone inside the cafe was now focused on this table.

Jin-Woo showed the students his spoon.

‘.....?’

‘.....??’

Just as question marks floated on the expressions of these hapless kids, Jin-Woo began squashing the spoon in his hand. And the poor thing easily lost its shape right in front of their eyes.

The complexions of the male students grew paler and paler.

Jin-Woo then placed the 'spoon' on their table.

But, what was left there could no longer be called a spoon anymore.

No, it was just a piece of folded metal, roughly shaped like a ball.

“Heok!”

The male students nervously swallowed their saliva.

‘That, that’s not a human’s strength.’

‘This guy, he’s a H-Hunter.’

The male students signalled to each other before the kid who threw the serviette at him bowed and apologised for real.

“I-I’m really sorry.”

The rest of his friends then started apologising as well.

“I’m sorry.”

“It was our fault. Forgive us.”

The male students bowed several times with pale complexions, before making their hasty retreat from the cafe while dragging the girls out as well.

“Hooray-!!”

The customers surrounding that noisy table sent gazes filled with appreciation towards Jin-Woo.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo returned to his seat and settled back down.

Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes sparkled as he spoke up.

“As expected of you, hyung-nim!”

“Enough.”

Jin-Woo got back on topic at hand.

“Why did you ask me for a meeting?”

“Well, that.... Hyung-nim. I gave this matter a lot of thought. I mean, lots and lots of thought, you know? But, I think I really, seriously, must ask you.”

Jin-Woo tilted his head.

“What are you talking about now?”

“Hyung-nim, actually....”

Yu Jin-Ho's face reddened as if he was embarrassed about something, before he summoned up his courage and spoke up.

“Actually, I was thinking of forming my own tea....”

Jin-Woo didn't even hesitate one second and replied.

“I'm not interested.”

REPORT

Part 1. Transaction

Yu Jin-Ho's expression became dumbfounded.

“Already, hyung-nim?!”

“I don't need to hear the rest to figure it out.”

Jin-Woo was quite decisive in saying no.

This wasn't because he didn't like Yu Jin-Ho or something like that.

Although he seemed a bit off in the head, his attitude remained courteous and he came across as someone who'd always keep his word. He was quite different from other scions of 'chaebols' often seen in mass media. (TL: 'chaebols': Wealthy owners/families of corporations)

However, Jin-Woo was not interested in becoming a playmate of the son of a wealthy family during the boy's 'Hunter' phase.

“If there's nothing else, I'm leaving.”

“Hyu, hyung-nim!!”

Just as Jin-Woo got up to leave, Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly reached out and held onto him.

“Hyung-nim, only for 20! No, wait, please partner up with me for the next 19 times!!”

“For what? To clear dungeons?”

“Yes!! I'll definitely compensate you properly!!”

Yu Jin-Ho's voice sounded rather desperate.

Jin-Woo tilted his head slightly.

There were two reasons why people became Hunters. Either it was for money, or for their sense of duty.

But, Yu Jin-Ho didn't belong to either camp. Maybe, it was possible that he thought of being a Hunter was a slightly more dangerous form of extreme sports or some such.

That was what Jin-Woo had been believing until now.

True, he was taken aback slightly when the kid declared that he wanted to form his own private raid team, even after going through that ordeal the last time.

‘There are all sorts of people in this world, that’s for sure.’

It wouldn’t be too strange to find a scion of a wealthy family who had become numb to the safe environment he had grown up in. However, Yu Jin-Ho’s expression seemed far too serious and determined at the moment for that kind of an explanation.

‘Could there be a different reason?’

Rather than the promise of ‘proper compensation’, Jin-Woo’s curiosity was being tugged by the idea of raiding dungeons ‘19’ more times.

Jin-Woo’s brain quickly kicked into gear.

‘Hang on.... Let’s say that last time was his first raid. And when he completes 19 more raids, then....’

Could this kid be aiming for.....?

It didn’t take long for Jin-Woo to realise the truth. His expression became dumbfounded, instead.

“You, are you perhaps thinking of getting the Guild Master licence?”

“That’s correct, hyung-nim!!”

What a smart decision it was not to order coffee.

Otherwise, he might have sprayed the bitter liquid all over the table by now while trying to drink it.

“You wanna become a Guild Master?!”

“Well, uh, the story’s a bit complicated there, hyung-nim.”

Yu Jin-Ho’s face reddened considerably compared to before as he spoke.

“Hyung-nim. Please listen to my story.”

“....”

Jin-Woo was in a slight dilemma, wondering what he should do now, but in the end, he was defeated by his curiosity, so he sat back down.

“Fine, I’ll listen.”

Well, the promised hour had not ended yet, so there was that, too. It wouldn’t be a problem to listen to the kid’s story anyways.

Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly parked his butt back down as well.

“As you’ve correctly guessed, I want to acquire the Guild Master licence.”

Acquiring that licence was not that difficult, actually. You had to be a Hunter who participated in at least 20 raids. As long as you met this base requirement, all you had to do was to pass a written test and you’d get the licence.

Of course, nobody would join the Guild created by a rubbish Hunter, and if a Guild failed to maintain the minimum number of members, it’d be disbanded as well.

Yu Jin-Ho continued on.

“A Guild created by Yujin Construction?”

“Yes.”

Yujin Construction was one of the biggest corporations in South Korea.

It had expanded its business well beyond the fields of construction and into other sectors and had been making a killing there. Jin-Woo had heard that recently, they reaped huge profit after jumping into the Hunter-related businesses as well.

‘And they want to form a Guild of their own?’

When Jin-Woo displayed a hint of interest, Yu Jin-Ho became excited and added more explanations.

“He’d scout strong Hunters and build a massive Guild, and place all our Hunter-related business interests under it. That’s his plan.”

If a corporation wished to partake in Hunter-related businesses, then it was a necessity to work together with a Guild. Well, you’d need the strength of a large Guild if you ever wanted to get your hands on magic crystals and remains of the monsters, or treasures such as mana stones found in Gates ranked A or B.

“And so, you wish to become a self-sustaining entity. Is that it?”

“That is absolutely correct, hyung-nim!”

With the financial wherewithal of Yujin Construction, creating a Guild wouldn’t even pose a problem. No, the real issue would be with just who gets to run it.

“My father is thinking of hiring an S-ranked Hunter as the Guild Master and placing my older brother as the Vice-Master, and run the Guild that way, but....”

Jin-Woo immediately caught onto what Yu Jin-Woo was implying here. If things were done that way, then a source of worry would be created along the way.

The power of authority the Guild Master wielded was simply far too great. Even if it was the Vice-Master who had hired the Master, in case of a conflict arising between the two, there was a very good chance that the latter would end up completely overtaking the entire Guild.

In order to prevent that, there was only one way. All you had to do was to hire a Master who'd never ever betray the one who hired him or her.

For instance, brothers – or, even a son.

And the chairman of Yujin Construction, Yu Myung-Hwan, had a son called Yu Jin-Ho.

“However, my older brother’s business experience is far too good for me to simply take over the position of the Guild Master. It was his idea to enter the field of Hunter-related business, you see. We gained huge profit in that sector because of him.”

His older brother had become a successful entrepreneur by the age of 31. Compared to him, Yu Jin-Ho was only a 22-year old university student, even if he possessed a unique plus point of being a rank D Hunter.

Naturally, the chairman was thinking of entrusting the Guild over to the eldest son.

The eldest couldn't become a Master since he was not a Hunter, but he still knew a lot about the Hunter-related businesses, and also managed to achieve great success in the sector, too.

Meaning, even if there was an element of a risk, the chairman would still take the chance.

“And you wish to change your father’s mind by acquiring the Master licence, yeah?”

“That’s right, hyung-nim.”

And so, Jin-Woo figured out why Yu Jin-Ho was here, trying desperately to reel him in.

Even if the kid hired a high-ranked Hunter and acquired the licence that way, it'd be no different from buying it with cash. However, what if the kid succeeded in 20 raids with low-ranked Hunters, such as Jin-Woo, and acquired the licence that way?

Yu Jin-Ho would be able to persuade his father.

Simply him being able to lead a group of Hunters would be enough to get his approval. That was what Yu Jin-Ho was counting on.

If Yu Jin-Ho became the Guild Master, they would get an S rank as the Vice-Master and scout all the talented Hunters.

Well, others would only feel secure and join them if one or both Master and Vice-Master spots were filled by someone with powerful abilities.

If this plan were to come to fruition, then completing those 20 raids was an absolute must.

“Hyung-nim, please help me! I have no one but you, hyung-nim!”

Yu Jin-Ho bowed his head.

If it weren't for Jin-Woo, the kid would've died during his very first raid. By the giant spider, or at the hands of Hwang Dong-Seok. Two times.

Yu Jin-Ho needed a trustworthy ally here.

‘I can definitely trust hyung-nim.’

He might be a cold-hearted person who would not bat an eyelid when killing his enemies, but he also happened to be a righteous man who'd not treat lightly the lives of those weaker than him, and just as important, he didn't care about getting his hands on ill-gotten gains, as well.

Jin-Woo was the perfect candidate.

However, Jin-Woo didn't need Yu Jin-Ho. That was why he asked the kid.

“What would I get in return, then?”

Yu Jin-Ho raised his head, his expression one of joy, as he quickly produced an envelope he had prepared earlier on. And a blueprint of a building came out from there. Jin-Woo took a look at it.

“This is the Guild office building we're constructing at the moment. The expected retail price of the building is around ₩30 billion, but it'll definitely rise up in the future.”

Although the Association was doing their best to manage them, there would always be that fear of monsters escaping from the dungeons. That was why the land price near the Association headquarters or around large Guilds always rose up higher as time went by.

Well, there would be no more precious wealth than one's own life, after all.

Even if it was a small Guild, being near one almost guaranteed your safety. However, if it was a building occupied by a large Guild?

There was no need to mention it.

“If I become the Master, then for exactly one year, I’ll use it until the Guild has been stabilised. And then, hand over the deeds to you, hyung-nim. Of course, I’ll make sure all the paperwork are in order so there wouldn’t be any unnecessary complications later down the line.”

A 30 billion building, for raiding rank C Gates 19 more times....

Jin-Woo smirked slightly.

“As long as you become the Master, it’ll all be worth it, is that right?”

“That’s correct, hyung-nim.”

On that fateful day, Yu Jin-Ho got to learn the valuable lesson of “Anything goes inside a dungeon.”

Hiring any ol’ Hunters could lead to him getting killed.

On the flip side, hiring famous Hunters would mean Yu Jin-Ho would lose the ability to persuade his father.

However, Jin-Woo was different.

He was nominally a rank E Hunter, yet he was strong enough to solo a C-ranked boss, as well as eight C-ranked Hunters without getting hurt.

‘Hyung-nim could be at least a B-ranked.... Or, someone far stronger than that.’

With Jin-Woo was around, raiding 19 C-rank Gates would not pose any problems at all.

So, yes – if he could become the Guild Master, 30 billion sounded rather cheap in comparison.

The only thing remaining was Jin-Woo agreeing to do so.

‘He wouldn’t say no with this sort of terms on offer, right?’

Yu Jin-Ho nervously studied Jin-Woo’s reactions.

‘What should I do?’

In the meantime, Jin-Woo was in a serious dilemma.

30 billion Won.

That was a huge amount of money.

If one considered the fact that the winning prize of the local lottery was 1.5 billion Won, he'd have to get lucky 20 times in a row to earn that amount.

Not only that, the value of the building would only continue to rise up.

If it were any other normal Hunter, they would jump in with both feet and sign up right away – that's how tempting this offer was.

However, Jin-Woo was as far removed from being normal as anyone could ever hope to get.

The one and only under the heavens; he was the only Hunter who could grow stronger.

If he continued on with quests and levelled up over and over again, he'd reach the S rank sooner or later, or even something surpassing that.

'If I can surpass the S rank, then 30 billion would be nothing.'

The contract fee for S rank Hunters went for several dozen billions already.

No matter how famous a celebrity or a sports star was, they would never even come close to the worth of an S-ranked Hunter.

This was the era where the number of high-ranked Hunters signified the strength of a nation. As a result, the treatment S ranks received exceeded one's imaginations.

Considering that, what Jin-Woo needed to prioritise here was not money, but his growth.

And in order to grow, it'd be more convenient to be alone.

'Yeah, it'd be better to minimise the risks of unexpected events.'

If he hunted along with other people, the experience points received could decrease too, and because of all those eyes watching him, making a move would become rather cumbersome as well.

Not to forget, in order to avoid anything troublesome happening down the line, he had to threaten Yu Jin-Ho back then, something he didn't want to do in the first place.

And finally, he'd have to match his schedule to that of the assault team from now on. The efficiency of his growth would only decrease, one way or the other.

'I can always make money later on.'

Although it was unfortunate, he had to decline this offer. Just as he thought like this....

'Hang on a sec.'

Suddenly, he came up with a pretty good way to catch two birds called money and growth with a single stone.

'If it's in this manner....'

When he finally raised his head, he spotted Yu Jin-Ho and his nervous face. Jin-Woo slowly opened his mouth.

"I only have one condition."

Yu Jin-Ho's expression brightened up instantly.

"Whatever it is, please tell me, hyung-nim!!

'I wonder, would you be able to smile even after I told you what it is?'

Jin-Woo smiled inwardly and spoke up.

"You and I. Only two of us will enter the dungeons."

"Pardon?!"

Yu Jin-Ho gasped out in pure shock.

"Hyu-hyung-nim.... If I didn't make a mistake here, then.... Are you saying that hyung-nim and I, just us two, will clear C-ranked Gates? Only us two?"

"You didn't make a mistake, then."

Yu Jin-Ho's face was drained of all colour, just then.

REPORT

Sure, Jin-Woo was able to defeat the spider boss all by himself, so he'd be able to do something similar to other bosses as well.

But, when imagining only the two of them against the horde of monsters, just like back in that dungeon's entrance with those insects, Yu Jin-Woo suddenly found himself unable to breathe.

“.....”

Yu Jin-Ho became completely speechless, while Jin-Woo formed an expression that said, “I knew it.”

‘However, this is the best way.’

...The best, in order to catch both birds.

It'd be very hard to enter any freelancer-run raid teams as a Hunter ranked E. From the very first day he made up his mind to start making money in this profession, he was constantly reminded of this harsh reality.

Either he had to give up entering dungeons with his qualifications, or he had to create his own raid team. However, this kid was volunteering to form one for him. Wasn't this a great opportunity, in other words?

“B-b-but, hyung-nim! You need at least ten people if we want to enter a C-ra.....”

“I'm pretty sure you'd find plenty of willing people when you say you'd pay them just for showing up to fill up the head count.”

Time to put to good use what he had learned from Hwang Dong-Seok, then.

If there were Hunters who didn't want to fight with their lives on the line, but were in urgent need of cash, they would surely jump in with both feet at this golden opportunity.

Yu Jin-Ho's expression became one of a scared cat, though.

“Wait.... Surely, you are not suggesting that us two will kill every single monster inside a dungeon, all the way up to the boss, are you?”

...In truth, it'd be only one person doing that, though.

“You got it.”

With this arrangement, Jin-Woo would be able to prevent the potential worst-case scenario of someone stealing his experience points, and the only person next to him would be Yu Jin-Ho, so he wouldn't even need to worry about other people watching him all the time as well.

‘If it’s like that, then I’ll get to enjoy some serious power levelling, won’t I?’

On top of that, after all the raids were done and dusted, he'd get a nice little bonus of a wonderful building rolling right onto his lap. The only thing remaining now was him persuading Yu Jin-Ho.

And as expected, Yu Jin-Ho was very, very scared at the moment.

“Is-isn’t that way too dangerous, hyung-nim?!”

“You’re only looking at it from one way and not the other.”

“Eh?”

Jin-Woo beckoned the kid to come closer, so Yu Jin-Ho leaned forward.

“If no one else participates in hunting besides us, doesn’t that also mean no one will get hurt, as long as we’re okay?”

“O-of course.”

“For the first raid, you were like a third wheel being dragged along, so you couldn’t do anything about the incident that had happened, but think about for the moment the ramifications of your own raid team finishing up all 19 raids without a single casualty.”

Yu Jin-Ho's eyes shot open right up.

If that's the case....!!

If that was the case, then persuading his father would become one level easier.

Not only he'd be a D-rank Hunter, but the record of being the leader of a team that successfully performed 19 raids without a single incident would be added on top as well.

It'd be the definite proof of him being qualified to become the Guild Master. Nothing would be a better advertisement for himself than this, wouldn't it?

Jin-Woo studied Yu Jin-Ho's expression and smiled in satisfaction.

‘This kid.... He’s convinced now.’

From the word go, the person in need was Yu Jin-Ho.

As for Jin-Woo, he didn't really need to go on a raid with Yu Jin-Ho, but still could enter dungeons via the Association giving him a call, or through the random boxes.

Yu Jin-Ho's was thinking now.

Although it was a bit scary, if he succeeded in pulling this off, then just as Jin-Woo had implied, there would be so much he'd get in return.

When recalling the sight of Jin-Woo displaying his absolutely overwhelming might in battles from last time, Yu Jin-Woo realised that maybe, there wasn't much to fret over at all.

Yu Jin-Ho finally made his mind up, albeit after some serious internal struggle.

“We'll do it your way, hyung-nim. In that case, I'll search for suitable teammates.”

“Very good.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

They had come to an understanding.

Since he was still in front of Jin-Woo, Yu Jin-Ho stopped feeling nervous and tight-chested, and displayed a bright smile.

‘I've managed to finally get hyung-nim on my side.’

For some reason, he was not feeling too scared of the upcoming raids.

A trustworthy comrade named Jin-Woo had joined him, and it'd be a bit easier to form a raid team now, too. As Jin-Woo had said, with the terms on offer, many would queue up in line just for a chance to participate.

‘With this, I'm one step closer to becoming the Master.’

Jin-Woo also smiled brightly as well.

‘Clean up as many C ranked dungeons by myself, and level up as quickly as possible.’

The two men exited the cafe with satisfied expressions.

After going their separate ways, Jin-Woo ran back home.

Well, he didn't know when the Association would give him a call, after all. It had been over ten days since he was discharged from the hospital, so it'd not be so strange to hear about a Gate opening up in the vicinity.

The Association normally summoned Hunters two, three times a month to clear dungeons that appeared within this area.

One of the main reason why he only gave one hour to Yu Jin-Ho was that the call from the Association could come at any time.

‘For the time being, I can’t afford to miss even a rank E dungeon....’

He wanted to kill lots of monsters and raise his levels quickly.

How inconvenient it was not to have his smartphone around. What a relief that the new one should arrive in a few days’ time....

Jin-Woo pushed open the front door and entered.

‘.....’

The apartment was quiet.

It was in the middle of the week, so his little sister was still at school.

After confirming that there was no one at home, Jin-Woo opened the window displaying the Daily Quest.

‘I should get today’s rewards.’

Before he went out to meet up with Yu Jin-Ho, he had finished the day’s Daily Quest already. But there were too many eyes watching, so he had no choice but to delay receiving his rewards.

Well, he couldn’t really show off the sight of a blue light wrapping around his body as well as a box suddenly popping out from nowhere in the middle of the street, now could he?

Tti-ring!

[Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong]

Press-up, 100 times: complete (100/100)

Sit-up, 100 times: complete (100/100)

Squat, 100 times: complete (100/100)

Running, 10 km: complete (11/10)

[You’ve completed ‘Daily Quest: Preparations to become strong’.]

[Completion rewards have arrived.]

[Would you like to confirm?] (Y/N)

“Yeah.... Oh, hold up. Wait.”

Just like usual, Jin-Woo was about to receive his rewards, only to spot something strange and hurriedly stopped himself. His gaze stopped dead and remained fixed to the column of 'Running'.

Running, 10 km: complete (11/10)

At first, he thought that he ran one kilometre more than necessary. However, the longer he thought about it, the stranger it seemed to him.

'I've filled up my quota, so why did it keep recording the extra distance?'

Jin-Woo's gaze became sharper.

Was this really nothing more than coincidence?

Jin-Woo got down to the floor and supported his weight on his arms. And then, his body rose up and down without a break.

However, his sight was fixed to the seemingly-empty air in front.

Tti-ring!

[You've completed one press-up.]

[Press-up 100 times: complete (111/100)]

Tti-ring!

[You've completed one press-up.]

[Press-up 100 times: complete (112/100)]

'As I thought....'

'Running' wasn't the only category that reflected the extra number of exercises performed. The count for 'Press-up' also kept climbing up.

Suddenly, he became rather curious just how much higher the numbers would count to.

Veins bulged on Jin-Woo's arms.

Thanks to his enhanced Stats. He couldn't feel his weight. Actually, his body felt as light as fuzzy hair.

Before long, the number hovering near the hundred mark climbed to 200.

Tti-ring!

[You've completed one press-up.]

[Press-up 100 times: complete (200/100)]

Tti-ring!

[You've completed one press-up.]

[Press-up 100 times: complete (200/100)]

The count stopped for sure at the 200 mark. He performed a few more press-ups just in case, but it didn't want to go up any higher.

Both the sit-up and the squat also stopped counting at the 200 mark.

Press-up, 100 times: complete (200/100)

Sit-up, 100 times: complete (200/100)

Squat, 100 times: complete (200/100)

Running, 10 km: complete (11/10)

200, no more and no less.

It wasn't just climbing up without an end, and no, it wasn't as if the 100 mark was the end. There definitely was something here. His gut feeling was declaring as such.

What if there was another result waiting for him once he completed all the 'over-counting'?

'Let's make sure.'

With much faster steps than usual, Jin-Woo exited the apartment.

The next 9 kilometres for the 'Running' column were filled up really quickly. When Jin-Woo arrived before his home once more, a new message popped up in his view.

Tti-ring!

[You've completed 'Hidden Quest: Preparations to become strong'.]

[Completion rewards have arrived.]

[Would you like to confirm?] (Y/N)

The title of the quest hadn't changed, but the type of the quest had changed to 'Hidden Quest' now.

His suspicion was proved to be correct.

Jin-Woo swallowed his saliva.

'.....Confirm.'

Tti-ring!

[The following rewards are available.]

Reward 1. Full recovery of the current physical condition

Reward 2. All Stats +3

Reward 3.

1) Blessed random box

Or

2) Cursed random box

‘All Stats raised by 3!!’

His eyes shot open wide.

The rewards from the hidden quest proved to be really exceptional.

With all the Stats getting a three point boost, it was the same thing as his level rising up by three.

No, wait – his Stats might have risen, but since his level stayed the same, he had gained even more. Because, with higher Stats, raising his level would become that much easier.

But at the same time, he felt a bit fearful as well.

On one hand, he couldn't help but hold a vague hope that, from today onwards, all the Daily Quest coming his way could be converted to Hidden Quests, instead.

‘However, if the rewards are this big....’

Then, the odds of the Daily Quests coming to an end were incredibly high as well.

Also, if the Hidden Quest was something only available for just this once, then that meant he had to be extra careful when choosing the third reward.

Reward 3.

1) Blessed random box

Or

2) Cursed random box

This would be his first time having to choose his reward.

If he chose one, then he'd lose the other one.

‘So, I wouldn't be able to see one of the two forever, is that about right?’

Just taking a single look at their names, it was rather obvious which one he needed to select, but...

But, this also could be a trap, as well.

“Collect the third reward.”

Tti-ring!

[You must choose between one of the two available random boxes.]

[Blessed random box]

Presents the player with the item he wants.

[Cursed random box]

Presents the player with the item he needs.

[Which one will you choose?]

Their explanations were exceedingly simple. And that made choosing even harder.

If there were no explanations to begin with, he'd have chosen the 'blessed' random box in a heartbeat. But now that he had read the dang explanations, it felt like he'd still end up missing out regardless of which one he chose.

‘A thing that I want and a thing that I need...’

Just from those explanations, both of them sounded like a good deal.

‘But, there’s definitely a trap here.’

The thing he 'wanted' would be something he wanted because he recognised its usefulness to his current situation.

However, the thing he 'needed' might not necessarily be like that. Something that he may need but didn't want could come out, instead.

For instance, when needing a powerful weapon, he might end up getting a horrifying bomb that could completely blow himself and all his teammates into smithereens in one go.

‘That’s why it’s called the cursed random box, right?’

So, he'd go with the lower risk selection.

In situations where the end results of a choice weren't known, this would be the wisest way to minimise the amount of regret felt later on.

Jin-Woo finally made his decision after a cool-headed weighing of pros and cons.

“Blessed random box.”

A small box slowly materialised in front of his feet.

Jin-Woo picked it up.

‘Could it be....?’

REPORT

His heart began beating faster and faster. Because, the size of the box was rather familiar to him. His hands ripping open the box became far more urgent.

‘As I thought!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes grew wider. There was a golden key inside the box.

Indeed, it was the key to an instant dungeon, the one he’d been anxiously waiting for.

The information on the key appeared soon afterwards.

Tti-ring!

[Item: Key of the Demon’s Castle]

Rarity: S

Category: Key

A key that will let you enter the ‘Dungeon: Demon’s Castle’. Can be used at the Daesung Tower located in Songpa-gu, Seoul.

“It’s an S?”

Jin-Woo raised his voice in surprise.

Of course, there was no guarantee that the rarity ranking had any bearings on the difficulty of the dungeon. But, he couldn’t think of it any other way.

The rarity ‘E’ key opened a dungeon that was on par with a Gate ranked E, after all.

What would he do if the difficulty of the instant dungeon turned out to be ‘S’, then?

Even with a raid team consisting solely of S-ranked Hunters, there was no definite guarantee that such a dungeon would be cleared.

The odds were around 50:50?

The difficulty of a Gate exploded upwards past the rank B, and even when looking through the entire world, there had been too few cases of S-rank Gates opening up in the world.

‘One of them appeared on Jeju Island, though.’

Afterwards, the island of Jeju became an abandoned hellhole where no humans could exist.

Jin-Woo stared at the key in his hand for a long while.

‘This is what I really wanted?’

If there was one silver lining to be found here, then that would be the explanation saying he’d be able to ‘enter’ the dungeon with this key, unlike the previous one which said he’d be ‘transferred’ instead.

The implication being that he could escape at any time if he felt like it.

Even if the key suddenly vanished from him, he still had the return stone from the last dungeon waiting to be used inside his Inventory as well. He was no longer worried about getting trapped behind an invisible wall like the last time.

‘I’ve worked hard to earn this chance, so I can’t throw it away like that now, can I?’

He simply had to confirm right away with his own two eyes whether this was what he really wanted or not.

Part 2. Demon’s Castle

In front of the Daesung Tower.

A super-tall skyscraper over a hundred floors tall was standing straight as if to pierce the heavens above. Indeed, this was what the modern skyscraper should look like. Just looking up at it made him feel extremely dizzy.

There were only a few people walking around as it was already late evening now. The streets with not one soul on it gave off an eerie vibe.

‘Still, I can’t be sure, so....’

Jin-Woo took a good look around him, before pulling up the hood attached to his top to hide his face.

If someone saw a person disappearing and appearing again in thin air without a Gate around, that might cause a bit of ruckus. Not only that, there were several CCTV cameras installed here and there in the near vicinity, so it wasn’t such a bad idea to avoid being too conspicuous.

....Actually, there was someone busy eyeing Jin-Woo right at that moment.

‘Who could that kid be?’

To think, there would be a straggler wearing a hoodie busy loitering around the building at this time of the night....

The security guard watching on from inside the building found Jin-Woo's behaviour rather suspicious and stood up from his chair.

However, as this guard walked towards the door, he couldn't help but come to an abrupt stop and his eyes opened up real wider.

“Wha-what the heck?!”

The security guard gasped out in a surprise and hurriedly ran outside.

The man was definitely walking towards here, yet he had vanished from the view, just like that. Utterly without a trace.

The security guard searched around his vicinity, but he couldn't even spot an ant here.

He tilted his head this way and that, before turning around.

“Well, I'll be.... What a baffling thing that was.”

The security guard was about to go back inside the building, but then, caught something in the corner of his eyes, and turned his head to see what it could be without thinking.

“U-uwaaahhk?!”

He cried out in shock as he fell hard on his butt.

“What, what, what the heck is going on here?!”

The security guard cried out with a pale face.

A person's disembodied hand floating in the air then vanished once more.

Jin-Woo retracted his hand.

‘It's connected to the outside world.’

Unlike the last time, there was no invisible wall blocking his exit. The key also didn't disappear and remained tucked inside his pocket. If he wanted to, he could get out of here at any time, in other words.

‘Now that I'm finished with confirming the escape route...’

Since he didn't know whether the rarity of the key equated to the difficulty of the dungeon, he was far more cautious than usual.

Jin-Woo pulled the hood back and took a look behind him.

“...”

It was a sight shocking enough to make him groan. Just now, when he was taking a few steps towards the Daesung Tower, the world in front of his eyes transformed in an instant.

Could this place even be called a dungeon anymore?

A completely different world was waiting for him.

Instead of the vanished Daesung Tower, a massive tower-like structure stood there.

‘Wait, is that really a tower, or should I call it a castle, instead?’

A tower rising up high into the air without an end, wrapped in reddish black flames. It was as if the tower wasn’t burning, but it was spewing out billowing flames, instead.

“A burning tower, huh.”

Rather than the name of ‘Demon’s Castle’, maybe that nickname suited it better. Jin-Woo slowly walked towards this burning tower.

Crackle! Pop!

The closer he got, the louder the noises of flames rampaging around grew.

‘Can I even enter this thing in the first place?’

However, even if he did, there was yet another problem to consider.

Just like the last instant dungeon that was based off on the subway station, there was a good chance that, since this dungeon was based off on the Daesung Tower, he’d have to climb up 100 floors to clear it completely.

He couldn’t even begin to imagine just how long that would take.

‘Mm?’

Jin-Woo’s steps came to a halt. He sensed a strong aura near the entrance.

He slowly surveyed the surroundings and spotted a black lifeform the size of a bull huddled in slumber right in front of the doorway.

Jin-Woo carefully summoned the Poison Fang of Kasaka.

Tti-ring.

[Item: Poison Fang of Kasaka]

Rarity: C

Attack +25

A dagger fashioned from the poison fang of the Kasaka. There are traces of the Kasaka's poison on it, so when attacking, it will cause Paralysis and Bleeding status effects. Can be stored in the Inventory, or can be sold at the Store.

Status effect 'Paralysis': the target will be unable to move. Success rate is fixed.

Status effect 'Bleeding': the target's stamina will be reduced by 1% per second.

Its attack power wasn't all that high, but the greatness of its added effects was proven in real battles time and time again.

'It'd be nice if the Paralysis works and I get to kill it easily.'

Jin-Woo walked as quietly as possible while approaching that creature. However, it was impossible to fool the olfactory senses of a monster. Soon enough, the creature sniffed the air and raised its body up.

'Che.'

Jin-Woo clicked his tongue.

The creature stood up completely and all three of its heads turned in Jin-Woo's direction.

[Hell's Gatekeeper, Cerberus]

It was a huge dog possessing three heads. The name written in red letters floating on top of its heads immediately drew his attention. It was proof that the monster's 'level' was very high.

'Since it's red, does that mean it's around the same level as those centipedes from the penalty zone?'

Back then, he managed to barely run away from the centipedes. Well, he was only a level 1 back then, so it couldn't be helped.

'But, it's different this time.'

He had grown stronger quite quickly during the short space of time.

Without a doubt, that black creature was strong, but still, it didn't come across as truly overwhelming. His enhanced, alert Perception was telling him that he could do this.

It wasn't for nothing that he raised his Perception Stat. He kept on investing points to this Stat so he could easily tell whether he should fight or take flight in cases like this.

“Growl!”

The Cerberus sensed the enemy and bared its fangs to threaten him.’

Jin-Woo’s gaze then wandered off to the creature’s tail. It kind of resembled a whip, and its end was enveloped in flames as well.

Jin-Woo’s eyes sharpened in an instant.

‘Fangs and a tail. At the bare minimum, two methods of attack, huh.’

Jin-Woo swallowed his dry saliva.

The Cerberus slowly closed the distance before stopping right in front of him and began studying him for some reason.

‘Is it... looking for an opening?’

Just as he thought that....

The monster attacked him.

“Rowr!!”

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened much, much wider.

‘Too fast!!’

Jin-Woo barely evaded the Cerberus’s fangs by sliding underneath the leaping monster.

The Cerberus landed back on the ground and spun around, before began biting at him with its three heads.

“Woof!! Bark!! Rowr!!”

The sharp fangs gleamed coldly in between the biting snouts.

Tti-ring!

[‘Title: Slaughterer of Wolves’ buff effect has activated.]

[Title: Slaughterer of Wolves]

A Title given to a hunter skilled in hunting wolves. When facing animal-type monsters, all of your Stats will increase by 40%. (TL: Again, the ‘hunter’ is a lower case here, because it literally means someone who hunts, while the ‘Hunters’ up until now had been written in English and is a specific job title of those who hunt monsters from dungeons.)

He sensed his body getting lighter.

‘Nice!’

Jin-Woo quickly retreated and wielded his dagger at the Cerberus as it continued to stick close to him.

Swish!! Swish, swish, swish!!

Clang!! Cling, clang!! Claaang!!

The dagger collided with the fangs and issued loud noises.

The blade moved at a blinding pace, yet all he could do at the moment was to deflect the Cerberus's attacks and nothing else.

'Even after I buffed up, it's still this strong?!'

The Cerberus's Agility had easily exceeded his imaginations.

In order to overturn this situation, Jin-Woo activated his 'Intimidation' skill.

['Skill: Intimidation' has been activated.]

Jin-Woo's eyes widened.

'It didn't work?!'

It was at that moment that the long tail of Cerberus flew in like a whip.

Whooooosh-!!

Jin-Woo reflexively ducked his head lower and evaded the tail. But that caused his legs to stop moving for a second. And the monster didn't miss this opportunity.

One of its heads powerfully bit into Jin-Woo's left shoulder.

"Uwaaahck!!"

Jin-Woo summoned all of his strength and stabbed the dagger into the middle of the biting head.

STAB!!

['Effect: Paralysis' has been activated.]

[The effect has been cancelled due to the high resistance of the target.]

['Effect: Bleeding' has been activated.]

[The effect has been cancelled due to the high resistance of the target.]

"Whimper!!"

The Cerberus cried out and let go of him.

Thankfully, he was able to minimise the damage done before other heads had the chance to join in on the attack, but his left shoulder was now in tatters.

What a scary biting power that was.

He tried to move his left arm, but it didn't want to budge. Jin-Woo's expression crumpled unsightly.

He managed to wound the Cerberus, but when comparing the severity of their injuries, then it was clear that he came off far worse in that exchange.

'If either of Paralysis or Bleeding worked, the situation would've been different by now....'

Jin-Woo glared at the Cerberus and clicked his tongue.

Then, something else happened.

'Huh?'

The eyes of the Cerberus were being dyed in a crimson colour all of a sudden.

"Grooowl."

Inexplicably, Jin-Woo sensed something ominous was about to happen.

'What could it be?'

[Hell's Gatekeeper Cerberus is using 'Skill: Rage'.]

[Its state of rage will persist for the next three minutes.]

[All of Cerberus's Stats will be increased by 100%.]

[Cerberus will no longer feel pain.]

Jin-Woo cried out.

"What did you just say?!"

A monster just used a skill!!

In that instant, the Cerberus leaped off the ground.

'F*ck!!'

Even before he could react, the Cerberus appeared right before his eyes. He hurriedly swung his dagger, but it only managed to graze the side of one of its heads.

And all three heads bit into Jin-Woo simultaneously.

Kwajeek!!

“Euheuheuhk!!”

Jin-Woo gritted his teeth. His neck, waist and thigh all got bitten.

The Cerberus ran at its top speed and slammed Jin-Woo against the castle’s gate.

SLAM!!

Jin-Woo’s HP hit the rock bottom in an instant.

“Keo-heok!!”

[HP: 411/3,602]

Tti-ring!

[Your HP has decreased below 30% and ‘Skill: Tenacity’ has been activated.]

[All damage received will be reduced by 50%.]

Thanks to the damage reduction and the Tenacity passive, he was able to avoid getting killed in one hit.

“Keuh....”

Jin-Woo’s eyebrows shot up in anger.

Chapter 29 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

It'd be easy to go mad from pain and wildly thrash about, but he'd lose this great opportunity, which would most likely never happen again. Losing his consciousness now would mean his end.

'...178, 179, 180!'

Jin-Woo had been bitterly waiting for the end of the three-minute duration and finally, revealed his hidden trump card.

'The first reward, give it to me now!'

He immediately collected the first reward from the Daily Quest he had saved up until now.

['Reward 1: Full recovery of the current physical condition' has been applied.]

Suwhhooosh!

A blue light enveloped him and all depleted health reverted back to full.

[HP: 3,602/3,602]

Even his tattered left arm was healed as good as new in the blink of an eye.

'This is my chance!'

Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed coldly. In such close proximity, no matter how agile this monster was, it'd not be able to dodge his attacks.

Jin-Woo rapidly caught one of Cerberus's necks with his left arm, and stabbed the 'Poison Fang of Kasaka' in the middle of that neck.

Stab! Stab! Stab!!

The rage state had ended by now, and the Cerberus began to violently thrash about trying to escape from Jin-Woo's embrace.

"Whimper!! Whine!"

However, Jin-Woo did not let go and held on with his powerful arms. The harder the Cerberus struggled, the stronger he gripped the neck of the monster.

In the meantime, his dagger continued to stab into the creature's neck.

Stab, stab, stab!!

“Whimper-!!”

The Cerberus bit into Jin-Woo as it struggled to the bitter end, but the battle had already been decided by then.

Stab! Stab!!

“Whimper...! Whine...”

The Poison Fang of Kasaka now travelled lower down from the neck and stabbed the Cerberus’s chest.

Stab! Stab! Stab!!

Soon enough, the monster’s resistance became noticeably weaker and weaker.

“Whimper....”

In the end, the heads of the Cerberus fell to the side, lifeless.

Tti-ring!

[You have defeated ‘Hell’s Gatekeeper, Cerberus’.]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

In one breath, his level rose up by 4. That was how difficult this battle was.

Jin-Woo only let go of the Cerberus’s neck after confirming its body going limp with his own eyes. The heavy body sprawled to the floor without any resistance whatsoever.

Plop.

Jin-Woo rested his hands on his knees.

“Ha-ah....”

Only now could he breathe a sigh of relief.

A monster that could use a skill – if he didn’t prepare a hidden trump card, then he’d have been killed for sure. A chill crawled down his spine just from thinking about it.

‘Oh, I almost forgot.... Items.’

Would there be as many rewards befitting his life-or-death struggle to bring down this monster?

After calming himself down, Jin-Woo reached out towards the Cerberus.

Tti-ring!

[You have discovered 'Item: Gatekeeper's Necklace'. Take it?]

[You have discovered 'Item: Key to the Castle's Gate'. Take it?]

[You have discovered 'Item: Cerberus's Molar, x3'. Take it?]

'Take them all.'

A steel necklace originally found around one of the Cerberus's necks, a grey key, and three molars of a monster appeared in his hand.

[Item: Gatekeeper's Necklace]

Rarity: A

Type: Necklace

Agility +20, Perception +20

[Item: Key to the Castle's Gate]

Rarity: A

Type: Key

The key to unlock the gates of the Demon's Castle. Can only be acquired after killing the Gatekeeper.

[Item: Cerberus's Molar]

Rarity: None

Type: Miscellaneous

"Ohh."

Jin-Woo's eyes went round.

'This necklace can boost both my Agility and Perception by 20 points?'

A necklace with eye-spinningly good options came out. Its rarity was also ranked A. Out of all the items he'd seen so far, this one featured the highest rarity ranking yet.

'Well, I had to go through so much to kill it, so....'

Indeed, there was no way that its rarity would be low.

However, when it came to actually putting the necklace on, he couldn't help but to hesitate big time.

The thing was, it was shaped like a roundish metallic choker with spikes spouting out in regular intervals, so no matter what it said on the cover, it was undoubtedly... a dog collar.

“Mm...”

Jin-Woo closed his eyes and deliberated on his choices for a long time, before deciding to try it on at least once, and brought the necklace closer to his neck.

Then, a message popped up.

Tti-ring!

[Will you wear ‘Item: Gatekeeper’s Necklace?]

Jin-Woo fell into yet another bout of dilemma for a second, before helplessly muttering out his answer.

“....Sure thing.”

It was then, the necklace slowly disappeared from his view.

[You’re now wearing ‘Item: Gatekeeper’s Necklace.]

“Huh?”

Jin-Woo hurriedly summoned his Status Window.

[Stats]

Strength: 60

Stamina: 39

Agility: 80

Intelligence: 37

Perception: 67

(Available points to distribute: 0)

Reduction in physical damage: 20%

“Holy sh*t!”

Both his Agility and Perception were increased by 20 for real. The option was now in effect, in other words.

It seemed like that he didn’t have to worry about walking around displaying the ‘items’ he wore. The fact that he didn’t have to be seen with a dog collar on his neck brought him a huge sense of relief.

‘ up are the molars.’

Jin-Woo summoned the Store next.

He sold the japtem ‘Cerberus’s Molar’ and got 150 thousand Gold for each. He sold all three off right away.

Soon, 450 thousand Gold entered his hands.

[Current Gold: 562,362]

‘What kind of japtem is this expensive??’

It was a rather nice baseline to judge the overall difficulty of this dungeon. In other words, the difficulty of clearing the Demon’s Castle would be incredibly high.

However, it wasn’t all necessarily bad news.

He only hunted a single monster, yet he got to earn over four times the amount of Gold compared to the whole day spent inside the Hapjeong station’s instant dungeon.

If he saved up Gold in this fashion, it wouldn’t be too far from now when he’d get to purchase all those items that cost millions upon millions in the Store.

‘That is, as long as I get to clear this dungeon....’

Jin-Woo stared up at the burning tower.

Crackle! Pop!

The very top of the structure was completely shrouded in some kind of blurry fog. He had to actually enter the tower if he wanted to see what was going on inside.

But, Jin-Woo shook his head.

‘Now’s not the time.’

He only barely managed to hunt down a single sentry standing guard by the door, even with his Title buffing him up and resorting to using up the quest reward, too.

He couldn’t even guess just what kind of danger would be waiting for him beyond that gate. So, now was the time for him to back off.

Still, he was certain of one thing.

Just as the explanation said, this key to the Demon’s Castle was indeed something he wanted. The name ‘Blessed random box’ wasn’t wrong.

Levelling up quickly, valuable items, and plenty of Gold, too. This place had it all.

And one day, he'd get to claim them all as his.

Only that, today wasn't that day.

Although he was slightly unwilling, he stored the grey key inside his Inventory.

'I'll return.'

Definitely, very soon.

Jin-Woo smiled as he turned around to leave.

Part 3. Coincidence

A few days went by without any incident.

Yu Jin-Ho called Jin-Woo almost daily and reported on the progress. From the day after their meeting, he had called Jin-Woo precisely three times.

- "Hyung-nim!! It's me, Yu Jin-Ho."

"Details only."

- "Yes, hyung-nim."

It seemed that the job of finding other teammates was going rather smoothly. Yu Jin-Ho repeatedly emphasized that the formation of the raid team would end soon, and that Jin-Woo should wait just a little while longer.

'Looks like he's really scared of me dropping out, huh.'

However, Jin-Woo couldn't just wait and do nothing while waiting for the team to form. So, he accessed the website for Hunters today as well.

He asked around all the time for the past few days, but no freelancer-run raid teams wanted to work together with an E-rank Hunter.

He simply had gotten lucky on that day. Sure, Hwang Dong-Seok had been scheming some nefarious things, but in any case, Jin-Woo still ended up being a part of a raid team, didn't he?

'Thanks to that, I made lots of money, my levels went up, and even got me a new skill, too.'

Should he feel grateful to Hwang Dong-Seok, in that case?

Jin-Woo let off a smirk.

Well, as he was now, he wouldn't mind meeting up with other selfish Hunters acting like geckos at the moment.

No raid teams wanted him, the Association wasn't calling him, and keys to instant dungeons didn't want to show up, too.

Basically, he was doing nothing but suck on his fingers for the past couple of days.

SFX for an empty stomach rumbling

'Is it time to eat already?'

Jin-Woo felt hungry as he spent hours roaming the online job postings, so he headed to the kitchen.

But, when he opened the fridge's door, it was completely empty inside.

'.....'

This was the inevitable result of not going shopping for the past few days. His excuse being that his mind had been preoccupied with several urgent matters until now.

'Should I go shopping, then?'

Jin-Woo yawned out slightly and closed the fridge's door.

One of the few advantages the apartment he was living in had, was its close proximity to a large supermarket.

Wearing simple, easy-to-move clothes, Jin-Woo left his home. A ten-minute walk later, he had arrived at his destination already.

As soon as he stepped in through the door, the wide-open expanse of the supermarket's interior entered his view. Maybe because there wasn't some sort of promotion going on, it was quieter than usual in the aisles.

Jin-Woo picked up a basket and slowly walked around.

Ever since his mother was confined to the hospital, Jin-Woo had been acting as the head of the family, and now, he grew to be more or less familiar with chores of the household, such as shopping for groceries.

'There isn't anything catching my eyes today, though...'

While he was deeply staring at the displayed produce, trying to think about what to prepare for dinner....

"Pardon me, young man. I see that you're feeling much better now."

A rather friendly voice came from behind him and Jin-Woo turned around to look who it was.

‘Who is he?’

Because of his high Perception Stat, he knew that there was a Hunter nearby. But, this was a supermarket where lots of people came and went, and Hunters also had to go shopping too, so he didn’t dwell on the matter for long.

However, he didn’t expect that Hunter to engage him in conversation.

Not only that, a Hunter he actually knew, too.

“Mister Song ahjussi??”

Jin-Woo’s expression brightened in an instant.

Mister Song – Song Chi-Yeol looked at Seong Jin-Woo with an expression half in disbelief and the other half in delight.

“I did hear the news that you were fine, but I still can’t believe it, even after running into you like this.”

Song Chi-Yeol formed a deeply moved expression next. Jin-Woo felt kinda embarrassed by the emotional eyes of Song Chi-Yeol and sheepishly scratched the side of his temple.

“I should’ve gone to visit you at the hospital, but for some reason, the folks at the Association all tightly shut their mouths and I couldn’t hear any concrete information on you until now. Did you know that Miss Ju-Hui is also anxiously waiting for your news?”

“Miss Ju-Hui? Really?”

“That’s right. She said that she’d give up being a Hunter, but still, she stopped by at last week’s raid location just to look for you.”

“Last week....?”

After listening to Mister Song’s story, it turned out that, rather coincidentally, there was a raid organised by the Association on the very same day he entered Hwang Dong-Seok’s team.

‘That was why there hadn’t been any word from the Association until now.’

It was not that there hadn’t been any calls from the Association, but more like he missed it when it did come. A small mystery got resolved pretty easily, just like that.

Song Chi-Yeol studied Seong Jin-Woo’s appearance here and there, still mystified by what he was seeing.

‘By the way, was Mister Seong this tall before? And, with his bad leg and all, too....’

Song Chi-Yeol’s gaze naturally headed lower.

And then, his eyes grew extra wide in shock.

“Your.... Your leg?!”

REPORT

Jin-Woo calmly made his reply.

“When I came to, my leg had been all healed up. Even I’m not sure what happened to me.”

Song Chi-Yeol nodded his head.

Ever since Gates appeared for the first time ten years ago, many illogical things continued to transpire to this day. The people called Hunters who had ‘Awakened’ their abilities were a prime example of this.

A healer ranked S could reputedly heal a person who was ripped to shreds back to normal, as long as the victim was still alive.

What if, a high-ranking healer healed Jin-Woo’s injuries while he was unconscious? If that was the case, then his severed leg being reattached didn’t even qualify as a miracle.

“It’d do no good to see a young man such as yourself become disabled like that. What a relief this is. What a relief.”

Song Chi-Yeol lightly patted his chest as if a big weight of his had been lifted off his shoulders now.

It was then, Jin-Woo’s gaze drifted towards Song Chi-Yeol’s left arm. The older man’s sleeve was empty.

Song Chi-Yeol chuckled and massaged his left shoulder.

“Don’t you worry about it. A Hunter getting injured during a raid is a normal occurrence, after all. No, I’ve been lucky for not running into an accident until then.”

Song Chi-Yeol spoke as if it wasn’t much to fret over, but the gazes of other people walking by weren’t like that.

“Oh, my gosh, he’s.....”

“What a regrettable thing, that..... Did a monster do that?”

Aunties out shopping and students walking by whispered to each other after spotting Song Chi-Yeol’s empty sleeve. Hell, there was even this one guy who quite openly stared on as well while looking rather mystified and all.

Jin-Woo quickly spoke up.

“Should we go somewhere else?”

There were far too many people walking by here, right by the butchery aisle. Song Chi-Yeol had been feeling uncomfortable by all the stares, so he nodded his head quickly. He still had few more things to say to Jin-Woo, too.

“That would be a good idea.”

The two of them hurriedly walked away in order to find a quiet spot to chat.

But, as they walked, Song Chi-Yeol sensed that something was rather odd here.

‘The sounds of Mister Seong’s steps are....’

Jin-Woo’s steps were just too soft. The youth was walking right beside Song Chi-Yeol, yet it was hard to detect his presence.

Why was that?

The older man even felt that, were they to start fighting here, he’d be unable to even touch a hair on Jin-Woo’s body.

Even though he was rank C, and Jin-Woo was ranked E.

‘Just what am I even thinking about....’

Song Chi-Yeol shook his head. That wasn’t the important thing right now.

There was something he badly wanted to say to Mister Seong. No, he simply had to say it.

Song Chi-Yeol came to a stop where it was quiet and isolated. Jin-Woo also stopped there.

Song Chi-Yeol turned to look at Jin-Woo and before the youth could stop him, bowed his head 90 degrees.

“Mister Seong. Thank you.”

When a man who was old enough to be his dad lowered his head like that, Jin-Woo couldn’t help but feel solemn as well.

Jin-Woo, of course, tried to dissuade Song Chi-Yeol, but the older man didn’t listen and instead, carried on with what he wanted to say.

“If you say 11 people died because of me, then you are responsible for saving six lives that day. My share of the blame in that matter is the biggest, so on the behalf of all the Hunters who were there, let me say thank you.”

Song Chi-Yeol meant every word he spoke. And Jin-Woo could feel the older man's sincerity as well.

The situation had become somewhat awkward, but it didn't feel so bad. How should he go about describing it? He was feeling proud?

Of course, that didn't mean he should let an elder remain in that bowing position.

“Ahjussi, thanks, so please stand back up. Please.”

Just as Jin-Woo tried to persuade Song Chi-Yeol to stand up straight, the latter's phone went off.

Song Chi-Yeol asked for Jin-Woo's understanding and pulled out the smartphone tucked inside his inner pocket.

“Hello?”

Song Chi-Yeol's face gradually hardened as he answered the call.

“I understand. I'll be there soon.”

Song Chi-Yeol ended the call and spoke to Jin-Woo next.

“Looks like I need to get going.”

He was implying that there was a private matter he had to attend to.

However, Jin-Woo was able to listen in on the contents of the conversation. His hearing had been improved by a great deal after his Perception Stat rose up dramatically.

That call just now was from the Association, asking for a cooperation in clearing a Gate nearby.

Song Chi-Yeol was actually hiding the truth, because he was worried that Jin-Woo would want to tag along, that Jin-Woo might want to participate in the raid even though it hadn't been long since his discharge from the hospital.

Jin-Woo asked the older man.

“That was from the Association, yes?”

Song Chi-Yeol hesitated slightly, before making his reply.

“That... Did you hear everything?”

When an Association formed a raid team, it'd summon every Hunter affiliated with the organisation who lived in the vicinity. If Song Chi-Yeol received the call, that meant Jin-Woo's house had been called as well.

It was the order to mobilise, the one Jin-Woo had been waiting for.

Jin-Woo cut to the chase.

“I’ll go with you.”

“But you, Mister Seong....”

A look of uncertainty floated up on Song Chi-Yeol’s face as he stared at Jin-Woo.

The two men arrived at the meeting place.

The Gate had formed in the middle of the road pretty close to residential areas, so the police officers called in to control the access to the location.

However, there were almost no onlookers present here, to begin with.

The majority of Gates the Association took on were those dangerous ones that had been left alone for too long after their initial discovery; besides, even if one were to stick around a Gate, one would still not get to see how Hunters fought, anyway.

It was only a couple of curious, naughty kids loitering around who got chased away by the officers every now and then.

With a thud, the door to the taxi was closed shut.

Jin-Woo and Song Chi-Yeol had exited from the taxi and made their way towards the location where the other Hunters had been gathered, only for the cops to stop them.

“Please show me your IDs.”

Song Chi-Yeol pulled out his wallet and displayed his licence.

“I’m Song Chi-Yeol, a rank C Hunter. This is my colleague, Seong Jin-Woo.”

The cops compared the photo on the licence to Song Chi-Yeol’s face before returning it and parted ways.

“Sorry for the inconvenience, Hunters.”

“Keep up the good work.”

Song Chi-Yeol performed a slight nod to the policemen and continued on. Jin-Woo followed right behind him.

The employee from the Association was waiting in front of the Gate. It was a young woman wearing a round-rimmed pair of glasses.

She approached the two men after spotting them from a distance.

“Song Chi-Yeol Hunter-nim! Uh? How did you get here, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim? You weren’t answering your phone until now.”

Song Chi-Yeol replied instead.

“We were in the same location, and came here together after you guys called me.”

“Ahh, is that so? I thought that Seong Hin-Woo Hunter-nim was avoiding answering our calls again.”

The Association employee chuckled and cracked a joke.

Well, that indeed had been true in the past.

A long time ago, Jin-Woo got injured badly during a raid, and he grew fearful of going to dungeons, which led to him switching off his phone for a while.

In the end, he had to return to raiding dungeons, since not answering the call three times in a row meant he’d be chased out from the Association.

Recalling his past, Jin-Woo could only smile in bitterness.

“Oh, right. Other Hunters are waiting for you. Why don’t you two head over there and greet them?”

There were other Hunters who had arrived earlier where the Association employee was pointing at.

Well, there were only two other Hunters there, however. The number of those willing to come had decreased sharply after that ‘huge incident’. Jin-Woo heard from Song Chi-Yeol on their way here that, besides those who died, many other Hunters decided to quit this life from the shock of that underground temple incident.

‘One of them happens to be Miss Ju-Hui...’

Jin-Woo took a look around, but he couldn’t see her.

When Jin-Woo and Song Chi-Yeol approached closer, the two Hunters awkwardly averted their gazes.

Jin-Woo narrowed his eyes.

‘But, of course.’

These two happened to be Kim Sang-Sik, who ran off trying to save only himself, and the other male Hunter who had discarded the injured Jin-Woo.

Of course, they would find it rather awkward to face him.

“Uhm, excuse me, Mister Seong....”

Kim Sang-Sik was thinking of at least greeting the youth, but when he was subjected to Jin-Woo’s cold glare, he eventually shifted his gaze away.

“....”

Kim Sang-Sik shut his mouth, studied the mood for a bit, before shuffling further away from there. He stopped at a bit of distance away and sneaked a glance at Jin-Woo, before he tilted his head in confusion.

‘Is he really the Seong Jin-Woo that I know? I mean, his eyes are as fierce as a monster, man. Like a real monster....’

Kim Sang-Sik shuddered deeply. As he thought, his arm was covered in goosebumps.

Jin-Woo withdrew his glare filled with hostilities.

Thankfully, quite unlike Yu Jin-Ho, Kim Sang-Sik was quick on the uptake. After locking eyes once, he didn’t even try to come near Jin-Woo’s vicinity.

He sincerely hoped that this arrangement would remain for the rest of the raid.

“Mister Seong.”

Song Chi-Yeol, standing next to Jin-Woo, shifted his gaze in a direction and smiled gently.

“There she is.”

Jin-Woo also turned his head in the direction Song Chi-Yeol was looking at. But, before he had the chance to completely turn around to look....

“Mister Jin-Woo!!”

Something rather soft suddenly hugged him tightly.

“Miss Ju-Hui??”

While Jin-Woo was getting flustered, Ju-Hui was too busy making sure he was fine with a tearful face.

“Are you alright? You are not hurt anywhere, right? Uh, your leg?! Mister Jin-Woo, how come your leg is....?”

Ju-Hui’s eyes went extra round as she alternated her gaze between his face and his leg.

There was a bit of difference in how extreme it was, but nevertheless, her reaction was more or less the same with Song Chi-Yeol’s.

“Oh, that....”

Just as Jin-Woo was about to reply....

“How steamy, eh! It’s steamy, I say!!”

Both the gazes of Jin-Woo and Ju-Hui shifted over in the direction of that voice.

From afar, an unknown man was whistling loudly at them.

More importantly, though, he was wearing the blue-coloured prison overall.

‘Is there a film shoot going on around nearby or something?’

While Jin-Woo was tilting his head in confusion, a man wearing a business suit climbed down from the front seat of a certain minivan.

He then threw out a measured warning at the prison overall guy.

“Shut your mouth.”

The prison overall guy pretended to not know anything by staring at the distance. However, he quickly threw an oily wink at Ju-Hui when the business suit looked back inside the van.

Immediately, Jin-Woo’s expression crumpled.

Two more people climbed out of the van right away.

Both of them were men. And particularly worthy of note was the fact that they all wore prison overalls and had been cuffed as well.

The business suit led the three prison overalls towards the Association’s employee. And she welcomed him with a bright expression.

“You’ve finally arrived.”

“Please forgive us for our tardiness. There was traffic on the road.”

The business suit then proceeded to sign on each of the documents the Association employee presented to him.

In the meantime, the employee called for the Hunters to gather around.

“These folks are the ‘replacement’ convicts who will participate in the raid alongside you, Hunters.”

And so, the expressions of the Hunters hardened considerably.

Kim Sang-Sik was the first to step forward.

“What? ‘Replacement’ convicts?! Are you telling us to go on a raid along with a bunch of criminals?!”

Hunters who had committed crimes had two choices.

Either spend their allotted time behind the bars, or cooperate with the Association and reduce their sentences.

Most chose the latter option, and they were referred to as the ‘replacement’ convicts.

The Association employee repeatedly lowered her head.

“I’m really sorry about this. It’s only because the number of Hunters active in our district has declined so much that the Association has no choice but to do this. However, they will be accompanied by a Hunter from the Monitoring Division, so you don’t have to worry too much.”

Kim Sang-Sik asked, still full of suspicion.

“A Hunter from the Monitoring Division, you say?”

REPORT

“Yes. All the convicts are rank Cs, but the Hunter from the Monitoring Division is actually a rank B, so there is nothing for you to worry about.”

Kim Sang-Sik nodded his head.

The popular opinion stated that you’d need around ten C-rank Hunters in order to contend against a single Hunter ranked B.

Well, a B-rank was personally coming to monitor the troublemakers, not to mention participating in the raid itself, so there was no reason to say no here.

‘One rank B and three rank Cs, huh.....’

Jin-Woo quietly studied the faces of the Monitoring Division’s agent as well as the three replacement convicts, before tilting his head slightly.

‘Something’s off here.’

He could sense a minute trace of murderous intent flowing between those four.

Was this also one of the facets of the enhanced Perception Stat? Or was he simply being overly cautious?

In any case, he was overcome with this unexplainable anxiety all of a sudden.

So, Jin-Woo whispered in Ju-Hui’s ear.

“Miss Ju-Hui, please don’t participate in this raid.”

Ju-Hui looked up at Jin-Woo’s eyes and asked back.

“What about you, Mister Jin-Woo?”

Rather than answering her, he too asked back.

“If I say I’ll be going?”

“Well, in that case, I’m going too.”

She looked like she’d follow him, no matter what.

‘I’m sure she’s only doing this because she’s concerned about me. And....’

And, he learned through prior experience that, whenever Ju-Hui's face was forming that expression, she'd suddenly become a very stubborn young lady and she'd never change her mind, no matter what.

‘There shouldn't be a problem with me around, right?’

After all, he had experienced dealing with Hwang Dong-Seok's gang, which contained five rank Cs in their midst.

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

“In that case, okay.”

The agent from the Monitoring Division finished signing on all of the documents, and then came to speak to the gathered Hunters.

“My name is Kahng Tae-Sik from the Monitoring Division. I believe you've been informed of the situation. I'll keep a very close eye on those three, so you can rest easy.”

Kahng Tae-Sik then beckoned the three convicts to come closer. They all trudged towards him and presented their hands. With a practised hand of his own, Kahng Tae-Sik swiftly undid their cuffs.

“Wowzers. I thought I was gonna die from the stuffiness just now.”

“We ain't even slaves, so isn't it against our rights for you to drag us around here and there like this?”

The convicts massaged their freed wrists and continued to pile on their complaints.

Kahng Tae-Sik roundly ignored them and returned his gaze back to the Hunters.

“Who will be taking the lead today?”

Song Chi-Yeol, having led raids before, raised his hand about half way up. Kahng Tae-Sik nodded his head.

“Understood.”

With Song Chi-Yeol in the lead, Hunters entered the Gate one by one.

“Let's get going as well.”

Jin-Woo and Ju-Hui also entered the Gate, albeit at the same time.

Perhaps the trauma from the last incident remained with her, because she ever so slightly held onto Jin-Woo's sleeve.

Goblins were the main enemies for this dungeon. They were the weakest of all man-type monsters out there. So, clearing the dungeon itself wasn't hard at all.

“Kiiieehhk!!”

“Kiehhk!!”

These strange-looking creatures were weak enough for Jin-Woo to fight evenly one on one even before he got his power boost. Still, Jin-Woo did his utmost best to carefully hunt Goblins with his bare hands.

“Kiehhck!!”

“Kahk!!”

When Jin-Woo displayed the combat prowess that easily exceeded their imaginations, both Ju-Hui and Song Chi-Yeol's eyes became extra round in surprise.

“Wow.”

He was hiding most of his true power, yet the result of each fight was still remarkably different compared to the past. Ju-Hui approached him and carefully asked him.

“Have you been working out lately?”

“Well... I, uh, I've been jogging every day.”

“Jogging??”

Ju-Hui tilted her head, but well, he wasn't technically lying here, so....

‘But besides all that... I'm not earning any experience points here.’

“Kiiieehhck!!”

[The enemy's level is too low, and your experience points did not rise.]

“Kah-gahk!!”

[The enemy's level is too low, and your experience points did not rise.]

Jin-Woo formed a disappointed expression.

The message of Goblins being too weak and him not getting any experience points kept repeating itself.

‘This isn't going to work....’

On top of this, the magic crystals from the Goblins were also the worst grade there could be.

Jin-Woo took a look around him.

The C-ranked convicts must've been really excited by the taste of freedom because they were wildly swinging their weapons and energetically ripped Goblins to shreds.

“Kkkiiiiiehhkk!!”

“Kehk! Kehk!!”

From that scene alone, it was difficult to tell apart just who were the monsters and who were the humans there.

‘I guess there’s no reason for me to break a sweat today.’

Well, he wasn't earning any experience points, nor was he making lots of money today, either. A certain thought popped up in his head next.

‘If it’s going to be like this from now on, wouldn’t it be better to quit the Association?’

Pretty much the majority of jobs coming to the Association’s way were clearing the Gates ranked D and E. However, if his level wasn't going to increase from entering those types of Gates, then there was no need to participate in Association’s raids anymore.

‘I can easily earn mom’s hospital fees by myself now, too.’

He could quit the Association at any time he felt like it.

This was why having money was always for the better. As soon as he had some, his selection had widened. While thinking of this and that, the raid team entered deeper into the dungeon.

“Uh?”

“Mm.....”

And soon, a forked road with three paths appeared before them.

Kahng Tae-Sik made a suggestion to Song Chi-Yeol.

“Since the difficulty of the dungeon is low, how about splitting up from here onwards?”

“Yes, let’s do that.”

Song Chi-Yeol readily agreed to that idea.

Jin-Woo closed his eyes and extended his Perception to the max.

‘Now, which path leads to the boss?’

He was hoping that maybe the boss would give him a few experience points, at the very least.

Soon enough, he could pick up on the auras of all living creatures inside the dungeon.

Jin-Woo opened his eyes and spoke to Song Chi-Yeol.

“Ahjussi, let’s go left.”

“Okay.”

Jin-Woo, Song Chi-Yeol, and Ju-Hui chose the left pathway, Kahng Tae-Sik and the three convicts the right one, and the remaining two went down the middle one.

Jin-Woo’s heart began beating a little bit faster.

‘The boss is at the end of this passage.’

Although it couldn’t be described as strong, a unique and different aura from that of a Goblin was leaking out from the end of this cavern-like passageway.

He wanted to quickly kill the boss.

However, groups of Goblins kept jumping out at him every couple of steps he took, and this hindered their progress.

“Kek, kek, kek,”

“Keeriick.”

“Keeiick.”

And this time, there were around ten of them or so.

One carried a wooden club. One held a wooden sword, one even held a long wooden shaft with a stone shard crudely tied around the tip....

They had armed themselves to the best of their abilities, but.... None of them managed to threaten him.

‘Haven’t you guys had enough yet?’

Jin-Woo frowned really deeply. It proved to be a such a bother, these b*stards that were worth nothing yet moved around in large groups like this.

“There are ten of them this time....”

“What should we do, ahjussi? Should we come back after finding the others?”

However, Jin-Woo’s two companions were getting rather sombre about the current predicament they were in.

“Still, there are only Goblins here, so maybe we should try fighting them first.”

“Okay.”

Flames formed on the tip of Song Chi-Yeol’s fingers, while Ju-Hui got ready to cast her healing magic as well.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo was scratching the back of his head.

‘Now that I think about it, I’m not feeling nervous at all even though I’m inside a dungeon.’

Was it because he had become incomparably stronger than before? Only now did he grow a little bit more conscious of the changes that had taken place inside him.

Song Chi-Yeol asked Jin-Woo.

“Mister Seong, are you ready?”

“Oh, uh, yes. I am.”

Jin-Woo matched the timing with the rest of his teammates and slowly hunted each Goblin down.

And so, as they steadily cleared the dungeon....

Out of the blue, screams reverberated throughout the dungeon from somewhere, one after the other.

“Uwwaahhk!!”

“Uwahhkk!!”

Those weren’t from the Goblins. No, they definitely belonged to humans.

Jin-Woo, Song Chi-Yeol, and Yi Ju-Hui exchanged glances.

They thought the things had calmed down, only for yet another desperate scream to enter their ears.

“Uwaahhh!!”

Song Chi-Yeol’s expression hardened.

“Let’s go take a look.”

The three of them quickly ran to where the screams came from.

Jin-Woo could’ve run faster than his two companions, but for the sake of their safety, matched their speeds.

....Just how long did they have to run?

Ju-Hui cried out in alarm after finding a person.

“There’s a person there....!”

And it just so happened to be the Hunter from the Monitoring Division, Kahng Tae-Sik. He was kneeling on the ground, covered completely in blood.

Kahng Tae-Sik shouted out at them.

“Be, be careful! I don’t know where they could be right now!”

Kahng Tae-Sik spat those words out with great difficulty before collapsing on the ground in pain.

“Euh-heuk....”

Ju-Hui couldn’t watch on anymore and hurriedly ran towards Kahng Tae-Sik.

“Hold on, I’ll heal you right now!”

Ju-Hui was thinking like this; regardless of where the enemies were hiding, she was still a Healer ranked B. Meaning, the speed of her healing magic was very fast.

So, she thought that before enemies attacked them, it’d be more advantageous for her to quickly heal Kahng Tae-Sik.

“Please hold on for a little while longer.”

Ju-Hui stood in front of Kahng Tae-Sik and reached out with both of her hands.

Gentle rays of light gathered near the ends of her hands.

It happened then.

Kahng Tae-Sik rapidly raised his upper body up and took aim at the centre of Ju-Hui’s neck with his hand full of magical energy.

Swish!!

Just before his fingertip could touch Ju-Hui’s Adam’s apple, someone managed to grab Kahng Tae-Sik’s wrist just in time.

Snap!

“Ahh...!!”

The stunned Ju-Hui stumbled backwards before falling on her rear.

Plop.

Kahng Tae-Sik’s expression became one of shocked amazement.

‘He stopped my attack in that short space of time?’

It was not a hard job for a high-ranked Hunter to deal with a handful of lower-ranked Hunters.

The only thorn in his side today happened to a female Hunter ranked B, the same rank as he was. The silver lining about this thorn was that she was not a combat-related Hunter. She didn't possess any abilities to protect herself, so as long as he succeeded in sneak attacking her, everything would end quite easily.

However... to think, his sneak attack would end up missing.

With things like this, there was no reward for all that great acting he had put on.

Kahng Tae-Sik's gaze followed the hand grabbing his wrist and to its owner. And Jin-Woo's face was at the end.

Jin-Woo's eyes were emitting a very strong light of murderous intent.

Kahng Tae-Sik frowned deeply.

“How dare you, a f*cking Association bottom-feeder!!”

Swish!

Kahng Tae-Sik's other fist flew towards Jin-Woo's face. However, Jin-Woo simply tilted his head out of the way and let the fist fly by.

‘What?!’

Kahng Tae-Sik hurriedly yanked his arm loose from Jin-Woo's grasp.

“Huh?”

Jin-Woo displayed his shock next. As expected from a high-ranked Hunter and his power.

Now that both of his hands were freed, Kahng Tae-Sik began pouring out attacks without a rest.

However, Jin-Woo also moved at the speed that didn't lose out to Kahng Tae-Sik's and went on the offensive of his own, too.

Pow-pow-pabababahat!!

Fists and arms belonging two men endlessly collided and traded countless blows.

None of them showed any signs of backing off.

Seizing this opportunity, Song Chi-Yeol quickly dragged Ju-Hui away from the area.

“Ah-ahjussi....”

Ju-Hui couldn't finish what she wanted to say because of the sheer shock from seeing what was happening right now.

However, there was one person here who was even more shocked than Ju-Hui, and that was none other than Song Chi-Yeol.

‘Just how on earth is this possible.....?’

This fierce battle unfolding at a scarcely believable speed – he was having a hard time trying to follow with his eyes.

Something like that was expected of a high-ranked Hunter, so that was fine, but then, the Seong Jin-Woo fighting that man couldn't have been the same person from Song Chi-Yeol's memories. The youth was definitely not losing out against a rank-B Hunter at all.

‘I'm a C-rank, and even I can't follow his movements with my eyes!’

Indeed, his gut feeling proved to be right.

The Jin-Woo in front of his eyes right now was not the same youth from his memories, an E-rank who was weak but possessing a good head on his shoulders.

In the blink of an eye, the two traded hundreds of blows and they quickly stepped back while trying to catch their breaths.

Jin-Woo glared at Kahng Tae-Sik and frowned.

“The blood on your clothes... I'm guessing it's not yours.”

Kahng Tae-Sik loosened his wrist and answered back.

“That's right, it belongs to those b*stards. Besides all that, I never expected to run into a Hunter of your calibre in this sh*tty place.”

Honestly speaking, Kahng Tae-Sik was really impressed.

He hadn't heard of any information regarding a high-ranking Hunter slumming it out along with those bottom-feeders working for the Association.

‘This is going to cost me big time.’

He thought that today would be the best time to act, so he did his deeds, but quite unexpectedly, he ran into a pretty steep hurdle here.

Kahng Tae-Sik couldn't control his curiosity and asked out aloud.

“Who the hell are you? What rank are you?”

Jin-Woo summoned the Poison Fang of Kasaka, and while grasping it tightly in his hand, replied rather curtly.

“Seong Jin-Woo. I’m rank E.”

Part 4. Rank B Kahng Tae-Sik

Kahng Tae-Sik felt like someone had hit him in the back of his head.

A b*stard that displayed the movement equal to his own speed, which was unmatched within the rank B, introduced himself as a measly rank E just now.

'Is he trying to make fun of me?'

Kahng Tae-Sik gnashed his teeth.

'No, hang on....'

Indeed, there was something odd here.

'If he's really a high-rank Hunter, there is no reason for him to be here, isn't it?'

The jobs these bottom-feeder Association Hunters did were quite obvious. Their main role was to clear those Gates that Guilds and freelancers gave up on because of their low monetary values.

Their earnings were pathetically small compared to other Hunters, and they were not widely acknowledged by other Hunters, either. In other words, there was a very good chance that this b*stard really was an E-rank.

Only that, his abilities were anything but.

'Still, a fake registrant wouldn't brazenly work under the Association like this, so...'

Kahng Tae-Sik eventually arrived at the only logical conclusion.

'...He's a Re-Awakened.'

When he thought about it, he remembered the upper echelons of the Association getting a bit noisier with a rumour of someone going through a Re-Awakening somewhere nearby this location.

'And, that person was supposedly a Hunter affiliated with the Association....'

He should've memorised that name back then.

As that matter happened only a couple of weeks ago, if this b*stard had been delaying getting a re-assignment test for some reason until now, it was very much possible for him to remain as an E-rank and assist the Association with their work.

Who could've guessed that such a guy would show up today?

Kahng Tae-Sik had made sure to perform thorough background checks on the Hunters participating in today's raid, but he had missed the existence of this one.

'I really have terrible luck, don't I?'

That's the only conclusion he could arrive at.

'I should've asked for more money, if things turned out this way....'

Kahng Tae-Sik recalled the events of a few days ago while licking his dried lips.

A few days ago....

A cafe near the headquarters of the Association.

Kahng Tae-Sik asked the moment he settled down in his seat.

"What business do you have with me?"

The middle-aged man sitting his opposite side seemed rather haggard for some reason.

'He said that he's an owner of some company, didn't he?'

Kahng Tae-Sik definitely did not know who this man was. However, he still decided to free up some time after this man continued to call him on the phone, sounding quite desperate and all.

The middle-aged man muttered as if he was speaking to himself.

"I've heard that no one knows what happens exactly inside dungeons."

The man's voice was so soft that Kahng Tae-Sik had to ask again.

"What did you say?"

"This is every cent I have in my name.'

The man suddenly presented his bank account book.

Kahng Tae-Sik alternated his gaze between the book and the man's face, before confirming the bank balance printed on the book's pages.

There was a substantial amount of ₩2,000,000,000 printed there.

“And why are you showing me this?”

When Kahng Tae-Sik formed a questioning expression, the middle-aged man’s head dropped lower.

“Among the criminals you’re in charge of, there is one who had hurt my little girl. Because of that, she took her own life, and my wife is still in the hospital from the shock.”

The middle-aged man’s voice became tearful.

“Yet, such a b*stard will be able to roam the streets again in a few years’ time.... You think I’ll be able to rest easy knowing that?”

The man raised his sorrow and rage-filled face.

“I’m sure you can already tell what I’m implying here.”

The man lowered his head again.

“I beg of you, Hunter-nim!!”

A deafening silence descended between these two men.

Kahng Tae-Sik leaned against the back of his chair and fell into a deep contemplation.

Only after a long while passed by did he open his mouth again.

“Can you guess why I chose to work for the Association’s Monitoring Division?”

“Pardon me?”

The middle-aged man raised his head.

Kahng Tae-Sik explained himself.

“As a B-rank Hunter, I’m considered as one of the higher ranked Hunters. Large Guilds continue to send their scouting offers in my direction all the time. Yet, can you guess why I persist in doing this job while getting a pittance in return?”

“I... I don’t know.”

The corners of Kahng Tae-Sik’s lips arched up.

“You see, I... I find it more enjoyable to fight against people rather than monsters.”

In that sense, the Monitoring Division was like the heaven-sent job for Kahng Tae-Sik.

Well, he could beat up other Hunters in the name of the law, after all. And he'd end up killing one or two due to unavoidable circumstances, too.

'Due to unavoidable circumstances..... Eh.'

Kahng Tae-Sik inwardly smiled and spoke.

"Stepping on that insect you told me about isn't going to be difficult at all. However, there will be other Hunters inside the dungeon besides the insect, as well. I might view that b*stard as an insect, but will other Hunters think that way, I wonder?"

The middle-aged man formed a disappointed expression after hearing Kahng Tae-Sik's rather pessimistic-sounding words.

And here he was, thinking that he'd finally get to avenge the death of his little girl. It felt like the heavens were crashing down on top of him.

However, Kahng Tae-Sik formed a sinister smile as if to mock the other man.

"This money, plus one billion Won on top of that, to deal with the other Hunters as well. Can you do it?"

However, if a Re-Awakened Hunter was among those 'other Hunters', then the amount of 3 billion Won was not quite enough. Well, his own life was on the line, after all.

The self-proclaimed rank E Hunter was still emitting a sharp, observant air even now. He looked as if he'd seize any slight opening there was.

Kahng Tae-Sik swallowed his saliva.

'I can't take him lightly.'

Kahng Tae-Sik was confident of winning here. He had never lost a single one-on-one fight even before he underwent the Awakening process.

However, even though he could win, it would not be an easy victory at all.

Right now, he had to revise his plans ever so slightly.

With a nice timing, the rank E Hunters asked a question.

"Those convicts... Why did you kill them?"

"The father of a girl who was raped by those b*stards came to ask me for the favour. Those b*stards were animals worthy of getting killed. And I simply took care of animals that hurt other people, that was all."

The rank E Hunter was listening without saying anything. It seemed quite likely that talking might work here. Kahng Tae-Sik went straight to persuading the other man.

“Although the matter had come down to this, I don’t wish to hurt you. How about ignoring today’s matter altogether? As long as we make this deal here, I promise I won’t try anything to you and your group.”

Of course, he couldn’t let a potential source of trouble fester.

That was why Kahng Tae-Sik was thinking. There was a chance that a head-on fight would result in him getting badly injured, so he’d get out of here first, wait for an opportune moment, and dispose of all the witnesses one at the time.

However, the rank E Hunter snorted derisively.

“You should’ve said those things before you tried your little tricks. You want us to ignore everything just because you failed your sneak attack?”

That man didn’t say anything wrong there.

Kahng Tae-Sik smirked in dumbfoundedness.

‘In the end, you want to have a go, is that it?’

Well, in that case, he’d have to go all out, then.

The light shimmering in Kahng Tae-Sik’s eyes became colder. His sharp glare quickly swept across the rank E Hunter top to bottom. And his forehead creased up for a second.

‘Where did he get his dagger from?’

Since before he had noticed it, the E-rank Hunter was holding a dagger.

‘Well... It shouldn’t be too important, is it?’

It didn’t matter where that weapon came from, indeed. What’s important here, though, was the type of the weapon.

Kahng Tae-Sik’s quickly concluded his assessment.

The class that used daggers and utilised quick movements; his opponent was a super-close type damage dealer.

Most likely, his speciality was ‘assassination’.

What a coincidence that their specialities happened to be the same.

However, this guy only underwent his Re-Awakening not too long ago. The difference in experience should be absolutely massive. He might not even be able to properly utilise the skills at his disposal.

“Let me teach you a thing or two as your senior.”

Kahng Tae-Sik extracted a knife from his hips and smirked derisively at the rank E Hunter.

“Can you do something like this?”

And then, Kahng Tae-Sik activated his ‘Stealth’ skill, thereby disappearing from the spot.

That caused the rank E Hunter to get flustered and he hurriedly looked around his vicinity. Kahng Tae-Sik could see his naked panic and confusion quite clearly.

‘But, that’s so obvious.’

The ‘Stealth’ skill didn’t only make one’s body go transparent.

The body, the sound, and even the smell!

The skill that cloaked everything about the person activating it!

That was the ‘Stealth’ skill in a nutshell.

There were only a handful of assassin-type Hunters who could use this skill in the entire world.

Utterly unrelated to one’s ranks, you just had to be a lucky few who unlocked this skill when going through the Awakening process.

‘Let’s end this in one hit!’

Kahng Tae-Sik swiftly moved to the rear of the E-rank Hunter. His back was wide open, unguarded.

‘This is the end.’

He was expecting to engage in a bitter battle, but it turned out to be a rather simple fight in the end. If the opponent was getting ready to counter the Stealth skill, then it’d not be this easy at all.

As expected, the difference in experience decided the victor today.

‘Die!’

Kahng Tae-Sik’s knife aimed at the spot just below the E-rank Hunter’s ribs and powerfully stabbed forward.

However!!

Clang!!

Two daggers collided in the air and sparks flew off.

With his Stealth skill deactivated, one could now see Kahng Tae-Sik's wide open eyes.

“What?! But how!!”

The E-rank Hunter's dagger had accurately blocked off his own dagger.

Unable to hide his shock, Kahng Tae-Sik raised his eyes and looked up at the E-rank Hunter's face.

And that Hunter opened his mouth with a totally unimpressed face.

“Oh, so now you decide to pop up.”

“Wha-what did you say?”

Unable to understand the words of this rank E Hunter, Kahng Tae-Sik suddenly felt this inexplicable fear in his heart.

Tti-ring!

[Emergency Quest: Kill all the enemies!]

There are lifeforms holding murderous intentions towards the 'Player'. Kill them all in order to secure your own safety. If you do not follow this instruction, a corresponding penalty will be given.

The number of enemies left to kill: 1

The number of killed enemies: 0

Jin-Woo confirmed the Emergency Quest message and breathed a sigh of relief.

‘It wasn't a waste of time.’

He was kinda worried, that if Kahng Tae-Sik didn't take the initiative, Jin-Woo wouldn't receive the Emergency Quest notification. It was quite unlike how it was with Hwang Dong-Seok and his gang back then.

That was why he tested the System out, and it was as he expected.

The moment Kahng Tae-Sik revealed his murderous intent, the message popped up.

He wasn't just mindlessly chatting with the guy, or revealing his 'panic', or showing off openings for nothing until now.

‘I really didn't know he could use Stealth, though....’

Actually, when Kahng Tae-Sik did disappear in front of his eyes, Jin-Woo was slightly taken aback.

Well, 'Stealth' was a pretty rare skill, after all.

But, when he concentrated a bit harder, he easily and accurately sensed Kahng Tae-Sik's every movement. So much so that he could close his eyes and still find his target with no problem.

This was the effect of his enhanced Perception Stat.

He continued to invest on this Stat just so he could tell whether he should fight or flight, but today, he learned of a new use for it.

'I got lucky.'

Thanks to that, Kahng Tae-Sik was getting shocked out of his mind as if he had seen the ghosts of his ancestors.

"But, how?!"

And now, when Jin-Woo takes care of this murdering b*stard, he'd be able to enjoy the quest's delicious rewards.

'If I'm going to fight anyway, then I might as well get everything I'm supposed to, no?'

It was his turn now.

From now on, he'd start attacking for real.

The two daggers locked in a deadly embrace continued to push against each other.

It seemed that their strength was about the same.

It was here when Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed dangerously.

'In that case, should I find an opening somewhere else?'

Jin-Woo's leg moved in an instant, and he stomped on Kahng Tae-Sik's foot.

STOMP!!

"Uwaahk?!"

REPORT

Kahng Tae-Sik had been paying attention only to the daggers, so he got really stunned by the pain shooting up from his foot, causing him to hurriedly step back.

Jin-Woo didn't miss this opportunity.

'Dash!'

['Skill: Dash' has been activated.]

[Your movement speed has increased by 30%. One Mana will be spent every minute during its activation.]

Jin-Woo rapidly got closer to his target.

Kahng Tae-Sik's eyes grew wider still.

'He got faster?!'

Jin-Woo had been displaying an already high level of agile movements, but now that he had gotten even faster, Kahng Tae-Sik found it quite disorientating.

Jin-Woo closed the distance in the blink of an eye and sank his Poison Fang of Kasaka down on Kahng Tae-Sik's thigh.

"Kuwahhkhk!!"

He aimed there precisely because Kahng Tae-Sik was focused on defending his upper body only.

['Effect: Paralysis' has been activated.]

[The effect has been cancelled due to the high resistance of the target.]

['Effect: Bleeding' has been activated.]

[The target's stamina will decrease by 1% per second.]

'Nice!'

The added effects of the Kasaka dagger kicked in as well. It was a bit regretful that the 'Paralysis' didn't work, but still, this fight had become just a tad easier now.

However, Kahng Tae-Sik was a high-ranked Hunter himself! So, his resistance was nothing to scoff about. His dagger aimed at Jin-Woo's vitals and continued to fly in.

Swish, swish!

Jin-Woo evaded the blade with only a hair's breadth and also attacked Kahng Tae-Sik's vital spots.

Even though his thigh was badly damaged, Kahng Tae-Sik calmly defended against Jin-Woo's attacks, as befitting an experienced Hunter.

Clang! Cling!

Cold sweat drops formed on the foreheads of both men.

'Our speeds are about the same!'

'We're moving at the same speed!'

Two men were inwardly admiring each other's agile movements and continued to clash in a dazzling display of super-close proximity knife fighting.

Several powerful attacks, each one capable of ending this fight if hit, were exchanged without rest.

Swish, swish, swiiish, swish, swish, swish!!

It was a truly scary and gripping battle that caused the onlooker's blood to go cold.

'I gotta break this stalemate somehow.'

Jin-Woo gathered strength in his eyes.

['Skill: Intimidation' has been activated.]

The moment his eyes met Jin-Woo's, Kahng Tae-Sik flinched slightly for some reason.

'What was that?'

['Effect: Fear' has been activated.]

['The target's (All) Stats will decrease by 50% for one minute.]

'It worked!'

Jin-Woo knew that he had won now.

On the other hand, a small earthquake erupted in Kahng Tae-Sik's eyes.

'How come my body is.....?'

After he had met Jin-Woo's gaze, his body felt as heavy as if he was floundering in deep water or some such. His trusty speed began decreasing as well.

Swish! Swiiish!!

Wounds on Kahng Tae-Sik's body increased quickly one by one.

'This, this isn't possible!'

Kahng Tae-Sik's thoughts became confused and messy.

This was, without a doubt, a debuffing effect. But, he had never, ever heard of a case where an assassin class was able to use a debuff magic.

'Assassination was not his speciality, then?'

If that was the case, then what was up with his crazy speed?

However, Kahng Tae-Sik had stopped his train of thoughts there. His confusion had rapidly morphed into panic, instead. Because... he had spotted Jin-Woo abruptly rushing in closer.

Kahng Tae-Sik hurriedly took aim at Jin-Woo's eyes.

Swish!!

Jin-Woo quickly tilted his head out of the way, but the dagger still managed to graze his cheek.

Of course, he knew he'd get hurt, at least by this much, or even worse. In order to get that decisive strike in, he decided to take the risk.

Kahng Tae-Sik's expression crumpled.

'F*ck.'

Jin-Woo succeeded in getting close to Kahng Tae-Sik's chest and stabbed down on the latter with the Poison Fang of Kasaka.

Stab.

"Keo-heok!!"

Kahng Tae-Sik's eyes shot open wider.

Both men knew right away at that moment. The victor had been truly decided with that one move.

Crimson-red blood pooled in Kahng Tae-Sik's mouth. It was gushing up from his chest. As blood leaked out from the side of his lips, Kahng Tae-Sik formed a smirk.

To actually run into a Re-Awakened Hunter inside a lowly rank D dungeon....

'Me and my seriously rotten.....'

The dagger in Kahng Tae-Sik's hand fell to the floor.

He continued to pant heavily as he leaned his head closer and whispered something in Jin-Woo's ear.

"....."

Jin-Woo silently listened to those last words, before pulling the dagger out from Kahng Tae-Sik's chest.

Just like a dress slipping off a clothes hanger, Kahng Tae-Sik crumpled to the floor, lifeless.

Plop.

Tti-ring!

[You have completed 'Emergency Quest: Kill all the enemies'.]

The expected messages did pop up, but Jin-Woo's expression wasn't so good. Just like the last time, the aftertaste of killing someone remained bitter and nothing to feel too happy about. Even though the other guy attacked first and initiated this fight....

[Completion rewards are now available.]

[Would you like to confirm the rewards?] (Y/N)

If there were no rewards, then this would be one hell of a loss-loss situation, that.

Jin-Woo consoled himself with that line of thought and confirmed the rewards.

Tti-ring!

[The following rewards are available.]

Reward 1. Five additional Stat points

'Huh?'

Jin-Woo formed a confused expression.

The reward on offer was far, far less than when compared to fighting Hwang Dong-Seok and his goons.

'But, it was a far harder opponent this time, though?'

Did this mean the number of enemies was more important than the skills of the opponent? Or, was there something else he hadn't figured out yet?

Jin-Woo tilted his head slightly.

It was here that Jin-Woo lowered his gaze and ended up spotting something rather odd. There was a spot of flickering light about as big as a coin gleaming on the corpse of Kahng Tae-Sik.

Jin-Woo's eyes grew wider and wider.

'No way, could it be....?'

Although he could hardly believe it, that light seemed far too similar to the one emitted by the loot found on the dead monsters from the instant dungeons.

That light also indicated the position of the magic crystal inside a monster from the Gates. But now, the dead Kahng Tae-Sik was emitting this light.

'What does this mean?'

Jin-Woo calmed his trembling heart and quietly reached out towards the chest area of Kahng Tae-Sik where that flickering light was coming from.

Tti-ring.

Indeed, he wasn't seeing things just now.

[You've discovered 'Rune Stone: Stealth'. Take it?]

'A Rune Stone?! Are you talking about THAT Rune Stone....??'

His heart began pounding even harder than before.

The skill Kahng Tae-Sik used had now become a Rune Stone and was waiting to be discovered on his body.

'Stealth' was a rare skill that only a select few Hunters could use. If this message was indeed talking about the Rune Stones he knew, then....

'Acquire it.'

Suddenly, a small rock with mysterious runic letters carved on the surface appeared in his hand.

[Rune Stone: Stealth]

You can absorb the skill by breaking this Rune Stone.

....Absorbing skills by breaking the stone.

As the description said, this rock was definitely a Rune Stone.

By breaking it, he'd be able to use Stealth from now on.

He had not heard of a Rune Stone that taught one to use Stealth being put up for sale until now. So, it was impossible to estimate just how much this little Rune Stone would go for in the marketplace.

It was then, he heard the voices of two people coming from his rear.

“Mister Seong, are you alright?!”

“Mister Jin-Woo!!”

Jin-Woo hid the Rune Stone inside his pocket and turned around.

And he found Song Chi-Yeol and Yi Ju-Hui busy gawking at him with eyes filled with disbelief.

The rank E Hunter Jin-Woo, who used to struggle like there’s no tomorrow in a rank D dungeon, just defeated a rank B Hunter Kahng Tae-Sik.

As a non-combatant class, Yi Ju-Hui didn’t know this, but the rank C Song Chi-Yeol knew very well how incredibly crazy that notion was.

Jin-Woo checked out his own appearance.

“Well, yeah, I’m okay.”

From a casual glance, he was totally fine. He wasn’t feeling any pain, either. But, when he turned his head a bit, the blood pooling around his chin dribbled down. He reflexively touched his cheek and found that the cut he got earlier was bleeding now.

“Oh.”

“Let me heal that for you.”

For a second or two, a blue light danced around Ju-Hui’s fingertips, before that little cut disappeared from the view.

That was the confirmation; a rank E had successfully defeated a rank B without a single injury.

For the two people here that knew Jin-Woo, rather than the fact of a rank B Hunter trying to kill them, it was the fact of the youth before them defeating said Hunter that shocked them the most.

“How can you be able to.....”

Song Chi-Yeol couldn’t finish his sentence.

Jin-Woo, of course, knew what Song Chi-Yeol and Ju-Hui wanted to say here. That was why he opened his mouth first.

“I’m really sorry. When the right time comes, I’ll tell you both everything, so please, don't ask me anything for the time being."

When Jin-Woo made a request in a grave voice, Ju-Hui nodded her head first. Eventually, Song Chi-Yeol nodded, as well.

"If you're saying that, then you must have your reasons. I understand, young man."

Jin-Woo then turned his head in the direction where the boss was. Although the situation had become complicated somewhat, his plan of killing the boss hadn't changed.

He wanted to kill the boss by himself if possible. Also, there was another thing he had to, meaning these two couldn't be here.

Jin-Woo looked back at Song Chi-Yeol.

"With what has happened here, I think it's impossible to continue on with this raid anymore. For the time being, you two should leave the dungeon and contact the Association. I'll remain here and search for other survivors."

Song Chi-Yeol instantly realised what Jin-Woo was trying to do.

'He's going to close the Gate all by himself.'

Even from the older man's perspective, doing that would ensure the least amount of suspicion.

"That would be a good idea. Miss Ju-Hui, let's go ahead first."

Ju-Hui hesitated after hearing Song Chi-Yeol's recommendation, but then, she quickly ran at Jin-Woo.

"You haven't forgotten about our dinner date, right?"

Jin-Woo smiled gently.

"I haven't. I still need to ask you for my change, remember?"

"In that case, you honour that promise, okay? I'll be waiting on the outside."

Jin-Woo nodded his head, and that must have relaxed her a lot since she took a step back without saying anything else.

Even as she was escaping from the dungeon, she continued to look behind her several times.

Jin-Woo only let out a sigh once the shadows of the two people were gone for good.

“Fuu-woo.”

And he really wanted to hide for as long as possible, but....

In the end, he got discovered.

There were two eyewitnesses, so it was impossible to talk his way out of this one now.

‘It’s not like I can threaten Ju-Hui or Mister Song ahjussi, either.’

Killing the rank B should be seen as self-defence. He had two eyewitnesses, so no worries there. The real issue would be with how a rank E managed to kill a rank B.

‘I guess being a Re-Awakened is the most plausible excuse there is, huh.’

He decided to go with that one, then.

He’d reveal himself to be a Re-Awakened Hunter and get himself a re-assignment test.

No one would believe him even if he told them about the System or levelling up and all the other stuff. There was also no reason for him to reveal that information voluntarily, anyway.

After he decided to go through with the re-assignment test, he kind of felt relieved on one hand, and a bit wistful on the other.

‘And here I was, hoping to do the test only after I got even stronger....’

But, since when did the world move as one wished?

There was nothing he could do about it now.

‘I wonder, how high will my new rank be?’

Since he fought on equal footing with Kahng Tae-Sik, was he slightly stronger than a rank B Hunter at this moment?

He thought that he had gotten really strong now, but as it turned out, those high ranking Hunters, starting from B all the way up to S, were indeed all freakish existences far surpassing his imaginations.

‘Oh well, let’s think about the future once I get out of here.’

For the time being, he had to get rid of the boss first.

The dungeon that emitted magical energy waves equalling a rank D only had a bunch of rank E Goblins inside. In that case, there was a good chance that the magical energy wave was actually coming solely from the boss.

A boss like that should give him enough experience points for a level up.

‘But before I do that...’

There was something else he had better confirm first.

Jin-Woo pushed his Perception to the limit and carefully combed over all auras present within the dungeon.

“Found you.”

Jin-Woo began waking to his new destination.

On the way, he discovered the cold corpses of Kim Sang-Sik and the other Hunter.

This was the power of a high ranked Hunter; if such a Hunter really wanted to, then killing a few lower ranked Hunters could be done in the blink of an eye.

Jin-Woo’s expression hardened as he walked past them.

REPORT

A short while later.

“Euph, euph, euph!!”

Jin-Woo discovered a lone convict struggling on the ground not too far from him. His arms and legs were all tied up with a rope, and there was a gag placed in his mouth.

It was as Kahng Tae-Sik said, just before his final breath.

“I’ve tied up the rapist not too far from here. I was thinking of disposing of him last, after the victim’s father asked me to make him suffer for a bit.”

Kahng Tae-Sik stopped breathing after those words.

The convict began to struggle even harder after seeing Jin-Woo. It was as if he was asking to be freed as soon as possible.

“Euph! Euph! Euph!”

Now that Jin-Woo took a closer look, it was none other than the same guy who threw a dirty wink at Ju-Hui earlier on.

As soon as Jin-Woo pulled the gag off the convict’s mouth, he breathed in and out heavily and widened his eyes.

“Pant, pant, pant!! That, that crazy b*stard, Kahng Tae-Sik killed everyone! He killed everyone!! What the f*ck happened?? Did he leave? There’s blood on your clothes?! Did you get done in by him, too??”

Jin-Woo didn’t reply and simply raised his head to stare straight ahead.

...Towards where the boss was.

The convict’s words poured out in great urgency.

“Untie me first. Hurry! We gotta escape before Kahng Tae-Sik shows up! God d*mn it!! There’s some sort of magic energy flowing in the ropes and I can’t tear them apart! You have some sort of a weapon with you, right? Why aren’t you saying anything? Can’t you hear me??”

When a bottom-feeder Hunter from the Association continued to ignore him, the convict forgot about the position he was in and began frowning in dissatisfaction.

Remaining expressionless until then, Jin-Woo finally opened his mouth.

“The boss should be just up ahead.”

“What?”

A confused, questioning expression floated up on the face of the convict.

“Feels like it’s a bit stronger than a regular rank D dungeon boss, too. I’m getting really curious about its attack patterns, you see.”

The convict listened to those words and lost his cool, roaring out at the top of his voice.

“What the f*ck are you even talking about?!”

Jin-Woo calmly continued on with what he wanted to say.

“Before all that, though, I gotta ask you about something. You remember the girl you raped before?”

“What? Which one are you talking about? You a family member of the victim?”

Jin-Woo’s brows quivered.

Just now, this man asked ‘which one’, rather than answering with yes or no. Meaning, he had hurt well more than one or two girls.

Hunters possessed extraordinary strength, so if they wanted to, they could become a horrifying monster at any time. And this b*stard used that strength to violate women until now.

With that, Jin-Woo’s mind was made up.

He coldly stared down at the convict and spoke.

“Now I know, so there’s that.”

“What?! Euph? Euph!!”

Before the convict uttered out more rubbish, Jin-Woo swiftly gagged the b*stard again. Then, he began slowly dragging the convict by the ankles towards the boss room.

“Euph! Euph!! Eeuuuph!!!”

The convict struggled even more desperately as he got dragged along. Both of his wide-open eyes were now completely bloodshot.

Not even slightly fazed by the criminal’s desperate struggle, Jin-Woo successfully dragged him into the boss room.

“Euph! Euphhh!!”

And inside the boss room, there was a large group of Hobgoblins waiting for their arrival. These monsters reputedly enjoyed snacking on human entrails. Apparently.

“Euph! Euph!! Euphhh!!”

The convict finally realised what Jin-Woo was planning to do here.

He cried out and shook his head around wildly after seeing the group of Hobgoblins. The blue convict’s pants began dyeing in a yellow colour, as well.

“Fuu-woo.”

Jin-Woo took a deep breath, and he chucked the convict among the waiting Hobgoblins.

“Eeuuuph-!!”

“Kiiiigiik.”

“Kiihit.”

“Kiiiieekk!”

Picking up on the smell of a fresh, living prey, Hobgoblins pounced on the convict all at once and began tearing into his stomach.

“Eeeuupph!! Euph! Euphhh!!”

As the convict desperately struggled on and thrashed about, the vessels in his eyes burst open one by one, dyeing his eyes utterly crimson red.

“Eeeupphhh..... Euh, euh.....”

Even though the convict gradually lost his consciousness, Hobgoblins greedily and restlessly tore into him.

Just what would it feel like to be devoured alive by the disgusting monsters?

Jin-Woo frowned deeply as he quickly scanned the interior of the room, searching for the boss.

‘There it is.’

A huge Hobgoblin, definitely the boss of this dungeon, sat arrogantly over yonder on the other side of the boss room.

With its subordinates all too preoccupied with the fresh prey, there was not one guard around the boss itself, which meant that this was the perfect opportunity.

‘Dash!’

Jin-Woo immediately dashed past the Hobgoblins in the blink of an eye and arrived before the boss.

“Kkieehk?!”

The surprised Hobgoblin boss quickly stood up, but before it could complete the action, its head fell and rolled on the ground.

Plop.

Tumble, tumble.

Tti-ring!

[You’ve killed the owner of this dungeon.]

[Level up!]

‘Ah, hang on a sec.’

Only after he had sliced the boss’s head off did Jin-Woo remember the existence of the Rune Stone.

‘There was no need to lure them out with a bait, was there? I could’ve just learned the Stealth skill and sneaked closer, couldn’t I?’

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to what little remained of the convict and clicked his tongue.

Of course, he wasn’t feeling any sympathy for the b*stard there.

‘Well, whatever.....’

In any case, his plan was a success.

Part 5. Cogwheel

It wasn’t difficult to deal with the group of confused and leaderless Hobgoblins.

“Kiiiiek!!”

“kiiiiaahhk!!!”

“Kyahk!!”

The Hobgoblins ran around trying to escape from Jin-Woo, but were all hunted down soon afterwards.

“Kkyaaahkk!”

When he killed the very last one, another feel-good message popped into his view.

[Level up!]

'It rose up again?'

His expression brightened up after this rather unexpected reward of the day's labour fell into his lap.

Jin-Woo cleaned all the blood off the Poison Fang of Kasaka, and along with all the magic crystals extracted from the Hobgoblins, stored them inside his Inventory, before summoning his Status Window.

Gatekeeper's Necklace (A)

Before he knew it, his level was almost near the '30' mark.

Jin-Woo wasn't expecting much from this dungeon at the time of hunting down the weak Goblins by the entrance. But, well, he got a level up by killing the Hobgoblin boss, and then another one from hunting down every single one of the Hobgoblin underlings, as well. His level rose up by two in such a short time.

What a lucky day it was for him, every single strong monster being in the boss room and all.

'No, hang on a bit here. It's a bit too much to call this good luck, huh.'

Three diverging pathways, and the difficulty of the boss room....

If the low-ranked Hunters got too conceited after hunting down weak Goblins and arrogantly stepped into the boss room, then they might have met with a serious accident from the appearance of all these Hobgoblins.

Unlike the Goblins, Hobgoblins were pretty tough monsters to contend with.

'There are some instances of Hobgoblins appearing in dungeons full of Goblins, but...'

Well, it was still very rare to see such a big group of Hobgoblins in a single location as it was in the case of this dungeon.

Really now, it was utterly impossible to predict what might happen inside a dungeon. Someone's lucky day might turn into someone else's worst nightmare.

The only protection one had in this place was the one's own power.

That was why Jin-Woo wanted to get stronger. Surviving inside a dungeon was one thing, but what if there was a dungeon break near the hospital where his mother was staying?

What if, he got sneak-attacked by a monster while out walking on the street?

No, the monsters wouldn't be the only problems to worry about, either.

Hunters were also dangerous existences, just as much as the monsters themselves. Even if various organisations were trying to manage them, there would always be a limit.

Indeed, he needed to possess the necessary strength to protect himself.

‘There are limits to how powerful a Hunter could become.’

However, there was no such thing for himself.

Theoretically, he could grow stronger indefinitely as long as his Stats increased and he found the right type of equipment to wear.

And today, one more method of getting stronger had been added to his arsenal. It was none other than the Rune Stones!

Jin-Woo pulled out the Rune Stone from his pocket.

Just like with other items, the information on the stone floated up like a hologram projection.

[Rune Stone: Stealth]

You can absorb the skill by breaking this Rune Stone.

To those who didn't know, this thing would've come across as a small pebble with weird letters carved on the surface, but if you were a Hunter, you'd be salivating like crazy regardless of what your rank was.

High-ranked Hunters would've used it for themselves, while the lower-ranked ones would've sold it to the higher ranked Hunters.

And a Rune Stone containing rare skills, such as this one with the 'Stealth' skill, would've especially fetched a large amount of money. When placed in an auction, this particular stone should fetch at least a few billion Won, and when sold through the black market, several times more than that.

There was only one reason why it would be more expensive in the black market. Because, there would be no official record of who bought what with how much money, that was why.

Having a hidden skill was the same thing as possessing one more powerful weapon.

‘...Just like how Kahng Tae-Sik had been hiding his Stealth skill.’

If it weren't for his high Perception Stat, Jin-Woo would've been killed for sure. Thinking about that sent chills down his spine.

‘Let's forget about selling this. I can always make money later on.’

He'd not fall for the monetary temptation right now. His current priority was to become stronger than ever before, after all.

There was no need to even mention just how useful this rare 'Stealth' skill would prove to be in the future.

“And to think, this little stone is worth several houses, no, several buildings, even.”

Still, Jin-Woo quickly did something he’d never have dreamed of doing in the past.

When he squeezed his hand tightly, the Rune Stone shattered into pieces without much resistance.

Crack.

A reddish aura seeped out from the cracks of the Rune Stone and slowly wrapped around his body.

It was almost the same as when receiving the effects of the healing magic. Only the colour was wrong, being red and not blue.

In any case, it wasn’t a bad sensation.

The reddish aura circling around him smoothly entered through his nose and was absorbed into his lungs. Right away, he could sense an unknown power well up inside of him.

A familiar mechanical beep went off shortly afterwards, too.

Tti-ring!

[You’ve learned ‘Skill: Stealth’.]

[You can now use ‘Skill: Stealth’.]

‘Nice!’

He managed to successfully absorb the skill.

He was feeling rather nervous since this would be his first time using a Rune Stone to learn a skill, but the whole process turned out to be unexpectedly quick and simple.

‘So, does this mean that I can use Stealth now?’

His heart began pounding harder from the sense of accomplishment after learning a rare skill.

Well, the wise elders, they said that seeing was believing, so....

Jin-Woo activated his new skill right away.

‘Stealth.’

Just as he finished thinking about activating it, his body vanished from his own view. From the tips of his fingers right down to his toes, every part of him became transparent.

What a strange feeling it was, unable to see his own hands right in front of his eyes.

‘What would happen if I do this?’

Since he thought about it, Jin-Woo quickly summoned his dagger from the Inventory to confirm.

Then, he sensed gripping something in his hand. Rather mystifyingly, though, he could sense it but couldn't see it.

‘As expected....’

Just like the knife that Kahng Tae-Sik had been carrying around, the ‘Stealth’ skill was also applied to his Poison Fang of Kasaka.

As he thought, it wasn't that Kahng Tae-Sik's weapon was strange, it was simply the power of this skill, instead.

‘I wonder, just how far does this skill cover?’

REPORT

Jin-Woo picked a pebble up from the ground, and it too disappeared from the sight.

‘Can I do that with this, too?’

He got even more curious, so he reached out and touched the shoulder of the dead Hobgoblin, but nothing happened next. It seemed that there definitely was a limit to this skill.

At least, he was now sure of the clothes he wore and the objects held in his hand being affected by the skill.

It happened right then.

[You’ve exhausted all of your Mana and ‘Skill: Stealth’ will be deactivated.]

“Eh?”

Suddenly, ‘Stealth’ came undone.

‘But, it has been only a few seconds, though??’

Jin-Woo had been moving his body this way and that, trying to familiarise himself with the state of being cloaked, but after the skill came undone all by itself, he hurriedly summoned the skill list and confirmed the details with a flustered look on his face.

[Skills]

Passive skills:

- Intimidation Lv. 1
- Stealth Lv. 1

What he sought was the information on the Stealth skill.

The relevant words quickly floated up before his eyes.

Tti-ring!

[Skill: Stealth Lv. 1]

Active skill.

Mana required to activate: 200

Simultaneously cloaks the body and hides all traces of the skill holder. During its activation, 10 Mana will be spent every second.

He needed 200 Mana to activate, and further 10 would be spent every bloody second?!

“Hah....”

No wonder his MP couldn't hold up.

[MP: 7/548]

His remaining Mana of 7 looked rather pitiful to his eyes.

‘It’s really all spent up, huh.’

Currently, the maximum amount of Mana he could store was around 550. If he were to activate the Stealth skill once, he'd be able to maintain the cloaked state for around 35 seconds.

But, if he were to use other skills, then he'd not even get the full 35 seconds, either.

‘Now that I think about it, even Kahng Tae-Sik cancelled his Stealth pretty quickly, didn't he?’

He didn't do that accidentally, as it turned out.

If a high-ranking Hunter like Kahng Tae-Sik couldn't keep the skill going for long, then it meant that lower-ranked Hunters wouldn't even be able to use it.

“....My Mana is the issue here, huh.”

Until now, he had invested all his Stat points on every Stat other than Intelligence, and not even once did his MP value rise up from doing that.

In other words, he now needed to raise the Intelligence Stat as well....

‘I guess it's about time I did that.’

Still, it kind of felt like a waste investing his hard-earned Stat points on a non-combat related Stat just so he could use a skill for a few seconds longer.

‘Compared to other Stats, Intelligence just has too low of an efficiency.’

Strength, Stamina, Agility, and Perception.

He had personally felt the effects of those four Stats increasing. As they increased in value, he became physically stronger and stronger.

The only Stat that he couldn't sense any tangible change taking place inside him was this Intelligence, although it had climbed up a bit now.

‘I mean, it's now almost four times the value compared to when I was a level 1.’

If he were to really dig around and find the difference, then it'd be his increased MP value. That was all, really.

So, to invest his points on this Stat based only on a single result like that.....

‘It's just too wasteful.’

Those points would become his flesh and blood if he were to invest them elsewhere. The only conclusion he could draw here was to continue on with his levelling up until he no longer had to worry about his MP.

Meanwhile, he'd spend his precious Stat points on other, better Stats....

‘My Stat points....’

He abruptly recalled that he still had five extra points he got as the reward from the emergency quest.

He pondered for a second or two on whether he should invest that on ‘Intelligence’, but in the end, he spent 3 points on Strength and the other 2 on Stamina.

‘As I thought, numbers ending in 5s are the best.’

As a satisfied smile formed on Jin-Woo's face...

RUMBLE....

The earthquake inside the interior of the dungeon became too severe for him to ignore.

'Is it the one hour mark already?'

There was no more time to waste here.

Jin-Woo closed his Status Window. He had been deliberately wasting time, waiting for the Gate to nearly close, but if he stayed here for a second longer, he might get trapped inside, unable to leave forever.

Before leaving, Jin-Woo turned around and swept his gaze around the boss room one more time.

'I extracted all the magic crystals, and...'

Well, it looked like he hadn't missed a thing.

After confirming this fact, he rapidly disappeared down the exit.

RUMBLE...

As if to warn those still inside that the Gate was about to close, the dungeon began shaking even harder than before.

With excellent timing, agents from the Association's Investigation Department arrived in front of the Gate. Their eyes grew real round after spotting Jin-Woo leisurely exiting from the Gate as it gradually closed behind him.

"H-Hunter-nim!! Are there any other survivors besides you?"

"No. No one else."

"Euh!!"

The expressions of the agents hardened in an instant.

Nine people entered it, yet only three walked out alive. This undoubtedly qualified as a huge incident.

What with several similarly bad incidents occurring within a single district, it was little wonder why these Association agents felt like they had stepped on an almighty pile of dog poo at this very moment.

They wanted to make sure there were no other survivors, but the Gate closed on them so that was no longer possible, too.

This was precisely the reason why Jin-Woo waited around until the time limit was almost up, however.

‘Well, I can’t let them know that there indeed was a survivor, now can I?’

With this, the testimonies of the three survivors would have to suffice. One of the agents spoke with a complicated tone of voice.

“Just now, the Investigation Department has received a telephone call from the chairman of the Geumgang Industries, wishing to hand himself over.”

It was here that Song Chi-Yeol entered into the conversation.

“The chairman of the Geumgang Industries, you say?”

“He’s the father of the victim, and he allegedly has paid off the Hunter Kahng Tae-Sik from the Monitoring Division to murder the convicts.”

“Oh....”

The chairman had confessed to everything after he heard that Kahng Tae-Sik was indeed successful in killing the rapist.

‘Although, it wasn’t Kahng Tae-Sik but me....’

Cops headed there, and the Association came here, it seemed.

Jin-Woo listened quietly before asking a question.

“If that’s the case, there is no problem on this side, isn’t that right?”

At Jin-Woo’s question, the agents formed troubled expressions.

“Yes, basically.”

There was a clear evidence of Kahng Tae-Sik’s crimes, and these three people fought Kahng Tae-Sik in order to survive. Just as Jin-Woo asked, there was nothing here that could be seen as problematic.

...Except for one thing.

One of the agents asked the part that felt the most suspicious to him.

“Just who delivered the final killing blow to Mister Kahng Tae-Sik, who was a rank B Hunter?”

The agents had only arrived at the scene not too long ago, and they were not briefed on the minute details of the situation yet.

‘Oh, well. The distance from here to the Association headquarters is really far, so it can’t be helped, huh. It’s already quite commendable that they had arrived here before the Gate actually closed.’

They surely had to leave the HQ and drive super fast to get here in time as soon as receiving the call.

Hints of fatigue were clearly visible on the faces of the agents.

Just before Jin-Woo was about to speak the truth, he recalled the face of Yu Jin-Ho.

‘What a missed opportunity this is, but looks like I won’t be helping that kid out with his raid quota after all.’

By making an excuse of him being a Re-Awakened Hunter, and going ahead with the re-assignment test, he’d not be able to humour Yu Jin-Ho’s plan anymore.

What Yu Jin-Ho looked for was a low-ranked Hunter that possessed incredible skills. As soon as Jin-Woo’s ranking was re-assigned and it dramatically rose up, everything would’ve been for nothing.

However, what was up here?

When Jin-Woo imagined the dejected, depressed face of Yu Jin-Ho, he found that sight rather humorous, instead of feeling apologetic.

Sure, Jin-Woo was kind of bummed out about the promised building, but, oh well.

‘Well, naught I can do here now.’

Jin-Woo thought as such and was about to open his mouth, but then....

“It was me.”

...His head naturally swivelled towards the source of that voice. And he saw Yi Ju-Hui, her wide-open eyes full of surprise, staring at Song Chi-Yeol.

“But, ahjussi....?”

Before Jin-Woo could ask what his intentions were, Song Chi-Yeol took the initiative and walked closer to the agents.

“I’m the one who killed Kahng Tae-Sik.”

The questioning agent still didn’t look convinced, however.

“Song Chi-Yeol Hunter-nim, are you saying that you brought down Kahng Tae-Sik Hunter-nim?”

His suspicions had merit; not only was Song Chi-Yeol a rank C Hunter, but he also had lost his left arm as well. On the other hand, wasn’t Kahng Tae-Sik often referred to as a high-ranked Hunter, someone who was ranked B?

The power of high ranked Hunters easily exceeded one's imaginations. The accepted norm was that the difference in strength between a rank B and a rank C was far, far wider than that between a rank C and a rank D.

It was here that Song Chi-Yeol began chuckling amiably.

“Have you all forgotten just who is behind me?”

“...Ah!”

Just as the gazes of everyone focused on her, Yi Ju-Hui's face reddened and she quickly lowered her head.

Yi Ju-Hui was a B-ranked Hunter. She hadn't been mentioned until now because her class was not combat-related, but when looking only at her rank, then she was a high-ranked Hunter, just like Kahng Tae-Sik had been.

Why wouldn't a rank C Hunter be able to defeat a rank B Hunter, when a rank B Healer was lending her aid from the side?

The agents finally formed expressions of understanding.

Taking the opportunity born from the momentary confusion, Jin-Woo stood real close to Song Chi-Yeol and whispered to the older man.

“Why are you lying to them, ahjussi?”

Song Chi-Yeol replied back in a whisper as well.

“I thought that there must be a good reason why you were trying to conceal your abilities. Did I overstep my boundaries?”

Of course, he didn't. Thanks to him, Jin-Woo would get to avoid dealing with many inconvenient matters. This was the reason why one could never discount wisdom formed from years of experience.

“No, you didn't.”

“I've received a lot of your help until now, so I'm glad to hear that I was able to help out you now, even if it's just a small thing,”

Meanwhile, one of the agents walked closer to the two men.

“Mister Song Chi-Yeol, why don't you come with us? Help us for a minute or two with writing up the report.”

“Alright. Let's get going, then.”

Song Chi-Yeol left for the Association along with the agents, and before anyone knew it, only Jin-Woo and Yi Ju-Hui remained on the scene.

The sun had set a long time ago.

Ju-Hui must've found Jin-Woo and the somewhat altered aura he emitted a bit foreign, because she hesitated greatly before cautiously approaching him.

“Would you like to walk with me for a little while?”

‘Is she talking about that dinner date?’

He was starving after moving around for a bit today, so he found her suggestion to his liking.

Jin-Woo agreed with a welcoming expression.

“Okay, let’s.”

As if they had made a promise earlier, the two young people began quietly walking side by side under the soft lights of the street lamps.

“...”

Ju-Hui’s eyes remained fixed to her toes.

Because, if she tried to raise her head, her gaze automatically drifted towards to her side. She tried very hard not to think about it, but it was of no use.

In the past, she found him comfortable to talk to, but now, the current Jin-Woo was overflowing with this certain sense of power. She found it much harder to talk to him now as a result.

‘Just what happened....?’

He was strong enough to subdue a rank B Hunter without too much trouble. He had changed so drastically.

Since he requested her to keep it a secret, she wasn’t planning to pry, but his amazing transformation kept tugging at the corner of her mind.

REPORT

‘I wish he’d at least talk to me.’

Ju-Hui kind of felt that Jin-Woo was being rather cold-hearted here, not saying a single word until now.

In the end, Ju-Hui stopped walking first and with some difficulty, broke the ice.

“Actually... I think it’ll be impossible for me to eat anything today. Let me return this to you in the meantime.”

Ju-Hui handed over a magic crystal to Jin-Woo. It was none other than the same crystal he entrusted to her back in the underground temple.

The tips of Ju-Hui’s fingers were trembling as she handed over the crystal.

‘That incident had been only a few days ago.... And she had to go through another one today.’

Ju-Hui was the type of person to get scared quite easily. He could easily figure out what she meant by being unable to eat anything.

“But, today isn’t the only day, you know? There’s no need to return this to me now.”

Ju-Hui shook her head slowly.

“I’m going back home next week.”

He heard that she was quitting the life of a Hunter, but now, it seemed that she was leaving the city altogether. Jin-Woo formed a rueful expression.

“Is it because of... that incident back then?”

“Well, it’s not simply because of that, but.....”

Perhaps she ended up recalling the events of that day, Ju-Hui’s complexion darkened. Jin-Woo quickly changed the topic of their conversation.

“Where is your family home, exactly?”

“It’s in Busan.Actually, Mister Jin-Woo?”

Suddenly, Ju-Hui’s expression became quite serious.

“Y-yes?”

Sensing that the mood had become sombre, Jin-Woo quickly wiped the smile off his face and formed a serious expression as well.

Ju-Hui slowly, carefully combed over Jin-Woo’s face.

Back then, when everyone else was trembling from despair, only Jin-Woo’s eyes burned fiercely with a strong resolve. Ju-Hui was nearest to him, so she got to see those eyes.

‘It was like, they were shouting out to the rest of the world so they can hear his will to survive.’

And the faint traces of hope those eyes captured managed to save not only her, but many others as well, from that place multiple times.

No one could imitate what he pulled off back there.

Thump, thump....

When she recalled the events of that day, her heart began beating faster and faster.

‘No, I can’t....’

She had no regrets over quitting the life of a Hunter, since it didn’t even suit her personality, to begin with.

However, she couldn’t help but feel really bad after realising that it’d be tough to meet Jin-Woo ever again.

‘Will he think of me as a weird person, if I ask him about meeting each other again....?’

It was rather unfortunate, but there were some things in this world that she couldn’t really do anything about. Having any regrets over such matters would only end up tormenting her.

In the end, Ju-Hui simply formed a disarming smile and lightly shook her head.

“Nah, it’s nothing, really. If you come down to Busan one day, please give me a call. I’ll buy you really good sushi.”

“Sounds good.”

When Jin-Woo formed a smile, Ju-Hui smiled back at him.

And so, Ju-Hui didn’t get to say the words she truly wanted to say. She simply performed a short goodbye and turned around to leave.

‘.....’

The way back home never felt this long to her before.

After sending Ju-Hui home, Jin-Woo also returned to his place.

An old, decrepit apartment building, visible even from a distance – his place was on the eighth floor. (TL: Ninth floor for all of you North American readers)

As he walked past the parked cars to enter the building itself, the voice of an old man stopped him in his tracks.

“Young man from 902.”

It was coming from the old security guard ahjussi. He’d been around this place for a very long time; Jin-Woo was familiar with the older man, so he greeted without hesitation.

“You haven’t gone home yet, ahjussi?”

“I’m on the night watch duty today.”

“Aha.”

Jin-Woo lightly nodded his head.

The old security guard immediately brought out a parcel from the guard post.

“Jin-Woo, this came for you today.”

“Ahh. Thank you so much.”

The sender written on the slip was the Association.

‘Oh, so it was today, eh?’

The day that his replacement phone from the Association was supposed to arrive, that was.

Jin-Woo took out his brand new phone from the box; it glittered softly under the light.

He remembered hearing not too long ago that, due to the continued extreme level of interest towards everything related to Hunters, the number of non-Awakened people trying to get their hands on one of these phones was on the explosive rise.

‘Never mind those who wish to buy one, just what are those idiot Hunters thinking, trying to pilfer a few and selling them off?’

The old saying went that it's not the country that lacked money, but that there were way too many crooks, instead.

Whether it was inside the Association or in the military, or any place where people gathered in some numbers, corruption would always cause problems.

Because of corruption, money would leak out, and the promised financial support would decrease as much as the amount of leaked money, which would make the overall situation even worse.

This would eventually mean that those who were supposed to benefit from the system in a rightful manner got screwed royally in the a*s.

'That was why I got worried, but....'

Fortunately enough, there were seemingly no problems with his new phone.

While waiting for the elevator to arrive, he had nothing else to do so he switched the phone on.

And well, there was a mountain of unanswered messages and missed calls.

'Will I even be able to check all these out??'

Funnily enough, two numbers kept popping up as he took a look at the screen. Both of them seemed unfamiliar to him. One called him a lot, while the other sent a ton of text messages.

'But, I don't know anybody who might call me this many times, though?'

Jin-Woo tilted his head slightly, before deciding to check the text messages out first.

[Hello, I'm from that hospital....]

[If you have free time this week....]

[Was I bothering you? I just thought we could chat for a....]

He belatedly remembered a certain person's face. Indeed, it was the face of that pretty nurse from the hospital, the one asking for his number back then.

'Was her name Choi Yu-Rah?'

He couldn't say that she was bothering him, but he got this feeling that the moment he replied back to her, his life might get really and unnecessarily complicated in a heartbeat.

'Okay, so. I'll pass....'

up, the number that called him repeatedly.

Jin-Woo pressed the call button. A fairly new and catchy pop song noisily greeted him as the ringtone.

Hearing that, Jin-Woo could more or less guess who this number belonged to.

The call was connected pretty quickly.

- “Hello?”

Yup, indeed it was him.

Jin-Woo leaked a wry chuckle after his guess was proven correct.

“It’s me. From today onwards, call me only on this number.”

- “Ah! You finally got your phone, hyung-nim!”

Of course, it was none other than Yu Jin-Ho.

Jin-Woo did write down the boy’s contact number somewhere but he had never called it before, so it was a little wonder why he failed to recognise it.

Yu Jin-Ho spoke with a rather excited tone of voice.

- “I was actually thinking of giving you a call just now, hyung-nim. I’ve finished recruiting the team members, so I’ll be coming around tomorrow morning to fetch you!”

Just from hearing that voice, Jin-Woo could picture Yu Jin-Ho’s happy face. Jin-Woo also chuckled lightly.

“Alright. See you tomorrow, then.”

Click.

As Jin-Woo ended the call, the elevator arrived on the ground floor and its doors slid open.

Tting.

Finally, the raid would start for real from tomorrow onwards.

His heart beat faster just from thinking about it.

‘Let’s level up as quickly as I can.’

He’d raise his levels, enhance all his Stats, and become stronger than everyone out there.

Once he became a truly powerful Hunter, he’d be able to get his hands on money, fame, and influence.

And tomorrow would be his first step towards that goal.

The East of the United States.

Late at night.

Hwang Dong-Su was the main Hunter of the Guild, 'Scavenger', one of the top Guilds in the entire USA. Not only that, but he was also an S-rank as well. And just before he went to sleep, he received a phone call informing him of a shocking matter.

".....My older brother is dead?? I want you to speak slowly, and tell me everything in detail. Got that?"

The name of his older brother was Hwang Dong-Seok. Apparently, he entered a C-ranked Gate and lost his life.

"....My older brother and his eight teammates all died, and only two others escaped unhurt?"

And the two who survived were only a rank D and a bloody E??

Something smelled fishy here.

The older brother Hwang Dong-Su knew would never sacrifice his own life for a far weaker teammate. Also, what if that said teammate happened to be a temp?

There was no need to even mention it.

However, only the ranks D and E walked away alive, while his older brother and other C-ranked Hunters all perished in that dungeon.

'There's something going here....'

Hwang Dong-Su's eyes became incredibly sharp.

Right now, he was in a far-off foreign nation after being scouted away by one of America's top Guilds, but back when he was still in Korea, his brother did everything possible to look after him and be a good brother.

He might not have been a good human being, but he was a great, precious brother.....

'I was planning to invite him here once I've secured my foothold, but now....'

To think, he'd meet an accident before that happened.

Hwang Dong-Su bit his lower lip.

"Fax me all the information on the two surviving members. My number is....” (TL: Yup, it said ‘fax’ in the raw. Uhm, so, no emails in this world, then?)

Hwang Dong-Su ended the phone call and then called his manager next. The call got through pretty quickly.

- “Mister Hwang. You’re calling me quite late. What’s going on?”

“Laura. What would happen if I were to kill some people in Korea?”

- “Do you really mean that?”

“Yes.”

There was a bout of silence before the woman’s voice continued on.

- “....The States have yet to sign an agreement to exchange Hunter criminals with South Korea. Mister Hwang, you are now an American citizen, so you’ll get a hearing in a US court instead. If we have a chat with the relevant government officials, then your overall sentence should be pretty light.”

“Good to hear that. Looks like I’ll have to make a trip to Korea for a while. Something happened there. Can you clear up my schedule for a bit?”

- “However, Mister Hwang, if you leave so suddenly like this, the operations in the Guild will grind to a halt. Can you inform me of the nature of this ‘something’?”

“It’s a personal matter. Of course, I’m not going to harm the Guild in any shape or form. Tell me just how far my schedule’s been booked for.”

- “You’re fully booked out for the next two months.”

“Two months, is it... fine. After that, I will need some free time, so don’t schedule anything. I don’t need a long time, either. Just two weeks. I’ll only need two weeks to pop in and out of Korea.”

- “.....Understood. What should I tell the upper management?”

“Tell them, I’m going to my brother’s funeral. Also, going on a trip to cheer myself up, as well.”

- “Okay. Will do. By the way, Mister Hwang... If there is anything I can assist you with.....”

Click!

Hwang Dong-Su abruptly ended the call.

Didn’t matter whether it was some cheering up or an advice.... He was not in the mood to hear either of those at the moment.

Whirrrr-!!

It was then, the fax had arrived. Hwang Dong-Su took a look at the documents arriving one by one.

On the white pages, photos of two Hunters, their names, and their brief bio could be seen.

“The rank D Hunter, Yu Jin-Ho, and a rank E, Seong Jin-Woo.”

Hwang Dong-Su alternated his gaze on the two men’s photos and gritted his teeth in determination.

‘I’m sure I’ll get some answers from either one if I asked them personally.’

And, if he found anything even remotely suspicious, then....

“You will regret coming out of that place alive. I’ll make sure of it.”

The edges of Hwang Dong-Su’s eyes reddened slightly.

Part 6. Strange raids

morning.

Jin-Woo went downstairs after receiving the phone call, only to find a huge van parked outside.

“.....??”

Even before he could say, “Who the hell do you think you are to block someone else’s exit”, the driver’s window rolled down automatically. And the brightly smiling face peeking out from behind belonged to... Yu Jin-Ho.

“Hyung-nim, get in!”

Yu Jin-Ho stuck his hand out the open window and slapped the side of the van.

Since the kid was excitedly declaring his intentions to come and fetch him last night, Jin-Woo half-expected to see a Benz or something, but....

No matter how much he looked, it was a normal-looking passenger van.

Sure, it was on the biggish side, but still.

“Didn’t you say you’re the second born of a chaebol?”

“I thought it’d be too eye-catching if we used my car. I bought this guy not too long ago to use during our raids.”

Only now did Jin-Woo understand the reason for all this shininess coming from the van itself.

‘It’s brand spanking new, that’s why.’

From his sincerity, as seen from the boy arriving at Jin-Woo’s place the first thing in the morning, to his cautiousness as seen from the kid purchasing a new van just to avoid being too conspicuous....

Yu Jin-Ho was doing his best to make sure that everything was going smoothly.

It also demonstrated that his hopes and expectations riding on these upcoming raids were absolutely huge.

Yu Jin-Ho misunderstood the reason why Jin-Woo was taking his time to check out the new van, and worriedly asked.

“By any chance, don’t you like this type of vehicle, hyung-nim?”

“Not at all.”

Jin-Woo declared as so and climbed into the front passenger seat.

“Okay, we’re setting off now, hyung-nim.”

Yu Jin-Ho must’ve been feeling really excited because he kept humming to himself while twirling the steering wheel this way and that.

They drove for a while, before coming to a stop in an empty lot.

Screech.

“Hyung-nim, we’ve arrived.”

There were eight people waiting for the duo in this meeting place.

Chapter 37 Fin.

REPORT

The Gate seen behind the waiting group seemed a bit too small for a C rank.

After Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho exited from the van, the waiting Hunters quickly gathered around them. For some reason, there was almost no ‘normal’ person in this group.

Most of them seemed to have some difficulty with their mobility, there was one person who looked to be suffering from an illness, while another was clearly an alcoholic.

Not only that, there was an underage girl too, someone that neither the Association nor the Guild would admit to their ranks. From a casual glance, she looked to be a high-schooler.

“Is it okay to bring a child here?”

“I asked for a professional advice, and apparently, there is no problem according to the law, hyung-nim. Actually, the only reason why people don’t hire underage Hunters is that there would be hell to pay if something went sideways.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

‘In that case, it should be fine.’

Really now, only Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho were going to enter the Gates anyway, so the odds of something going wrong were as good as 0%.

Indeed, these people were only here to make up the numbers. In order to get the permit to clear a C-rank Gate, one needed at least ten Hunters, after all.

That was why eight extra people had to be recruited.

And sure enough, these eight understood very well why they were here, too.

These people all possessed the Hunter licence, but couldn’t act as one due to their circumstances. Most who answered the call to gather were suffering from the hardships of life in various ways.

Yu Jin-Ho took a step forward.

“My name is Yu Jin-Ho, and I’ll be taking the lead in this operation. And this gentleman beside me is Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim who will accompany me to the dungeons. Everyone, your role is to wait outside the Gates until we return.”

One of the Hunters cautiously raised his hand.

“Excuse me... If we really do that, we can get 3 million Won?”

No need to participate in any huntings.

No actual need to even enter the dungeon itself.

3 million Won per raid.

For a payment of simply lending one’s name so they would be permitted to enter the Gates, it sounded just too good to be true.

This man named Yu Jin-Ho didn’t even look like that Seon-Dal character who sold the Taedong River, but the terms on offer were so good that the gathered Hunters couldn’t help but be anxious. (TL: Kim Seon-Dal is a main character of an ancient Korean novel; he is a pro swindler and manages to ‘sell’ a river to the wealthiest man in Korea.)

“I guarantee you that the terms offered are for real.”

Yu Jin-Ho stood stiffly, looking rather serious now. Even his expression had become grave.

“However, you are not to discuss any facet of the events that’ll take place here with anyone. Do not forget that the moment you break the vow of secrecy, you’ll be forced to pay back ten times the money you were paid, as per the contract you all signed.”

Chatter, chatter....

Hunters murmured to each other in hushed whispers.

Just what were these two young Hunters planning to do inside the Gate that they offered up such enticing terms?

They were curious, but no one came out and asked.

That was also the part of the vow of secrecy clause within the contract.

- Absolutely no questioning what happens inside dungeons.

Jin-Woo didn’t want anyone to know of his special constitution, and Yu Jin-Ho wanted to become the Master of a Guild, so there was a serious need to make sure that none of their teammates blabbered their mouth to someone else.

‘.....’

Instead of asking questions, the Hunters began whispering to each other now.

“Still, can those two survive a rank C Dungeon all by themselves?”

“But, they don’t look that strong, don’t they?”

“If these two are capable enough to clear a rank C dungeon, wouldn’t it be better to enter a large Guild and get access to higher ranked dungeons?”

“You’re so right about that.”

They all spoke in a suspicious tone of voice, but not one person said they were quitting.

That was par for the course, really – the terms were too good to give up from their perspective. Even Jin-Woo got hooked by the promise of the two million Won, after all.

The reason for the extra one million Won, compared to what Hwang Dong-Seok had offered, was because of the clause on the participants maintaining their secrecy.

While the explanations carried on, the time was being wasted somewhat.

Jin-Woo confirmed with his watch and spoke to Yu Jin-Ho.

“We should get started.”

“Understood, hyung-nim.”

Yu Jin-Ho answered right away and clapped his hands in order to draw the attention to himself.

“Well, that will be all for the explanations. I won’t force you to participate. So, is there anyone among you who’d like to quit now?”

“.....”

“.....”

Of course, no one raised their hands.

Just before the duo tried to enter the Gate....

“Ah! Hyung-nim, hold on for a moment.”

Recalling something he had completely forgotten about until now, Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly ran back to the van.

He then put several things on the entirety of his body and walked back to the Gate in an unsteady and difficult fashion.

“What.... is that?”

“It’s a full-set of reinforced armour, crafted by a famous Guild of master craftsmen in Italy. Hyung-nim, don’t you think we need at least this type of equipment if we were to clear a dungeon by ourselves?”

Jin-Woo slowly facepalmed.

“...”

Simply staring at that hunk of steel covering the kid from the tip of his toes all the way up to the crown of his head, Jin-Woo felt like his own breathing was getting all choked up and the like.

“What’s the matter, hyung-nim?”

Unable to watch on any longer, Jin-Woo reached out, yanked loose the longsword attached to Yu Jin-Ho’s waist, and dropped it on the ground.

“Uh, uh??”

Yu Jin-Ho tried to bend down in order to pick up the sword only to lose his balance, and he toppled over ungracefully.

Plop.

Jin-Woo did his best to suppress the rising tides of anger and spoke with great difficulty.

“While I’m still being civil, take them off.”

“.....Yes.”

However, after struggling for a bit to stand back up, Yu Jin-Ho called out to Jin-Woo.

“H-hyung-nim....”

“What now?”

“Please help me. I can’t stand up.”

Jin-Woo spat out a long sigh while looking at Yu Jin-Ho reaching out to him.

“Will this be fine, hyung-nim?”

“Yeah.”

In the end, they agreed on the kid wearing a helmet, and nothing else.

With a satisfied face, Yu Jin-Ho jumped inside the Gate. Jin-Woo followed in right after without saying anything else.

As soon as the two men walked into the dungeon one by one, the remaining Hunters all slowly shuffled towards the Gate.

One of them piped up with a worried voice.

“Judging from the way they acted, they looked like a couple of amateurs....”

Another agreed, while staring at the Gate’s surface.

“You’re right.”

The two people’s conversation opened the floodgate of words from the remaining Hunters. Everyone began speaking their minds now.

“What will happen if those two get killed inside the dungeon?”

“Well, we all got paid the contract signing fee already, so....”

“Yeah, well. That’s true, too.”

“Wait, what were the names of those two again?”

“Hold on. So, it was....”

A man whose leg was in a plaster quickly pulled his phone out and searched the two’s names online.

“Yu Jin-Ho, Seong Jin-Woo....”

Another Hunter helped the man in crutches to stand straight while peeking into the phone as well. Whether he felt the ‘crutches’ needed help, or was just too impatient to find out the result of the online search, no one could tell.

“What the hell? The raid leader is only a rank D???”

Hearing that, everyone else stiffened up from the shock. However, what shocked them even more was the following search result.

“The dude next to the rank D is only a measly E???”

“Isn’t it way too dangerous for a rank E to enter a rank C Gate?”

“One D and an E wants to clear a rank C dungeon?!”

“How can that even be possible???”

“Also, the raid team leader has no record of leading a team before!”

“What the heck....? Why would these two young men....?”

Wasn’t this no different than committing suicide?

It was not for nothing that the Association had set a strict rule of one needing ten people, with five rank C Hunters, as the bare minimum if one wanted to enter a rank C Gate.

“Tsk, tsk...”

A male Hunter sporting a smattering of white hair pulled a cigarette out and lit it up.

“The arrogance of youth tends to catch many young people unawares.”

The cigarette smoke slowly rose up.

“....”

“....”

The Hunters all fell silent. They couldn't help but feel awkward and bad, thinking that they were now a part of someone else's suicide attempt.

Even if they were total strangers, no one liked seeing another person getting killed right in front of their eyes, or in this case, inside the Gate right in front of them.

Was that all?

What about the rest of the money?

They may have received the contract fee upfront, but they would've made a lot more by following the two young men around for the next 18 raids.

Regrettably, though – the odds of two young people coming back alive were simply too low.

“This.... Shouldn't we report this to the Association, even if it's now?”

“I wonder. Yeah, what if we get blamed for this?”

Then, this happened.

Buzz....

Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly emerged from the Gate.

“Pant, pant, pant....”

Yu Jin-Ho was panting laboriously. Steam slowly rose up from the bodies of two young men carrying tired expressions.

“Oh, ohh...”

“They managed to escape unhurt!”

“What a relief.”

Hunters welcomed the two with happy expressions.

They were all thinking that these two only roamed around the entrance of the dungeon like a pair of lost kids, because the time between them entering and leaving was fairly short.

However, what was going on here?

The expressions of the Hunters gradually changed.

Because, they all heard someone crying out in alarm, that was why.

“The, the Gate is closing!!”

What??

Everyone hurriedly shifted their gaze over to the Gate.

“Oh my gosh!”

“Look, look!!”

“They killed the b-boss??”

The Gate is turning blurry and illusory, just as it would when the boss of the dungeon was killed.

While the Hunters couldn't hide their shocked disbelief, Jin-Woo utterly disregarded their gazes and quietly asked Yu Jin-Ho.

“Where is the next one?”

“It's about an hour's drive from here, hyung-nim.”

“Okay, let's go.”

Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho headed straight to the van.

Meanwhile, the eight Hunters stared at the duo's backs with completely dumbfounded faces.

Realising that they weren't following him, Yu Jin-Ho turned his head and called out to them.

“Let's hurry up, everyone. We barely have enough time to go to two more Gates today.”

The jaws of the Hunters all dropped to the floor from that declaration.

Drop.

The middle-aged Hunter with the smattering of white hair, Yun Gwi-Won, was so stunned that he failed to realise his cigarette slipping out from his lips and falling to the ground.

‘Those two managed to clear a rank C dungeon, and they are going for another raid, too??’

It wasn't only Yun Gwi-Won, though.

Everyone present was thinking the exact same thing.

‘Just who are these people???’

The first day.

Grrrooar....

A group of zombies rushed at the duo.

“Hyung-nim, they are coming!”

“Okay.”

Jin-Woo smoothly glided among the rushing zombies. Whenever he brushed past one, the head of an undead creature fell and rolled on the ground.

The number of zombies decreased quite rapidly.

Soon, only one remained.

Stab!

“Kkkroooarr!!”

When Jin-Woo stabbed his dagger deep into the last monster's chest, a familiar mechanical beep rang inside his head.

Tti-ring!

[Level up!]

Yu Jin-Ho, who had been standing at the far back, gasped in admiration and clapped his hands enthusiastically.

“Hyung-nim, you're so cool!!!”

“Ah. Okay.”

Yu Jin-Ho quickly pulled the bag out and began collecting the magic crystals.

It was around at this point.

The mechanical beeps didn't end with the level up message and continued on.

Tti-ring!

[You've acquired 'Skill: High-Grade Dagger Technique Lv. 1']

Tti-ring!

[You've acquired 'Skill: Vital Points Targetting Lv. 1']

Tti-ring!

['Skill: Dash' has levelled up!]

Jin-Woo's expression brightened in an instant.

'I've got new skills?'

Been a long time too, hasn't it?

Feeling rather chuffed with himself, Jin-Woo quickly summoned his Skill Window.

[Skills]

Passive skills:

- (Unknown) Lv. Max
- Tenacity Lv. 1
- High-Grade Dagger Technique Lv. 1

Active skills:

- Dash Lv. 2
- Intimidation Lv. 1
- Stealth Lv. 1
- Vital Points Targetting Lv. 1

The Dash skill had levelled up after he constantly used it.

Also, in the passive and the active columns, High-Grade Dagger Technique and Vital Points Targetting had been added as well.

Chapter 38 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

[Skill: Dash Lv. 2]

Active skill.

Mana required to activate: 5

When this skill is activated, your movement speed will increase by 40%. During its activation, 1 Mana will be spent every minute.

‘My movement speed has increased.’

The rate had climbed up from 30 to 40%.

The difference in 10% was huge. Well, the levelling up of the skill seemed appropriate, since he used the Dash skill quite often.

[Skill: High-Grade Dagger Technique Lv. 1]

Passive skill.

Mana required to activate: None

Exclusive to daggers.

You used daggers for a long time. And now, you are able to wield daggers more proficiently.

33% additional damage will be applied when using daggers.

Additional damage effect when using daggers!!

A dagger-specific skill had been created as the result of him continuously sticking to daggers, it seemed.

‘I guess wielding other types of weapons will be inefficient for me now, huh.’

Of course, it also meant that the effect when using only the daggers would be even greater.

Besides, he was already well used to using daggers. He also had grown fond of the Poison Fang of Kasaka and wasn't planning to switch to another weapon any time soon, so this was a huge boon for him.

‘And finally....’

Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed in great anticipation as he checked out the details of the last new skill that appeared.

[Skill: Vital Points Targetting Lv. 1]

Active skill.

Mana required to activate: 70

Exclusive to daggers.

You've learned the most optimum way to attack with your daggers. This skill will search for the enemy's vital points and inflict fatal damage.

This skill was also exclusive to daggers.

'The most optimum way to attack....'

Now that he thought about it, the attack he used to land the final blow to Kahng Tae-Sik and on that last zombie felt roughly the similar to him.

Should he say he definitely felt it in his bones? The moment the dagger pierced through, he knew instinctively that the battle was over.

'Ah, so that was me aiming at the vital points, huh.'

To think, something he did as an accident would become an actual skill, and he'd get to use it whenever he felt like it!

His heart was now beating like crazy.

To Jin-Woo, who had no other method to attack other than to swing his dagger around this way and that, this attack skill 'Vital Points Targetting' was like the sweet, sweet rain falling at the end of a long drought.

'Very nice!'

He levelled up and got new skills.

It'd only been the first day, yet things were going really smoothly already.

The second day.

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

With the addition of an attack skill, the speed of hunting had increased rather noticeably.

[Level up!]

Yu Jin-Ho's eyes could only grow wider and wider as he watched countless monsters fall one after the other when Jin-Woo accurately attacked their weak points.

‘Hyung-nim has been hiding such a mad skill until now?!’

Just how far did the set of hyung-nim’s mysterious skills extend to?

He couldn’t help but admire Jin-Woo even more.

‘Seeing that he was able to easily defeat several rank C Hunters, he’s definitely a rank B or higher.....’

He could only spectate from the sidelines, his jaw slack, since he couldn’t guarantee his own fate if he unwisely tried to probe Jin-Woo for answers.

However, there was a distinct disadvantage associated with the increase in the hunting speed, as it turned out.

[You can’t use your skills because of a lack of Mana.]

[You can’t use your skills because of a lack of Mana.]

Jin-Woo frowned quite deeply.

‘Again??’

In order to fill up his depleted MP, Jin-Woo summoned a vial of ‘potion’ he bought from the Store right away.

“What is that, hyung-nim?”

Yu Jin-Ho expressed a great interest.

Being next to Jin-Woo meant that Yu Jin-Ho would get to experience many unbelievable things, of course. And now, he became way too curious about the identity of the blue liquid Jin-Woo kept drinking every now and then.

“What, this?”

Jin-Woo delayed answering and read the information on the potion first.

[Item: MP Potion]

Rarity: E

Type: Consumable

A liquid medicine that will restore your Mana. Once consumed, it will restore 500 points of MP. Can be stored in your Inventory, but it can’t be handed over to someone else.

The explanation said that the potion couldn’t be handed over to another person.

‘What will happen if I try to give it to someone else?’

It was now Jin-Woo’s turn to become curious. So, he handed the vial of the MP potion over to Yu Jin-Ho.

But, the potion bottle quietly disappeared from the view when placed in Yu Jin-Ho’s hand, just like when it appeared the first time.

“Is, is this magic, hyung-nim??”

‘So, this is why it can’t be handed over, huh.’

He learned something new today.

An item that could not be handed over would disappear when touched by someone else. If so, what would happen when no hands were involved?

Jin-Woo accessed the Store and purchased a new potion.

However, it was not the same MP potion that he bought all the time, but a vial of HP potion containing reddish liquid.

As soon as he completed the transaction, the potion automatically appeared in Jin-Woo’s hand.

“H-hyung-nim!! That’s amazing! The liquid’s colour changed to red!”

Yu Jin-Ho was thinking that the MP potion disappearing and being replaced by an HP potion was some kind of a fancy magic trick.

Actually, there was a good reason why Jin-Woo changed the type of potion.

‘Let’s find out if these potions have an effect on other people.’

Jin-Woo told Yu Jin-Ho’s to lower his posture.

“Open your mouth and look up.”

“L-like this, hyung-nim?”

“Alright. Stay in that position and don’t move.”

Jin-Woo tilted the vial of HP potion. The reddish liquid slid down Yu Jin-Ho’s mouth.

Gulp.

Suddenly, Yu Jin-Ho opened his eyes wider.

“Uh? What’s going on, hyung-nim? Why do I feel reinvigorated again?”

After playing the role of the luggage carrier for a long time, Yu Jin-Ho had been looking rather fatigued, but now, his complexion improved in the blink of an eye.

Jin-Woo smiled in satisfaction.

'So, giving it away in this manner works.'

He got to learn something else just as good again.

He should be able to heal a nearby injured person, even if there were no Healers present. This would certainly help him out a good deal in the future, no doubt.

"Just tell me if you're feeling tired, okay? I can spare a ton of this drink, you see."

Of course, Jin-Woo wasn't doing this out of charity.

If the porter got too tired and his movement speed decreased, then that would mean the overall hunting speed would decrease as well, so basically, he'd be the one losing out in the end.

His actions were born out of such a chain of thoughts, but Yu Jin-Ho didn't know that.

"H-hyung-nim...."

"Let's go."

Yu Jin-Ho became very moved after being subjected to Jin-Woo caring about him. Not to mention, he was awed by Jin-Woo's amazing abilities too. Wiping away his tears, Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly chased after the departing back of Jin-Woo.

The third day.

"Oh, right. Take this, hyung-nim."

Yu Jin-Ho rummaged through the equipment bag and then, presented a bank balance book with a stamp sealed in together.

"What's this?"

"It's the money from selling the magic crystals we got during the last two days, hyung-nim."

Jin-Woo got slightly irritated by the fact that Yu Jin-Ho had forgotten this and only decided to give it to him inside a dungeon full of dangerous monsters, but that irritation disappeared almost right away.

'₩600,000,000?!' (TL: Around $535,500)

When he took a look at the amount written on the book, Jin-Woo found quite a substantial amount staring back at him.

“Are you giving me every cent from the sales of the magic crystals?”

Yu Jin-Ho nodded his head.

“Yes, hyung-nim. I’m not doing these raids because I need the money, and besides, you’ve killed all of the monsters anyways. So, how can I ask you for a share like a shameless fool here?”

Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes were sparkling like a little kid waiting to be praised.

‘Ohh, really... Would you look at this kid now?’

Jin-Woo sensed the change in Yu Jin-Ho’s attitude after they spent the last couple of days together.

Not too long ago, the feeling of the kid forcing himself to come even though he was sh*t-scared was pretty strong, but now, he was acting more like a little brother who couldn’t stop worshipping a cool older brother or something.

‘He’s got a pretty adorable side to him, no?’

Jin-Woo smirked.

“Can I really have it, then?”

“Do I, the one and only Yu Jin-Ho, look like someone who’d go back on his word, hyung-nim?”

Jin-Woo smiled brightly and patted the bank balance book.

“Okay, thanks. I’m really grateful for this.”

“No, thank you instead, hyung-nim!!”

Yu Jin-Ho bent his back 90 degrees right away.

This was one confusing sight where it was pretty difficult to tell just who was giving who money here.

At the same time, outside the dungeon....

The waiting ‘teammates’ also had developed a routine of sorts to while away the time.

As soon as the raid leader Yu Jin-Ho and his assistant (?) Seong Jin-Woo entered the Gate, the remaining Hunters gathered around, placed a couple of picnic clothes on the ground, and proceeded to do their own things.

The most popular activity, of course, was gambling.

Five people were sitting around in one group, gambling and chatting away.

“How many raids did we ‘participate’ in so far?”

“Let’s see... The day before, it was three. Yesterday, it was two, and this is the second dungeon today, so it’s seven in total so far.”

“Will it be fine for those two to keep clearing dungeons at this breakneck pace? I mean, it’s normal to take a week off after clearing one dungeon, no?”

“Aigoo. Don’t you worry about those two, now. Can’t you see that they literally haven’t even broken a sweat every time they come out of a Gate? Besides, we get 3 mil every raid, so it’s simply an excellent bit of news for us. Oh, it’s your turn, my man. Hurry up and deal.”

“Ah, sure.”

Indeed, both Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho displayed not one hint of getting fatigued from keeping up with this seemingly-exhausting schedule.

Of course, these people had no idea, but such a feat was only possible thanks to the miraculous effects of the potions.

The duo got to clear over one-third of the planned 19 raids in such a short amount of time precisely because of the potions.

A short while later, the Gate’s black-ish surface wavered unsteadily and two people emerged from there.

“Oh, the raid leader is out.”

“Okay, let’s pack this up.”

Hunters began getting ready to leave without being ordered to.

“Hey, there. Take care of that luggage over there.”

“Wake that person up. Please make sure we aren’t forgetting anything here.”

Hunters moved in perfect sync. Even the sleeping Hunter woke up and quickly finished getting ready to move to the new location.

“Okay, let’s get going!”

Everyone was getting more or less used to this rather insane manner of clearing dungeons.

Inside the offices of the White Tiger Guild, located in the same district.

The Chief of the 2nd Division, Ahn Sahng-Min, found himself shouting at the top of his voice early in the morning.

“Mister Hyun!! What are you trying to do here?! Tomorrow’s the day for the new recruits to start training, yet how could you have failed to book a single Gate until now?! Answer me, Mister Vice Chief!!”

The Vice Chief Hyun Ki-Cheol lowered his head in embarrassment.

“M-My apologies, Chief. The thing is, there is a raid team that quickly bids for every Gate ranked C opening up in our jurisdiction.”

“What?! Well then, why don’t you just get them back with higher bids? Does our Guild lack funds or personnel? Just what’s the problem here?”

“I tried to do as you said, but....”

“Uh-huh!! How dare you answer back as if you did something nice??”

From the thunderous roar of Ahn Sahng-Min, the entirety of the 2nd Division had fallen into silence.

It sure had been a long time since Ahn Sahng-Min blew his top to this extent.

Just what kind of a place was the White Tiger Guild?

It was called one of the top five Guilds in South Korea. For that reason alone, every single employee working within its halls was, without exception, excellent individuals.

The Vice Chief Hyun Ki-Cheol too was a talented, sharp individual who performed his role well and admirably, having never committed a single error ever since he was hired by the Guild.

But to think, he failed to book a single Gate when the new recruits were supposed to begin their training soon!

This no doubt qualified as a big error.

The 2nd Division that Ahn Sahng-Min was in charge of did the roles of recruiting new Hunters and training them, while the First Division took care of managing the schedules of the Guild’s main Hunters.

“P-Please! Take a look at this first, Chief!”

The near-tearful Hyun Ki-Cheol pushed forward a notebook PC to his superior officer.

“What the hell?!”

Ahn Sahng-Min was about to explode once more, only for his jaw to drop to the floor after checking out a certain number appearing on the notebook’s screen.

“T-Two hundred fifty million Won?!?! There is a crazy b*stard who spent 250 million Won on a single rank C Gate????”

Chapter 39 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

Ahn Sahng-Min became utterly speechless.

The best anyone could hope for, in terms of financial return from a Gate ranked C, was only around 200 million Won.

Paying 250 million won was, simply put, being a hopeless moron who paid way too much.

“Originally, the bidding price of this Gate was only around 70 million. But, when I raised the bid to 100 million, these b*stards suddenly upped it all the way to 250 million, Chief.”

The upper limit for a single C-rank Gate set by the White Tiger Guild was 100 million Won. One could now clearly see why Hyun Ki-Cheol was feeling rather aggrieved at the moment.

‘Who are these b*stards?!’

Tap, tap, tap, tap....

Ahn Sahng-Min’s hands typed on the keyboard quite rapidly. And soon, the search results filled up the computer screen.

Just as Hyun Ki-Cheol had said, one raid team was snapping up all the rank C Gates appearing in this district with nonsensical speed while paying an equally gobsmacking amount of money.

“What the hell, who are these crazy b*stards....?”

This area was the White Tiger’s backyard, their jurisdiction.

At first, Ahn Sahng-Min thought of the possibility that other Guilds were possibly interfering with their work.

‘No, hang on. That’s not possible, is it?’

There was no large Guild stupid enough to start something with White Tiger openly in this fashion.

Even if it was one of the five top Guilds in South Korea, it would have to risk getting destroyed in return by clashing against the White Tiger.

‘So, it’s not a Guild, then.....’

In that case, who and why?

Ahn Sahng-Min swallowed his saliva and accessed the information on this strange raid team and its members.

The leader's name was apparently 'Yu Jin-Ho'.

"First time I hear that name."

It was Ahn Sahng-Min's job to scout new recruits for the Guild. That was why he had remembered the names of freelancer Hunters who had at least displayed a modicum of excellence in the past.

However, this 'Yu Jin-Ho' really was someone he didn't know.

"Okay, I'll come back to you later."

He then proceeded to slowly scroll down the list of the team's members, hoping to spot any familiar names on it.

And then, there was one.

One name kind of stood out.

"Seong Jin-Woo? Seong Jin-Woo..... Where have I heard this name before?"

Ahn Sahng-Min did his best to dig through his memory, until he finally recalled the incident of the dual dungeon from two months ago that had been the topic of a rather lively discussion among those who went there.

Indeed, it was none other than the White Tiger Guild that went to assist the Association during that event.

"Hey, Ki-Cheol-ah, do you remember that dual dungeon incident two months ago? The one where our Hunters had to go and take a look?"

"Yes, Chief. I remember. When we got there, we couldn't find any monsters and there was only one survivor."

"What was the name of that survivor? You remember it?"

Hyun Ki-Cheol possessed a pretty solid brain.

No, it wasn't to the extent of other people praising him as a genius, but as far as his ability to remember things was concerned, he was really rather exceptional.

There wasn't even any real need to go through a search process here. Because Hyun Ki-Cheol replied right away.

"It's Seong Jin-Woo, a rank E Hunter."

'I knew it!'

He wasn't sure of it, but well, he was proven right once more.

Ahn Sahng-Min instinctively realised it; there was something fishy going on here.

Not once did his instincts that activated only in these sorts of situation let him down. Never.

Ahn Sahng-Min shouted out an order to the rest of the employees in the Second Division.

"Everyone, stop what you're doing, and get me every single data and information on the Hunters Yu Jin-Ho, ranked D, and Seong Jin-Woo, ranked E!! Right now!"

The responses from these excellent employees, when facing a dangerous situation regarding their own survival, simply exceeded one's imaginations.

It wasn't for nothing that they were called the elites of all elites!

Reports came in one after the other, fast.

As it turned out, Yu Jin-Ho didn't possess any particularly noteworthy background that required an immediate attention. Disregarding the fact that he was the second son of Yujin Constructions' owner, he could be described as ordinary, even.

However, Seong Jin-Woo was quite a different story altogether.

"Since that dual dungeon incident, he's been involved in three more incidents, and he walked away from all of them unscathed?"

When Ahn Sahng-Min spoke in a questioning tone of voice, Hyun Ki-Cheol quickly followed up.

"Not only that, he's a rank E Hunter too, Chief."

The first time Seong Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho met was when the latter went for his very first raid. Only the two of them walked away alive.

And now, these two had formed a raid team and were going around like a pair of madmen, clearing two, three dungeons in a single day.

"This definitely stinks...."

"What could they possibly be doing in the dungeons?"

"I wonder.... hold on. I remember now. There was a rumour about a really influential owner of a big company busy wooing S-ranked Hunters in private doing the rounds, wasn't there?"

“Yes, there was a rumour like that.”

“And that Yu Jin-Ho is the son of a really influential owner of a company....”

Indeed, Yu Myung-Hwan, Yu Jin-Ho’s father, showed some movements of wanting to create a Guild of his own.

It was one of the most tightly guarded secrets only a few in the world of Hunters were privileged enough to know.

If that was the case, then what Yu Jin-Ho was doing right now wouldn’t be completely unrelated to that.

“...Could it be?!”

A single puzzle piece fell to its place inside Ahn Sahng-Min’s head.

If his guess was right, then it made sense!

Seeing that rapid change in his superior officer’s expression, Hyun Ki-Cheol nervously swallowed his saliva.

Ahn Sahng-Min spoke with more than enough confidence in his voice.

“This guy.... he’s definitely a Re-Awakened Hunter!!”

“A Re-Awakened Hunter, you say??”

Hyun Ki-Cheol’s eyes became round dots resembling a rabbit’s eyes.

But, Ahn Sahng-Min was sure of it.

“That’s right.”

A rank E Hunter was no different from a regular person. If there was an incident, then such Hunters were as good as dead.

However, this Seong Jin-Woo kept surviving, totally unhurt to boot, from several large-scale incidents that killed most of the participating Hunters.

‘Of course, he could be lucky. Sure. However....’

However, the third and last incident....

The situation with this particular incident caused by the agent of the Monitoring Division, Kahng Tae-Sik, was rather different from the rest.

The record said that a rank C Mage combined strength with a rank B Healer to defeat Kahng Tae-Sik. (TL: I’ve changed Sorcerer to Mage.)

‘Bullsh*t. Hunters in the Monitoring Division all specialise in combat.’

If Kahng Tae-Sik wasn’t a moron, he’d try to dispose of the highest ranked Hunter with the low combat potential, the rank B Healer first.

‘You telling me that a rank C Mage-type Hunter managed to stop him by himself?’

The thing was, the Mage-type Hunters were weak against close-combat type Hunters, even more so against the ‘Assassin’ types.

Unless Kahng Tae-Sik underestimated his opponents and ignored the presence of the rank B Healer, it might be possible, but..... But, the Hunter with three years of experience in the Monitoring Division wouldn’t make such a blunder, thought Ahn Sahng-Min.

‘The one who stopped Kahng Tae-Sik wasn’t this rank C Song Chi-Yeol, but someone else accompanying them.’

There was no physical evidence, but he was getting more and more sure of his guesses being right.

Seong Jin-Woo now possessed abilities matching that of a high-ranking Hunter after going through a Re-Awakening process.

Yu Jin-Ho coincidentally took part in the raid and saw the abilities of Seong Jin-Woo. And now, Yu Jin-Ho was testing out this and that in preparation to scout Seong Jin-Woo to his father’s new Guild.

When he thought like that, everything seemed to click.

‘This is a huge piece of news.’

If Seong Jin-Woo was indeed a Re-Awakened Hunter, then there would only be a few people, including Yu Jin-Ho, who knew his true worth.

Just who was Yu Myung-Hwan? He wouldn’t want to accept any wannabes and idiots. Definitely not. Not only that, as one of the founding members of the Guild, too.

This could be an excellent chance to snatch away a wonderful individual marked by none other than Yu Myung-Hwan.

‘If he fought and defeated rank B Kahng Tae-Sik, then his abilities should be at least B, no?’

The priority now was to snatch this talent before other Guilds, no, Yu Myung-Hwan, managed to scout him.

Well, after the inevitable re-assignment test, the competition would become really hectic, after all.

Besides all that – even if Seong Jin-Woo wasn’t as strong as he suspected, it didn’t really matter.

There were only a few Re-Awakened Hunters in the entire world, so the media's attention would no doubt be directed to this guy. And that would precisely be the kind of public exposure that no amount of money could buy.

Whatever the case may be, Ahn Sahng-Min couldn't afford to let this guy slip through his fingers.

'I wouldn't be able to do anything if he already signed a contract with Yu Myung-Hwan, though...'

However, the odds of that was low.

The proof was all those tests taking place in the C-ranked dungeons.

'There is a good chance that they haven't decided on anything yet.'

Which meant, the White Tiger Guild had a real shot here as well.

'I shouldn't be wasting time here.'

Ahn Sahng-Min picked up his coat hanging on the back of his chair and quickly put it on.

"Ki-Cheol-ah, let's go."

He also didn't forget to mobilise his right-hand man, of course.

Ahn Sahng-Min was strict with Hyun Ki-Cheol all the time simply because the former believed that no one was more suitable to take over from him than his current deputy.

Meanwhile, Hyun Ki-Cheol's eyes opened wider.

"Pardon me? Where are we going, Chief?"

"What do you mean, where? We're going to scout a new talent, that's what."

"And you have to personally go to scout this new guy??"

"Why not? Is there a law against doing that?"

Ahn Sahng-Min retorted and hurriedly left the office, causing Hyun Ki-Cheol to tilt his head this way and that, but still, he chased after the senior officer.

'Now this is so strange....'

It'd been over two years since he became the Vice Chief, yet it was his first time seeing Ahn Sahng-Min personally go out on a job.

Part 7. Premonition of a huge jackpot

The dungeons Yu Jin-Ho's team booked for the day were two. And the distance between the two Gates was fairly substantial.

In order to confirm their suspicions with their own eyes, Ahn Sahng-Min and Hyun Ki-Cheol separated and went to different Gates each. They constantly called each other and waited for Yu Jin-Ho's team to show up.

'It's still pretty chilly out, isn't it?'

Ahn Sahng-Min bought a cup of instant coffee from a vending machine near the Gate's location.

It had already been one solid hour of waiting for Yu Jin-Ho's team to show up. For some reason, though, he was feeling more expectant than bored right now.

Been a long time, but his heart was beating fast in pure anticipation.

'If my guesses are right, then that man will be a huge scoop that has appeared in a really long time. Not only that, a very special scoop, too!'

Ahn Sahng-Min became a Division Chief at a really young age. All thanks to his instincts, actually. His instincts played a crucial role in the White Tiger becoming the large Guild of today.

And that instinct was telling him this right now.

That there was a real chance that this Seong Jin-Woo would lift the White Tiger Guild up even higher than ever before.

'Other people would say that I've lost my mind.'

Well, Seong Jin-Woo was still officially a rank E, after all.

However, things visible to one's eyes didn't tell the whole story. If that was the case, then he wouldn't even be here right now.

And so, as he glared at the Gate with hawk-like eyes from afar, when....

Ring... Ring....

Hyun Ki-Cheol gave him a call.

"Yes, Ki-Cheol-ah. Any news?"

- "Chief, Yu Jin-Ho and his team have arrived on sight."

"Alright. Don't get too excited and keep your eyes on them. And report back to me every single little thing that happens there."

- "Yes, Chief.... Uh? Eh? C-Chief!!"

The voice coming out of the phone's receiver sounded rather weird all of a sudden.

'Did this idiot get discovered or something?'

Ahn Sahng-Min became urgent too and hurriedly called out.

"What happened? Speak up, will ya?"

- "Chief, you were right!!"

"What?"

Ahn Sahng-Min's heart began beating faster and faster.

- "I can see that only Yu Jin-Ho and Seong Jin-Woo are entering the Gate, no one else."

"Of course. Seong Jin-Woo is being tested, after all!"

As he thought!

His guesses were correct. Not once did his gut feeling let him down in situations like this.

'Good!'

Ahn Sahng-Min clenched his fist real tightly.

'While you people remain unconvinced and unsure, we will make the move first. The White Tiger Guild will definitely take Seong Jin-Woo away from you.'

Why? Because the White Tiger had Ahn Sahng-Min, Chief of the Second Division, that's why.

As Ahn Sahng-Min bathed in the ecstasy of victory, Hyun Ki-Cheol's voice continued to travel through the airwaves and came out from the phone once more.

- "What should I do now? Should I go over to you, Chief?"

"No. Remain there and observe for a while longer."

- "Pardon? But, Isn't Chief's suspicions more or less confirmed with this?"

"I'm kind of curious just how long they will take to clear the dungeon, that's all. How many hours will they need to clear a rank C dungeon?"

- "A rank A Hunter would need at least two hours to solo a rank C dungeon, Chief."

"So what? You can't wait that long?"

- "How can that be, Chief? No, I'm just worried about you being all alone and lonely over there, that's why I'm asking you."

What a faster-than-light change in his attitude that was.

This was why Ahn Sahng-Min could never dislike Hyun Ki-Cheol.

“Stop worrying about me and make sure to keep your eyes wide open to see when they are coming out, okay?”

REPORT

- “I’m sure nothing weird will happen here.”

“I’ll be right next to my phone, so if something does happen, give me a call right away.”

- “Got it, Chief.”

Ahn Sahng-Min ended the call only after making sure his right-hand man fully heard his ‘request’. It was at this point that he felt his starvation kick in.

Rumble...

‘I’ve been paying way too much attention on this matter....’

The lunch hour had flown by some time ago, but well, he’d been waiting with bated breaths for Seong Jin-Woo’s arrival and completely forgot to fill up in the meantime.

The thing was, he didn’t know when Yu Jin-Ho’s team would show up here and so, couldn’t leave his position to buy something to eat.

Now that he found himself some leeway, Ahn Sahng-Min looked around his vicinity to find a place to eat, before eventually settling on the local convenience store.

‘I’m not trying to skimp on food expenses, though....’

No one was around here to make fun out of him, yet he couldn’t help but think that it was a bit uncool to enter a restaurant or a diner all alone. So, after a lengthy deliberation, he chose the cup ramen from the convenience store, instead.

He poured the boiling water provided from the store in the cup and waited for three minutes before getting his wooden chopsticks ready, but then....

Ring....

“Eii! I’m trying to eat here, so who dares to call me now?!”

When he took a look at the phone’s screen, a familiar name showed up.

[Right arm]

‘Hyun Ki-Cheol, you dumba*s....’

Ahn Sahng-Min answered the call, full of irritation.

“Why are you calling me already?”

- “Chief, that’s not it....”

“What do you mean, that’s not it?? If you’re calling me over nothing, you will be eating nothing but cup ramen as your lunch for the whole of next week!!”

- “That’s not it, Chief!! Those two came out of the Gate already!!”

Just like a paused frame of a movie, Ahn Sahng-Min’s hand froze in the mid-air, just before it could deliver chopsticks full of noodles to his mouth.

“What did you say??”

- “Just now, Yu Jin-Ho and Seong Jin-Woo came out from the Gate, Chief! And they are getting ready to leave along with the rest of the team!”

Indeed, he didn’t hear that wrong.

Ahn Sahng-Min hurriedly checked his watch.

“But, it hasn’t even been 30 minutes yet! Did they give up on the raid midway?”

- “No, Chief. The Gate is shaking right now.”

What nonsense was this?!

Even if the difficulty between different C-ranked dungeons varied somewhat, there was simply no way that someone could solo one of those in less than 30 minutes!!

“Check again!! Is the Gate closing for real?”

- “Yes, Chief. Should I record some footage and send it to you?”

“...No, no need.”

Ahn Sahng-Min ended the call and dazedly stared the empty air.

Clearing a C-ranked dungeon in 30 minutes when normally, a rank A Hunter would need two hours to do so?

What a funny notion that was, that man being only a rank B....

Using only the objective information available to make his educated guess, then at the bare minimum....

“He’s above rank A....”

Now, this was an unimaginably huge jackpot.

Outside the Gate....

“Hyung-nim. Is there some other business you need to attend to later?”

“No, not really. Why do you ask?”

“I haven’t seen you hurrying up this much with hunting before.”

Yu Jin-Ho was feeling truly astonished today.

He already knew very well that Jin-Woo was strong, but today, he seemed to be on another dimension altogether.

But, that was par for the course, really.

Jin-Woo inwardly laughed out.

‘Well, monsters in this dungeon were Werewolves, after all.’

[Title: Slaughterer of Wolves]

A Title given to a hunter skilled in hunting wolves. When facing animal-type monsters, all of your Stats will increase by 40%.

The buff given by the title ‘Slaughterer of Wolves’ of course came into effect against the Werewolves as well.

How could the monsters from a rank C dungeon contend with him, when his level was already so high to begin with, never mind the effect of that buff helping him out, too?

Thanks to that, Yu Jin-Ho had been kept real busy while trying to extract all those magic crystals from the dead monsters. He even had to drink five vials of the HP potion, too.

He shook his head several times, complaining that he wouldn’t be able to eat lunch now, after the potions filled him up completely.

‘That’s that, but...’

Jin-Woo slowly raised his head.

He had been sensing someone’s gaze coming from somewhere.

‘I don’t sense any magical energy, so he can’t be a Hunter.’

He took a look around, but couldn’t spot anyone suspicious.

If he got serious about discovering who it was, then he should be able to find the person; but then, as the target didn’t emit any killing intent or hostile intentions, it’d take a really long time to track the culprit down.

‘.....’

It might be nothing, too.

Perhaps inevitably, the gaze disappeared before long.

“Hyung-nim, is everything alright?”

There was no time to waste here.

Jin-Woo took one last look around and climbed into the van.

He couldn’t sense anyone looking at him by the second Gate’s location.

...Both the times when he entered, and also when exiting the Gate.

‘Was I being overly cautious?’

What a relief it was, knowing that it wasn’t something serious.

Meanwhile, Yu Jin-Ho walked over and apologetically lowered his head.

“Hyung-nim, I’m really sorry about this. This is the last Gate for the day. Other ones were just too far from here.”

“Don’t worry about it. That’s not something you should apologise for, anyway.”

The sun was still pretty high up in the sky, but thanks to the duo’s antics, just about every Gate that appeared in the district had been taken care of, so their day had to come to an end here.

“Thank you all for working hard, everyone.”

“What do you mean, working hard. It’s you, the raid leader, who worked hardest.”

“See you tomorrow.”

“Take it easy now.”

After sending everyone away, the remaining two men climbed aboard the driver’s and the passenger’s seats of the van.

“Let me take you home, hyung-nim.”

Before anyone had noticed it, Yu Jin-Ho had become a trusty chauffeur. Him sitting behind the wheel looked perfectly normal now.

Jin-Woo looked Yu Jin-Ho with pitying eyes.

‘Just because he wants a shot at the position of the Guild Master, a scion of a wealthy family now has to work as a chauffeur....’

Yu Jin-Ho had been smiling brightly while pressing on the accelerator, before realising that Jin-Woo was staring at him and asked with an equally bright voice.

“Eh? Is there something on my face, hyung-nim?”

“.....Nope. Never mind.”

Jin-Woo pretended to know nothing, before suddenly recalling something else rather important, and he pulled out his phone to check the time.

‘Right now, it’s.... 16:46.’

Indeed, it was still too early to go home. How fortunate that he still had one thing he could do.

‘I’m sure it was around here, right?’

According to his memories, at least.

Jin-Woo spoke up quickly.

“Hey, Jin-Ho.”

“Yes, hyung-nim?”

Yu Jin-Ho replied while professionally turning the steering wheel. The van the two of them were riding on smoothly went around the curve on the road.

“Head to the Mirae department store.”

“Mirae department store?”

Yu Jin-Ho formed a confused expression.

“Yeah. Let’s go there.”

“Well, yes. It’s just around the corner from here, but.... I did notice it back during the hunting, so like, is there really nothing going on, hyung-nim?”

“....For some reason, you’ve been talking a lot more than necessary lately.”

That prompted Yu Jin-Ho’s head to rigidly stare forward and nowhere else.

“I shall get us there at the speed of light, hyung-nim. Please hold on tight.”

Yu Jin-Ho quickly changed his attitude and drove the van like a stuntman, never once touching his brake pedal.

The distance to cover wasn't a lot, so they arrived at the destination pretty quickly.

The van came to a screeching halt in front of the building. The overall vibe given off by the Mirae department store located smack dab in the city of Seoul's CBD was quite something to behold.

When Jin-Woo climbed off the van, Yu Jin-Ho followed suit.

“Hyung-nim, our Guild's gotta use this kind of a building as our headquarters in the future. What do you think?”

Yu Jin-Ho stared up at the department store building and threw half a joke.

However, there was no reply. Sensing that something was weird here, Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly took a look next to him.

“Ehh?”

Jin-Woo was no longer standing there.

“Hyung-nim?”

No matter how hard he looked around, Jin-Woo was gone without a trace.

“H-hyung-nim??”

[With the death of the Boss, the interior of the dungeon will revert back to its original state.]

‘I levelled up again twice in the department store instant dungeon.’

The steps taking Jin-Woo home were light and cheery.

It had been a while, but the key to the instant dungeon had finally come out of the random box recently. And that key was supposed to be ‘used’ at the Mirae department store.

He was wondering when to go, but decided to visit the place today since he found himself with enough free time.

[“H-hyung-nim??”]

Jin-Woo recalled the dazed face of Yu Jin-Ho as the kid searched for him, and couldn't help but chuckle.

His phone suddenly went off, then.

Before answering it, he checked the number on the phone's screen, but he couldn't recognise it.

‘Who could it be?’

Back when he was still in high school, he was too busy trying to be a mother to his little sister, and after graduation, he started right away as a Hunter so one could say that Jin-Woo's circle of acquaintances was fairly small.

'I shouldn't be getting calls from unknown numbers....'

He tilted his head only for a second or two. For the time being, he decided to answer it.

"Hello."

- "Hello. Is this Mister Seong Jin-Woo speaking?"

It was an open and friendly-sounding voice of a man.

Jin-Woo hung up the moment he heard that.

Click!

'Well, from my experience, this kinda call is 99% someone trying to sell me stuff, or trying to entice me to get a loan, anyway.'

Just as he was about to put his phone back in the pocket, it rang again.

Buzz...

And it was the exact same number.

'What the? It wasn't someone selling stuff?'

Normally, these salespeople would call whoever just so they could meet their sales target, which meant that they would almost never call him back this quickly as soon as the connection was dropped.

Why? They were quick-witted enough to realise that this would be a waste of time, that's why.

'Which means, the guy on the other side really has some kind of business with me....'

So, he answered the call properly this time.

"Hello, this is Seong Jin-Woo."

- "Ahh, so it was the right number. I thought I called the wrong one because the call got cut off so quickly. Ahaha."

"..."

Jin-Woo deliberated for the whole of 2 seconds on whether to apologise or not with an excuse of him thinking that the call was about selling insurance or some such, because the man's voice sounded a bit...

But, in the end, he decided not to.

'It feels like me apologising now would only make it worse.'

A short bout of silence later, the salesman, no, the man with a salesman's voice, made his belated introduction.

- "Ah, where are my manners. My bad for the late introduction. My name is Ahn Sahng-Min, and I work for the White Tiger Guild."

Jin-Woo's steps came to an abrupt halt.

'Why is the White Tiger calling me?'

He couldn't think of a reason why such a big Guild as the White Tiger would call him out of the blue.

The only thing he could think of, though, was that this Guild assisted him back in that dual dungeon incident, but....

'But, I'm sure they aren't calling me to investigate that day's matters after so much time has passed by already.'

Well, he couldn't stand not knowing, so before Ahn Sahng-Min had the chance to continue, Jin-Woo asked first.

"Why is the White Tiger Guild giving me a call?"

- "The matter is a bit sensitive to discuss over the phone, so may I come to you and have a chat face to face?"

The man was saying that he'd come to see him, not asking Jin-Woo to show up, so there was no real reason to refuse here.

Besides, he had nothing much to do the day after tomorrow, anyway.

'Didn't Yu Jin-Ho say he had some kind of an event back home?'

Yu Jin-Ho 'begged' for his understanding while saying that there was a big family event happening on that day and everyone simply had to show up, meaning he couldn't go on any raids.

'A big family event, eh....'

Just from thinking about a chaebol's family event, Jin-Woo could only imagine luxurious, elaborate parties being held in a five-star hotel's reception hall. Should he blame TV dramas for that now?

In any case, it'd be easy to set a date for that day.

"I have some free time on Thursday."

- "Well, the thing is... Will it be fine if we meet right now?"

Right now?

Jin-Woo checked the time.

The time on the phone's screen indicated eight in the evening.

“But, it’s already eight.”

- “Don’t worry. I’m waiting for you nearby. I just wish to speak to you for a little while only.”

“Nearby, as in?”

- “I’m in a cafe near you.”

Ahn Sahng-Min spoke the name of the cafe.

Jin-Woo was quite familiar with the place.

It was near his home so he went past it often, and not only that, but he also used it as the meeting place with Yu Jin-Ho as well.

Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed to a slit.

‘This guy knows where I live.’

REPORT

One couldn't find the addresses of Hunters on the Association's website. The only things appearing there were the names of Hunters and their ranks.

A Hunter could provide the relevant information themselves, but Jin-Woo didn't even leave behind his contact number there.

But, not only had this guy known his phone number, he was waiting near Jin-Woo's home, so without a doubt, he must've gathered enough information before showing up here.

'Ah, now that I think about it...'

He abruptly remembered something.

"I sensed a gaze on me earlier today, so I'm guessing that belonged to one of your people?"

Jin-Woo's voice became a level colder.

The guy on the phone apologised with a polite tone of voice.

Jin-Woo pondered for a while, before speaking up.

".....I'll be there shortly."

"The Hunters, the Reapers, the Knight Order, the Shining Star, and then us, the White Tiger. I'm sure you've heard of these names before."

Ahn Sahng-Min read off the names of the top 5 Guilds in South Korea, one by one.

The number one Guild was the Hunters.

However, the Hunters didn't start its life as the number one from the get-go. No, it was the Reapers who used to be the top dog.

However, after White Tiger separated itself from the Reapers, the number one spot changed hands.

Was this the case of the student becoming the master?

After going independent, the White Tiger leapfrogged the Reapers a long time ago. And they were aiming for the number one spot that, originally, belonged to the Reapers.

Ahn Sahng-Min was completely sure of it now.

He was sure of the fact that the man sitting across him, Seong Jin-Woo, would become an important piece of the puzzle and help the White Tiger 'reclaim' the glory of the past once more.

Ahn Sahng-Min presented his business card.

[Ahn Sahng-Min, Section Chief, Second Division, White Tiger Guild]

“My name is Ahn Sahng-Min, and I’m in charge of the Second Division of the White Tiger Guild, one of the top five in the country. Our role is to scout talented Hunters and manage them.”

If Seong Jin-Woo was any other Hunter, he'd have lowered his head 90 degrees before a business card was even brought out, and only then get to the main topic.

Unless one was an S-rank or an A, pretty much all Hunters dreamed of entering the White Tiger.

Honestly, Ahn Sahng-Min was hoping for that kind of reaction as well.

Unfortunately, Jin-Woo was different.

Not showing much reaction at all, he calmly asked what he wanted to ask first.

“Why does an officer of the White Tiger Guild perform background checks on someone like me?”

Ahn Sahng-Min inwardly flinched.

‘He’s not pressured even after hearing the name of the White Tiger?’

They haven't spoken for long, but for some reason, Ahn Sahng-Min sensed that it'd be rather challenging to scout Seong Jin-Woo.

On the other hand, that only made him even more desperate to bring Seong Jin-Woo into his guild now.

Well, it wouldn't be a bad thing for a newbie to be rather confident about himself, now would it?

‘Right, you gotta have at least balls as big as this, so we can start throwing you into whatever assignment that comes our way.’

Ahn Sahng-Min firmed his resolve once more.

“Let me get straight to the point. We wish to scout you, Mister Seong Jin-Woo. We promise to offer you double the amount of terms as offered by the Yujin Construction, no strings attached.”

Ahn Sahng-Min smiled deeply.

Yujin Construction was still in the middle of testing Seong Jin-Woo out.

‘They are being stupid.’

The speed at which he could clear a rank C dungeon, the publicity value of a Re-Awakened Hunter, and the calmness he was displaying in the current situation, etc....

No matter which side it was, there was no need to test this man out at all.

‘There’s no way that they have offered anything good, since they wouldn’t have figured out what his true worth is.’

That was why Ahn Sahng-Min was confident of doubling whatever terms Yujin offered this man. No, he was confident of offering something even better.

However, Jin-Woo’s stare became even colder.

“How did you know?”

“P-pardon me?”

Being on the receiving end of a reaction utterly contrary to his expectations, Ahn Sahng-Min ended up stuttering slightly, which was quite unbecoming of an experienced headhunter working for a large Guild.

“How did you find out about me?”

If Seong Jin-Woo’s voice actually had any physical weight, then that sentence would’ve crushed him to death, thought Ahn Sahng-Min.

‘What is this? This incredible pressure....?’

It was almost as if the other party was considering him as an enemy. Well, it was true that he had Jin-Woo followed, and one-sidedly demanded to meet like this.

From Jin-Woo’s perspective, it would be perfectly reasonable to consider Ahn Sahng-Min as his enemy.

Ahn Sahng-Min hurriedly explained himself.

“Ah, ah! It wasn’t our original intention to pry into your private affairs. We received information that someone was clearing rank C dungeons in our district at an alarming rate so we were investigating that. And that led us to find out about you, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

“....”

Jin-Woo retracted his gaze.

'So, that's what happened.'

Contrary to his thoughts, the other side didn't seem to have begun their investigation while knowing that something didn't add up about him. Simply by clearing dungeons far too quickly, he ended up being noticed instead.

'And he doesn't seem to be carrying any hostile intentions, either.'

Jin-Woo's expression softened slightly. And as a result, the taut tension between the two men eased a little.

'Whew-woo....'

Ahn Sahng-Min patted his chest down.

Their conversation still hadn't advanced forward, though. From here onwards, he had to get on Seong Jin-Woo's good books.

'And nothing's better than the sharing of privileged information to get on someone's good books.'

Ahn Sahng-Min was THE specialist when it came to scouting after all!

He quickly wiped the flustered expression off his face and formed a smile instead.

"Although it is a top secret, we know that the Chairman Yu Myung-Hwan is planning to establish a Guild of his own."

"....."

Jin-Woo neither denied it or confirmed it.

So, Ahn Sahng-Min continued on.

"And that's how we were able to figure it out when that person's son, Mister Yu Jin-Ho made contact with you, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim. And that is, they wish to bring you, a Re-Awakened Hunter, into their new Guild."

Indeed, Ahn Sahng-Min thought that Jin-Woo was a Re-Awakened.

'Well, I'm relieved that you think that way.'

Jin-Woo wouldn't need to cook up another story here, in other words.

Ahn Sahng-Min quickly carried on.

"I thought that we need to talk to you before you signed up with Yujin, and that's the only reason for my one-sided attempt to get in touch with you. Allow me to apologise once more if you've been greatly inconvenienced."

“It’s fine.”

Unless the other party approached him with evil intentions, there was no reason for Jin-Woo to get angry, especially when Ahn Sahng-Min was apologising this earnestly.

‘Besides, what’s more important here is that...’

Indeed, how should he go about dealing with this now?

While Jin-Woo pondered on what he should do here, Ahn Sahng-Min took the initiative and asked him a question.

“Have you finished negotiating with Yujin Construction already?”

He must’ve thought like this, because Jin-Woo was hesitating slightly with his replies.

Jin-Woo shook his head.

Ahn Sahng-Min’s expression immediately reverted from one that displayed a hint of anxiety, to a blooming smile.

‘Yes! That means he’s still a free agent!’

This was the perfect chance to catch the talented Hunter who could solo a rank C dungeon in 30 minutes.

To be more specific, a rank D Hunter also accompanied him, but to someone who possessed abilities exceeding a rank B, such a person would no longer provide any help but would only serve as a luggage carrier, instead.

‘If Seong Jin-Woo enters the White Tiger, and is ranked A after his re-assignment test, then...!’

An even bigger smile threatened to break out of his face, so Ahn Sahng-Min was having a hard time trying to regulate his expressions.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo was slowly scratching his chin.

‘This guy, why does it feel like he’s counting his chickens way before they hatch?’

Well, truthfully speaking, a Guild like White Tiger was not a bad choice. Not only was it one of the top five, but it also possessed enough potential to aim for the number one spot.

However, Jin-Woo wasn’t planning to enter a Guild any time soon.

‘Because, the higher my level is, the better the treatment I’d get.’

Also, even though it might be a story in the distant future, or maybe even something completely improbable, but....

‘Just like how I’ve been clearing the rank C dungeons, what if I can clear rank B and A dungeons solo?’

The profit earned from high-ranked dungeons exceeded one’s imaginations.

They were the sole reason why large Guilds could grow powerful enough to rival many large corporations now.

Expensive magic crystals, corpses of the monsters, rare materials from the dungeons themselves, and even things like Rune stones and other artefacts, too.

An astronomical amount of money changed hands every day.

He could potentially hog them all for himself, so was there a reason for him to share them with a Guild?

‘As long as this level up thing doesn’t stop, it’s not an impossible dream.’

So, at this point in time, entering a Guild was way too premature.

The corners of Jin-Woo’s lips slowly arched up.

Ahn Sahng-Min thought that was a sign of an incoming positive answer, and smiled along as well.

“Have you made up your mind?”

“You promised to double the amount offered, yes?”

“Yes, that’s correct. If you find my offer not to your liking, then I’m prepared to offer you more.”

“In that case, how much is the building the White Tiger calls home?”

Ahn Sahng-Min’s face froze for a second there.

‘Is he questioning the financial muscle of the White Tiger?’

But, there was no need to get worked up here. Indeed, this was a great opportunity to advertise his Guild. There was nothing to hide, and absolutely no reason why he couldn’t talk, either.

This was for the better, he thought.

“The estimated price is around 50 billion Won. Also, although there are different businesses using the building aside from us, it still belongs to the White Tiger Guild.” (TL: Around $45 million)

Ahn Sahng-Min proudly spoke.

In the beginning, the Guild was renting some space in that building. But once they stabilised and found their footing, they simply bought it outright.

It took only one year to do so, too.

It was one of the easiest ways to learn just how much large Guilds made in a year.

If the other side wanted, Ahn Sahng-Min was willing to disclose the annual profit and the overall revenue, too. But then, after hearing a single sentence uttered by Jin-Woo, he became completely speechless.

“Can you hand over that building to me, then?”

“I beg your pardon?”

Ahn Sahng-Min’s eyes opened up real wide.

He doubted his own hearing, so he asked back.

“C-can you explain what you mean by that?”

Jin-Woo calmly explained himself.

“You see, Yujin has promised to hand over a building worth around 30 billion Won. If the White Tiger’s building is indeed around 50 billion, well, it’s not exactly the double the price, but I can overlook such things.”

“T-thirty billion??”

Ahn Sahng-Min couldn’t close his slack jaw.

Seong Jin-Woo’s career spanned four years.

However, most of those were spent as a rank E.

And it hadn’t been long since he got noticed by someone. In other words, he must’ve gone through his Re-Awakening process not too long ago.

Yet, just how incredible was his ability that someone like Yu Myung-Hwan, famous for his wily business smarts, promised the huge amount of 30 billion Won?

Not only that, even before Seong Jin-Woo had gone through with the re-assignment test, too?!

‘W-wait. Could he be lying here, because I won’t be able to confirm if this is true or not?’

Ahn Sahng-Min narrowed his eyes, feeling suspicious.

As if he had read Ahn Sahng-Min’s thoughts, Jin-Woo pulled out his phone and quickly dialled a number.

Ring.... ring....

Click.

It was in the evenings and the interior of the cafe was quiet. Still, Jin-Woo put the phone on speaker and raised the volume to the maximum.

“Hey, Jin-Ho. I wanted to ask you about something.”

Jin-Ho? Was this Yu Jin-Ho?

Ahn Sahng-Min nervously swallowed his saliva.

‘Could he be thinking of telling Yu Jin-Ho what we’ve been discussing just now??’

Too bad, Ahn Sahng-Min’s expectation was a bit off the mark.

Jin-Woo spoke about something else.

“That building you wanted to give to me, how much did you say it was?”

REPORT

“Hold on.”

Jin-Woo covered the mouthpiece of the phone with his hand and asked Ahn Sahng-Min.

“If you still can’t believe it, why don’t you speak to him personally?”

Ahn Sahng-Min wiped the cold sweat forming on his forehead and shook his head.

After ending the call, Jin-Woo noticed that the look on Ahn Sahng-Min’s face had changed completely now.

Indeed, Ahn Sahng-Min’s eyes were trembling non-stop.

‘Even before their Guild is established, Yujin has promised 30 billion as the contract signing fee?? And then, the second son of Chairman Yu Myung-Hwan continues to use honorifics, too?’

Ahn Sahng-Min was now deeply mired in uncertainty and confusion.

“That, that, that is... I, I should say that, such a big amount is, well, uh, well beyond my ability to... If you just give me some time, I can speak to the higher-ups in the Guild and then....”

Jin-Woo abruptly cut him off.

“In that case, our discussion ends here.”

Ahn Sahng-Min became speechless.

His head drooped slightly, as his head was quickly filled with the reason for this failure.

‘In the end, we simply didn’t have enough information.’

Being too hasty brought about this failure.

After he picked up on the scent of this huge jackpot, he got too excited and forgot to move in a more cautious and prepared manner.

If he had learned of what Yujin’s offer was like, get the full backing of his Guild, and go about his business step by step, then.....

‘For now, I need to report this to the Guild Master.’

If he was a Hunter that Chairman Yu Myung-Hwan was willing to put forward 30 billion, then perhaps his value could be over 50 billion, no, 100 billion, instead.

It was not too late.

‘If I get the promise of the Guild’s full backing, dig out all the information on Seong Jin-Woo, and come out swinging even harder, then...’

It was at this point that Jin-Woo’s voice could be heard.

“I want to ask you about something.”

Ahn Sahng-Min raised his head.

Jin-Woo was no longer smiling.

The weather had warmed up nicely with the hint of Spring nowadays, yet for some reason, the surrounding air felt chillier than usual.

Gulp.

Just as Ahn Sahng-Min swallowed some dry saliva, Jin-Woo asked him a question with a low, heavy voice.

“How many people know about me?”

“It’s... It’s only me for the time being. I was too anxious to scout you so I didn’t even stop to report to my superiors yet.”

Actually, there was one more person. Hyun Ki-Cheol, his subordinate but also his right-hand man.

Ahn Sahng-Min concealed the presence of Hyun Ki-Cheol for the time being. He was worried that Jin-Woo might get real unhappy if he learned that there were two people instead of one.

However, Jin-Woo voice became even colder and threatening than before.

“For the sake of trust, let’s not lie to each other, shall we?”

Ahn Sahng-Min began panicking visibly now.

‘What is this? Did he obtain some information on us before coming here?’

If that were the case, then things might get worse if he continued to argue that he was the only one. He didn’t even want to imagine what would happen next.

'I gotta be honest here.'

The relationship between a Hunter and a Guild was pretty similar to that of an entertainer and the talent agency.

They might not be able to sign a contract right now, but by maintaining a good relationship, anything could happen in the future.

At the bare minimum, he should not cause friction with another Hunter. That was one of the iron-clad rules of the Second Division.

Ahn Sahng-Min quickly opened his mouth.

"Actually, one of my subordinates also knows about this matter. I'm telling you the honest truth."

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

'Indeed....'

It was as he suspected.

All these things, there were too many for one person to handle – investigating him, observing him, and calling him, too.

Most importantly, what made Jin-Woo sure of this fact was the timing of the phone call. As soon as he was near his place, Ahn Sahng-Min called him with such excellent timing.

'Meaning, someone was waiting near my home and called him as soon as I showed up.'

This man wanted to meet Jin-Woo as soon as possible but it'd be bad if Yu Jin-Ho found out in the process, after all.

'Still, it's not the whole White Tiger Guild.'

He could tell from that earlier reaction, back when he was talking about 50 billion Won. Ahn Sahng-Min was so openly flustered when an amount of money he couldn't handle was brought up.

If he was being ordered around by the upper management, then he'd at least try giving them a call after hearing that amount, didn't matter whether that amount was even feasible or not.

That was why Jin-Woo suspected that a small team consisting of two, maybe three, people were involved here, and lo and behold, the person in charge confessed to it being only two.

'What a relief.'

Jin-Woo definitely didn't want to complicate the matter any further than necessary. Two people were within his ability to control.

If he left them alone like this, no doubt they would continue to harass him down the line. That was why there was a definite need to warn the other party, back off him for good.

Jin-Woo opened his mouth.

“Actually, I also refused Yujin’s offers.”

Jin-Woo’s explosive, unexpected revelation!!

Ahn Sahng-Min was even more shocked than before.

“Pardon me?!”

It was right at this moment, Jin-Woo suddenly vanished from the spot.

“What?!”

Ahn Sahng-Min hurriedly stood up from his chair.

He quickly scanned the interior of the cafe, but couldn’t spot Jin-Woo anywhere.

‘What was that?? Could he have moved faster than the eye can see?!’

Ahn Sahng-Min was too flustered and realised that someone had grabbed his shoulder from the side quite belatedly.

“Heok.”

All the hair on his back stood up at once.

“Don’t turn around.”

A cold voice came from his side.

Jin-Woo, who had been sitting across him until then, had vanished without making a sound and was now standing right next to him, still not visible to the naked eye.

‘S-Stealth??’

Cold sweat drops formed on Ahn Sahng-Min’s forehead.

‘Could.... could he be.... angry at me....?’

Hunters were, in general, monsters.

He knew this well, because he got to observe them from a close vantage point every single day.

That was why he was always super-respectful towards them.

‘Did me spying on him and following him around cause an issue here? Should I have requested protection from the Guild before coming here? No, hang on, no one knows what his ranking is, so how can I request protection, then....?’

His thoughts became messy and his heart pounded relentlessly. Even the sound of him swallowing his saliva echoed around too loudly in his ears.

Jin-Woo spoke, almost in a hushed whisper.

“Sit down slowly. I don’t want to scare you.”

Ahn Sahng-Min slowly nodded his head.

‘But, you’re plenty scary enough already...’

He then slowly sat back down on his chair. Jin-Woo revealed himself and settled down right next to him.

‘Right...’

Jin-Woo’s words of not wanting to scare Ahn Sahng-Min sounded about right. His eyes when he said he wanted to ask something, were cold enough to chill the surrounding air.

If Ahn Sahng-Min had to stare into those eyes while listening to Jin-Woo’s words, then he might have experienced what his heart falling to the pit of his stomach felt like.

‘You’re being considerate towards me, is that it?’

Of course, he couldn’t get the thoughts of Jin-Woo being a very scary guy out of his head.

In the meantime, Jin-Woo opened his mouth.

“The reason why I refused Yujin’s offers is simple. I’m not planning to join any Guilds at the moment.”

Two men conversed while staring forward, never locking their eyes once.

“S-so that’s how it was.”

“Also....”

Jin-Woo took a second before continuing on.

“I don’t want to see the number of people who know about me increase.”

What he wanted here was rather simple.

He didn’t want to join a Guild, and he didn’t want anyone talking about him.

Ahn Sahng-Min quickly understood those points.

However, there was one thing he was still curious about.

“T-then, why are you still being accompanied by Mister Yu Jin-Ho?”

“He’s helping me out on some personal matters. He’s the only one who knows about my Re-Awakening. Also, I believe he’s a friend that I can trust. That’s why I asked him for a favour. And so....”

Jin-Woo’s voice became heavier still.

“So, if I start hearing things about me, can I assume that it came from you, Chief Ahn Sang-Min, or your subordinate?”

It’d been a while since Jin-Woo stopped grabbing his shoulder, yet Ahn Sahng-Min felt like he was being crushed by the younger man’s words.

‘He’s not putting on airs, either.’

Why did he feel this way?

Ahn Sahng-Min was so sure of the fact that Jin-Woo was fully capable of harming him.

‘My gut instinct when evaluating people is almost always right.’

Jin-Woo survived several devastating, horrifying incidents.

Wasn’t there a saying about burying the matters of the dungeon inside a dungeon? No one knew just what kind of things Jin-Woo did inside those dungeons.

‘On top of that, this man possesses the Stealth skill, too.....’

Dealing with the Stealth skill was incredibly tough. If the skill holder decided to commit a crime, he’d be able to off anyone without so much as leaving behind a single clue.

Things like CCTV, security guards and alarm system would all become utterly useless against such a person.

A thick strand of cold sweat rolled down the side of Ahn Sahng-Min’s forehead.

‘Who knew he could use Stealth....?’

Excellent abilities, and even a rare skill, too.

It was not for nothing that Yujin came up with an offer of 30 billion.

‘They aren’t ones to start a losing business deal, indeed.’

Thump, thump.

Ahn Sahng-Min's heart continued to beat in excitement even though he was trembling in fear. His lips parted with great difficulty.

“I-I’ll never talk about this matter ever again. I’ll make sure that Ki-Cheol... No, my subordinate will keep his mouth shut as well.”

Keeping everything hush-hush was something Ahn Sahng-Min also wanted, too. Heck, he probably would've requested it himself first!

An excellent Hunter not affiliated with anyone!

There was no reason to increase the competition by spreading the rumour around, nor did Ahn Sahng-Min want to share the glory and recognition by telling other people, either.

‘Honestly, though, the biggest reason being I’m too scared of him and don’t want him as my enemy....’

“I’ll trust you, Chief Ahn.”

With those words, the presence beside Ahn Sahng-Min disappeared completely. He quickly took a look around.

It was as if Ahn Sahng-Min fell out of a different dimension, since the atmosphere inside the cafe was rather serene.

“Huh.....”

Ahn Sahng-Min remained speechless. He could only pat his pounding chest down.

It was here that Hyun Ki-Cheol ran into the cafe.

He'd been staring at the two men through the window from the outside, and as soon as Jin-Woo completely disappeared from the view, hurriedly entered the cafe to check up on his superior officer.

“Chief!”

Ahn Sahng-Min's complexion was poor. Hyun Ki-Cheol asked, his voice full of worry.

“What happened? Did it not work out with Seong Jin-Woo?”

Ahn Sahng-Min's trembling hands managed to pull out a cigarette. While sliding it between his lips, he made his reply.

“Hey, Ki-Cheol-ah... I think, we just ran into a far bigger jackpot than our initial estimates.”

He definitely had to scout that man.

That was the only line of thought in his head. Thankfully, there was still a chance.

It was then, Hyun Ki-Cheol lightly grasped Ahn Sahng-Min's wrist.

"Uhm.... Pardon me, Chief."

Ahn Sahng-Min raised his head just before he could light the cigarette up.

"Yeah?"

Hyun Ki-Cheol took a look around, then cautiously whispered.

"This is a no smoking zone."

Ahn Sahng-Min slowly crushed the cigarette.

"You dumba*s....."

As soon as he got home, Jin-Woo summoned his Status Window.

Chapter 43 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

From 27 to 39. His level had jumped up by 12.

This would be the first time that his level saw such an explosive rise since he entered the Hapjeong instant dungeon back when he was still a level one. He came out of there as level 17.

Back then, his level was low, so the levelling speed was high. But now, that wasn't strictly true.

This just went to show how many dungeons he cleared in a short space of time.

'It's been four days since I started clearing dungeons with Yu Jin-Ho. And we conquered nine of them in only four days....'

Not only that, they were nine C-ranked dungeons, too.

Rank C dungeons were the highest difficulty a freelancer team could clear on their own.

What a crazy clearing speed this was.

This was the worst possible situation, a catastrophe, for other Hunters found in this area that needed rank C dungeons to make a living.

Yu Jin-Ho, the only witness to the proceedings, was getting more and more astonished by how faster Jin-Woo was clearing each dungeon.

Well, the higher his level was, the easier it got to clear a dungeon, after all.

Nine dungeons cleared and 12 level ups. Clearing one dungeon was almost as good as levelling up more than once.

And he still had 10 more raids to go.

By the time he finished all 19 raids, as he had agreed with Yu Jin-Ho, his level should shoot past 45.

He won against a rank B Hunter back when his level was in the mid-twenties. He couldn't even begin to fathom just how strong he was now.

'My heart... it's beating really fast.'

Jin-Woo placed his hand on his chest, near his heart. He sensed it pounding real fast in excitement.

Thump, thump!

The sensation of getting stronger every day was one heck of an enjoyable ride.

He would've never imagined such a thing happening to him in the past.

...Things like, entering the Gates and clearing the dungeons would be this much fun.

'Well, I can sense myself getting stronger all the time, after all.'

As his level went up...

As his Stat values rose up....

He could directly feel how much he had changed through hunting monsters.

'Hunting monsters, is it....'

He felt like a real Hunter now. The word 'hunting' no longer sounded like a foreign concept to him.

Wasn't there a certain saying that went something like 'finding the next place to hunt is just as important to a hunter as the moment he hunts?' (TL: Again, 'hunter' with a lower case 'h'. It's the literal hunter, not monster-hunting Hunters.)

His next goal was already set.

'....The Demonic Castle dungeon.'

He was a level 21 back then, wasn't he?

He had grown by nearly 20 levels since the day he first set foot in that mysterious tower-like dungeon.

He thought that perhaps now, he was ready to tackle that place once more. However, just from recalling that gatekeeper monster, Cerberus, he grew very cautious about taking another step in that place.

'What if some crazy monsters that I can't handle jump out in droves as soon as I enter?'

Goosebumps broke out all over his skin.

If he could get away from there using the 'Stealth' skill, that would be great, but still, he had to consider the possibility of failing to do so.

Even if he got lucky ten times, just a single mistake could cost him his life;

that was the life of a Hunter.

So, he needed to be sure.

He needed to be sure of being strong enough to handle a group of monsters as strong as Cerberus.

‘Cerberus’s name was in red letters, right?’

He now knew that the difficulty of killing a monster was reflected in the colour of its name.

With the exception of the Demonic Castle, he had yet to run into a monster with a red name.

The instant dungeons he’d been to with the random box keys were all populated with low-ranked monsters most of the time.

It was the same story with the Mirae department store, too.

But, what was going on here?

‘What is this?’

When he thought that he hadn’t encountered a single monster with a red name besides the one in the Demonic Castle, he kind of felt like he overlooked something just now. It was as if he had forgotten something crucial.

‘Does this mean I have run into other red-name monsters besides the Cerberus?’

But, how could that be?

He fought the Cerberus when he was level 21 and nearly died. So, if he fought another one before that, then he should’ve been pushed to the brink of death, too....

“.....Ah!”

A loud gasp leaked out from his mouth.

Indeed, there was one event where he did run into red-name monsters and almost died.

‘The penalty quest!’

The centipedes he saw back in that nameless desert all had red names.

[Poison-Fanged Giant Desert Centipede]

It’d been a while ago, and he ran into them rather unexpectedly, so his mind was not really thinking of them as monsters at this point.

That was why it took some time for him to remember.

'If I can kill those centipedes with ease, then....!'

Then, he'd be sure of conquering the Demon's Castle as well.

Since there was more than one centipede there, he should be able to find out whether it was okay for him to fight against many at the same time, too.

The obvious issue was how to go back to that place....

'Is there no other way besides not doing the Daily Quest?'

The amount of Stat points he got as rewards was the same regardless of it being a Penalty Quest or a Daily Quest.

Which meant that he wouldn't lose out too much at the end of the day.

'Let's go to the Penalty Zone tomorrow.'

To think, he'd deliberately not do the Daily Quest just so he could enter the Penalty Zone....

It was a rather funny thing when he thought about how close to death he was the first time he ran into those centipedes.

"I wonder, will they give me experience points and loot when I kill them?"

A smile automatically spread on his lips.

It was then.

Jin-Woo's senses picked up on the presence of a person climbing out from the elevator stopping at the end of the hallway, followed by the light footsteps of a female.

He was well familiar with them.

'It's Jin-Ah.'

Currently, it was 11 PM. About the time his little sister came home.

Jin-Woo got up from his seat and headed to the door before Jin-Ah could rummage through her pockets to find her keys.

Click.

"Oh~~."

Jin-Ah playfully exclaimed out in admiration.

She used to get so surprised every time he opened the door without a warning but now, she didn't even pretend to get shocked anymore.

Well, a human was supposed to be a very adaptable creature, and here was the irrefutable proof.

“I’m home~.”

“Welcome back.”

Jin-Ah greeted him with a bright smile and trotted to her room. Jin-Woo closed the door and locked it, before turning around to hear....

“...Oppa.”

Jin-Ah peeked her head out from the doorway to her room.

“Do you have free time this week?”

“What’s up?”

“My homeroom teacher is doing one of those parent-teacher meeting things. If you can’t make it, well, it’s fine too.”

Jin-Ah looked kind of anxious, as if her homeroom teacher had ‘asked her nicely’ or some such.

‘The parent-teacher meeting, huh....’

Jin-Ah was already a high-school senior, meaning that school life should be getting pretty hectic right now. Jin-Woo had half a mind to come up with an excuse and say he didn’t have time to go, but what an unfortunate timing this was, there was this one day where he had nothing scheduled.

‘D*mn you, Yu Jin-Ho. Utterly useless....’

Jin-Woo deliberated for a while, before answering her.

“Thursday.”

“Really? Thanks, oppa!”

Jin-Ah’s expression brightened up in an instant. She looked as if she’d run to him for a bear hug, so Jin-Woo hurriedly waved his hands around.

“Che.”

Jin-Ah glared cutely at him and closed the door behind her.

Soon, a soft groan escaped from Jin-Woo’s mouth.

“Fuu....”

From going on raids without a break to visiting the penalty zone, and now, a parent-teacher meeting the day after tomorrow, too.

It seemed that the rest of his week would remain quite busy.

Part 8. Class Change Quest

Jin-Woo left home early in the morning.

His schedule for the day was packed, to say the least.

Yu Jin-Ho had booked four Gates for the day, thinking that they should do tomorrow's quota today instead.

'Well, if we consider the speed of clearing a dungeon....'

...It'd not be too hard to clear four or five dungeons in a single day.

Of course, it was pretty rare to see that many rank C Gates opening up at the same time in the same district. So, they were rather fortunate today.

With light, airy steps, he arrived at the entrance of the apartment building. However, he couldn't spot Yu Jin-Ho's van waiting for him in the usual spot, the front of the entrance.

Also, Jin-Woo sensed a suspicious presence as well.

"Tsk."

He might have dismissed it offhand were it not for the events of the night before. So, he wasn't going to overlook this.

'And I clearly warned him, too.....'

Jin-Woo immediately discovered a man in a business suit hiding around the corner of the building. The man was busy looking into his watch and didn't seem to have sensed Jin-Woo's approach.

Jin-Woo addressed the man right in front of his nose.

"Excuse me."

The man flinched grandly and jumped up really high.

"Seo-Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim!!"

He looked like he'd seen a ghost or something.

'Well, I hid my presence for that purpose, anyway.'

Jin-Woo tutted inwardly and spoke up.

"You're from the White Tiger Guild, yes?"

"Pardon me? Ahh, yes, I am. My name is Hyun Ki-Cheol from the Second Division of the White Tiger Guild."

The Chief calling himself Ahn Sahng-Min or some such said last night that he was working with a subordinate and this guy must've been him.

Hyun Ki-Cheol studied Jin-Woo’s mood while cautiously extending his right hand.

It seemed like that he wanted a handshake, but obviously, Jin-Woo wasn’t interested. When Jin-Woo simply glared at the man without saying anything, Hyun Ki-Cheol withdrew his hand with a slightly reddened face.

“Didn’t I clearly say last night that I’m not planning to join any Guild for the time being?”

Hyun Ki-Cheol hurriedly waved his hand around.

“Oh, no. I’m not here because of that.”

He then presented a tumbler held in his other hand.

“What’s this?”

Jin-Woo asked while studying the colourful liquid contained within the semi-transparent tumbler. Hyun Ki-Cheol pushed his chest forward and proudly spoke.

“It’s vegetable juice. I’ve prepared it personally, so you don’t have to worry about its quality!”

“.....”

Hyun Ki-Cheol’s hand continued to push the tumbler forward. Jin-Woo had no choice but to accept the tumbler and asked again.

“So, like, have you been waiting since the early dawn just to give me this juice?”

“Yes. Well, even if you’re a Hunter, you should still look after your health, you know!”

Jin-Woo’s puzzlement over why would the White Tiger Guild be worried about his health lasted only for a couple of seconds.

Because, Hyun Ki-Cheol bowed his head deeply and with a bright smile, quickly walked away.

“See you again another time, Hunter-nim!”

Jin-Woo slowly shook the tumbler at Hyun Ki-Cheol as the latter waved his hand.

“.....What a funny guy.”

After Hyun Ki-Cheol had disappeared from the view, Jin-Woo looked at the tumbler.

He once heard stories about a certain ‘Insurance King’ who gave out bottles of yoghurt to his customers and bought their goodwill that way, but well, that man Hyun Ki-Cheol should be the very first Guild employee ever to personally make veggie juice and deliver it.

‘Well, I did accept it so I can’t even throw it away now, can I?’

That man wouldn’t have been stupid enough to try it, but if he did pour some kind of poison in the juice, Jin-Woo’s detox buff should take care of that, so no worries there.

Should he at least give it a go and have a taste, then?

Slurp.

He used a straw stuck in the tumbler and took a long sip, before his eyes opened wider.

‘Hey, it’s tasty.’

It was here that he heard a familiar voice calling out to him.

“Hyung-nim!”

He turned around to see Yu Jin-Ho walking towards him.

Yu Jin-Ho still had that bright face as usual, but he was also pointing in the direction where Hyun Ki-Cheol disappeared to with his chin.

“Hyung-nim, who was that just now? He’d been standing here for a while, you know?”

Jin-Woo’s reply was pretty simple.

“An insurance salesman.”

“Aha.”

Being a positive-minded guy, Yu Jin-Ho accepted that explanation right away. Jin-Woo looked around the vicinity and asked.

“Where’s your van?”

If he saw Hyun Ki-Cheol standing here, that meant Yu Jin-Ho had arrived quite a while ago, too. But strangely enough, the kid’s favourite van was nowhere to be seen.

“I parked it way over there, hyung-nim.”

“But, why?”

“Well, you know there’s been a series of unsolved homicides taking place around these parts, yes? I'm not from around here and people were beginning to suspect me and stuff, so...."

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

Those murders were brought up frequently on the local news lately.

The victims were mostly young women. There had been two murders this month already.

And then, there was an unknown black van parked right out in front of the apartment building. Of course, the residents would become fearful and anxious.

Slurp, slurp....

It was here that the veggie juice was finally finished. Jin-Woo lightly shook around the empty tumbler before walking towards where the van was supposedly parked.

"Let's go."

"Okay, hyung-nim!"

Lizardmen came out in this dungeon.

As their 'name' indicated, they were literally bipedal lizards. They walked on two legs, wielded weapons, and even resorted to flinging around magic attacks, too.

The number of Lizardman Mages was low, though. However, they were rather cumbersome to deal with in return.

For instance...

Two balls of flames erupted near the tips of the Lizardman Mage's hands.

'Magic?'

When Jin-Woo tried to get closer, the two Lizardmen protecting the Mage stabbed their spears at him.

Indeed, what quick reflexes befitting reptiles.

Jin-Woo jumped rearward and barely missed the speartips.

Right away, the balls of flame flew at him.

Swish-!

Swoosh!!

"Hyung-nim, watch out!!"

Yu Jin-Ho cried out from his position a lot of distance away.

Kwaboom!!!

Along with a huge explosion, the narrow cavern-like dungeon shook around noticeably.

REPORT

The choking smoke filled up the interior of the dungeon.

“Cough, cough.”

Yu Jin-Ho covered his nose with the back of his wrist and loudly coughed out. However, he was far more worried about Jin-Woo at the moment. The firepower of the Lizardman Mage was that strong.

Fortunately, Jin-Woo rapidly emerged from the smoke completely unscathed, meaning there was no need to worry in the first place.

Yu Jin-Ho inwardly exclaimed out in admiration.

‘As expected of hyung-nim!’

Jin-Woo was able to evade the attacks of the Lizardmen, reputedly the hardest monsters to deal with in dungeons ranked C, without getting a single hair disturbed. Not only that, from a Mage, too!

From Yu Jin-Ho’s perspective, it was as if Jin-Woo was getting faster every day.

‘.....I must be imagining things, right?’

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo spat out pieces of rubble that somehow found their way inside his mouth.

“Ptooi.”

The colour of his saliva landing on the ground was black.

‘These b*stards....’

He became really p*ssed off by the fact that he had to breathe in unhealthy smoke because of a lone lizard and its cheap tricks. And his dissatisfaction could be seen clearly in his expression.

Jin-Woo was frowning deeply now.

[You’ve used ‘Skill: Intimidation’.]

His angrily glaring eyes ‘shot’ out powerful murderous intent.

[‘Effect: Fear’ has been activated.]

[All Stats of the targets will be reduced by 50% for one minute.]

The Lizardmen began panicking grandly after being exposed to his powerful murderous intent.

“Kuehh??”

“Kurururuka??”

Jin-Woo didn't miss this chance and threw the Poison Fang of Kasaka with everything he had. The dagger flew in a dead-straight line and splendidly pierced the forehead of one of the Lizard spearmen.

Stab!!

The speed of Jin-Woo's flying dagger was too fast for a weakened monster to evade.

“Tsururuka!!”

The remaining spearman roared out in anger after witnessing the death of its comrade. However, Jin-Woo was no longer standing where the creature's spear was pointing at.

“Tsurukahnaka!”

The Lizardman Mage cried out nervously.

“Tsurukahnaka!”

When the Mage repeated the same 'words' as before, the spearman turned around to face the Mage and roared out.

“Tsuruka!!”

The spearman bared its fangs and approached the Mage in a threatening manner. However, the Mage didn't back down, either.

“Tsuruaeek!”

It happened then.

“Kak!!”

Suddenly, the spearman's chest burst open.

The Mage's face was now covered in blood; it cried out in alarm and hurriedly took several steps back.

“Tsuruakk??”

The 'Stealth' slowly came undone and the spear stabbing through the chest of the Lizard spearman revealed itself.

The man holding that spear was, of course, Jin-Woo.

When he let go of the shaft, both the spear and the Lizardman that got skewered by it crashed to the ground simultaneously.

Thud!

In the meantime, Jin-Woo rapidly recovered his Poison Fang of Kasaka from the head of the other Lizard spearman.

“Tsuruaaarik!!”

Red beams of light appeared again in the hands of the Lizardman Mage. However, Jin-Woo didn't give it time to complete its actions.

‘Dash!’

The distance between Jin-Woo and the Mage disappeared in an instant. The Mage's repulsive-looking reptilian eyes grew really wide.

Pushuheee-

Jin-Woo ducked and avoided the flames erupting out from the Mage, slid to the monster's rear, and stabbed his dagger near the target's spinal area.

‘Vital Points Targetting!’

Stab!

The Mage cried out in pain.

“Kiaahhahk!!”

But, when Jin-Woo stabbed again, the following scream wasn't as lengthy as the previous one.

Stab!

“Kak!”

The Lizardman Mage spat out a mouthful of blood and collapsed forward.

Plop.

Jin-Woo inwardly punched the air. No matter who judged it, that was an excellent victory for sure.

‘Veeery nice!’

And as if to congratulate him on his victory, he could hear the System's crisp mechanical beep ring inside his head.

Tt-ring.

[Level up!]

[‘Player’ has reached the required level.]

A strange message followed right after the familiar one.

‘Required level?’

Having only heard this simple message, he couldn’t figure out what was going on here.

But by the time the following mechanical beep rang, Jin-Woo ended up expending a huge amount of willpower just to calm his heart that beat so hard to the point of causing him pain.

Tti-ring.

[Class Change Quest is now available.]

[Will you take on the Class Change Quest now?] (Y/N)

‘C...Class Change Quest..??’

He was so focused on raising his levels and his Stats that he had been forgetting all about a certain column in his Status Window.

[Name: Seong Jin-Woo]

[Level: 40]

[Class: None]

Indeed, that would be the third column in his Status Window, the ‘Class’. And now, he was given an opportunity to replace that ‘None’ with another word.

He’d be given a Class.

In most video games, a character would receive many benefits after getting a Class. It’d be no different with the System, since it operated almost the same as a game.

Thump, thump.

His heart was beating harder and faster now.

When he realised that he’d be one step closer to the goal of being strong after going through with this quest, he simply could not calm himself down anymore.

[Will you take on the Class Change Quest now?] (Y/N)

‘Yes’ and ‘No’ continued to flicker in front of his eyes.

‘Of course, I would....’

What kind of an idiot would refuse such an opportunity??

Jin-Woo was about to choose yes and take on the quest to change his Class. However, he stopped almost instinctively.

‘No. Hang on a sec.’

Who knew just what kind of a quest might show up here?

Following right after the notice from his instincts, the warning bells from his brain rang true and clear inside his head.

‘I’m inside a dungeon.’

A dungeon was one of the most dangerous places in the world. Even though he was fully accustomed to the rank C dungeons by now, a dungeon was still a dungeon after all. There was no reason for him to increase the risk even more.

Besides, Yu Jin-Ho was standing next to him as well.

It wasn’t as if he didn’t trust the kid, no. Still, he didn’t have any particular reason to let the kid in on the existence of the System, or explain the weird phenomenon that might occur when he changed his Class.

Things would get too complicated in this way.

‘And also, the content of the quest might end up hurting Yu Jin-Ho, too.’

What if strong monsters suddenly appeared out of thin air?

‘Well, that would be more preferable, actually.’

Because, he’d only have to kill those monsters and that would be the end. But, a quest asking for something more than that could show up. For instance, something similar to those two emergency quests he had to complete in the past.

‘Yeah, the goal of the quest could be to eliminate the nearest Hunters.’

It was a distinct possibility. Sure, it was nothing but speculation at this point in time, but still.

Still possessing an excellent sense of timing, Yu Jin-Ho walked over and called out to him.

“Hyung-nim!”

The magic the Lizardman Mage flung about must’ve landed pretty close to him, because he was covered from top to bottom in dust.

“Just how did you do that? Disappearing and reappearing again?? Did you have a skill like that before?”

Yu Jin-Ho's eyes sparkled brightly as he spoke. He looked really pumped up, too. He must've found the rare skill 'Stealth' really mystifying or some such.

'Well, I find your appearance far more mystifying, kid.'

Instead of a reply, Jin-Woo pulled out a handkerchief from his Inventory. He got this as a reward from the Daily Quest.

"H-hyung-nim?"

Jin-Woo used that cloth to mercilessly rub Yu Jin-Ho's face.

"Wooeuph!! Phu-heup!!"

The previously-white handkerchief was now dyed jet black. Yu Jin-Ho took a look at the fabric and only then realised what the state of his face was like.

He embarrassedly retreated to a corner and carefully wiped his face clean.

"Hey, Jin-Ho?"

"Yes, hyung-nim?"

"Something urgent just came up."

Yu Jin-Ho quickly raised his head.

"Are you planning to leave now?"

"After we finish up here."

"Okay, understood. Then, I'll cancel our bookings for the remaining Gates."

Yu Jin-Ho couldn't show it in front of Jin-Woo, but he was feeling rather pained about the three Gates that had been booked by him.

'My funds are running out quickly, too.'

Yu Jin-Ho didn't have any method to earn money, so the allowances he got were basically everything he had. He was doing this without his father's knowledge, so the amount of cash he could shift around was limited.

If he had to cancel the bookings, then he wouldn't get refunds on the booking fees he paid in advance. It was the same as him throwing money away.

So, how could he not feel pained about this?

Also, because of this 'unusual' method of clearing Gates, he ended up spending more than usual for today's raids.

But now, he had to throw away his investment, just like that. Yu Jin-Ho's shoulders couldn't help but droop real low, almost instinctively.

However, Jin-Woo replied with an unmoved expression.

“Why are you cancelling our bookings and wasting money like that?”

Yu Jin-Ho tilted his head.

“Pardon? If we don't enter a Gate within two days of booking it, our permit will be automatically rescinded, hyung-nim.”

Of course, Jin-Woo already knew something like that.

“Leave them to me. I'll sort them out.”

Did Jin-Woo think of a good way to resolve this?

Yu Jin-Ho was curious, but at the same time, he felt relieved as well.

Inside the headquarters of the White Tiger Guild.

“Chief Ahn!! Just what on earth were you thinking?!”

A loud roar reverberated within the offices of the Second Division.

The owner of that roar was Baek Yun-Ho.

He was none other than the Master of the White Tiger Guild, and its CEO as well. It could never be a good thing if a CEO-level character made his way down to the lower floors to make his ire known to his staff members.

“What the, how can any of this make sense?? How can there be no Gates to train our new recruits?? Don't you realise that you've delayed the training schedule by four days already?!”

All the employees within the Second Division lowered their heads. They all looked anxious, wondering if they would also end up in the crosshair.

Chief Ahn Sahng-Min too lowered his head as Baek Yun-Ho continued to point and shout at him.

“...”

Ahn Sahng-Min wasn't dumb or inexperienced enough to p*ss off his superior officer even further by replying to every little thing being said, in the way Hyun Ki-Cheol would have done.

In cases like this, keeping his mouth shut was for the best.

Whether the boss man knew Ahn Sahng-Min's thoughts or not....

Baek Yun-Ho angrily shook around the report from the Second Division that showed up on his desk this morning.

“You’re using this as an excuse?! The other team paid far higher bids so we can’t book a single Gate? Are you saying our Guild lacks enough funds? Or is the other party being supported by a bloody billionaire or something?!”

Ahn Sahng-Min’s lips twitched real hard just then, but he endured like a champ and didn’t say anything.

He made a promise to Jin-Woo, after all.

‘If I open my mouth now, I’d end up blabbering about Yu Jin-Ho and Seong Jin-Woo.’

Not knowing the pained inner thoughts of Ahn Sahng-Min, Baek Yun-Ho continued to roar at the top of his lungs, loud enough to shake the entire office.

“I don’t care whether it’s a hundred million, two hundred – just book the d*mn Gates! Do you understand me?!”

It happened, then.

Suddenly, Ahn Sahng-Min’s phone began ringing loudly.

[Ah! I’m sorry I couldn’t answer you earlier, I was meeting a friend, shy, shy, shy ~♪]

When he sneaked a glance at his phone to confirm who the caller was, Ahn Sahng-Min’s eyes grew real wide.

“Sir, I need to answer this call.”

“.....”

The Second Division’s main role was to recruit new talents, and nothing was more important to them than good timing!

And, Ahn Sahng-Min was the Chief of that Second Division.

Even if Ahn Sahng-Min had made a big blunder, no matter how angry Baek Yun-Ho got, stopping him from answering that call was not a smart thing to do.

“What are you doing, Chief Ahn? Answer it quickly.”

Baek Yun-Ho consented to it with an unhappy voice.

Ahn Sahng-Min bowed his head slightly, asking Baek Yun-Ho for his understanding, and he quickly answered the call.

“Hello, Ahn Sahng-Min from the White Tiger Guild speaking.”

While Ahn Sahng-Min was answering the call, Baek Yun-Ho crossed his arms and waited for it to end.

“Yes, yes. I understand. If you’re waiting for us by the ground floor cafe, I shall go there right away. Yes, see you then.”

Ahn Sahng-Min ended the call and quickly spoke up.

“Sir, looks like I’ll have to go downstairs for a moment.”

Ahn Sahng-Min was the ace of the Second Division. If such a man was getting ready to rush downstairs with only one phone call, even when he was facing his boss’s fury...

“By any chance, was that call related to scouting someone?”

“Yes, sir.”

Seeing that confident, assured face of Ahn Sahng-Min, Baek Yun-Ho realised that something major was going on here.

‘Chief Ahn is personally trying to scout this person?’

Which could only mean that the other guy was someone extraordinary, right?

Baek Yun-Ho’s angrily-crumpled visage reverted back to a smiling one in an instant.

“How can I stand in the way of our scouting specialist trying to do his job? Don’t worry about the matters up here and do your best downstairs.”

REPORT

Ahn Sahng-Min lowered his head again. And then, he hurriedly issued an order to Hyun Ki-Cheol.

“Vice Chief Hyun, get the contract documents ready.”

“Yes, Chief!”

Their preparation was done in the blink of an eye.

After the duo hurriedly left the offices, Baek Yun-Ho sneaked in a question to a male employee next to him.

“What’s going on here? Just what kind of an assignment could make Chief Ahn roll his sleeves up and jump in personally like this?”

The male employee sent a pleading look to a female colleague next to him, asking silently for any form of assistance. Unfortunately, even she shook her head.

‘I also don’t know,’ said her eyes.

‘Dang it....’

The male employee hesitated for a bit before he finally gave in and answered with great difficulty while scratching the back of his head.

“Well, sir... The thing is, none of us....”

He expected the boss to throw an almighty hissy fit, but then....

Quite unexpectedly, the boss didn’t say anything else.

‘So, he’s involved in something so secretive that he can’t even tell his own people, is that it?’

Baek Yun-Ho slowly rubbed his chin.

The person who had contributed a great deal in building up the White Tiger Guild to its current size and power was none other than Chief Ahn Sahng-Min.

If someone like that was throwing all his focus on this matter, then....

‘Will our Chief Ahn once more reel in a huge fish?’

A huge smile slowly bloomed on Baek Yun-Ho's face.

'Why the hell is this coffee so bitter?!'

Jin-Woo frowned deeply.

He was thinking of the vending machine coffee's taste when ordering a cup of Espresso at the cafe. But hell, rather than calling this coffee, it was much more fitting to label it as a really bitter traditional medicine, instead.

And it cost way too much for what it was.

'Man, ₩6,000 can buy me several canned coffee, you know....'

He began wondering just how many sticks of sugar he needed to pour into this bitter b*stard in order to make it taste about the same as the canned coffee. But then...

Cling.

The door to the cafe opened, and the duo of Ahn Sahng-Min and Hyun Ki-Cheol rushed inside.

"Over here."

Jin-Woo raised his hand.

Ahn Sahng-Min and Hyun Ki-Cheol quickly took a sweeping look around the cafe, and when they discovered Jin-Woo, their complexions brightened in an instant. Their expressions resembled that of 'Heungbu' seeing the gourd brought by the swallow. (TL: 'Heungbu' is the main character of an old Korean novel 'Heungbu and Nolbu'. There is a dedicated page in Wikipedia for this folk tale if you're interested.)

"We honestly didn't expect to see you again so soon."

Ahn Sahng-Min greeted like so and sat opposite to Jin-Woo, while Hyun Ki-Cheol made a quick greeting with a nod and settled down next to his superior officer.

Jin-Woo also nodded his head lightly as his greeting.

The old saying went 'make hay while the sun still shines'. So, Ahn Sahng-Min pulled out the contract as soon as settling down.

"For the terms we can offer you, we can negotiate....."

His ardent desire to get the contract signed quickly was quite easy to see.

Unfortunately for him, Jin-Woo cut him off rather decisively.

"I didn't come here today to talk about signing with you folks."

Ahn Sahng-Min's hands froze in mid-action of pulling out the contract. Hyun Ki-Cheol also looked quite confused as well.

Ahn Sahng-Min asked in the frozen position as if someone had pressed the pause the button.

“Well then, what brings you to our White Tiger Guild....?”

His expectation had been great, and so was the ensuing disappointment.

The biggest find of the year walked into the Guild with his own two feet, but he refused to sign the contract the moment he clapped his eyes on it.

Could he have changed his mind in the meantime?

As the duo's confusion grew, Jin-Woo calmly spoke to them.

“I came here to help you two.”

“Pardon me?”

“Excuse me?”

The reactions of Ahn Sahng-Min and Hyun Ki-Cheol were roughly the same. Two men exchanged glances, before shifting their gaze over to Jin-Woo. In a complete contrast to their flustered state, Jin-Woo remained utterly calm.

“I remember you mentioning your troubles regarding the training of your new recruits, because my raid team swept away all the available rank C dungeons in the area.”

“T-that's correct. Well, we can't really take the newbies to a high ranked dungeon just because we couldn't book a rank C Gate, after all.”

“That's why I'm here today.”

Ahn Sahng-Min tilted his head slightly.

“Forgive me, but I can't seem to....”

Jin-Woo thought this was enough of him beating around the bush, so he got to the main topic.

“I want to sell the raid permits for three of the rank C gates my raid team acquired.”

“Ah.”

Hyun Ki-Cheol let off a short gasp.

The two men from the White Tiger Guild finally figured out what Jin-Woo really wanted from them.

“If you really wanted to help us out, then wouldn’t it be simpler just to not book Gates anymore?”

Jin-Woo shook his head.

“Unfortunately, I have some matters that require the continued clearing of rank C Gates for the time being.”

“Well then, why today....?”

Jin-Woo smiled refreshingly.

“I’m here because I wanted to help you out of your troubles.”

Should the duo believe those words at their face value?

Just before the calculator inside Ahn Sahng-Min’s head could start crunching some numbers, Jin-Woo continued on with his explanations.

“Of course, I’m being considerate only for today. We also can’t delay our operations as well, you see. If you miss this chance, I’m pretty sure that it’ll only get harder to book rank C Gates for the foreseeable future.”

For some reason, he came across as a host of a home shopping channel alerting his viewers to the looming end of the discount period.

‘Hmm.....’

Ahn Sahng-Min fell into a dilemma.

Gates didn’t just appear in and around the capital city only.

If they couldn’t book one around here, there was an option of going to the countryside and training the rookies there. However, there was a good chance of earning the ire of the local Guilds and the raid teams by doing that.

That wasn’t all, either.

Doing that would be like giving ammunition to large Guilds located in the countryside, like the Shining Star located in Honam, or the Knight Order in Youngnam, to ridicule the White Tiger.

In other words, his Guild could be saddled with the ignoble reputation of a poorly-run organisation that couldn’t even train their rookies in their own backyard.

‘Hmm.... Can we claim that it’s an undeserved reputation, even?’

Because, it was clearly true, after all.

Whatever the case may be, which rookie would want to join a Guild that was being roundly ridiculed by other famous Guilds?

This was one of the reasons why the Guild's public image was really important.

“Okay.”

After a lengthy deliberation, Ahn Sahng-Min came to a conclusion.

“Please sell us the permits. Three rank C Gates should be enough for our needs. How much are you thinking of for all three of them?”

The White Tiger Guild had a really deep pocket.

However, nothing good would come out of trying to compare their financial muscle with Yujin Construction's, and just as importantly, he feared souring the relationship with Jin-Woo the most, so he'd not even try to compete at the end of the day.

But now, Jin-Woo was actually volunteering to hand over the Gates, so shouldn't this be something to be grateful about?

Unfortunately, he couldn't be grateful for the proposed prices, though.

“300 million Won per gate, so 900 million for all three.”

“Keok!!”

Both Ahn Sahng-Min and Hyun Ki-Cheol spat out pained, shocked gasps at the same time.

“That's too much.”

Hyun Ki-Cheol tried to interject, but Ahn Sahng-Min quickly stopped him.

Something like this also happened the last time they met.

Jin-Woo ended the talks without an ounce of hesitation once his price couldn't be met.

In a way, this was a great opportunity that rolled on to their laps.

If they failed to grasp this chance, then either they only get to book a rank C Gate a really long time from now or, in the worst case scenario, go to the countryside to train their rookies.

‘Well, at least I should try negotiating properly today.’

Ending the talks this quickly would only leave the bitter taste in his mouth.

Still, a Gate priced 300 million each was just too expensive.

Yu Jin-Ho's bid for the raid permits averaged around 100 million Won lately. Asking three times that amount was just being too unreasonable.

Surely, Jin-Woo would know this, too.

‘I’m sure he’s thinking of starting at a high enough number and gradually come down.’

Now that he thought about it, he recalled the words Baek Yun-Ho had said before they left the office.

[“I don’t care whether it’s a hundred million, two hundred – just book the d*mn Gates! Do you understand me?!”]

This was the same thing as the CEO giving his consent.

Plus, every employee working in the Second Division heard those words, so Baek Yun-Ho wouldn’t be able to pretend his way out of this one, either.

Ahn Sahng-Min swallowed his saliva and put up his counteroffer.

“300 million is too large an amount even for us, so how about 200 million ins....”

“I accept.”

Even before Ahn Sahng-Min could finish his sentence, Jin-Woo reached out with his right hand. With a slightly dazed face, Ahn Sahng-Min reached out as well and shook the offered hand.

“This..... Are you okay with this?”

“Yes. 200 million Won for each rank C Gate. Please deposit the money into this bank account.”

It kind of felt like the situation got resolved way too fast, but well, from Ahn Sahng-Min’s perspective, this should count as a fortunate thing indeed.

Ahn Sahng-Min lightly shook Jin-Woo’s hand and bowed his head as well.

“I’m grateful for this. Thank you.”

“You’re being too kind.”

Jin-Woo also formed a bright smile.

Ahn Sahng-Min inwardly thought that he’d be able to breathe a little bit easier now. For the time being, he was able to resolve the situation with training the new recruits, and his relationship with Jin-Woo had improved, ever so slightly, as well.

‘Trust is the foundation of all negotiations and dealings, after all.’

Indeed.

Just like this, their relationship would evolve for the better bit by bit. Sooner or later, he’d be able to reel in his catch.

No one would spit at a smiling face, and no one would pretend to not notice when someone gave you a present.

Ahn Sahng-Min inwardly clenched his fist.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo stood up from his seat first.

“Now that’s been sorted, I should get going. I’ll see you around. Oh, and here.”

Jin-Woo handed over a shopping bag containing an empty tumbler to its original owner.

“Thanks for the drink. I really enjoyed it.”

“I’m happy to hear that you liked it, Mister Seong.”

With a slightly reddened face, Hyun Ki-Cheol accepted the shopping bag.

With that, Jin-Woo exited from the cafe.

After he got to a far enough distance away from Ahn Sahng-Min and Hyun Ki-Cheol, Jin-Woo gave Yu Jin-Ho a call.

A short bout of poppy music ringtone later....

Yu Jin-Ho’s clearly excited voice came out from the speaker.

“...”

Jin-Woo quietly smiled in satisfaction.

This transaction was a resounding success.

He managed to sell off raid permits at double the price of what they paid for, before they became useless junk. This was a huge profit for them.

Yu Jin-Ho asked him in a mystified voice.

“That’s my trade secret.”

“Enjoy your break, and see you in two days’ time.”

While Yu Jin-Ho was getting flustered on the other side, Jin-Woo simply ended the call.

Click.

Later, on the same day.

The Second Division’s office.

Hyun Ki-Cheol was urgently seeking out Ahn Sahng-Min.

“Chief! Chief!!”

“What’s wrong?”

Ahn Sahng-Min tore his eyes away from his computer monitor. Hyun Ki-Cheol pointed to his phone’s screen with an urgent expression on his face.

“You gotta take a look at this, Chief!”

“What’s going on now?”

Ahn Sahng-Min looked at the screen and his eyes narrowed to a slit.

‘Isn’t this.....?’

The screen showed the section of the Hunter Association’s website that only the Hunters had access to.

To be more precise, the screen showed the page which notified everyone of where the reported Gates were located at, as well as allowing anyone to buy the raid permits for those Gates.

“What’s this?! Why are there so many rank C dungeons in our district?!”

“Not only that, each one is going for less than 10 million Won at the moment, as well!”

“No way.....”

Ahn Sahng-Min realised that something was terribly awry here.

“....Yu Jin-Ho’s team hasn’t booked a single Gate for tomorrow.”

Hearing Hyun Ki-Cheol’s words, Ahn Sahng-Min immediately recalled what Seong Jin-Woo told him over the phone.

[“I have some free time on Thursday.”]

And tomorrow was Thursday. Yu Jin-Ho’s team had no plans to go on a raid tomorrow. He didn’t even know that and bought those permits at a huge premium.

“Huh...”

An amused chuckle leaked out from Ahn Sahng-Min’s mouth.

There were enough hints, but it was too late by the time he had pieced them together. This was his mistake. Well, he did succeed in cooling the anger of the CEO in the end, so it wasn’t all bad.

“Looks like we’ve been had, Chief.”

It was then, a text message arrived in Ahn Sahng-Min’s phone.

Ding-dong.

It was from Seong Jin-Woo.

[With this, we're even now. I will consider your people spying on me as something that never happened.]

'I can't take this fellow lightly, can I?'

Ahn Sahng-Min inwardly chuckled.

If the sole sticking point between Jin-Woo and the White Tiger could be resolved in this manner, as implied by the youth, then this wouldn't necessarily be a bad trade for the Guild at the end of the day.

Their final aim was to scout Jin-Woo, after all.

Besides, the amount they spent today wasn't all that much, anyway.

"Let's think of it as us investing in Seong Jin-Woo."

It'd be nice if they were able to earn back as much as they have invested, though.

Ahn Sahng-Min stopped looking at his phone and with a smile on his face, closed the mailbox.

After sending the text, Jin-Woo took one more look around his vicinity.

There was absolutely no one here.

Only the dense forest greeted his searching eyes.

In order to make sure he'd get to 'enjoy' a relatively-safe quest, he searched for a mountainside with almost no human presence and found the most suitable candidate.

The current time was 17:44.

There shouldn't be any hikers in this in-between hour, plus his current location was an empty spot of land far, far removed from any hiking trails.

'Time to get started.'

Jin-Woo accessed his mailbox.

[Will you take on the Class Change Quest now?] (Y/N)

The message popped up in his view as if it'd been patiently waiting for him.

Gulp.

Jin-Woo's Adam's apple bobbed up and down. Indeed, it was rather scary not knowing what kind of quest would pop up.

However, his anticipation was even greater than his fears.

While he was looking for a suitable location to start the quest, he used his phone to search for topics related to changing one's class online.

....Etc, etc.

They were all from video games, sure; but, the accepted norm was that changing one's class would result in many benefits.

'And level 40 was when I could get my Class.'

Of course, it wasn't all good news, either. He often spotted ominous sounding thread titles as he browsed through online forums.

....Well, these were also related to video games, anyways.

He certainly had far less to worry about here since he only used daggers as his main weapon until now. All the skills he had acquired leaned towards the profession of 'assassin'.

'Right, I've got dagger techniques and Stealth as my skills.'

Not only that, he invested mainly in raising the Stats of Strength and Agility, so it was kind of hard to imagine getting another class other than 'Assassin'.

As his thoughts arrived here, Jin-Woo summoned the 'Poison Fang of Kasaka' from his Inventory.

Shush....

This feeling of the hilt falling so perfectly in his hand....

'Yeah, this for me is the most comfortable.'

He nodded his head like a wise old sage.

While gripping the dagger tightly, Jin-Woo shifted his gaze towards the message floating in the air.

‘Well, then....’

Now that he was all done with getting ready for any unexpected events, he firmed his resolve and answered the message.

[Will you take on the Class Change Quest now?] (Y/N)

‘Yes, I’m taking it on.’

The moment he thought of taking on the quest, another message popped into his view.

Tti-ring.

[You’re now partaking in the Class Change Quest.]

[A new dungeon will be generated for this quest.]

‘Generating... a new dungeon?’

Before he had the chance to interpret what that message was saying, a change took place before him really fast.

Wuuonng—

A black ‘hole’ formed right in front of his eyes. That was merely the beginning, too.

Wuonng, wuuonngg.....

The black hole the size of a bean expanded to the size of a coin, then to that of a volleyball, and eventually, it grew large enough for a person to walk through.

‘Isn’t this....?’

Jin-Woo’s eyes grew wider.

He was expecting to see a new message with the contents of the quest pop up in front of his eyes, but this....

What appeared before him was, without a doubt, a Gate.

‘To think, a Gate would show up here....’

This one didn’t seem any different from the others he was familiar with. Only that, it was a bit smaller than usual.

The System sent him a new message as if to urge him on.

[Please enter the dungeon through the Gate.]

‘I need to calm down.’

Jin-Woo quickly collected himself.

Right...

If he thought about it, there wasn't much of a difference whether he used a key or a Gate to enter a dungeon. Indeed, he was simply taken aback just now by the sight of a Gate forming 'artificially' like this.

Also, this would be his first time seeing a Gate form. He always just walked into one that was already there, so...

When the chain of his thoughts stopped there, a new question popped into his mind.

'Hang on... can other Hunters enter this Gate as well?'

Too bad, he had no method to experiment on this one today.

Well, there were no Hunters nearby that he could call for 'assistance', nor did he have anyone who would rush over here because he gave them a call.

He momentarily recalled Yu Jin-Ho's face, but slowly shook his head.

'How will I take care of the aftermath if I called him and something bad happens?'

It was then.

As if to urge him on again, the message blinked.

Tti-ring.

[Please enter the dungeon through the Gate.]

The mechanical beep brought him back to his senses. He slapped his cheeks a couple of times to wake himself up.

'This is no time to daydream.'

If he succeeded, then a new class and all the rewards that followed would be his. And if he failed, then he couldn't even tell what might happen to him.

So, he needed to focus here.

"Fuu-woo...."

After taking a deep breath....

Jin-Woo held the Poison Fang of Kasaka in reverse grip and entered the Gate.

[You have entered the dungeon.]

'Eh?'

He entered in a state of taut tension, but to his surprise, there was nothing here.

He was greeted by the sight of an ordinary cave-like dungeon.

“Isn’t this exactly the same as the others....?”

He heard that high-ranking dungeons were often linked to ‘other worlds’ so he was kind of worried about such a thing happening to him, but thankfully, he was spared from that.

Instead, a strange message popped up into his view.

Tti-ring.

[The current location forbids the usage of potions as well as the functions of the Store, and your physical state will not recover even if you level up.]

Jin-Woo confirmed that there was no presence of monsters nearby and put away his dagger. Then, his head began tilting this way and that.

‘.....This isn’t going to be easy, is it?’

Maybe because his class change was up for grabs, there were quite a few restrictions here to contend with.

The most important one was that he couldn’t replenish his spent energy or stamina, and couldn’t heal himself using potions or level ups.

‘The damage will stack, in other words.’

If he got injured, then that would spell his doom.

Since he couldn’t heal himself, he had no choice but to be thorough and cautious with every action he took.

‘Meaning, I gotta keep my wits about me.’

Jin-Woo closed the message.

And as he’d do every time when entering a dungeon, he confirmed the presence of the exit.

[You can’t leave until the Class Change process has been concluded.]

A message popped up as soon as he touched the surface of the Gate. He put some strength behind his hand, but it didn’t even budge.

“....”

Jin-Woo retracted his hand.

‘The exit is blocked off.’

An unknown grade, impossible to heal himself, and no exit; this dungeon was a pretty risky proposition. Even a Hunter with balls of steel wouldn't want to tread in a place like this one.

'However, high risk doesn't always equate to bad things, does it?'

Indeed, the higher the risk, the higher the reward. He learned that through experience.

If clearing this place was difficult because of all the restrictions, then didn't that also mean there was an amazing opportunity waiting for him at the end?

There was only one way to find out.

'I'll know once I get there.'

Jin-Woo took his first step forward.

His eyes gazed far forward, and all he could see was the cavern-like passageway with seemingly no end. And there were no monsters nearby.

'Wait, since this is still within the System's influence, should I call them monsters, and not monsters?' (TL: Well, sorry about this line. The author had been using the Hanja word for monsters to describe those found in the regular Gates/dungeons, while using the romanised English word 'monster' to describe those found in instant dungeons. They mean the same thing, obviously, but well, wordplay and all that....)

Even though they both meant the same thing.

In any case, that wasn't the only difference to consider. There were lit torches lining up at a fixed interval along the cavern walls as well.

'Instead of luminous stones, I got torches, huh.'

Unfortunately, the light from the torches was not an effective source of illumination.

No matter how many there were, they were still not enough to light up the entire passageway. So, there were plenty of hidden shadows.

With the deafening silence being accompanied by the gloomy shadows, this place came off far more eerie and ominous than a regular dungeon.

'I can see no problem, but still....'

Should he say it's down to the atmosphere of this place?

Jin-Woo pulled out the nearest torch and held it. His front brightened ever so slightly with the torch in his hand.

'Yeah, this is better.'

Jin-Woo formed a satisfied smile.

He took one last glance behind him and slowly made his way forward, the torch lighting the way.

Just how long did he walk?

When he walked for a long, long time, he finally got to a bend in the passageway. And just beyond it, he sensed multiple presences.

‘Are they finally here?’

Jin-Woo carefully placed the torch on the ground and stood back up.

Shurururu...

His right hand was now holding his favourite dagger instead.

He briefly entertained the idea of using ‘Stealth’ to quickly deal with his enemies, but gave up on that after remembering the crazy expenditure of his Mana. Well, he wouldn’t be able to use potions to replenish the spent Mana in this place, after all.

If he carelessly spent Mana here, then he might be unable to use the necessary Skills when he really needed to.

‘...It’s coming this way.’

Jin-Woo pressed tightly against the wall and waited for the enemy to show up around the bend.

Clank, clank....

Whenever this thing took a step, the metallic clang reverberated loudly in the passageway.

The noises were getting closer.

Clank, clank....

Hearing that strange noise, Jin-Woo tilted his head.

‘Could it be carrying some kind of chained weapons?’

He was curious, but there was no need to get anxious. He’d get his answers soon enough.

‘5, 4, 3.’

Jin-Woo tightly held the dagger in the reverse grip and stopped breathing. It was to prevent the opponent from hearing the sound of his breathes.

‘2, 1.’

Clank, clank.

Finally, the enemy's shadow could be seen.

'.....0.'

When his countdown hit 0, the enemy revealed itself.

Jin-Woo aimed for the side of its neck.

Clang!!

But, he got to hear metal hitting metal instead.

The blade didn't go in.

'Metal armour?!'

Jin-Woo's eyes widened.

Finally confirming the identity of his opponent, Jin-Woo quickly took several steps back.

"It's a human?!"

He was now facing a knight decked out fully in a suit of armour. Its face was hidden behind the helmet and he couldn't see what they looked like.

Jin-Woo called out to it while thinking to himself, 'Could it be....?'

"Oii!"

However, the knight didn't even utter a word and simply lunged in Jin-Woo's direction.

Thud, thud, thud!!

The knight rushed forward like a raging bull and tried to shoulder tackle him, but Jin-Woo lightly tilted out of the way and evaded the attack.

The knight couldn't win against the momentum and continued to run forward for a bit longer, before somehow bringing itself to a stop.

'Maybe, it's not a human?'

He was able to take a quick peek at a close distance and he could tell something was off. He couldn't sense the beating heart that a normal person should possess.

So, most likely, it was not a human.

He was now facing off against a type of monster he'd never even heard of before.

....A monster that armed itself from head to toe, no less.

'It's like....'

Wasn't this like he was actually fighting against another person?

Swururung!

The knight turned around and unsheathed the sword mounted on its hips. Just as Jin-Woo had done, this 'knight' probably didn't plan on letting him go alive.

After sensing its intense hostility, Jin-Woo's glare became a level sharper.

'Dash!'

[Your movement speed has increased by 40%.]

The first one to strike, wins!

Before the enemy made its move, Jin-Woo dashed in first.

Swish!

Jin-Woo evaded the hurried swing of the knight's longsword and stabbed his dagger at various points in its armour.

Clang! Clang!!

Unfortunately, he couldn't damage it.

'The armour's too thick.'

Not only was it thick, the surface was smooth as well, so when he landed a straight blow, the blade didn't go in but simply slid off to the side.

It was at this point that the knight swung its sword in a huge arc.

SWISH!!!

Jin-Woo ducked lower and evaded it. The blade swung past Jin-Woo's head by a hair's breadth. A big move like this would inevitably expose a big opening.

Another chance had come by!

Jin-Woo lunged in closer to the knight and gathered his strength in his dagger-holding arm.

'Vital Points Targetting!'

Crack!

The tip of the dagger penetrated past the armour.

'Did it work?'

However, it must've not suffered any damage, since it swung its sword down vertically with great force, not caring at all about the dagger stuck to its side.

Swish!

Jin-Woo rapidly threw himself back.

Clang!

The blade slammed into the ground and sparks flew everywhere.

“...”

Jin-Woo took several steps back and corrected his posture. His dagger remained stuck to the knight's side.

'Tsk.'

Jin-Woo clicked his tongue.

'It's not really that strong, is it?'

That was his earnest assessment.

Probably because of all that heavy armour, its movement was dull, and its attack pattern was also rather simple, too. Only that, its defence against bladed weapons was truly exceptional.

Jin-Woo rolled up his sleeves.

'Well, I've already fought against an enemy with thick armour that blades can't penetrate.'

His relaxed demeanour came from previous experience.

The boss monster, 'Poison-Fanged Blue Kasaka' that broke a steel sword infused with magical energy in one hit – he had experienced killing such a snake before.

'Compared to the Kasaka, that thing is nothing....'

A thin smile slowly formed on Jin-Woo's lips, since that was a pretty good memory to recall.

Thud, thud, thud!

The knight stupidly charged in again, perhaps trusting the protection provided by its armour.

'I knew it. It's a really simple creature.'

Jin-Woo easily evaded the knight's attack aimed at his shoulder, slid to its back, and caught it in a headlock.

Craaack!

Since its neck area was also protected by armour, it'd not choke to death, but....

Crack, crumple!

Jin-Woo's arm muscles expanded and veins bulged. Jin-Woo wasn't planning to choke the knight, to begin with.

He gritted his teeth, his eyes shooting up wide open.

And when that happened...

CRACK!

Along with a pretty sickening noise, the helmet was ripped off.

This was the moment when his Strength Stat exceeding 100 points had begun shining ever so brightly.

'I did it!'

The knight lifelessly knelt down on the ground once its head was separated from the body.

Thud!

[You defeated the knight.]

A simple but concise message announcing the end of the battle popped up.

A flickering light indicating the presence of loot came from somewhere on the armour, but Jin-Woo's attention was elsewhere.

'What the heck? There's nothing inside?'

The helmet he held in his hands was totally empty.

He quickly checked inside the armour to make sure, but it was the same story: empty.

'Does that mean I was fighting against a suit of armour that was moving by itself?'

Just as he arrived at his conclusion, two more knights rushed into view from around the bend. It seemed that they had belatedly sensed the unfolding battle.

Clank, clank!

The knights discovered Jin-Woo, and as if they had made a prior arrangement, they unsheathed their longswords in unison.

Jin-Woo tossed the empty helmet away and loosened the muscles on his neck and shoulders.

He now knew how to fight these things.

‘So, this is the real beginning, huh.’

Thud, thud, thud, thud!!

Jin-Woo’s lips formed a slight grin as he stared at the knights rushing towards him.

His first step in clearing this dungeon proved to be on the right track.

REPORT

Was it because of all the restrictions?

The loot drop rate turned out to be rather excellent.

Jin-Woo only defeated three knights, yet two of them dropped an item each. As far as percentages go, that was 66.6%.

It was an unimaginably high drop rate compared to other instant dungeons.

Especially considering the fact that, when all he got after clearing a floor of an instant dungeon several times in a row would be a few japtem and stuff he had no use for other than to sell them off at the Store.

['Item: Superior Knight's Breastplate' has been found. Take it?]

'Of course I'm taking it.'

Just a thought, and the breastplate of the now-headless knight kneeling and unmoving on the ground disappeared and reappeared right before his feet. And its information popped up in his view.

[Item: Superior Knight's Breastplate]

Rarity: B

Type: Armour

Reduction in physical damage: +7%

(Your movement will slow down if your Strength is below 80.)

7% increase in physical damage reduction!

When added to what he had already, the physical damage reduction would be 27%!

'If this number reaches 100%, does that mean I become completely impervious to all physical damage?'

He briefly wondered about that, before realising that a defensive item ranked 'B' in rarity only added 7% to the overall value, and his thoughts rapidly changed.

Even if he found himself an item with a rarity of 'A', the reduction may not go above 30-40%.

So, maybe it was impossible to add up to 100%?

‘Still, every little bit helps, so.....’

He was sure of benefiting greatly if he continued to increase that Stat bit by bit.

He already had witnessed the power of good items through Yu Jin-Ho, after all.

‘So, I do it like this, right?’

Jin-Woo picked up the breastplate. As expected, a message regarding equipping the armour popped up in his view.

[Will you equip ‘Item: Superior Knight’s Breastplate’?]

No matter who looked at it, this breastplate’s design was rather clunky and embarrassing, and he’d never wear it in public.

If he didn’t have prior experience with the ‘Gatekeeper’s Necklace’, he might’ve hesitated a great deal before reluctantly agreeing to put it on, but now...

It was a different story now.

‘Yes.’

Tti-ring.

[‘Item: Superior Knight’s Breastplate’ has been equipped.]

....The breastplate disappeared from the view.

Jin-Woo summoned the Status Window and confirmed his Stats.

‘So, it really went up.’

Jin-Woo felt around his chest area. He couldn’t feel anything weird. He moved his body around this way and that, but didn’t feel anything strange or out of place.

It was exactly the same as when he equipped the Gatekeeper’s necklace for the first time.

‘Nice.’

, Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to the unmoving knight stuck in the distant corner.

It was bent and crumpled so badly that nothing looked salvageable, but still, the flickering light indicating the loot’s presence could be seen on it quite clearly.

['Item: Leather Pouch' has been found. Take it?]

Of course, he was the one responsible for that, but even he had to concede that he had gone a bit overboard there. He fought barehanded and well, it was really hard to control his strength, that was why....

‘.....’

With a solemn expression on his face, Jin-Woo walked closer and reached out to take the loot away.

‘Acquire it.’

['Item: Leather Pouch' has been opened.]

[30,000 Gold is inside.]

[30,000 Gold has been acquired.]

‘Huh?!’

Nothing entered his hands yet he got a message declaring that he acquired some Gold, instead.

Was it a bit different from regular items?

Jin-Woo remained somewhat mystified as he accessed his Inventory, and sure enough, his Gold amount had really increased by 30,000.

[Current Gold: 863,400]

‘I got 30,000 Gold in one go?’

Was it because knights were supposed to be wealthy or some such?

He abruptly remembered that most humanoid-type monsters usually gave out more loot than any other types in video games.

Now that he thought about it some more, not finding a greater number of useful items on a human being, when compared to an animal or an insect, didn’t make a whole lot of sense, now did it?

He couldn’t be sure if this dungeon followed that principal or not, though.

In any case, it could only be good news to him.

He was planning to save up more Gold and buy a few items from the Store, and if Gold kept showing up as loot in this fashion, then his planned shopping day would arrive much sooner than his initial estimation.

‘Is there anything else that I can take with me?’

Well, human greed supposedly knew no limits, so....

Jin-Woo momentarily forgot about his true goal of wandering in this dungeon and greedily searched around his vicinity.

The armour worn by the knights were all pretty much mangled beyond recover from the fight just now so, it was a no....

Eventually, Jin-Woo's eyes found the knights' swords.

'They kinda look useful, don't they?'

Those longswords must've been brand new, looking all shiny and slick like that.

Although he couldn't use them properly since they weren't daggers, he could either sell them in the Store or if he couldn't, he could try hawking them off to other Hunters at a later date.

Jin-Woo picked up a sword.

However, as soon as he did, the sword rapidly rusted up and dissolved into a pile of dust, before scattering away.

"What the hell....?"

This process happened in only a couple of seconds.

'Is it because I'm not supposed to touch them?'

What a regrettable thing this was, but naught he could do about it now.

Jin-Woo dusted his hands off and picked up the torch he left on the ground.

When he walked around the bend where the knights showed up from, yet another passage with no end in sight greeted him.

"..."

It looked like there was still a long way to go.

These battles felt like he was revisiting school work.

The notion sounded funny, but that's what Jin-Woo ended up thinking, totally out of the blue.

During the past two hours of hunting inside the dungeon, he met four different types of monsters.

Knights, Mages, Assassins, and Archers.

"Is it Stealth this time?"

An assassin-type suddenly vanished from his senses.

Jin-Woo didn't panic and extended his Perception to its fullest. And soon enough, picked up on the presence sneaking up on him from behind.

Swish!

Jin-Woo powerfully smacked away the assassin's dagger with his trusty Poison Fang of Kasaka, and seizing the opening created as the monster was pushed back, stabbed forward in a deadly and accurate attack of his own.

The Poison Fang accurately landed in the middle of the target's chest.

Stab!

[You defeated the assassin.]

[Level up!]

The assassin received a fatal wound and turned into a wisp of black smoke before disappearing from his view with nary a scream.

Plop.

And where it once stood, only the leather clothes it used to wear remained.

'Why are they all humanoid-type monsters, anyway?'

Every time he 'killed' them, he felt as if....

Jin-Woo slowly shook his head.

One nice thing here was that he couldn't see the monsters' faces; knights wore helmets, assassins and archers used deep hoods, and mages used hats attached to their robes to hide most of their faces.

Jin-Woo turned around to continue on his journey.

But then!

A flash of blinding light exploded right in front of his eyes. A mage had hidden itself and quietly completed a light magic spell.

Kaboom!!

An ear-splitting explosion occurred next.

However, Jin-Woo was already well behind the mage by the time that happened.

".....!!"

The mage sensed his presence behind it and flinched grandly as he hurriedly recited another chant. Too bad, Jin-Woo didn't miss this opening and swung his dagger diagonally.

The mage, too, turned into a wisp of smoke and disappeared.

Plop.

Jin-Woo glared down at the ownerless robe on the ground and stored the dagger back in the Inventory.

‘I got hit by one of those, way back when I got too careless.’

The thing was, he was already ready to react as soon as he began sensing Mana gathering around in a single point.

Joh Gyu-Hwan’s Light magic – Jin-Woo wasn’t dumb enough to get hit by a similar magic to that dead guy’s.

This was one of the reasons why he thought that all these battles were like him studying and revisiting his past fights.

‘That’s not all, is it?’

In order to defeat different types of monsters, he needed different Stats.

For knights, it was Strength. For assassins, Perception. Archers, Agility. And finally, for mages, it was Stamina.

The whole thing was set up in a way that if any of the corresponding Stats weren’t high enough, he’d have a real hard time trying to deal with the individual monsters.

If his Strength was lacking, then he wouldn’t have been able to cause enough damage to the knights, and if his Perception was too low, he’d have gone through hell in order to locate the assassins.

‘Me raising Stats evenly has really paid off dividends here.’

His Intelligence Stat was still on the low side, but all he had to do there was to economise his MP usage. That was all.

[‘Item: Leather Pouch’ has been opened.]

[‘20,000 Gold’, and ‘Canteen Containing Lukewarm Water’ are inside.]

[‘20,000 Gold’, and ‘Canteen Containing Lukewarm Water’ have been acquired.]

Jin-Woo summoned that canteen as soon as it showed up in his Inventory and took several gulps.

“Fuu....”

His fatigue was piling up noticeably now.

‘Just how far am I supposed to go here?’

Could there be no end to this place?

Jin-Woo put the empty canteen down on the ground and placed his hands on his hips. It had been over three hours already since he entered this dungeon. Both his body and mind were getting fatigued now.

‘...Should I take a short break?’

Jin-Woo sat down and leaned against the cave wall.

‘Status Window.’

Tti-ring.

[Tiredness: 66]

The ‘Tiredness’ Stat had sneaked up to a dangerous level; above 70, his body and mind would start to get negatively affected.

He needed to take a short nap and decrease that Stat right away.

Jin-Woo leaned his head against the wall.

Sleepiness came over him almost instantly.

He was so tired that, even when in an environment as dangerous as this place, he didn’t need a lot of effort to fall asleep.

However...

Swish-!

He heard the sharp whistle of air parting ways!

Time slowed down, and Jin-Woo accurately snatched the flying arrow with his hand.

Grab!

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened up.

He saw an archer nocking another arrow from some distance away.

‘So, it’s still too early to fall asleep, is it?’

Jin-Woo summoned the Poison Fang of Kasaka once more and stood back up.

Crunch!

One single punch caused the knight’s breastplate to crack and cave in; the lifeless monster slowly slid to the ground in between Jin-Woo’s stretched fist and the wall.

It didn’t move again as it lay sprawled on the ground.

Tti-ring.

[You defeated the knight.]

[Level up!]

Although it was quite unfortunate that his condition didn't recover, his levels continued to rise up steadily as he fought more and more battles.

Jin-Woo looked down on his slightly-skinned fist and clicked his tongue.

Only a short break would've taken care of such a small wound by now.

However, these abominable monsters didn't give him a moment to rest.

Still, he earned quite a lot in the meantime.

[Equipped items]

Gatekeeper's Necklace (A)

Superior Knight's Breastplate (B)

Intermediate Assassin's Shoes (B)

Inferior archer's Gloves (C)

Superior Mage's Ring (B)

Other useful things he found along the way were now all safely tucked away in his Inventory.

'It'd been nicer if I found a weapon, though....'

What an unfortunate thing it was – the daggers used by the assassins featured similar levels of attack damage bonus as the Poison Fang of Kasaka, but none of them possessed additional effects, so they were deemed not as good compared to his current weapon.

'What would this guy give me now?'

Jin-Woo reached out towards the fallen knight and the flickering light coming off from it.

Tti-ring.

[Item: Superior Knight's Gauntlet]

Rarity: B

Type: Armour

Reduction in physical damage: +3%

Additional effects: ents injuries to wearer's hands.

(Your movement will slow down if your Strength is below 80.)

'Ohhh....'

With a bright smile, Jin-Woo quickly 'acquired' the Superior Knight's Gauntlet and equipped it immediately.

Just like with all the other items, these metallic gloves didn't affect him in the slightest and he could freely move his fingers.

'Nice.'

Jin-Woo moved his fingers around for a bit, before raising his head to look at the far side of the passageway.

Finally.

The torchlight revealed the end of the road.

And that end was blocked off by a huge castle gate.

It was quite rare to see the boss room with a door like that. Naturally, he recalled the dual dungeon. No one was adequately prepared back then, and because of that, the losses incurred were great.

However, it was different now.

Jin-Woo took a look behind him, at the passage he had been walking on to get here.

'It took me six hours to get here, too....'

His level was now 45, and he was kitted out in some good armour as well.

He was ready.

He wouldn't have minded taking a small break and recover some of his spent stamina, but whenever he tried to do that, monsters always managed to appear with the perfect sense of timing to disrupt his sleep.

He couldn't afford to summon more monsters and waste his energy that way.

[HP: 4511/8330]

[MP: 660/790]

[Tiredness: 43]

'I gotta win with this.'

Finishing up with confirming his condition for the last time, Jin-Woo reached out and grasped the handles of the doors.

Creak, creaaaakkk-!

The heavy-looking doors slid open rather smoothly, as if there was some sort of an unseen mechanism.

Rumble-! Boom!

The door to the boss room finally opened.

The interior was completely shrouded in darkness.

Even with Jin-Woo's eyesight, greatly enhanced by his Perception Stat, he found it hard to see one inch in front of him. All he could see clearly was the ground beneath his feet.

The floor was covered in stone tiles.

The ash-coloured tiles, laid with no visible gaps in between, gave off this feeling of heaviness and barren chill.

As soon as he set foot on this floor....

Whoosh!

Countless torches lining up the walls lit up all at once and illuminated the interior.

'As I thought... it's almost the same as back in that underground temple.'

Jin-Woo maintained his vigilance. He scanned his vicinity and cautiously stepped forward.

Several giant stone pillars stood erect to his left and right; at the far end of this 'room', he could see a tall throne.

'It's as if....'

This place reminded him of the king's audience chamber from a fantasy movie. Of course, the scale was noticeably larger, though.

A few steps later, the door issued a loud bang and closed shut behind him.

SLAM!!

Jin-Woo glanced back, but he didn't panic. He already expected something like that to happen. Jin-Woo resumed his careful march forward.

'...I can sense a powerful presence.'

He kind of got this really strong gut feeling that, in order to conclude his class quest, he had to arrive before that throne.

Just as important, his gut feelings on matters such as this one were on the money, most of the time.

It was then.

From the gap between stone pillars, which couldn't have been more than ten steps, a 'doll' walked out from its hiding spot and stood before him, blocking his path forward.

The 'thing' stopped its walk and turned around to face him.

Gulp.

Jin-Woo swallowed his dry saliva.

He only had to take one look at the creature's red name floating just above its head to know that the boss had finally made its entrance.

[The Captain of the Knights, Igrit the Crimson]

It was a knight wearing a suit of blood-red armour.

The way it was kitted out from head to toe in metal armour was similar to other knights he fought so far, but quite unlike those that looked dull and slow, this thing looked incredibly agile.

What caught his eyes next was its helm.

The red-coloured mane extending rearwards from the top of the helm reminded him of a stallion's tail and it left a rather deep impression.

While he studied its helm, Jin-Woo discovered one more difference between it and the other knights.

'This guy.... has eyes?'

But, were they eyes, or irises?

Whatever the case may be, the pair of silvery lights oozed out from where one's eyes should be. They felt so cold and uncaring, utterly mechanical and lifeless.

Those cold eyes were now fixed on him.

The hair on the back of his neck stood up.

'So, the aura of the really powerful enemy was coming from this guy, huh.....'

The goal of the class quest could be to defeat this knight, for all he knew. If that was the case, he needed to be doubly cautious.

Jin-Woo observed the movements of this Igrit while slowly raising his clenched fists.

‘My dagger won’t work on it anyway.’

What was needed in defeating a knight was blunt force. He needed Strength to overwhelm him.

‘.....’

Igrit quietly observed Jin-Woo for a while, before it abruptly took off its red cape.

Plop.

The cape fell to the floor.

‘What’s it doing?’

The b*stard’s strange actions didn’t end there.

It proceeded to take off the longsword on its hips, and the two daggers hidden behind its back, and dropped them all to the ground.

Not only that, it showed them to him, before dropping them one at a time.

Clang, clang...

The interior of the boss room had been quiet until then; the loud clangs of the metal hitting the stone tiles reverberated noisily throughout this vast chamber.

Igrit finished discarding all of its weapons, and as if to imitate Jin-Woo, clenched its fists and got into a fighting stance.

Jin-Woo’s eyes grew wider.

‘Could this b*stard be thinking of....?’

Was this thing going to fight him bare-handed because he was also bare-handed?

Jin-Woo bit his lower lip.

‘....It’s looking down on me.’

The monsters’ provocation that really wasn’t one only served to rapidly cool his head. The hotter his emotions boiled, the colder his head got.

On the contrary to his heart beating faster and faster, Jin-Woo’s eyes became sharper and calculating.

‘Come.’

Perhaps reading his mind, Igrit made a beeline towards him.

Tap, tap, tap, tap!

The speed it produced was so fast that he found it hard to believe it was wearing a suit of armour.

‘The speed penalty of the armours only comes into effect when the Strength Stat is lower than 80, right?’

Meaning, this thing’s Strength was at least 80!

Judging from its nimble movement, its Agility would also rival some of the highest-ranked Hunters out there.

Igrit closed the distance in the blink of an eye, and leapt up into the air. Once flying, the thing stuck its knee out and aimed at Jin-Woo’s face.

However, Jin-Woo had been ready as well, his own movement speed pushed to the extreme. He bent his back almost 90 degrees and let Igrit’s attack brush past him.

Jin-Woo then rapidly stood back up.

Quite unlike other knights that needed some distance to stop after their tackle had failed, Igrit simply landed on the ground without much fanfare.

Kung!!

There was no time to admire that perfect landing, though.

Jin-Woo rushed in and before Igrit could turn around all the way, he diagonally kicked its head.

Shockingly enough, the thing still could move its arm accurately even when its posture was unstable.

Slam!

Jin-Woo’s right leg was easily blocked by Igrit’s left hand.

‘How can this be?!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened wider.

While one of his legs was blocked, Igrit’s other fist flew in at his face.

Swish!

He raised both of his arms instinctively to guard himself, but the impact force still got transmitted to the rest of his body.

Boom!!

His guard broke and his entire body became airborne.

“What?!”

A shocked gasp escaped from his mouth.

But soon, it turned into a groan.

“.....?!”

Because, Igrit had already appeared right in front of his eyes.

Even before he had the chance to do something about it, Igrit’s left fist powerfully slammed into Jin-Woo’s left cheek.

Slam!!

He slammed into the floor and bounced up from the impact, before continuing to roll away. He only managed to force himself back up after a while.

BUZZ!!

The inside of his ears rang noisily.

Jin-Woo shook his head around a couple of times. Only then did the loud ringing die down somewhat.

However, the much bigger problem than that was coming closer to him. His blurry sight captured Igrit as it walked towards him.

Step, step....

Jin-Woo opened his eyes wider and got ready.

Eventually, Igrit arrived right before Jin-Woo’s nose.

And so, a bloody dogfight erupted between the two.

Igrit didn’t even try to dodge Jin-Woo’s punches. No, it simply took on the hits and counter-attacked right away.

Pow!

Igrit’s head was forced slightly to the side.

But, even before Jin-Woo could correct his posture, a sharp and accurate counterpunch flew at him.

POW!

Jin-Woo tottered about like a drunken man.

Pow!

This time, Igrit took a step back.

POW!

After his stomach was kicked in, Jin-Woo's body bent forward 90 degrees.

“Keok!”

Blood welled up in his mouth.

‘What is this nonsensical bullsh*t....?!’

Currently, Jin-Woo's physical damage reduction Stat had exceeded 30%.

However, each of Igrit's attacks hurt like crazy, as if he was being pounded on by a hammer. On the other hand, his attacks almost didn't inflict any damage to the enemy.

Their exchange didn't last for long afterwards.

POW!

Jin-Woo teetered about unsteadily, before falling to his knees.

Plop.

He tried to stand back up, but his legs didn't want to listen.

Plop.

“Euh-euk...”

Igrit stood before Jin-Woo, but stopped attacking him. It wordlessly stared down at him for a while.

‘.....?’

Then, while ignoring Jin-Woo's question-filled gaze directed at it, Igrit extended its hand out towards the sword discarded to the ground some distance away.

Then, the sword was automatically reeled in.

Igrit grasped the sword in both of its hands and walked to the side of Jin-Woo.

Soon, the tip of the blade was pointing to the sky.

‘You want to execute me, is that it?’

This b*stard certainly lived up to its title as the captain of the knights.

When it looked like Jin-Woo wasn't going to resist his final moments, Igrit went ahead with the execution.

Of course, Jin-Woo wasn't going to let that happen without a fight.

The sword fell down in a straight line.

Swish-!

However, Jin-Woo reached up with his left hand and blocked the descending blade.

CLANG!

The noise of metal hitting metal!

The gauntlet he found just before entering here protected his hand.

Flinch!

He sensed Igrit being taken back just now. Jin-Woo didn't miss this chance and threw a punch with his right hand.

As expected, Igrit didn't try to dodge.

'You're thinking of countering me again, right?'

It had probably calculated that getting hit once while countering that was far more productive. Too bad, it failed to take something important into its calculation.

'Poison Fang of Kasaka!'

Shururu....

The Poison Fang of Kasaka was summoned instantly into his hand.

And Jin-Woo stabbed the dagger in the creature's eye.

Stab!

Kuwoooooaar!!

A scream that couldn't have come from a human being exploded out.

At the same time, a fierce light poured out from the eye with the dagger sticking out.

Jin-Woo hurriedly stood back up.

'Now what?'

Just damaging one eye wouldn't be able to determine the winner of this battle. He needed an attack even more powerful than that if he wanted to win.

It was then, a thought entered his mind.

The horrifying attack that almost pushed him to the brink of death the other day! He wanted to let Igrit taste that attack, too.

Before he could finish thinking that, his body moved first.

Jin-Woo bent down and bear-hugged Igrit's midriff.

And then... he began running.

Kuooaark!!

Igrit thrashed about in pain and managed to land several solid blows on Jin-Woo's back. However, he gritted his teeth and didn't let Igrit go.

No, he increased his speed instead.

“Dash!!”

[Your movement speed has increased by 40%.]

Jin-Woo's legs were now moving so much faster. He felt the electrifying speed sending chills down his entire body.

‘Yes, this is it. And now...’

And now, he'd slam this b*stard!

While gripping the midriff of Igrit even harder, he dashed towards the nearest wall with every ounce of energy he had.

Of course, if they collided against the wall at this speed, the impact his own body received would be substantial as well. However, Jin-Woo had a hidden trump card in the form of a certain passive skill.

The distance closed in the blink of an eye!

The wall was right behind them.

Kaboom!!

Along with the huge explosion, Igrit crashed into the wall.

At the same time, a message from the System popped up.

Tti-ring!

[Your HP has dropped below 30% and ‘Skill: Tenacity’ has been activated.]

[All damage received will be reduced by 50%.]

The impact force was great enough for the entire boss room to tremble momentarily.

“Keu-euk.”

Jin-Woo took a step back.

Igrit was buried half-way into the wall, yet it was still alive. The ‘flame’ of life burning under the helm was still flickering visibly.

‘...I need to finish this.’

Jin-Woo yanked the Poison Fang of Kasaka, still buried in its eye, loose.

That caused Igrit’s body to quiver once.

Jin-Woo held the dagger in a reverse grip, and stabbed hard at the b*stard’s neck.

‘Vital Points Targetting!’

Clang!!

The attack failed to work.

One more time.

‘Vital Points Targetting!’

Clang!!

Sparks flew off from the tip of the dagger.

A small nick formed on the metal covering the monster’s neck.

One more time.

‘Vital Points Targetting!’

Clang!

One more!

Clang!

One more!

Clang!!!

And finally...

‘Vital Points Targetting!!’

Crack!!

The Poison Fang of Kasaka broke past the protective metal and dug deep into its neck.

[You defeated the Captain of the Knights, Igrit the Crimson.]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

Jin-Woo raised both of his hands up high into the sky.

He took several steps back, before losing all strength in his legs and faltered to the floor.

“Pant, pant....!”

Jin-Woo spat out the heavy breaths he’d been holding in until now.

He won, somehow.

It was an incredibly close fight.

‘However... wasn’t this the end of the quest?’

Jin-Woo collected his breaths for a long time, before painfully raising his body up.

He expected the class quest to end once he killed this guy, but not one message popped up in his view. He looked around, but he failed to spot anything different in the boss room.

No, there was one thing that was different from before.

Several strands of light began flickering on Igrit’s body. Meaning, his loot was now ready.

‘For the time being, let’s grab those.’

After all, he couldn’t tell what else might happen here.

Grabbing things that he could grab when there was a chance was the smartest move one could make, wasn’t it?

Jin-Woo reached out towards those lights.

[‘Item: Red Knight’s Helm’ has been found. Take it?]

[‘Rune Stone: Ruler’s Reach’ has been found. Take it?]

[‘Item: Leather Pouch’ has been found. Take it?]

[‘Item: Immediate Return Stone’ has been found. Take it?]

Why were there so many?

Jin-Woo felt rather puzzled, but still, he couldn’t hide his elation, either.

‘Acquire them all.’

The first thing to enter his Inventory was the Leather Pouch.

[‘Item: Leather Pouch’ has been opened.]

[1,500,000 Gold is inside.]

[1,500,000 Gold has been acquired.]

Jin-Woo's eyes went extra round.

'The level of reward is on another scale altogether!'

It definitely was worth it, defeating it after going through so much crap.

He wasn't expecting all that much, to begin with, yet the leather pouch spat out an unbelievable amount of 1,500,000 Gold.

With this amount, he'd be able to buy something useful from the Store now.

However, Jin-Woo's attention was directed elsewhere at the moment.

If the leather pouch he didn't even hold high hopes for managed to produce such wealth, then just how high was the value of the helm or the Rune Stone?

Jin-Woo tried very hard to calm his heart and brought up the information on the helm.

Tti-ring.

[Item: Red Knight's Helm]

Rarity: S

Type: Armour

Reduction in physical damage: +15%

Stamina +20, Strength +20

"It's an S!!"

Jin-Woo cried out in elation.

Chapter 49 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

For the first time ever, an item with a rarity ranking of ‘S’ showed up.

Just the effect of 15% reduction in physical damage alone would’ve made it a top-tier item, yet it even possessed two more remarkable additional attributes of raising the Stamina and Strength Stats by 20 points each.

Just seeing those options alone made his heart palpitate so much faster.

‘The rarity A items can’t even compare to it!’

He had acquired two A-ranked items up until now.

The first was the Poison Sac of Kasaka, the one he got after he defeated the snake ‘Blue Kasaka’; the second one being the Gatekeeper’s Necklace after he defeated the Cerberus.

Those two items were already quite excellent.

The poison sac had the terrible penalty of stealing 35 points from his Strength Stat, but its effect also decreased the physical damage taken by 20%.

What about the Gatekeeper’s Necklace, then?

It was one of the best items out there that increased both Agility and Perception Stats by 20 each – two Stats he now knew the importance of.

But the Red Knight’s Helm possessed the kind of buffing effect that combined both of those items. And without any penalty, to boot.

‘No need to mention it. It’s the best.’

He was fully aware of the fact that he was standing in the middle of the dungeon’s boss room, yet the smile on his face didn’t want to go away.

And if he were to add in one more unnecessary point here, he even liked the helm’s design.

‘It’s a bit of a pity to hide this thing, though.’

The crimson helm that immediately reminded all onlookers of the flowing blood, and the mane connected to the helm itself, made him feel like he was holding an artistic masterpiece.

It was only for a brief moment, but he even felt compelled to put on the full set of this armour if it existed somewhere.

However...

‘What a waste....’

Igrit’s other armour pieces weren’t considered to be loot, as there were no lights coming off from them. Only the helm could be taken away.

Jin-Woo forced back a rueful smile and cautiously put on the helm.

Poof.

Just as always, the helm disappeared from the view immediately.

Although he couldn’t show off his new look, his Stats had gained a huge boost thanks to his new headwear.

[Stats]

Strength: 128 (+20)

Stamina: 87 (+20)

Agility: 107

Intelligence: 66

Perception: 89

Reduction in physical damage: 46% (+15%)

The numbers appearing in brackets were the increases in his Stats from the helm itself. Not only the Strength and Stamina Stats, but the hard-to-increase damage reduction Stat all enjoyed massive boosts.

He was completely and utterly satisfied now.

Having confirmed the increase with his own two eyes, his heart began beating even faster.

‘No, no, no.’

Jin-Woo quickly shook his head.

‘The quest isn’t over yet, so let’s calm down.’

Besides, he still had other items to sort out, too.

With the trace of excitement still lingering in his mind, Jin-Woo shifted his gaze to the other two items.

[Rune Stone: Ruler’s Reach]

[Item: Immediate Return Stone]

Two pieces of stones.

Out of the two walnut-sized stones, the first one to grab his curious gaze was the Immediate Return Stone.

'I know what is a Rune Stone, but this....'

Just what could this Immediate Return Stone do?

His curiosity got resolved pretty quickly, however. The information on the Immediate Return Stone floated up right away.

Tti-ring.

[Item: Immediate Return Stone]

Rarity: ??

Type: Consumable

An item exclusive to this Class Change Quest. When destroyed, you'll be transported outside the dungeon immediately. However, once the Class Change Quest has been concluded, it will automatically be destroyed.

Can't be stored in the Inventory.

The way to use it was similar to a Rune Stone.

However, to think that its effect wasn't about absorbing a new skill, but to escape from this dungeon....

'Hang on a sec. The Class Change Quest isn't over yet?!'

If that were the case, then this particular item should've been destroyed already.

Since it hadn't, that could only mean...

For some reason, he felt a creeping chill slowly caress his spine.

What an odd sensation that was.

He had received one of the best items out there that could help him make his escape from this dungeon, yet why was he getting this incredibly bad premonition right now?

If this stone could be used in regular dungeons, and not only inside the System-generated ones, then just about everyone alive would try to buy this thing.

Seriously, this stone would be the same as having a sure-fire way to save their lives, so no one should be foolish enough to pinch pennies when trying to get their hands on one.

It was the same with Jin-Woo, too. Just this item alone should decrease the burden of this quest by a great deal.

'If I so choose....'

...He'd be able to escape at any time.

However, the ominous feeling taking root in the corner of his mind didn't want to go away, no matter what.

And, sure enough!

The warning beep from the System went off in his head as if it was waiting for this moment.

Tti-ring.

['Player' has acquired the Immediate Return Stone.]

[The 'Class Change Quest' will now commence.]

Son of a b*tch!

So, this was the item to start the quest for real!

He nearly fainted on the spot. He felt like he had stepped on something he shouldn't have in the first place.

'If I knew this might happen, I'd have taken a short break first!'

What would regret do for him now?

No matter how much one relied on one's experience and knowledge to predict the future, one would never be able to correctly guess the tricks of fate.

A strand of cold sweat dripped down from Jin-Woo's forehead.

Jin-Woo summoned the Status Window inwardly and confirmed the remaining HP and his fatigue level.

[HP: 4161/10270]

[MP: 390/850]

[Tiredness: 61]

'The Tiredness Stat is a bit on the high side, but I can still do this.'

The helm's added effects enhanced his Stamina Stat by a lot, which meant that his overall endurance had increased greatly as well, and his remaining HP had risen up as an added bonus, too.

What a relief that was.

As if to encourage himself, Jin-Woo continued to tell himself that...

'I can still do this. It's not impossible.'

Of course, his life should not be in any imminent danger. Because, he held the Immediate Return Stone, after all.

However, no matter how hard he thought about it, this Immediate Return Stone sounded awfully like an item that signified him giving up on the quest.

If that was not the case, then it shouldn't have been the quest-starting item, to begin with.

'If I give up on this quest....'

Wouldn't it be the same as him giving up on this chance to get his class?

The cold sweat on his forehead rolled past his temple and down to his chin, before dripping down.

Gulp.

Just as he swallowed a bit of dry spit and his Adam's apple bobbed up and down, the System's new message popped up in his view.

Tti-ring.

[In ten seconds, dimensional doorways will be randomly generated.]

'Dimensional doorways?'

Even before his question could be cleared up, huge numbers appeared up in the middle of the air.

[00:00:10]

He could easily tell what that was.

It most likely was signifying the countdown.

Meanwhile, the messages continued on.

['Player' has a choice.]

[You can escape from the dungeon by using the Immediate Return Stone, or....]

.....8, 7, 6.

The timer continued to tick down to 0.

[Or, endure as long as you can and earn as many advancement points as possible in order to access the higher ranked classes.]

"Endure?! Endure what exactly?"

He ended up shouting out loudly as his frustration mounted. However, Jin-Woo was already holding the Poison Fang of Kasaka summoned from his Inventory.

He stored the Rune Stone inside the Inventory, while the Immediate Return Stone was placed inside the back of his pocket since it couldn't be stored there.

Even though his heart beat fast and hard enough to nearly explode, he didn't forget to get ready for the battle that was about to come.

That was how Seong Jin-Woo operated.

[The Class Change Quest will soon commence.]

....4, 3, 2.

Jin-Woo anxiously glared at the time and quickly scanned his surroundings.

His head and eyes darted around quickly, over here and over there.

Something ominous was clearly getting ready to begin; the space around him was separating and twisting visibly to his eyes.

[00:00:01]

[I wish you the best of luck.]

What?

For the first time ever, the System expressed 'emotion'.

Too bad, he had no time to stew inside his shock. The moment the timer hit 0, several Gates began forming all around him.

Buzzz...

Wuuooong....

Not just one or two, either.

He first spotted six around him. The number continued to climb up even higher, however.

And at the same time, the timer began ticking upwards.

[00:00:02]

The 'countdown' began again.

The time would become his so-called advancement points. He hadn't understood everything the System said, but still, he did figure out some parts of it.

‘The longer I endure, the stronger I will get.’

No, more specifically, he’d instead get a powerful class.

There was no way he’d throw away a golden opportunity like this. He also had some wiggle room left with his HP and MP.

‘Let’s endure as long as I can.’

[00:00:03]

When the timer hit exactly three seconds, weapon-less knights poured out from the nearest Gate.

Thud, thud, thud, thud....

When the knights decked out in full armour formed silver-coloured waves, the ground couldn’t help but tremor from the weight.

The momentum these things displayed would have been enough to overwhelm most people, but there was a smile floating up onto Jin-Woo’s lips, instead.

‘If it’s these guys, I can definitely fight them!’

In a way, he was oh-so-glad to see them as his opponents.

If the monsters coming out from the Gates happened to be as strong as Igrit, then he wouldn’t even be able to last a couple of seconds.

‘Stealth!’

Jin-Woo used some part of the remaining MP and activated the skill ‘Stealth’.

‘For the time being, I should observe what’s happening here first.’

Jin-Woo’s form blurred and slowly disappeared. As expected, the knights rushing towards him all came to an abrupt halt.

However...

[The mage has used ‘Skill: Eyes of Detection’.]

The crisp ‘titi-ring’ of the warning beep resounded in his head. Jin-Woo’s head snapped in the direction of the beep.

‘What was that?’

He spotted a mage that had just emerged from the Gate chanting a spell. That’s also when Jin-Woo discovered an ‘eye’ like symbol floating above the head of the mage.

The moment that eye flashed...!

In that moment, Jin-Woo's Stealth was cancelled.

'F*ck!'

From the get-go, his calculation proved to be way off the mark.

Snap.

Snap.

The knights that stood around like telephone poles snapped their heads all at once towards Jin-Woo's direction. It was a scene straight out of a horror movie.

And soon enough, the silver waves pounced on him.

Jin-Woo's eyes opened wider and he gritted his teeth.

BOOM!!

His punch blew away the head of the incoming knight.

That guy died where it stood.

[You defeated the knight.]

Crazed lights shone in Jin-Woo's eyes.

'Intimidation!'

['Skill: Intimidation' has been activated.]

['Effect: Fear' has been activated.]

['The targets' (All) Stats will decrease by 50% for one minute.]

The movements of the monsters became much duller through the effects of 'Fear', but his Mana fell down to 90 points.

The Intimidation required 100 MP in order to activate.

He wouldn't be able to use it the second time.

'However, I just bought myself a minute.'

Intending to use this precious minute to the best of his abilities as the monsters were noticeably weakened, Jin-Woo began wailing on them with everything he had.

Boom!

Crack!

Kaboom!

Slam!

With a terrifying momentum, he proceeded to utterly dismantle the knights.
Boom! Slam! Crack!!

Too bad, the speed of him defeating knights was far inferior to the rate of the replacement knights popping out from the Gates.

Rumble—!!

Even in the midst of the maddened battle, Jin-Woo sneaked a glance at the timer.

[00:03:19]

It'd only been three minutes and 19 seconds.

If that was converted into points, how much would he get?

Wouldn't it be fine for him to leave this place now?

However, he didn't have any leeway to dwell on that matter.

Even while he was thinking to himself, knights were continuously pouring out from the Gates like unstoppable waves.

He managed to destroy countless Knights, yet he simply couldn't deal with so many of them.

“U-uwaaaahh-?!”

In the end, Jin-Woo was buried in the sea of knights.

[Passive skill, ‘Tenacity’ has been activated.]

His HP was in a freefall now and eventually, it hit rock bottom.

[HP: 1036/10270]

‘The time is....?’

[00:05:08]

Five minutes and eight seconds.

He had endured enough, hadn't he?

‘.....Let's get out of here.’

Now completely entrapped among the knights, Jin-Woo flailed about helplessly in this silver prison and dug through his back pocket.

However...

Drop.

The Immediate Return Stone slipped out from his grasp and fell to the floor.

And the roundish stone hit the sole of one of the knights and rolled away far from him.

“NOOO!!”

Jin-Woo hurriedly reached out towards the stone, but the knights blocked him.

Soon, knights piled up on top of him, too.

It became almost impossible to breathe in an instant.

[Passive skill, ‘Tenacity’ has been activated.]

[Passive skill, ‘Tenacity’ has been activated.]

His consciousness began to blur.

Pow, pow!!

He continuously got struck by the knights while trapped below them, and as his mind began to grow dimmer, he thought he heard a snarky cackle coming from somewhere.

‘.....’

‘.....’

‘.....Shut up.’

Shut the hell up!!

Kwaboom!!

The knights surrounding and pressing down on Jin-Woo were suddenly all blown away.

Even though he somehow managed to crawl out from death, his eyes were burning with life. As a matter of fact, his eyes were burning with a stubborn will and sheer malice.

‘I won’t let it end like this!!’

He earned this opportunity after going through so much. So, how could he let it end like this? Never.

Because he was stuck at the very bottom for so long, he yearned to be on top more than anyone else. He knew the sorrow of the weak better than anyone. He tried everything to survive, and when he did survive, others kept pointing fingers at him.

So, how could he simply watch and do nothing, when a ladder that could take him to the very top was put in front of his eyes?

What a rubbish notion that was.

‘...I remember now.’

That voice ringing around his head just now.

That voice belonged to those b*stards.

The voice that always yapped on and on from behind his back.

‘Fine, laugh all you want.

‘I’ll struggle on until the bitter end.

‘It’s fine if my HP drops to ten, no, 1. I’ll struggle and struggle on like crazy, right until the end. I’ll fight until I won’t be able to move anymore.’

“Uwaaahh!!!”

Jin-Woo threw his body forward.

Crack!

He thrust forward another punch.

A knight’s breastplate caved in and the monster flew away. Other knights collided with it and they all fell on their butts.

But then, more knights rushed in again.

Jin-Woo’s movements became a step more violent in response.

Crack! Boom!! Slam!!

Without an exception, knights colliding with Jin-Woo’s body parts, be that his fist, elbow, knee, feet, were all destroyed like a bunch of paper dolls.

[Tiredness has exceeded 70 points.]

[Your movement is being restricted.]

Just as the warning message said, his movements became duller. However, the malice and anger in Jin-Woo’s eyes didn’t weaken in the slightest.

One by one, the knights he couldn’t defeat in one hit slammed into him. Jin-Woo resorted to hitting them three, four times and made sure to destroy them.

[.....8, 7, 6, 5.]

In the meantime, a strange countdown was silently ticking down. He was too focused on the battle so he failed to notice it before the timer had reached the single digit.

‘What’s this? Is the quest coming to an end?’

A small ray of hope blossomed in his head for a brief moment, but it turned out to be nothing but a useless dream.

[00:06:27]

The quest timer was still ticking up as it supposed to. No, something separate from this timer was counting down one second at a time.

[4, 3, 2.]

‘Is it to show me the time of my death?’

Indeed, the System did tell him this way back then; it told him that, if he didn’t accept becoming a Player, he’d die 0.02 seconds later.

‘Fine.’

Jin-Woo glared fiercely.

‘I’ll gladly use up every moment, right down to the final second!’

Slam!! Crack!!

Two more knights were destroyed in the meantime.

Unlike Jin-Woo’s unyielding stubbornness, though, his entire body was now riddled with all sorts of wounds. It progressively much harder to lift his arms.

His weakened fist wasn’t enough to stop the knights’ tackles and charges anymore.

From the front, one; from the back, another one.

Slam!!

Jin-Woo was sandwiched powerfully by the two knights slamming into him from the front and back, and he spat out a pained groan.

“Keok!”

Other knights pounced on him as if they didn’t want to miss this chance.

In the blink of an eye, Jin-Woo was buried under the masses of knights and couldn’t even lift a finger.

Rumble-!

Even during that, more knights continued to pile on top of Jin-Woo. The silver waves had transformed into a silver mountain, instead.

Jin-Woo's breathing became incredibly harsh.

“Pant, pant....!!”

At this rate, he'd be asphyxiated to death first.

Jin-Woo's hand somehow broke out from the gaps of the knights and helplessly pointed towards the sky.

[HP: 93/10270]

He was in a truly desperate situation. Even then, Jin-Woo did not give up, though.

‘No, not yet. I can still go on....’

Just as Jin-Woo managed to clench the hand pointing at the sky, the mysterious countdown ticking down finally announced its conclusion.

[.....1, 0.]

[You've failed to complete the Daily Quest.]

[You'll be transferred to the 'Penalty Zone'.]

Chapter 50 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

Jin-Woo doubted his own hearing just then.

‘...Penalty Zone?!’

Ah!

He then remembered it; he didn't do the daily quest for today.

He was planning on confirming the results of his constant levelling up, and to help him decide whether he was ready to tackle the Demon's Castle or not.

Who could've guessed that things might unfold in this manner?

RUUUUMBLE-!!

Just like back in the hospital, everything began to violently shake.

Plop.

Plop.

The knights piling on top of Jin-Woo turned into figures of sand one by one.

The world surrounding him was changing.

‘Ha.... hahaha....’

Jin-Woo soundlessly laughed to himself.

For some reason, the words the System spoke to him before the beginning of the quest circled around inside his head.

[I wish you the best of luck.]

Was it trying to imply that the quest itself was unimaginably hard, to the point that he needed luck to complete it?

Or, was it implying that it'd cheer him on, as he resorted to borrowing the power of luck and earn a ton of advancement points that way?

Luck, coincidence, whatever it was called, he didn't care. No matter what it was, his chance had come.

The important thing was how he'd go about utilising that.

RUMBLE-!!

The tremor was getting worse.

Rather than wasting time trying to stabilise himself Jin-Woo entrusted his body to the tremor and closed his eyes.

‘Let’s not get agitated here....’

When he did that, he felt airborne and weightless, and all sound vanished from his hearing.

When he reopened his eyes, he found himself in the middle of the endless sea of sand.

Jin-Woo plopped down, face first.

“Ker-heo-eok.... Pant, pant, pant...”

His fingers dug into the desert sand as the held-up breaths exploded out of his mouth. Fresh air entered and flowed into every corner of his body via his lungs.

Finally...

“....I feel alive.”

The sense of relief wrapped Jin-Woo up tightly, as he rolled onto his back.

He could see the black sky above with nothing in it. The endless expanse of the pitch-black ceiling was the only thing his eyes could capture.

This place looked exactly the same as the penalty zone from his memories.

‘Wait, I shouldn’t be wasting time like this.’

He had forgotten that this place was not a safe zone either, since he just made a miraculous escape from a comparably far worse area.

But, Jin-Woo couldn’t be ar*ed into standing up any time soon, so while lying on his back, he summoned the Status Window.

[HP: 104/10270]

[MP: 202/850]

[Tiredness: 91]

He was wondering why it was so difficult to move his body, but as it turned out, the d*mn ‘Tiredness’ Stat was over 90.

‘This is probably my first time that Stat has gone past 90, right?’

He really didn’t want to even lift a finger here.

His health was one thing, but he figured that lowering his fatigue took priority.

“Store.”

Tti-ring.

Two words, ‘Buy’ and ‘Sell’ popped up in the air.

Although the layout of this Store imparted not one hint of sincerity, no matter how kind he looked at it, he found it such a welcoming sight right now.

He picked out the most expensive healing potion on sale.

As soon as he confirmed the purchase...

Shurururu...

A glass bottle containing red liquid appeared on his wide-open palm.

Jin-Woo laboriously popped the cork open and poured the potion down his mouth.

Gulp, gulp.

The red liquid travelled down his throat and entered deep into his body.

[Your fatigue is recovering.]

[Your fatigue is recovering.]

[Your fatigue is recovering.]

Maybe because it was the most expensive potion, just one bottle was enough to lower the Tiredness value at a visible rate.

However, for some reason, his HP value didn’t change at all.

[HP: 106/10270]

[MP: 204/850]

[Tiredness: 0]

Even after he finished the whole bottle, his HP didn’t recover. It was such a noticeable contrast to his Tiredness Stat hitting 0.

‘Why is it doing this?’

Only after he completely drained the bottle did he finally get to understand the reason for this anomaly.

Tti-ring.

[When your remaining HP is less than 10%, it is impossible to heal yourself with healing potions.]

What a simple reason, that – his remaining HP was too low.

‘Of course....’

Even healing magic had its limitations.

It was not a foreign concept to him.

Just as a Healer’s ranking determined the scope of their healing capabilities, potions too couldn’t heal past a certain limit.

‘And that limit is 10%, huh....’

He learned something important today. He might have landed in really hot water during a critical moment by believing potions could solve everything.

This was why experiencing it first hand was important.

Well, there was an old saying, wasn’t there?

Things that couldn’t kill him would make him stronger?

That perfectly illustrated the usefulness of personal experience.

And thankfully, Jin-Woo possessed experience regarding the Penalty Zone.

‘I’m sure they should pop up right about now....’

And just as he expected...

He sensed the presence of lifeforms beneath the surface.

Jin-Woo tightly shrunk his body for a second, before springing up to his feet.

His entire body felt as light as feather. His strength had returned in full, thanks to the potion.

Standing straight on his feet, Jin-Woo turned around and took a look.

Just as he expected, the spot he was lying on a second ago began caving in and a crater formed there.

‘Back then, I thought I’d die if I slipped and fell in there.’

But now, he had so much leeway that he was actually spectating on the whole process with some leisure.

At the very bottom of the sandy crater, the ground began to ‘boil’ and tremble about, before....

Pushiiii-!!

The sand exploded up like a pillar and the huge centipede revealed itself.

“Kiieehhk!!”

Everything matched up to his memories so far.

‘And I found this thing so terrifying to look at back then, too....’

But now, he couldn't help feeling like he was looking at some video footage being played in slow-motion.

Jin-Woo raised his eyes a bit higher.

And he got to clearly confirm those red letters floating above the centipede's head.

[Poison-Fanged Giant Desert Centipede]

Its name was in red letters, the same colour as the Cerberus from the Demon's Castle.

It was then, the quest message appeared before his eyes.

Tti-ring!

[Penalty Quest: Survival]

Goal: Please survive until the end of the time limit.

Time limit: 4 hours

Remaining time: 4 hours 0 minutes 0 seconds

Confirming the details of the message, Jin-Woo clenched his fist tightly.

‘I can buy myself time with this.’

Since he hadn't used the immediate return stone to escape from the dungeon, he still had a shot here.

‘I'm pretty sure that, as soon as the Penalty Quest is over, I will be sent back to that place.’

What if time spent inside the Penalty Zone was acknowledged as the time he endured during the quest? His advancement points tally would be enormous.

He couldn't even imagine just what kind of an impact that would have.

‘However....’

However, when he thought back to how the System affected him every day, he was sure of this becoming something absolutely huge.

‘Four hours!’

He couldn't even endure ten minutes and tried to use the immediate return stone, yet simply by transferring into the penalty zone, he now got himself four hours for free.

There was one issue he still had to resolve first, however.

And that would be whether he could get out of this place unscathed with only 100 or so HP remaining.

As it was impossible to heal himself using potions, he had to do his best to cautiously kill these centipedes until he levelled up.

It was kind of like a new mission for him.

‘...Let’s do this.’

Jin-Woo summoned the Poison Fang of Kasaka.

And then...

[Remaining time: 03:59:59]

...Then, as soon as the penalty quest began, he dashed forward, even before the centipede had the chance to move.

Jin-Woo closed the distance in the blink of an eye and lightly leapt up right in front of the centipede.

Paht!

He landed on one of the legs near the midpoint of the centipede and, as he made his way up, Jin-Woo proceeded to inflict several injuries on the body of the monster.

Stab! Staaab! Stab!

On all the spots the reverse-gripped Poison Fang of Kasaka brushed past, flesh split open and bodily fluid poured out.

Kiieehhkk!!

The centipede roared out and thrashed about as if each wound inflicted was too painful to bear.

‘Dash!’

Jin-Woo’s sprinting legs became even faster.

Step, step, step, step!

Jin-Woo deftly treaded on the centipede’s body and arrived at the top of its head only a second later. He gripped the dagger with both of his hands and raised it up high.

And then...

‘Vital Points Targetting!’

He used his skill and stabbed down on the centipede’s head with every ounce of his power.

The downward pointing blade dug deep into the flesh of the centipede’s head.

Crack!!

[‘Skill: Vital Points Targetting’ has levelled up!]

‘Niiice!’

What a wonderful piece of news to show up in such a long time!

The damage from the levelled-up Vital Points Targetting must’ve been pretty substantial, because the centipede shook its head around quite violently and thrashed about in great pain.

Kieeeeck!! Kiieeeeck!

Jin-Woo didn’t stop there.

He stepped away from its head and moved to its back. Because he saw a completely unguarded body part to attack.

STAB!!

Jin-Woo stabbed the dagger deep into the monster’s back flesh, and by using gravity, he fell to the ground while holding onto his weapon.

SFX for centipede’s back splitting up

The power from the Strength Stat exceeding 120 points, as well as the helping hand of gravity added on top as he fell from the height of a five-story building, caused the centipede’s back to split open quite splendidly.

Tap.

Jin-Woo landed on the ground without any trouble.

Kiieehhk!! Kiieehhh!

The centipede spewed out its bodily fluids everywhere. Its giant body thrashed and quivered before it slowly crashed on the ground.

Boom!!

The huge body of the centipede landed and kicked up the dust cloud.

Tti-ring.

[You defeated the Poison-Fanged Giant Desert Centipede.]

Jin-Woo dusted himself off while checking out the remaining time.

[Remaining time: 03:59:42]

'I spent 17 seconds.'

He didn't even need 20 seconds to kill a single centipede.

It was a complete contrast to when he was fighting the Cerberus, ostensibly on the same level as this centipede.

He had become unbelievably strong now.

'Well, yeah. I've levelled up so many times since then, and just how many items did I get my hands on, in the meantime?'

It was a rather obvious conclusion.

He now felt confident of hunting other centipedes down without getting hurt if these monsters posed such a little threat.

'Now then. My problem would be the number of monsters in this place that I can hunt to reach my next level....'

That would be the only way to raise his odds of his victory when he got thrown back into the class quest.

If he went back without having recovered his HP, only a dog's death would be waiting for him there.

It was at this point when....

More sand pillars began erupting out from the ground.

Pushhuiii-!!

Pushuuueeiii!!

It seemed that quite a lot of centipedes rushed over here after picking up on the scent of the blood from its dead kin.

Kiieehhk!

Kiieehhhhk-

Almost immediately, Jin-Woo's expression brightened.

'Just how many are here?'

Seeing all those centipedes poking their heads out from the sandy surface, Jin-Woo could no longer suppress the wide smile from blooming on his face.

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

As the result of wrestling around with these centipedes for the past four hours, his level rose up four times and now it sat at 51.

Before he knew it, the penalty quest was coming to an end.

[Penalty Quest: Survival]

Goal: Please survive until the end of the time limit.

Time limit: 4 hours

Remaining time: 0 hours 3 minutes 19 seconds

Soon, he'd have to go back.

Jin-Woo took a sweeping look around him. The corpses of centipedes filled up his view everywhere he looked. Thanks to them, he got to recover his HP back to full.

'It's a bit of waste that these things don't give any loot or Gold....'

Well, it'd be strange that loot would come out when he was supposed to get punished in this place...

He stopped worrying about that and got ready, instead.

'Store.'

[Current Gold: 3,115,629]

Humanoid-type monsters dropped the Gold-containing leather pouch really often, and also, Igrit also gave him 1.5 million Gold in one go.

So, he now had enough funds to spend.

Jin-Woo spent all that Gold to buy one single weapon.

As a matter of fact, there was this one dagger that caught his eye.

[Item: Knight Killer]

Rarity: B

Type: Dagger

Attack: +75

A sharp and sturdy dagger designed to cut through the armour worn by the knights. The edges of the blade are shaped like the teeth of a saw blade, thus it won't slide off the armour's surface easily.

Effect ‘Killing Knights’: +25% additional damage when attacking heavily armoured opponents.

It was a specially crafted weapon to deal with armour-wearing enemies. And it cost 2.8 million Gold.

He had to spend almost every Gold he had in reserve to buy this weapon, but he didn’t have any leeway to shed a tear over it.

‘It’s not like I can take the Gold with me to the grave, anyway.’

He didn’t hesitate and bought the dagger.

[You have purchased ‘Knight Killer’.]

[You have purchased ‘Bandages’.]

Along with the Knight Killer, Jin-Woo also bought a roll of bandages.

He held the dagger with a rather scary-looking sawblade-like cutting edge in his right hand, and wrapped them both tightly with the bandage.

Swish! Swish!!

When he swung the Knight Killer around a couple of times, it felt like the dagger had become a part of his limb now.

‘At a bare minimum, I shouldn’t drop it accidentally.’

He thought about tying the Poison Fang of Kasaka to his left hand too, but he decided not to.

It’d be too cumbersome when he couldn’t use both of hands.

He figured that at least one of his hands still retaining its mobility would make his life more flexible.

While he was putting away the leftover bandage into Inventory, he spotted the Rune Stone from Igrit.

‘Ah. There was this thing, too.’

[Rune Stone: Ruler’s Reach]

You can absorb the skill by breaking this Rune Stone.

Right now, he needed to grasp at everything, even if that was a piece of straw. Whether that was an item or a skill, he needed to obtain whatever that could become his combat strength.

Jin-Woo didn’t hesitate and broke the Rune Stone.

[You’ve acquired ‘Skill: Ruler’s Reach’.]

[Skill: Ruler's Reach Lv. 1]

Active skill.

Required Mana to activate: None.

Even without touching, you can physically influence an object.

'Ah...'

As soon as he read that description, he recalled a certain scene.

It was when Igrit extended its hand towards its longsword that was discarded on the floor, far away.

'So, this is the skill that made the sword move back then.'

A skill that could move objects around from a distance with nothing but his will! On top of that, he didn't even have to spend any Mana, either!

'If I am able to move any object I see just like the description says, then this would be one hell of a skill to possess.'

Jin-Woo immediately tried to experiment with the skill on the corpse of the centipede next to him.

[Your proficiency is too low and the target can't be moved.]

If he wanted to move something heavy, then it was likely that his proficiency with the skill had to be much higher.

'How about this, then?'

Jin-Woo dropped the Poison Fang of Kasaka to the floor. And he extended his hand towards the dagger.

Then, the dagger quickly rose up.

Grab!

'Ohhhh.'

Jin-Woo snatched the Poison Fang's hilt and stared at it with totally mystified eyes.

'Nice. This will come in handy.'

And with that, he was as prepared as he could get.

When he raised his head to confirm, the required time was almost up.

[Remaining time: 00:00:04]

When the timer changed from 4 to 3, a new message from the System popped up in his view.

Tti-ring.

[Penalty Quest will conclude shortly.]

And another message followed after that one.

Tti-ring.

[As you have tried to hunt inside the Penalty Zone, the difficulty of the next Penalty Quest will be adjusted to a higher level.]

The difficulty would be adjusted higher.

Meaning, it'd make the hunting so much harder that the 'Penalty Quest' would actually serve its purpose as proper punishment again.

But, then again, would there be the next time?

Jin-Woo anxiously swallowed his saliva.

'From here onwards, it's back to the Class Change Quest.'

Inside that boss room, hundreds of monsters were waiting for his return.

Or, the number could be even higher now.

If he was being kind here, he was returning to that place, but truthfully, it was more like him being thrown back in there.

HP, MP, Tiredness, equipment, and even a new skill.

And his renewed resolve.

His current condition was so much better than when he first set foot in that place, but when he thought about going back there, he couldn't help but get tense and nervous.

Thump, thump, thump....

His heart beat so hard that it actually hurt.

Jin-Woo closed his eyes. He tried to maintain his calm.

Soon, the familiar mechanical beep went off in his head.

Tti-ring.

[Penalty Quest has concluded.]

'This is my last chance....'

When Jin-Woo opened his eyes again...

His vision was filled with the silver-coloured knights all snapping their heads in his direction at once.

However, they weren't important right now.

Right away, Jin-Woo narrowed his eyes and searched for something.

'I gotta find the mages first!!'

Chapter 51 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

The reason for searching for the mages was quite simple.

‘If my thoughts are correct...’

And that was to confirm whether the supposition he made back in the Penalty Zone was correct or not.

Meanwhile, the knights all began rushing violently towards him.

Jin-Woo calmly jumped and stepped on the shoulder of the knight closest to him, and leapt up into the air. That allowed him to take in the interior of the boss room in one go.

‘Where are the mages?’

.....Found one!

Not too far from him, he spotted a lone mage.

‘As I thought!’

What he witnessed back then was right.

Indeed, he didn’t see wrong.

Back then, when he was being squeezed tight by the group of knights and only his arm could flail about helplessly, Jin-Woo spotted something through the narrow gaps he couldn’t quite understand at the time.

‘.....’

And that was a mage continuously chanting a spell.

A mage busy chanting a spell... at a casual glance, that wouldn’t be something out of place. However, Jin-Woo still felt a strong sense of discord from that.

‘If that’s the case, then how come....’

How come he saw not one single spell flying at him?

Every attack he received came from the knights. Mages continued to chant, yet not once did they complete their spells and display their might.

No, there was that one time.

Back when one of them used something called Eyes of Detection and undid his Stealth. And when that was happening, for some reason, all the knights nearby stopped moving.

At first, he thought they only stopped because they had lost their target.

However, while he was hunting down the giant centipedes in the Penalty Zone, he belatedly realised something quite important.

Was it around the eighth centipede he killed? The level up message popped up and he clenched his fist tightly.

[Level up!]

His spent HP and MP were restored to full. After the short period of elation, a weird incongruency rushed in right afterwards.

‘My level can rise this easily, yet why didn’t I level up once in that place?’

The System said that his health wouldn’t recover through level up, but crucially, it said nothing about him being unable to level up.

Indeed, his level rose up by 5 on his way towards the boss room, too. However, only during the Class Change Quest, he didn’t level up once. Even though he endured for over six minutes and killed a hundred plus knights.

Mages busy chanting but not casting any spells.

Knights that apparently didn’t give out any experience points.

When he took these actions of the two separate groups that puzzled him so much and combined them into one singular puzzle....

A new possibility formed in Jin-Woo’s head.

‘It could be....’

It was possible that all of the knights there were fake.

The reason why all those knights stopped moving when the mage used Eyes of Detection could be that... it wasn’t because he had vanished, but because the mage had stopped casting.

‘If my guess is correct...!!’

He needed to confirm it right now.

Jin-Woo ignored the knights reaching out to grab him and ran towards the mage while using their shoulders and heads as his footholds.

‘....!’

He sensed the mage panicking after spotting his approach. And its casting speed had increased. Suddenly, the knights no longer attacked him without a plan and tried to gather around the mage to protect it.

With that, Jin-Woo was convinced now.

Tap!

He landed in front of the mage. Without a moment of hesitation, the dagger held in his right hand accurately pierced the mage's heart.

'Vital Points Targetting!'

Stab!

The mage soundlessly turned into a wisp of black smoke and disappeared from the view.

[You defeated a mage.]

And at the same time-!

Tumble!!!

Hundreds of knights rushing in to attack Jin-Woo all collapsed at the same time. It was as if they were puppets with their strings cut.

The knights collapsed on the floor were now, more or less, empty suits of armour.

'This was my answer!'

Jin-Woo cried out inwardly in elation.

He had to go through several near-death situations just to get to this conclusion.

Knights were nothing to worry about. No, it was the mages that controlled these knights.

The real goal was to kill them, instead.

'The first target my Knight Killer killed was a mage.....'

Jin-Woo couldn't help but chuckle as he looked down at the empty robe discarded on the floor. He had that much leeway now.

Of course, he couldn't continue to stand around doing nothing forever. After all, his quest hadn't ended yet.

Rumble...

The ground shook again.

Jin-Woo turned around and saw that the knights had him surrounded from almost all sides with no gaps to speak of.

Meaning, there were other mages controlling these batches of knights hidden somewhere.

Knights pounced on him. Jin-Woo's right hand moved so fast that naked eyes couldn't even see its shape.

Slice!!

The knights standing in front of him all got cut in half.

Jin-Woo's eyes opened real wide after witnessing that.

'Wow!'

It was worth investing 2.8 million Gold on this dagger. The blade of his Knight Killer pierced and sliced open the knights' armour as if they were made of paper.

It didn't seem that the saw-like blade was the only reason for this.

Just as the item description, 'dagger designed for use against knights' said, he could sense a strong magic-like power emanating from this Knight Killer.

'A weapon from the Store is actually pretty good, isn't it?'

There was a slight deviation from the accepted norm here. Normally, most people would think of weapons sold in stores as something one would use in a pinch when there was no better alternative.

'I shouldn't be dismissing Gold from now, huh....?'

At a bare minimum, this dagger seemed a lot more useful than weapons designed for a Hunter. He even thought that, if he sold weapons from the Store to other Hunters, he would become rich in no time at all.

Well, he didn't see any restrictions on the weapon descriptions that he couldn't give one to someone else, which was different from 'consumable' type items.

'Concentrate, man. Concentrate!'

Now wasn't the time to get distracted. Knights were still tirelessly rushing at him.

Swish! Slice!!

Jin-Woo dodged this way and that while cutting them down.

However....

'This will go on forever.'

When he shifted his gaze away just for a brief moment, far more knights than he had cut down appeared out of seemingly nowhere to fill the gap.

Slice!!

One more knight lost its head.

'I gotta find the mages.'

Jin-Woo utilised the shoulders of the headless knight and leapt up before the creature collapsed to the floor.

'Stealth!'

Jin-Woo's form blurred in an instant. Of course, he wasn't trying to hide via Stealth. What he was aiming for was....

[The mage has used 'Skill: Eyes of Detection'.]

[The mage has used 'Skill: Eyes of Detection'.]

[The mage has used 'Skill: Eyes of Detection'.]

....The ear-piercing mechanical beeps rang out from several directions.

Jin-Woo ran on top of the knights and quickly confirmed the positions of the eye-like symbols.

'There are a total of five mages!'

Jin-Woo targetted the closest mage to him.

'.....!'

The mage hurriedly gathered knights around it the moment Jin-Woo turned to stare at it, but....

Swish-!!

The Poison Fang of Kasaka flew out of his left hand in a straight line and stabbed accurately in the middle of the mage's forehead.

Stab!

[You've acquired 'Skill: Dagger Throw'.]

[You defeated the mage.]

Tumble...

Once more, hundreds of knights tumbled to the ground.

'Four more left!'

Jin-Woo stepped on the knights' heads and moved towards his next target.

Meanwhile, he sneaked a glance towards the ‘Poison Fang of Kasaka’ he hadn’t recovered yet. It was time to use his new skill.

‘Ruler’s Reach!’

Jin-Woo extended his left hand towards the dagger, and as if a magnet was pulling it in, the weapon flew back in.

‘Yes!’

Jin-Woo snatched the dagger off the air.

Now that he didn’t have to personally retrieve his dagger, he could take the most efficient route to his target. In the next second, he arrived before the next mage, and...

‘.....!’

Even before the knights could try anything, he cut the b*stard up in half.

[You defeated the mage.]

More knights collapsed again. With that, not even half of the original number of knights remained.

The initiative was clearly with him now.

Jin-Woo’s glare became harsher.

‘There are three left.’

Perhaps sensing the threat, the remaining mages all gathered in one spot. It wasn’t only them, either. The knights they controlled also gathered around them.

And then, the mages all chanted a certain spell together. Their ominous and creepy voices reverberated throughout the boss room and soon, they finished their spell.

Crack, creak.

The knights guarding the mages were suddenly pulled into one lump and got compressed as if they were thrown into an industrial crusher. And then, they were reborn as one huge metal Golem which began glaring at Jin-Woo right away.

Wuooo-!

‘Wow, this is no joke, huh?’

Jin-Woo leaked out a gasp of pure admiration after sensing the overwhelming pressure emitted from this giant monster.

However, he wasn't scared by its appearance at all.

Perhaps because he had encountered several life-or-death situations already, he was feeling expectant rather than nervous.

Thud, thud, thud!!

Whenever the large Golem took steps, the ground shook.

What a fearsome presence it possessed.

Swoooosh-!

Jin-Woo ducked lower and dodged the Golem's fist.

Kaboom!

The stone pillar behind Jin-Woo shattered into pieces after its metallic fist grazed it.

'Well, that is pretty serious power.....'

Jin-Woo grinned slyly.

If he hadn't yet figured out what was going on here, he would've been wracking his brain trying to figure out how to deal with this monster. However, there was no need for him to worry about that now. No need at all.

Kuooooaarr!!

Just as the Golem locked its hands together and raised them high to smash down...

Jin-Woo didn't back away, but used his skill, 'Dash', and pounced forward. And then, he slid on the floor.

In the blink of an eye, he had slid in-between the legs of the Golem and shot right past it.

While the lumbering Golem was hastily turning around, Jin-Woo had already arrived before the three completely defenceless mages, still busy chanting their spell.

'...!'

'...!'

The shoulders of the panicking mages grandly shuddered.

'Checkmate!'

A smile of contentment formed on Jin-Woo's face.

The old saying went something like, by being together, you'd be safe and that separating from one another would mean death. Too bad for them, that was not the case this time around. It was far easier to kill them off because they had gathered in one place.

Jin-Woo freely swung his daggers about, and....

[You defeated the mage.]

[You defeated the mage.]

[You defeated the mage.]

The remaining three mages also became smoke and joined their already-departed comrades. And the Golem that was trying to hurriedly grab Jin-Woo shattered into pieces of armour and scattered all over the place.

Jin-Woo didn't let his guard down, however.

'Is this the end? Or, is there something more?'

He remained alert and ready just in case something else might happen, but then, the familiar beep went off in his head.

Tti-ring.

Jin-Woo swallowed his saliva.

Perhaps to laugh at his unnecessary worries, the System announced the end of the quest, instead.

[The Class Change Quest has been concluded as all monsters inside the examination chamber have been defeated.]

[Your Class will be determined shortly.]

[Depending on the amount of advancement points accumulated, it will be possible to change your Class to a high-ranking one.]

Only now...

Only now could Jin-Woo spit out a sigh of relief.

"Fuu...."

What a difficult battle this had been.

If he remained fixated on the Immediate Return Stone, he'd never have figured out how to counter the Class Change Quest monsters.

'Yeah, I'd probably have been thinking about escaping all the time.'

He got unlucky – or perhaps got really lucky, instead – and lost the Immediate Return Stone. And that forced him to focus solely on surviving this battle. The end result was an unbridled success.

And now, it was time to receive his rewards.

Jin-Woo's gaze drifted towards the timer.

[04:29:16]

The numbers on the timer had stopped moving. He had 'endured' for almost four and a half hours. And that wasn't all.

In a quest that could be cleared simply by enduring the combined assault of the countless enemies for a while, he actually managed to kill them all.

Just from wondering about how many points he got to accumulate and what kind of a class he'd earn from that, his heart began trembling in anticipation.

[The suitable Class will be bestowed upon the Player after your past actions have been thoroughly analysed.]

'Yup, that sounds good.'

If his past actions were used as the basis for the selection of his Class, then the odds of him ending up with something weird and struggling in the future would be close to zero now.

It was probably the most welcoming thing he'd heard in a while.

[The places where the Player stands are dyed with the hidden breaths of an assassin. Corpses fill the paths the Player has walked past, and the scent of blood is thick and strong.]

...He thought that this description was a bit too heartless and cold, but after looking back, he couldn't come up with anything to rebut those words.

'I only did those in order to raise my level, though....'

After entering an instant dungeon, he kept hunting monsters down until his level would not rise any more. And while inside a regular dungeon, he made sure to find every single hidden monster there and slew them all, too.

Also, although it wasn't his intention, he ended up fighting other Hunters a couple of times, too.

'Assassin', 'corpses', and the 'scent of blood....'

'No matter how you look at it....'

Just as he suspected from the beginning, it seemed that his Class would be set at 'Assassin' now.

[Also, the Player thirsts for power, never relies on his comrades, and paves the new path for himself with his own strength.]

Nod, nod.

Jin-Woo nodded his head in agreement with the System's assessment.

'Well, it's not like I had any trustworthy comrades, to begin with.'

However, he couldn't understand why those points were being addressed during the selection of his Class. The System's explanation continued on.

[Your thirst for strong power is intense enough to summon the spirits of the departed, and the army of the deceased that unquestioningly follows all of your commands will pave the road only for you, without anyone's aid.]

'.....The army of the deceased?!'

Only now had Jin-Woo realised something had gone awry here.

Too bad, though.

"No, wait!!"

Even before he had any chance to raise his objections....

The System read off the result of the selection in its usual dry and humourless voice.

[Your Class has been set as 'Necromancer'.]

".....What the f*ck?"

REPORT

What was the meaning of this sudden slap to the back of his head?

Everything was going well, so why did ‘Necromancer’ pop out instead of the expected ‘Assassin’??

Jin-Woo dazedly stared at the message. He even rubbed his eyes several times, but nothing changed.

[Your Class has been set as ‘Necromancer’.]

The message still floated up there, unchanging.

He couldn’t believe it at first, then he became really angry next.

‘I’ve never even touched the Intelligence Stat, so what the hell?!’

Just how did he end up with a rare class not even found among countless Mage-type Hunters in the world??

From the moment Jin-Woo awoke as a rank E Hunter, he was always a close-quarters fighter. With the exception of the steel longsword, he always used daggers, and the skills he got until now were perfectly suited for the role of an assassin.

That was why he hadn’t even thought of the possibility that his class would end up belonging to a different type altogether.

It was a magic-type, no less... No, more than that, a Necromancer!!

His knowledge of different classes came from video games, but even then, he knew enough about what being a Necromancer entailed.

A gloomy-looking mage, and an army of undead following that dude.

No matter how much he thought about it, that image just didn’t correlate to him whatsoever.

Jin-Woo frowned deeply and shook his head.

‘...Let’s calm down, first.’

Even if his thoughts were complicated, his responses should be calm.

Being calm and cool-headed were Jin-Woo’s ultimate weapons. He controlled his rage and regained his cool head soon afterwards.

'Hang on, isn't this....'

Denial, then rage.

He suddenly felt like he was acting like a patient who just heard the diagnosis of terminal illness, and was going through the so-called five stages of grief.

'Rage... then, it's supposed to be negotiation, is it? Or was it compromise?'

Of course, there was no way he'd be allowed to negotiate or come to a compromise with the System.

If he were to think about the advantages of being a Necromancer, then.... just as the System alluded to, he could create his own army? About that much?

'Well, the problem here is that army will consist of skeletons and rotting corpses.'

If he walked around with such an army, the whole world would be up in arms in no time.

Hunters were already the objects of aspiration and fear, yet he was being asked to become a Hunter who could lead around an army of the departed....

Never mind the question of this class being suitable to him or not, he wasn't even confident of handling the fallout from that.

Tti-ring.

[Will you accept this Class?]

The System demanded his answer.

What a relief that was.

'I can still say yes or no.....'

Jin-Woo spat out a sigh.

If the Class wasn't forced down his throat, then that meant there was another opportunity for him. If he still had another shot, then there was no reason to sweat so much right now.

Jin-Woo gladly (?) refused the suggestion.

"No way."

When he did that, the message asked him again.

[The 'Necromancer' is a hidden class. Will you still refuse?]

Although it was asking the same thing for the second time, he found himself unable to quickly answer back.

He was now hesitating.

‘A hidden class... is it?’

That term might sound like something straight out of a video game, but still, there were Hunters with rare and strange abilities even in reality.

Such as, Hunters who could create ‘Shields’, or buff others. Or, even...

‘...The Master of White Tiger Guild can apparently transform into a monster, too, according to the rumours.’

All those Hunters with rare and strange abilities were now enjoying a great deal of special treatment after being scouted by the biggest Guilds out there.

‘Could this hidden class thing be the same thing as the special abilities those Hunters possess?’

If that were the case....

‘This could be an opportunity, instead.’

Suddenly, such a thought popped into his head. The System did say something about this just now.

‘I thirst for power, and that’s why it’s recommending the Class of Necromancer to me.’

In other words, the Class of Necromancer had the potential to be truly powerful.

When considering the fact that most of the Hunters with rare skills happen to belong to ‘support type’, this could be seen as quite an encouraging thing for him, indeed.

A Hunter with a rare skill that could directly enter any battle.

His heart began beating just a little bit faster just from thinking about that.

‘If I could only get to experience the Class of Necromancer just for a bit, I wouldn’t even need to weigh my options this much.’

However, would anything in this world be that easy?

There was no way the matters of this world would revolve according to his wishes, and worse still, he had never heard of anyone possessing an ability similar to that of a necromancer.

The thing was, one wouldn’t be able to find a mage who commanded its own army, to begin with.

Just as his thoughts ended there...

‘.....Oh.’

Jin-Woo took a sweeping look at all the broken remnants of the knights strewn about this place.

‘Those mages!’

One could say that those mages in the Class Change Quest were using roughly the same ability as a Necromancer.

These knights were their army, in other words.

‘For sure....’

It was certainly very difficult to fight all those knights who attacked him with complete disregard for their own lives.

If he failed to figure out how to fight them until the end, or if the mages possessed very high close-quarters combat abilities, then....

‘The one lying on the floor right now would be me instead of these scrap metal bits.’

Jin-Woo stopped looking at the knights and raised his head.

A certain look of determination flashed by in his eyes.

‘I already possess the close-quarters combat ability.’

Meaning, he was different from those mages.

What if there was a mage possessing excellent hand-to-hand combat skills who also happened to command an army? Wouldn't that be the worst of all worst possible nightmares for his enemies?

‘What if....’

Something he could only think about but couldn't do – wouldn't it be possible for him to enter a dungeon rated B or higher alone and clear it now?

Jin-Woo silently swallowed his saliva.

If he were allowed to continue raising his Stat values after becoming a Necromancer, then obviously, the army under his command would also grow even more powerful than before.

He couldn't even begin to imagine the effect of that.

‘It'll no longer be only me levelling up.’

His own army would be levelling up, too.

‘Wait. Could this be....?’

Suddenly, a chill ran down his spine. Jin-Woo raised his head and looked at the floating message. It was still patiently waiting for his decision.

[The ‘Necromancer’ is a hidden class. Will you still refuse?]

Unlike how it was usually, the System wasn’t urging him on. Jin-Woo couldn’t help question its motives in his mind.

‘Is this what you wanted from me?’

Of course, no replies came to him.

After a lengthy deliberation, Jin-Woo made up his mind.

If it was giving him power, then he’d accept it with open arms.

He no longer hesitated.

[Will you accept this Class?]

“I will.”

As if it was waiting, the System immediately displayed the following messages.

Tti-ring.

[Your Class has been set.]

[You will now be given the opportunity to change to a higher ranked version of this Class through the amount of advancement points accumulated.]

[Calculations have begun.]

[Tallying up your advancement points....]

While that was going on, Jin-Woo unwrapped the bandages from his right hand.

He’d been holding the dagger so tightly that his palm had swollen up rather painfully.

“Well, I’m gonna get blisters now.”

He lightly clicked his tongue.

Such a wound would’ve been taken care of with a drop from the healing potion, but not being able to use one was proving to be rather inconvenient in various ways.

He finished unwrapping the bandages and was about to store the Knight Killer back in his Inventory, when he heard yet another mechanical beep.

Tti-ring.

Jin-Woo reflexively raised his head.

[You've exceeded the expected time limit!]

[Bonus points will be granted.]

Bonus points, it said. But, that was rather obvious, wasn't it?

'Not sure how long was the expected time, but well, I did endure for quite a long time, didn't I?'

He began smirking in satisfaction, then all of a sudden, several messages inundated his vision.

[You did not use Immediate Return Stone!]

[Bonus points will be granted.]

[Your remaining HP is over 50%!]

[Bonus points will be granted.]

[You eliminated all the enemies!]

[Bonus points will be granted.]

[Total advancement points tally has exceeded the Class-specific point limit.]

[According to the Contract, you will be given a special reward.]

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring.

'What's this?'

His ears hurt from all the beepings, but Jin-Woo's focus was fixed elsewhere and didn't care anymore. As a matter of fact, he couldn't even hear those beeps now.

'A special reward?'

Those words jumped right up at him.

A reward.

Not only that, it was 'special', too.

Jin-Woo stopped trying to store the Knight Killer in his Inventory and concentrated on the message.

His stares were now firmly fixed on it.

Soon, follow-up messages popped up.

Tti-ring.

[Your Class has been upgraded from ‘Necromancer’ to ‘Shadow Sovereign’.]

[You have acquired Class-specific skills.]

[You have acquired bonus Stats.]

[You have acquired the title, ‘The One Who Overcame the Adversity’.]
‘Shadow Sovereign?’

Hearing that strange term, Jin-Woo hurriedly summoned his Status Window.

[Name: Seong Jin-Woo]

[Level: 51]

[Class: Shadow Sovereign]

Indeed, there was a new term added to his Class column.

‘It’s not a Necromancer anymore?’

The System definitely said that he’d be able to get a higher ranked version of his Class according to the amount of advancement points he had earned. And also, it mentioned that the point tally had exceeded the limits of the Class itself, too.

The end result from all that was this ‘Shadow Sovereign’.

“So, is this....”

....The special reward the System was talking about?

The thing was, though, Jin-Woo couldn’t continue on with what he wanted to say.

‘.....??’

Right in front of his disbelieving eyes, a truly bizarre and hard-to-explain phenomenon began unfolding.

Behind the hologram-like messages....

Unknown black smoke was slowly and eerily leaking out from the knights strewn about on the floor like scrap metal.

No such thing happened prior to him getting his Class.

These bits of scrap metal were nothing more than ownerless junk, only until a minute ago.

However.

Jin-Woo closed the Status Window and swept his gaze around the interior of the boss room once. It wasn't just one or two now.

That black smoke was rising up from every single knight on the ground.

[It is possible to perform Shadow Extraction on the selected target.]

[It is possible to perform Shadow Extraction on the selected target.]

Whenever his eyes landed on 'targets' with black smoke oozing out from them, the words with hard-to-fathom meanings 'possible to perform extraction' popped up into his view.

'Shadow extraction?'

He couldn't understand why, but to Jin-Woo, those rising smokes looked like they were writhing in pain.

As a matter of fact, it felt like they were reaching out to him, begging him to save them.

Would it be strange if he said that.... he could hear their screams?

'But.....'

He was sure of one thing.

He was sure of him being able to free them from their pain.

'Shadow Extraction.'

[Please set the command phrase to activate the Shadow Extraction skill.]

'I gotta set a separate activation phrase for this skill?'

Jin-Woo pondered for a bit, before muttering out almost instinctively.

"Rise up."

When he did....

Wuuuaahhhh....

Thick, heavy moans resounded out from somewhere and at the same time, the shadows of the fallen knights began wiggling as if they were still alive.

Jin-Woo scanned his surroundings once more.

All the shadows found near him were beginning to move.

Soon enough, a black hand rose up from one of the shadows. It pressed down on the ground hard, and slowly, the arm attached to it rose up.

'Oh my god!'

Jin-Woo's eyes opened wider and wider.

Those things were.... people.

No, soldiers possessing the outer appearance of a person!

Soldiers kitted out head to toe in jet-black armour climbed out of the shadows one by one.

'This is my new skill??'

By the time Jin-Woo recovered his wits, there were a couple dozen soldiers standing by his side, waiting.

[Shadow Extraction was a success.]

Tens of soldiers were now surrounding him.

'What the hell is this....?'

Jin-Woo approached the nearest soldier.

The first thing he did was to touch it. When he placed his hand on it, he felt something metallic.

As it turned out, the metal-looking armours weren't just for show.

Indeed, these guys were all outfitted in real black armour and real weapons.

'At first glance, they look like people, don't they?'

However, they weren't people. He couldn't sense any signs of life from them. They didn't breathe, and there were no heartbeats he could hear.

On top of this....

"..."

Jin-Woo swallowed down his shocked gasp.

He sneaked a glance inside the helmet through the eye holes and found nothing but pure darkness in there. Jin-Woo slowly took several steps back after feeling like he was being sucked in.

'These things came out from the shadows??'

He immediately checked his Skill Window.

Just as the System informed him, new Class-specific skills could be found there now.

[Class-specific skills]

Active skills

He checked the details of the first skill.

[Skill: Shadow Extraction Lv. 1]

Class-specific skill.

Required Mana to activate: None

Creates a shadow soldier by extracting Mana from the recently deceased lifeform.

The odds of extraction failure will rise higher depending on the target's original Stat values, as well as the length of time since its death.

Number of shadows that can be extracted: 30/30

Only after reading the explanation on the Skill did he realise the identity of these black soldiers.

'.....They are all undead.'

Shadow soldiers – monsters, pulled out from the shadows of the dead.

Jin-Woo swallowed down his saliva.

'If these things are really my soldiers, then....'

Jin-Woo raised his arm and pointed to his right.

And the soldiers all uniformly shifted their bodies to right.

The end of his hand slowly moved to his front.

And the soldiers too followed after his hand and slowly faced their front.

Jin-Woo stood in the middle of them.

He did his best to calm his pounding heart and lowered his hand.

And at the same time....

Every single soldier knelt down before him.

They were moving according to his will.

"Hah....."

Jin-Woo let out a soft gasp of admiration as the ends of his lips arched up.

'Isn't this so cool?'

REPORT

‘Oops!’

A thought flashed by in Jin-Woo’s head.

‘I shouldn’t be wasting time like this.’

He had witnessed the power of his new skill. He could now turn the defeated monsters into his soldiers.

If that was the case, then wasn’t there a monster nearby that he just had to turn into his lackey right away?

Jin-Woo climbed up the pile of armours that once used to be the giant Iron Golem and stood on top. By being so high up, he could take in the entirety of the boss room.

‘.....’

Jin-Woo searched around as his glare became sharper.

Found it!

Confirming the direction, Jin-Woo immediately ran over there. Perhaps he was feeling really psyched, he arrived there in the blink of an eye even though he didn’t use the Dash skill.

Gulp.

Jin-Woo looked the ‘corpse’ of the monster that he was planning to extract the shadow from, and swallowed dry saliva.

The creature remained in the exact same spot where he had killed it.

‘.....Igrit the Crimson.’

The sight of the red-armoured headless knight half-buried in the thick, sturdy wall told how desperate his situation was back then.

Jin-Woo stood before Igrit.

It might have been a fearsome enemy that threatened to kill him only a few hours ago, but now, it was probably the best ingredient he could find. Fortunately enough, he saw the black smoke slowly oozing out from Igrit, just like how it was with other fallen knights.

[It is possible to perform Shadow Extraction on the selected target.]

Jin-Woo's expression brightened.

'Nice.'

He already knew the drill. Jin-Woo took a short but deep breath and spoke out the command phrase.

"Rise up."

He spoke the activation phrase for the skill, Shadow Extraction. However, the skill didn't activate.

'.....??'

Jin-Woo tilted his head this way and that way, and was about to say the command phrase again. But then, following a 'titi-ring', several warning messages popped up.

[You have exceeded the number of shadows that can be extracted.]

[If you wish to perform Shadow Extraction, you must return a portion, or all, of your soldiers back to the world of nothingness via 'Extraction Cancellation'.]

[Once returned to nothingness, the shadow soldiers can't be summoned back.]

'Oh, yeah. There was something like that, wasn't there?'

At the end of the skill's explanation, there was something he should've taken note of.

[Number of shadows that can be extracted: 30/30]

The maximum number of extractions he could perform was 30. Which meant the number of his soldiers was currently 30....

Jin-Woo looked behind him.

The shadow soldiers had followed him even before he had noticed it and they were standing in attention.

'When did they?'

Perhaps fitting their title of 'shadow soldiers', they seemed to move around without making a single sound.

Whatever the case might have been, if he wanted to extract Igrit's shadow, he had to get rid of one of these guys, just as the System had alluded to.

'But....'

It had only been a short while, yet when he thought about them being his soldiers, he kind of didn't want to dismiss any one of them.

Did he get attached to them already?

With a rueful, unwilling expression, Jin-Woo slowly scanned each and every one of his shadow soldiers. As his eyes swept past the soldiers, their names and levels appeared before his view.

[Shadow Infantryman Lv. 1]

Regular grade

[Shadow Infantryman Lv. 1]

Regular grade

Everyone possessed the same name and level.

'Oh well, their origins were exactly the same, so...'

But then, he discovered three somewhat different-coloured soldiers right at the back of the infantrymen.

'Are those....?'

Unlike the regular infantrymen, these guys were wearing robes.

[Shadow Magic Soldier Lv. 1]

Elite grade

"Oh."

He quickly figured out what they were.

The three mages that were controlling the Iron Golem must've been revived as undeads as well when he gave out his 'Rise up' command just now.

'So, 27 infantrymen and three mages, eh?'

This was why being 'rare' was a good thing. He excluded the low-numbered mages and selected the closest infantryman from him to cancel the extraction.

...And he was really sorry about this.

"Extraction Cancellation."

Phush...

The soldier turned into black smoke and scattered in the air. Not even a trace remained of it.

'.....'

Jin-Woo gazed at the spot of the disappeared soldier for a little while with an apologetic expression, before shifting his attention back to Igrit.

His preparation was complete.

He even had to sacrifice one of his wonderful soldiers just so he could turn Igrit into a shadow. So, he simply had to see some results here.

Time to act while the sun still shone.

Jin-Woo tried the extraction right away.

“Rise up.”

When he did that, the shadow cast beneath Igrit began to wiggle as if it came to life. It was the same reaction as when he extracted the shadows from the knights just now.

‘Okay, good!’

Jin-Woo clenched his fists tightly. He had a good feeling about this.

[Shadow Extraction has commenced.]

[Attempting to extract....]

What would Igrit look like after its extraction? Jin-Woo’s hands became slick with the sweat of anticipation.

Unfortunately...

Ting!

A mechanical beep akin to a metal plate breaking in half rang inside his head.

[Shadow Extraction has failed.]

“What?!”

[Two more attempts remaining.]

“Whew-woo....”

Hearing that he still had more chances remaining, Jin-Woo spat out a long sigh of relief.

‘Hang on, now that I think about it....’

The skill’s explanation definitely said that the odds of extraction failure would rise up depending on the target’s Stat values.

But having experienced it personally, he couldn’t help but be dumbfounded. It felt like he got slapped in the back of his head, this taste of his first failure.

Not only that, there was a restriction on the number of attempts he could try, too.

‘So, I have two more attempts remaining....’

If he failed in both attempts, then did that mean Igrit’s shadow would disappear into that ‘nothingness’, just as the sacrificed infantryman did?

Imagining the worst possible scenario, he felt dizzy for a second. Jin-Woo quickly shook his head to clear his mind.

‘Let’s stop thinking negatively about this.’

Indeed, only positive thoughts...

Didn’t someone say that if you believed earnestly enough, the universe would find a way to help you out?

While stewing inside anxiety and anticipation, Jin-Woo attempted the extraction for the second time.

“Rise up.”

Too bad, his expectation was shot down grandly once more.

Ting!

[Shadow Extraction has failed.]

[One more attempt remaining]

‘.....’

This guy gave him so much trouble while it was still alive, and even in death, it was managing to give him some serious headaches.

And here he was, hoping against hope.

Now that he had failed twice in a row, his vision seemed to have blurred, everything looking a bit bleak.

“Fuu.....”

Jin-Woo deeply inhaled and exhaled his breath.

There were no more attempts remaining after this. He had only one more shot left. Jin-Woo closed his eyes and reorganised his thoughts.

‘Well, it could be nothing more than percentages and odds, but....’

But, it was possible that his desire to possess Igrit’s shadow wasn’t earnest or strong enough.

Jin-Woo slowly reopened his eyes.

He sensed the black smoke rising up from Igrit reaching out to him, pleading with him to save it. Jin-Woo became a lot more serious than before.

And he reached out with his right hand as if to grab that pleading hand of the smoke.

“Rise up.”

He didn't do it deliberately; he himself didn't quite realise it then, but Jin-Woo's voice sounded much heavier and graver than ever before and it reverberated throughout the boss room.

It was then!

Uwaaahhh-!!

A deep scream could be heard coming from somewhere, and chilling, eerie wind swept by the boss room.

‘Isn't this it...?’

Jin-Woo's expression brightened.

He remembered encountering a similar situation like this one before.

...Back when his infantrymen first popped out from the shadows.

Aaaaah-!

Just as he hoped for, as the lengthy scream came to an end, a long black hand emerged out from the shadow. And when that hand pressed down on the ground, a new message popped up in his view.

[Shadow Extraction was a success.]

Jin-Woo let out a cry of happiness.

“Yes!!”

He tightly clenched his fists. The taste of success was so much sweeter since he had to go through two failures to get here.

However, the good news didn't end there.

[The sovereign's voice had awakened the departed's fighting spirit.]

[You have succeeded in strengthening your shadow soldier.]

[The shadow's level will now start at 7.]

‘I succeeded in strengthening? What?’

A shadow's starting level could be higher than 1?

Jin-Woo's eyes widened once more. Just as the message said, the black knight emerging from the shadow carried 'level 7' in its status.

"Mm!!"

Jin-Woo spat out a short gasp.

The newly-emerged shadow looked exactly as it was in his memories.

The mane attached to the helm; the highly-fashionable armour wrapped around its entire body; that noble, dignified cape.

The only difference being that the blood-like armour now sported a pitch-black colour, instead. Everything else was exactly the same.

He'd have probably believed it if someone told him that Igrit had returned to life just now.

However...

'.....'

The newly-born Igrit didn't display a single hint of animosity towards him. No, it just stood there quietly, waiting for Jin-Woo to give it a new order.

Thump, thump.

Hin-Woo's heart began pounding in excitement as he stared at Igrit. And there was a big grin etched on his face. Even though his heart was palpitating, there was something he was curious about.

Jin-Woo's gaze shifted just above Igrit's head.

'Why doesn't this guy have a name?'

[?? Lv. 7]

Knight grade

For some strange reason, there was a couple of question marks instead of its name.

'And its grade is also different.'

He understood that its level was high because of that strengthening thing, but still, this guy exhibited quite a few differences from the regular infantrymen.

Perhaps it read Jin-Woo's mind, because the System sent him a new message with excellent timing.

Tti-ring.

[You can bestow a name to a knight grade soldier.]

[The bestowed name will be maintained until the shadow soldier is dismissed.]

[Please set the soldier's name.]

'A name, is it?'

At first, he was at a loss with this unexpected demand, but soon enough, he recalled that this 'guy' already had a name and a smile crept up on his face. There should be no problem calling it by its original name, no?

[Please set the soldier's name.]

The message blinked as if to urge him on with the naming already.

Jin-Woo opened his mouth.

"Igrit the Cri...."

No, hang on a minute.

When the System asked him to set the name, it meant that he'd have to use that name to call this guy from here onwards. So, didn't that also mean that he'd have to call it Igrit the blah-blah all the time from now on?

Just thinking about that gave him a nasty case of goosebumps.

'.....That's way too cringey.'

In the end, he decided to shorten the name somewhat.

"Igrit."

[Will you set the name as 'Igrit'?]

"That's right."

As soon as Jin-Woo spoke, the question marks on the guy's head disappeared and the name Igrit appeared there.

[Igrit Lv. 7]

Knight grade

All he did was to simply give it its original name, yet Jin-Woo still felt like he had accomplished something pretty amazing. He was filled with contentment, knowing that this guy was his loyal soldier now.

'My own loyal soldier, eh....'

Jin-Woo took a look behind him.

29 shadow soldiers were still there, waiting for his orders.

For now, the number was too small.

‘Only 30, huh....’

Either this was because the skill level of ‘Shadow Extraction’ was too low, or because his Intelligence Stat hadn’t been raised high enough yet.

But, he was sure of one thing, and that was the number of his soldiers would gradually swell up.

‘Yup, I really have myself a new army.’

Not only that, they weren’t some skeletons and corpses, but an army of shadows.

Now, there was only one problem remaining.

And that was how he’d walk around with these guys. Now that gave him a bit of a headache.

‘Doesn’t matter skeletons or shadows....’

It’d be way too eye-catching if these guys freely walked around in the streets.

Would that be all?

This skill was already way past regular people accepting it as one of the many awakened abilities a Hunter could possess.

Either he’d be under the constant surveillance, or worse, someone might even demand him to dismiss the summoning, too.

‘Woo Jin-Cheol, the section chief of the Monitoring Division, the Korean Hunter’s Association....’

Thinking about how stuffy-looking guys like that man would come around every day and annoy him to no end in the future, Jin-Woo felt like he’d die from frustration already.

That was precisely why the next skill existed, probably.

‘Skills.’

Jin-Woo summoned his Skill Window.

[Class-specific skills]

Active skills:

The skill he only checked its name and nothing else until now.

The ‘Shadow Storage’.

That name alone made him think that this skill would help him out in these sorts of situations.

REPORT

[Skill: Shadow Storage Lv. 1]

Class-specific skill.

Mana required to activate: None.

Stores the shadow soldiers inside the summoner's shadow.

The stored soldiers can be summoned back into the open or absorbed back at any time the summoner chooses to.

Number of stored shadow soldiers: 0/20

'I knew it.'

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

Since the skill's name had the word 'storage' in it, he expected it to have something to do with storing away the soldiers. Unfortunately, there was a part that proved to be completely out of his expectations.

'How come the number is....'

The number of soldiers he could store was noticeably lower than those he could create.

Indeed, he could create 30, yet he could only store 20. Meaning, he had to unsummon 10 more.

'Now this sucks.'

Just which finger out of the ten in your hands wouldn't hurt when you bite them? Just discarding one made his heart bleed, but now, he had to discard ten??

'Hmm....'

Jin-Woo stared at the soldiers with a rather lonely expression on his face.

Obviously, the knight-grade Igrit was excluded.

Three 'magic soldiers' were also excluded, since they would be harder to replace and also fewer in numbers.

At the end of the day, the most disposable remained the infantrymen. Last time, he chose the one closest to him, so this time, he chose the ten that were furthest away from him and cancelled their summoning.

‘Sorry.’

He prayed for their happiness in the afterlife, and then....

Poof...

In the blink, those ten soldiers turned into dust and disappeared from this world.

Thankfully, his heart didn't ache as badly as the first time. Did the wise old 'they' mean this by saying that the first time was always the hardest?

In any case...

Jin-Woo took one last look at the soldiers and activated the Shadow Storage.

When he did that, all the shadow soldiers, including Igrit, all returned to being shadows, as if they were melting like an ice cube caught in extremely high temperatures. Those shadows all gathered beneath his feet next.

‘So, this is that absorbing into my shadow thing....!’

It was as the label said; the shadows were absorbed into Jin-Woo's shadow. It happened so quickly, too.

All of his soldiers disappeared without a trace in less than a blink of an eye.

‘...I'm the one who did it, yet I can hardly believe it myself.’

Utterly amazed now, Jin-Woo continued to stare at his own shadow.

It was then.

As if it was waiting for this, the mechanical beeps resounded out one after the other.

Tti-ring.

[You have experimented with all the class-specific skills.]

[Class Change has been now concluded.]

[Exit Gate will now be generated.]

‘So, it's finally over, huh....’

What a long and difficult road this was.

Jin-Woo scanned the interior of the boss room, his eyes full of reminiscence. The evidence of fierce battle could be seen everywhere.

Broken-down knights; walls with cracks on them; a shattered stone pillar. And the Iron Golem responsible for shattering that very pillar, now nothing more than a scrap heap.

However, as the compensation for his struggles, he was now walking away with so much profit.

A new Class and skills, several other important things besides those, as well as powerful new allies.

A wide grin naturally floated up on his lips.

Without hesitation, Jin-Woo turned around. The Gate connecting to the outside world was quietly waiting for him as if to congratulate him on his successful adventure.

When he took a step outside, the surroundings changed in an instant. And he was back in the empty lot of the local mountainside. It was none other than the very spot where he initiated his Class Change Quest.

The time indicated was five in the morning. It was already time for the sunrise.

‘Oops.’

Jin-Woo clicked his tongue while confirming the time.

‘If I knew the quest would end up taking this long to complete, I should’ve left a message for Jin-Ah earlier.’

What a relief then, that he’d often come home late from raids taking longer than expected, back when he was working for the Association.

Jin-Woo took one last look behind him. But the Gate he exited from just now was already gone without a trace.

‘Huh....’

When looking at the spot where the Gate used to be, it kind of felt like he had woken up from a long dream.

Was it a dream?

No, that wasn’t possible.

Jin-Woo scanned his immediate vicinity.

The soldiers decked out in pitch-black armours – as soon as he thought about them, they rapidly emerged from his shadow.

‘.....’

At first, he simply thought of them as nothing more than monsters.

The shadow soldiers...

The monsters that stepped out from the shadows of the dead after they were summoned by him.

However, if these things were monsters, then just what should the guy who could freely control them be called now?

Jin-Woo smirked softly.

‘Well, it doesn’t matter one way or the other....’

Jin-Woo stored the soldiers back into his shadow.

He noticed that his steps going down the mountain were rather light and cheery.

Jin-Woo slept until late in the day. But, that couldn’t be helped. By the time he got back home, the sun had risen up pretty high already.

Ring~ ring~

Jin-Woo’s sweet slumber was eventually disrupted by the ringtone from his smartphone. His hand fumbled around near his head and with some difficulty, located his phone.

“H-Hello?”

His voice cracked up from his dry throat.

Jin-Ah’s shocked voice came out from the speaker. So, he asked her back.

“Okay, what time is it now?”

“Eh? What?”

He glanced at the time on the phone’s screen with half-open eyes. She was telling the truth.

Her voice sounded anxious.

Jin-Woo finally raised his upper body, albeit very slowly.

“What time should I get there at the latest?”

“I won’t be late, so don’t worry.”

Jin-Ah switched on her charm attack and ended the call soon afterwards.

Scratch, scratch....

Jin-Woo scratched his unkempt hair for a bit before slowly getting up from the bed. He didn’t have a lot of time left if he were to get ready.

‘Well, I’m going to meet my sister’s homeroom teacher after all.’

Not only that, this teacher would be in charge of her third year in high school, one of the most important periods in a person’s life.

‘So, I can’t just wear whatever now, right?’

He opened the closet and rummaged through the clothes in there. However, he was greeted by a rather dusty, mouldy odour.

Of course, it was not something pleasant to smell at all.

Jin-Woo’s frown deepened.

He continued to dig around, but all he could find was an old business suit he wore once during his own high school graduation.

‘Will it even fit me now?’

He was hoping against hoping but well, as expected – the clothes were too snug and he couldn’t even move his arms.

‘Yup, my body has grown much bigger lately.’

Putting on the old clothes painted a stark picture of his current reality. The suit was nearly bursting at the seams, literally.

...What should he do now?

Jin-Woo was pondering what to do, but then he spotted the bank book that Yu Jin-Ho gave him a day before. It was for the account filled with the proceeds from selling off all those magic crystals.

He alternated his gaze between his nearly-torn clothes and the bank book with its new stamp still sealed together, before a smile formed on his lips.

‘Been a while, but should I go on a shopping spree, then?’

Before that, though, there was this small thing he had to confirm first.

Actually, it was a bit bigger than that, but still.

Jin-Woo took off the old business suit and while sitting on the edge of the bed, summoned his Status Window.

‘Stats.’

With that, a long board full of letters and numbers appeared before his eyes.

Tti-ring.

[Class-specific skills]

Active skills:

[Equipped items]

(TL note: the author forgot to put ‘Ruler’s Reach’ in the Skills column. I left it as is.)

“Huh...”

Jin-Woo could only chuckle wryly as his Status Window seemed to go on forever and ever.

‘It was only a short while ago that there was nothing on this section over here.’

Indeed, there had been a time like that once. But now, just from looking at his skills and equipped items, his head grew fuzzy.

Even then, his Class still managed to snag his attention for sure.

[Class: Shadow Sovereign]

This column used to be ‘None’ only yesterday.

To be honest, he was kind of bothered by that word whenever he had to look at his Status Window. The reason for that was, naturally, the word that came before that ‘None’ being his ‘Class’.

If a Hunter was not participating in a raid, he’d be no different than a jobless bum. That’s what most others would think, anyway.

But then, he had to keep looking at the ‘No job’ in the Status Window where his Stat values were recorded, so how could he not feel bothered by it? (TL note at the end)

They said that once you got shocked by a turtle, you’d keep getting frightened by the pot lids; whenever he took a look at his Class column in the past, he couldn’t help but feel a bit frustrated.

He knew that it didn’t really mean his job status, but he still felt quite bothered by it. However, from today onwards, he didn’t have to mind such things anymore.

“Hahaha!”

Jin-Woo chuckled out uncontrollably.

‘Yup, this must be what they call an inferiority complex, isn’t it?’

If he made lots of money like other Hunters, he wouldn’t have really cared about what others thought of his life outside of raiding dungeons.

But he couldn’t do that.

He couldn’t confidently reveal his status as a Hunter to anyone. Because, he was a measly rank E who could barely protect his own life, that was why.

‘I’m a rank E Hunter.’

Whenever he said those words....

Anyone with some knowledge of Hunters would always say that he was doing something very difficult for everyone’s sakes, but they would start mocking him when his back was turned.

That was why he ended up minding it even more than necessary.

But now, he was the possessor of a really cool job – no, a really special trait. His job still remained as a Hunter, of course.

If he were to describe it, then.... well, it’d be more correct to say that he now possessed a special trait of ‘Shadow Sovereign’.

‘Although this wasn’t the career path I was looking for....’

But, he had no regrets. No, rather than regrets, he was completely and utterly satisfied by how things had turned out.

If this wasn’t his room, he’d have summoned Igrit and the other soldiers right away. He really wanted to confirm the combat capabilities of his summons with his own eyes.

What if these guys were able to display 100% of their combat prowess while they were still alive?

‘I’m sure that won’t be the case, though.’

Still, just imagining it made his heart race.

Thump, thump...

Jin-Woo felt his heart beating roughly as he ran several simulations of future raids in his head.

Suddenly, he became really curious about how Yu Jin-Ho would react.

Smirk.

When Jin-Woo imagined seeing Yu Jin-Ho’s round, stunned eyes and his slack jaw falling to the floor, a chuckle automatically leaked out of his mouth.

‘Wait, now that I think about it....’

If he could transform any dead lifeforms into his soldiers, and if the targets weren’t restricted to only monsters, then....

‘Does that mean I can extract shadows from the dead Hunters, too?’

It was quite obvious, but he didn’t want to picture such a situation since he was talking about another human being here.

An undead soldier, emerging from the shadow of a dead person after hearing his call....

Just thinking about it gave him chills.

Even then... even still....

‘What if I extract the shadow of an A or an S rank Hunter?’

The combat potential of the resulting shadow soldier would simply be out of this world.

Even if a shadow soldier could only exhibit 50% of its original strength, it’d be eminently possible to solo high-ranked dungeons, as long as he had his shadows to back him up.

His beating heart picked up its pace really quick.

Thump, thump, thump!!

Still, Jin-Woo shook his head.

‘Even if that’s the case, turning a person into an undead is a bit...’

...Now that was something only a villain would do.

His combat potential might improve that way, but he didn’t want to go that far. Unless a really evil b*stard showed up that was worthy of such a treatment, he’d definitely not go down that route.

‘However, it’s not like opportunities to fight other dirty Hunters would come around every day, right?’

And, even if he did find that elusive opportunity, there would be many hurdles to overcome first. Well, a human wasn’t a monster, to begin with, after all.

Indeed.

For the time being, he had to be satisfied with the current soldiers.

‘Besides, I have Igrit and he used to be a boss, so that’s something.’

The level 7 knight-grade shadow soldier.

Just how good would its abilities be?

Jin-Woo couldn’t wait for the next raid.

REPORT

Jin-Woo lowered his gaze slightly while feeling rather pleased with himself, then he spotted something else in the Status Window.

[Title: Slaughterer of Wolves (extra 1)]

‘.....There was another one?’

....Oh.

Now that he thought about it, he did earn a new ‘Title’ as well during the Class Change Quest, didn’t he?

Jin-Woo checked out the hidden title’s description.

[Title: The One Who Overcame the Adversity]

A Title only given to those who have splendidly overcome their adversity. Your Stat values will rise as your HP decreases. (1% of lost HP = 1% gain in Stats)

‘Hell yeah!’

It was a truly wonderful buff where his Stats would rise up as his HP was decreased.

The Title ‘Slaughterer of Wolves’ was a wonderful Title as well that would give him a 40% Stats increase against any and all beast-type monsters. However, because there was a strict activation condition attached to it, he often had to do without receiving the Stat buff.

‘It’s the same thing as not having a Title if I’m not fighting against beast-type monsters.’

But now, he had gotten a new Title with a wonderful effect. After reading the description, he thought that this Title’s effect would match up quite nicely with his passive, ‘Tenacity’.

Without wasting any more time, Jin-Woo changed his Title.

[Title: The one who overcame the adversity (extra 1)]

The Title he didn’t set would be hidden, and if he needed it, he could swap them at any time, too.

‘ up, it’s my Stats.’

The rewards he got for exceeding the point limits of his Class yesterday were three.

One, his Class changed to a higher-grade version; two, a new Title; finally, bonus Stat points.

[Stats]

Strength: 132

Stamina: 91

Agility: 111

Intelligence: 70

Perception: 93

Reduction in physical damage: 46%

He still had ten points yet to be allocated. If it was in the past, he’d have spent them all in Agility or Perception, but things were different now.

Jin-Woo dumped all ten points in Intelligence, instead.

Even then, his Intelligence value only reached 80.

Tti-ring.

[Stats]

Strength: 132

Stamina: 91

Agility: 111

Intelligence: 80

Perception: 93

(Available points to distribute: 0)

Reduction in physical damage: 46%

Compared to Strength or Agility, it simply fell way, way behind. As a matter of fact, it even fell behind Stamina, the Stat he decided to put on the back burner while raising his Agility first.

It was clear proof that he had been looking down on the Intelligence Stat until now.

‘Well, I never guessed that I’d somehow end up using magic, so it’s understandable.’

For the time being, he decided to invest every single bonus Stat point he earned into Intelligence. He wasn’t planning to change how he fought in the meantime, though.

‘I mean, the new skills I got are assassination type skills, after all.’

A new skill he acquired during the fierce battle – the dagger throw. He didn’t even have to take a gander at the skill description to know that it was a dagger-exclusive skill.

[Skill: Dagger Throw Lv. 1]

Active skill.

Required Mana to activate: 30

Exclusive to daggers.

Causes damage by throwing your dagger. The higher the level, the greater the damage inflicted, as well as the accuracy.

‘Yup. I knew it.’

He had been fighting his battles as a close-quarter melee fighter. He wouldn’t change his current fighting style, just because he got himself a new Class and a couple of new skills related to that.

So, he was planning to use the shadow skills as his back-up, while the dagger would remain as his primary means of attack.

‘Well, at least until I manage to raise my Intelligence Stat to a somewhat more useful level, that is.’

Excellent combat abilities. And soldiers able to support him from behind.

The plan he formed in his head as he got his new Class hadn’t changed.

‘But, if there is one difference from my initial expectations, then that would be....’

That would be his soldiers potentially being a lot more useful than he thought. Who could’ve guessed that he was able to turn boss-level monsters into his underlings?

‘...Still.’

He felt that it’d be a bit of waste not to utilise his proficiency with daggers and the skills related to that if he were to rely solely on his shadows to fight.

Also, he bought the Knight Killer only a few hours ago, too.

'If I knew I'd end up as a mage-type, maybe I should've bought a magic staff or something.'

Of course, if he did that, he wouldn't have cleared the quest and ended up being buried under the knights, instead.

Jin-Woo closed the Status Window. With that done, he pretty much had confirmed every change that occurred to him.

'Wait a sec. What's the time now?'

While he was doing his thing, 20 minutes had flown by. Jin-Woo scratched the side of his head.

'I guess I should hurry up, huh.'

The corners of Jin-Woo's lips arched up.

The power of his enhanced Stats didn't prove to be effective only when fighting against monsters.

When he concentrated, time slowed down. To be more precise, it was Jin-Woo who had gotten quicker, however.

He opened the door and left his room.

He entered the bathroom and took a quick shower.

He swiftly wiped the water off of him.

He put on whatever clothing he could find and stood before the mirror.

All this, and he only needed three minutes.

He could've moved faster, but he figured that this old, decrepit apartment would fall apart if he did.

'My hair hasn't completely dried out yet, but...'

The end result was him saving over 20 minutes, so there was no need to rush now.

Time to leave, then.

Jin-Woo was about to step out of his room, but discovered something and stopped in his tracks. He found the key for the apartment. It was sitting on top of his desk.

In the past, he'd have felt a bit lazy and unwilling, but still turned back to grab the key; however, he simply extended his hand instead of walking over there.

‘I mean, if I don’t use it in times like this, just when will I ever get to use this skill?’

The Ruler’s Reach!

The key crept forward bit by bit, before flying into his open palm as if a strong magnet was reeling it in.

Grab!

Jin-Woo snatched the key and grinned refreshingly.

Having gotten ready to leave in the proverbial blink of an eye, Jin-Woo closed the door to his room, a whistle escaping from his lips.

Jin-Woo’s first stop was at the bank.

He was wondering just how much cash from the sales of the magic crystals had accumulated in his new bank account.

‘I couldn’t come earlier because I’ve been so busy until now.’

As the raid team leader, Yu Jin-Ho was in charge of managing the magic crystals.

From what he told Jin-Woo, that kid had been selling all the magic crystals at the end of each day and deposited every single cent into this account.

He didn’t mention in detail how much the money would be, though.

‘That Jin-Ho. He reports to me every little thing that happens, but he doesn’t really mention much about money issues.’

Was it because he wasn’t really interested all that much? Perhaps because he grew up lacking nothing, Yu Jin-Ho’s interests were quite far removed from the matters involving money.

No, they tended to be along the lines of celebrity gossip, stories of raids, songs or movies he liked – those kinds of things.

Even if it was nominally a conversation, it’d be Yu Jin-Ho who yapped on and on all by himself, though. And Jin-Woo would simply listen quietly on the side and provide appropriate responses every now and then.

‘Ah, now that I think about it...’

A chatterbox guy like him also didn’t say anything about his family situation until now.

Now that was pretty strange. Jin-Woo combed through his memories starting from when they met for the first time, but he couldn’t remember a single instance of him mentioning his family.

While thinking that it was pretty bizarre, he had arrived at the bank.

‘Well now, that’s some crappy timing, isn’t it?’

All of the ATMs were currently under maintenance.

He was left with little choice, so Jin-Woo walked inside the bank branch. He got his number in the queue, waited for his turn, before eventually sitting down in front of a bank teller.

“Hello there.”

A female teller with a bob-cut hair reaching just below her ears and a refreshing smile asked him politely.

“How may I be of service today?”

“I’d like to see the amount currently in the bank account, please.”

“I understand.”

With a smile, the female teller took the bank book Jin-Woo presented to her.

While waiting for her to do her thing, Jin-Woo scanned the inside of the bank. It was a normal Thursday afternoon, yet there were quite a large number of people inside.

As he continued to look at the crowd, the female teller got to confirm the amount resting in Jin-Woo’s account and her eyes shot open super-wide.

‘Heok!!’

[Remaining amount: ₩1,482,920,000] (TL: Just over $1.315 mil)

She checked the number of digits again, but without a doubt, it started from a billion.

Not only that, he hadn’t even accumulated this amount over a long period of time.

For the past week or so, the records showed that over 100 million Won had been deposited every single day.

‘He looks so young, so how could he?’

The female teller initially took Jin-Woo as a university student who came to the local bank to get the bank book newly printed on because his mother asked him to. But, her expression had changed quite a bit now.

The female teller asked him, her voice containing just a sliver of ulterior motive.

“Oh, my goodness. May I ask, what you do for a living?”

Perhaps she herself was embarrassed by her own ulterior motive, the female bank teller’s cheeks blushed softly as she cautiously studied Jin-Woo’s reactions.

He replied as if it was nothing.

“I’m a Hunter.”

“Ah....”

The female teller slowly nodded her head almost instinctively.

The popular rumour she heard was indeed true.

‘I heard that Hunters made lots of money, but....’

But to think, it’d be on this level....

All of a sudden, her life as a normal working-class employee came across as rather pathetic.

Only until a minute ago, this man was a regular customer, just like everyone else. But now, Jin-Woo looked like a person from another galaxy altogether.

‘He must be a pretty high ranked Hunter, right?’

This amount wasn’t something an average Hunter with average skills could ever hope to touch.

This would be her first time meeting a truly high-ranked Hunter, then.

The unexpectedness of this situation caused her heart to palpitate just a bit faster.

Thump, thump....

Her heart was indeed beating a bit quicker now.

A young customer possessing well over a billion Won in cash would certainly be a VIP in the eyes of the bank. And well, that customer was a Hunter, so he should be treated as a VVIP, instead.

And so, in order to ensure that this VVIP wouldn’t slip through the bank’s fingers, the female employee began advertising several of the bank’s financial products.

“Our bank has launched brand new products and services especially catered for VIP customers such as yourself.”

Her smile was no longer the business one, but a real one, too. The female bank teller's gaze was now firmly fixed on Jin-Woo.

'Oh, my. He's....'

Seeing his current appearance, the one where he must have thrown on some clothes lying around, and that slightly dishevelled hair, her heart began beating faster than ever before. She realised that he must've been a very busy man who managed to find some free time to stop by the bank today.

"This product has proven really popular with our customers lately, so how about taking a closer look at the benefits it offers, sir?"

Too bad for her, Jin-Woo refused right away.

"No, thank you. I'm fine."

"Ah.... is that so?"

The female bank teller's voice was thickly laden with regrets over missed chances.

Sensing that this chat might get drawn out if he said something wrong here, Jin-Woo quickly took the bank book and stood up from the seat.

"Thank you for your help. Have a nice day."

He made his quick getaway from the bank as the hot stares from the female bank teller continued to bear down on his back.

As soon as the bank's door closed behind him...

"Fuu...."

Jin-Woo spat out a sigh of relief.

He picked up on the change in the bank teller's expression the moment he revealed his job as a Hunter.

Attentions of strangers, and their interests.

It would probably be something normal for other Hunters, but it was still something new to Jin-Woo.

'Well, I better get used to it now.'

The attention on him would get even worse than this, once he's gone through with the re-assignment test and gets a super-high rank.

He heard that there were quite a few reporters and fans following around particular Hunters as well.

He raised his head slightly and saw a large electronic billboard displaying a cold drink advert featuring a famous Hunter, attached to the side of a skyscraper.

Before Gates appeared in the world, one would've found top sports stars or popular idols occupying that position.

That's right.

This was the age where a Hunter would be at the receiving end of more attention and adulation than a celebrity. Even Jin-Woo wouldn't be an exception now.

The only person who didn't like Hunters nowadays were probably employees of various insurance companies.

'Besides all that.'

Only after he made his escape from the bank did he get to confirm the amount in the account. And his eyes grew real wide afterwards.

'1.48 billion....?!'

The total amount of money he earned after participating in nine raids was almost 1.5 billion Won. Meaning, each rank C dungeon netted him almost 160 million Won.

He got around 180 million from the dungeon he raided with Hwang Dong-Seok and Co. So, the average amount per rank C Gate he got was somewhere between 150 and 200 million each raid.

'Yup, that's why that bank teller was so shocked, wasn't it....'

REPORT

Now that he was done confirming his financial status....

Jin-Woo splurged on a nice-looking business suit at a department store. He still found himself with more than enough free time, so he stopped by a hair salon nearby and got a much-needed haircut as well.

“Hmm.”

He had transformed into someone completely different compared to when leaving the apartment.

‘This is why having money is way better than not having any.’

And they said that good clothes would become one’s wings, too

Jin-Woo stopped by the front of a shop’s window on the street and checked out his reflection for a bit, before shrugging his shoulders.

His preparation was as perfect as it could get.

‘I’m sure I won’t leave behind a bad first impression.’

He adjusted his clothes for a bit, before confirming the time through his phone. It said 16:20.

‘I’m supposed to get there before five, right?’

If he got going now, he should arrive on time.

“Taxi!”

Jin-Woo grabbed a taxi and arrived in front of Jin-Ah’s school, with enough time to spare. And as luck would have it, he spotted Jin-Ah standing by the school’s front gate.

“Seong Jin-Ah-!”

Discovering her older brother belatedly, she gasped out in pure shock.

“Oppa??”

Jin-Ah’s eyes became extra round like a rabbit’s as she asked cautiously.

“Are.... are you really Mister Seong Jin-Woo?”

“Can’t you recognise your own brother?!”

Jin-Ah swept her gaze all over Jin-Woo with a stunned expression still etched on her face, her voice naturally rising higher.

“It’s because you’ve changed so much, you know!”

“What, so you wanted me to show up in my tracksuit and slippers when meeting your new homeroom teacher?”

“Wow....”

Jin-Ah still couldn’t close her slack jaw.

“Hey, your chin might fall off at this rate. Anyways, I’m going ahead. Okay?”

Since his sister didn’t show any sign of guiding the way, Jin-Woo simply took the lead. Five years ago, Jin-Woo too was a student in this very school. He already knew its layout like the back of his hand.

Now normally, if teachers wanted to speak to the parents, then the meeting place would either be the staff room or at the counselling office. But today’s matter involved Jin-Ah’s future career path, so he should head to the counselling office.

And so, Jin-Woo’s steps quickened.

“O-Oppa! Wait for me!”

Jin-Ah hurriedly ran after her older brother.

“Hello there, teacher-nim.”

“Yes? Oh, uh, hello to you too.”

While on his way, Jin-Woo greeted several teachers he ran into. All of them stopped in their tracks without exception, and took a look behind them, at the departing back of Jin-Woo.

‘Who was that?’

‘Is he a graduate from this school? But, there’s no way I’d have forgotten about such an eye-catching student like that.’

‘Is he a new teacher?’

It wasn’t only the teachers who were looking at him, though.

“Wow, he’s good-looking, isn’t he?”

“Who is he?”

“Wait, isn’t that Jin-Ah next to him?”

“He must be Jin-Ah’s oppa. Wow, he’s pretty cool.”

A well-built frame and a stylish business suit – although his facial features were on the plain side, the synergy between those two points were powerful enough to attract the attention of the female students.

Too bad, the guy in question wasn't interested at all, though.

‘.....’

Jin-Woo simply let the girls' whisperings slip in one ear and slide right out the other. The one to get really psyched up was Jin-Ah, actually.

She perked her ears up and listened to the assessment of her brother coming from the surroundings in a fit of happy giggles. She then sneaked closer to Jin-Woo's side and lightly poked him on his waist with her elbow.

“Hiya~, oppa, you’re proving to be really popular today, wouldn’t you agree?”

He ignored this.

“Wait, now that I think about it, oppa, you still haven’t found a girlfriend yet, right?”

He also ignored this one.

“Should I, your trusty little sister, introduce you to a cute high school girl?”

And with that, Jin-Woo began pinching her cheeks with an emotionless face.

“Stop being cute, okay?”

“I’m... I’m sowwy....”

Jin-Woo eventually released her cheeks. Jin-Ah rubbed her reddened cheeks and pouted unhappily.

“Che. I know you also like the attention, though....”

Walking while lightly bickering amongst each other, they had arrived at the destination already. Jin-Ah ran past Jin-Woo and spun around in front of the counselling office.

“Oppa, we’re here.”

Just before entering the office, Jin-Woo looked at his sister. She wasn't budging from her spot.

“What about you?”

“Today’s the teacher and parents only. I’m going back to my class as soon as you go inside.”

“Oh.”

Listening to Jin-Ah, he remembered something similar happening back when he was still a high-school senior. Back then, no one came, though.

‘It was around the time when it got harder and harder for mom to move around, right?’

His mother began to frequent the hospital right around then.

He feared that she might push herself too hard, so he didn’t tell her about the teacher-parent meeting. And he got to suffer from his homeroom teacher’s lectures for quite a while because of that.

When recalling those moments, he could understand the reason for Jin-Ah being so anxious today. Jin-Woo smiled gently and asked her.

“You having the night class today as well?”

“Ng. Oppa, don’t wait for me and go home first.”

“Okay.”

Jin-Woo sneak attacked her and rubbed her hair all out of shape.

“Study hard, okay? I’ll see you later.”

“Ah! Stop it!”

“See you later at home.”

Jin-Woo grinned and disappeared into the counselling office.

Jin-Ah’s cheeks puffed up as she smoothed her hair.

“Still treating me like a little kid....”

Of course, she didn’t display any hint of disliking that.

Maybe someone saw the whole thing? Jin-Ah quickly scanned her surroundings and confirmed that there was no one around her. She sighed in relief and trotted away to her class.

If he were to put into words the first impression he got from Jin-Ah’s homeroom teacher?

‘Mm....’

She kind of looked ‘generous’.

“You must be Jin-Ah’s oppa.”

She was a middle-aged teacher with a wizened look about her. The overall impression she gave off was someone who could make other people feel better with a gentle and warm smile on her face.

She perhaps knew his story, because she wasn't surprised in the slightest to see Jin-Woo being here as Jin-Ah's guardian.

“How do you do? I'm Jin-Ah's homeroom teacher. I didn't quite expect Jin-Ah to be hiding someone this cool as her brother, to be honest. Ohoho.”

Having received her outgoing and welcoming words, Jin-Woo bowed his head politely as well.

‘I haven't seen her before.’

She must've started teaching after he graduated from this school.

Didn't someone say that a person's impression would be decided upon the first meeting? After sharing their greetings, he did feel a bit more relaxed.

‘Well, she's using polite speech to someone who's many years her junior, too.’

It seemed that his little sister's third year in high school wouldn't be that traumatic after all, since she was lucky enough to run into a pretty nice homeroom teacher.

“Please, take a seat over here.”

She showed him to a chair. Jin-Woo settled down on the opposite side to Jin-Ah's homeroom teacher across a large desk.

“We can rest easy about Jin-Ah now.”

They conversed for a while with typical topics that a homeroom teacher and parents would normally share, the atmosphere remaining cordial and rather cheery throughout the chat.

Since Jin-Ah was a model student, there was no reason for either Jin-Woo or the teacher to raise their voices at each other.

“Are you aware that Jin-Ah has set her sights on entering a medical school?”

“Yes, I am.”

The lady teacher began reading the prepared information.

“Her scores in the mock test are excellent. And her regular grades are very good as well, so she should get in without too much problem. Still, please make sure that you don't pressure her too much at home.”

Jin-Woo silently nodded his head.

From the teacher's excited face, one could easily spy her high expectations of Jin-Ah's future.

The thing was, the homeroom teachers tasked with looking after high school seniors were also under a tremendous level of stress as well. Since it involved the rest of these third-year students' lives, how could they not get stressed out?

'That's why I heard that most try to avoid being a senior class's homeroom teacher, though.'

Jin-Woo also heard that there were plenty of cases where male teachers simply dumped the responsibilities to their female counterparts. When considering that, then he could say that Jin-Ah's homeroom teacher was full of drive and passion for her students.

As Jin-Ah's guardian, Jin-Woo could only be grateful for that. Because drive and passion would mean she'd hold great 'interest' in the future of her students.

Maybe 15 minutes had passed by? The meeting was coming to a smooth end.

"Well then, if that's all...."

Jin-Woo studied the mood and was getting ready to leave, but then, the teacher cautiously spoke to him.

"I heard that you are a Hunter."

Suddenly, the teacher became quite serious.

There was something going on here. Jin-Woo immediately sensed it.

"Yes, I am."

"If.... If Jin-Ah is adjudged to be an Awakened, will you let her do Hunter's work as well?"

"Never."

He'd never allow her.

Jin-Woo decisively stated his position. There was no need to even reconsider this.

Exactly as he had suspected, there was something here and as proof, the teacher's expression became heavier still.

"As I thought...."

When Jin-Woo looked at her with a puzzled expression, the teacher spoke in a determined tone of voice.

“If it’s not too much trouble, may I ask you for a favour?”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

“As long as it’s within my powers....”

He decided to hear her out first.

Well, she was his little sister’s homeroom teacher, so if he refused her outright without even listening to her once, he might leave behind a bad impression here.

Worried that Jin-Woo might change his mind, the teacher quickly opened her mouth.

“One of my students is thinking of quitting school to become a Hunter full time after she went through the Awakening process. She’s not even coming to school anymore, as a matter of fact.”

‘Aha.’

Such things were fairly common.

There would be cases where a few newly Awakened, having never experienced what real Hunters did, thought of themselves as someone special, a chosen, a cut above the rest, etc., without having the faintest idea how cruel reality could be.

...Even though there weren’t that many Awakened who went on to become famous Hunters and made lots of money in the world, though.

The teacher let off a long sigh.

“If she continues to miss school this way, then the management won’t have any choice but to act, you see? Even if she wishes to become a Hunter, wouldn’t it be better if she at least graduated from a high school first?”

Jin-Woo nodded his head in agreement. At his positive response, the teacher’s complexion brightened just a bit.

“Can you help me persuade that child so she gets to graduate safe and sound?”

The teacher did her best to smile.

Jin-Woo was curious about one thing here.

“That student... what was her Awakened rank?”

“From what I hear... it’s the lowest rank....”

In other words, a rank E.

‘...She won’t get to live long, then.’

Jin-Woo inwardly clicked his tongue.

That was the rank where one had to be especially careful about entering a dungeon.

If one entered with an overly-hyped mindset and without much preparation to boot, then one would become a cripple or dead almost without an exception.

Such a thing happening to a kid around the same age as his little sister was a sad thing. Unfortunately, at the end of the day, that choice was that girl’s to make. No one could say otherwise.

It was a rather lamentable thing indeed, but he didn’t feel like taking time out of his busy schedule to interfere in someone’s else life choices.

‘Besides, I’m not confident about persuading her, too.’

Surely, most of what he would say wouldn’t come across as nice things to hear, after all.

Jin-Woo was thinking of refusing the teacher and leaving.

However....

“Jin-Ah would recognise the child, because her name is...”

When the girl’s name came out from the teacher’s mouth, Jin-Woo realised that he couldn’t easily get up from his spot now.

Jin-Woo confirmed the girl’s name one more time.

“Teacher-nim. What was the name of the student again?”

“It’s... By any chance, you know who she is?” (TL: the girl’s name is omitted in the raw.)

“.....”

Yup, the Republic of Korea was indeed a tiny place.

‘Huh.’

Jin-Woo became rather speechless.

At the same time.

The private residence of Yu Myung-Hwan, the owner of Yujin Construction.

From early in the morning, countless expensive luxury vehicles continued to stream in.

There was only one reason for that.

It was for the ancestral rites ceremony for the first president of the Yujin Group, Yu Byung-Cheol, to be held later in the evening.

Yu Myung-Hwan was the number one in Korea's financial sector. And Yu Byung-Cheol was his father.

The eldest son, Yu Myung-Hwan made sure to perform the ceremony every single year, no matter how busy he was. And what with his influence being so great, every single relative found in the Yu family register had to gather in this place, without fail.

Every single guest happened to be a heavy hitter. And their children all happened to be the elites of the elite, too. With the sole exception of one.

And that exception had excused himself to the quiet and far removed corner of the proceedings, even though no one asked him to.

And he was none other than Yu Jin-Ho.

'I'm bored.'

He wished that time would move faster.

Going around raiding dungeons with his 'hyung-nim' was a hundred times, a thousand times more enjoyable than this.

What would hyung-nim be doing right about now?

Now that he thought about it for a second, he couldn't even begin to imagine just what hyung-nim would do during his off days.

And so... while thinking about useless stuff in a corner, out of everyone's gazes and throwing back blameless refreshments all the time....

...He heard a voice he didn't particularly want to hear today.

"Oii."

Well, sure enough.

A perfect model of how an upper-class elite of society should behave was standing behind Yu Jin-Ho. Anyone could see that he was utterly capable of pretty much anything, too.

A pair of expensive glasses; a tall, manly physique. He was none other than Yu Jin-Ho's biological older brother, Yu Jin-Seong.

The heir apparent who'd inherit Yujin Construction after Yu Myung-Hwan decides to step down in the future.

Yu Jin-Seong walked real close to Yu Jin-Ho and looked down on his younger brother.

“Relatives have come, so you should be out there greeting them. How long are you planning to act like a little kid?”

“...Whatever.”

“Do remember that your childish actions only paint our father’s reputation with dishonour.”

Yu Jin-Seong’s tone of voice did not contain a single trace of brotherly affection. No, it was rather openly dismissive.

Of course, Yu Jin-Ho didn’t like his older brother, but still, he lacked any courage to retort back here.

“...”

It couldn’t be helped, really.

Yu Jin-Seong was a genius among geniuses who managed to stand on the top of every subject he took on back in school. And it wasn’t just his excellent grades, either.

After graduating from school, he helped Yu Myung-Hwan in various business ventures and achieved incredible success in everything he touched.

Compared to him, Yu Jin-Ho didn’t have anything to show for. He barely managed to enter the university, for instance.

Whenever his older brother stood next to him, Yu Jin-Ho naturally grew small and insignificant.

“...”

“Still as pathetic as you can get. Tsk, tsk.”

Yu Jin-Seong frowned deeply while staring at Yu Jin-Ho’s lowered head, before changing his expression and walking away in hurried steps.

“Uncle!”

“Oh, Jin-Seong, is that you?”

Only after Yu Jin-Seong had gone away did Yu Jin-Ho raise his head back up. This was one of the reasons why he didn’t want to come home.

Only if there was no stupid ancestral rites ceremony thing....

Yu Jin-Ho spat out a lengthy groan, and that was when he heard a sexy but also rather sharp voice coming from right behind him.

“Wowers. What a jerk. Sucks the fun out of this place, that guy.”

Yu Jin-Ho looked behind him.

And he found his cousin/older sister by one year, Yu Soo-Hyun, standing there.

“Did you hear what he just said? What a total jerk-face.”

Yu Soo-Hyun approached closer, before Yu Jin-Ho could react, and lightly tapped him on the shoulder.

Yu Soo-Hyun’s forehead creased up rather prettily.

“Look at you. C’mon now. Seriously? Tsk, tsk. Still so pathetic. Tsk, tsk.”

Yu Jin-Ho couldn’t suppress his laughter after seeing her imitate his older brother.

“Fuhup. Keuk. Stop that. I don’t feel like cracking jokes with you right now, you know.”

“Still so~~ pathetic. Tsk, tsk.”

“Keuh, hehehe.... Keuk! Argh, I’m telling you, stop it!”

Their ages were almost the same, so their relationship was more like that of really close friends.

Yu Soo-Hyun stood right in front of Yu Jin-Ho.

“Why do you keep acting like this, though?”

“What do you mean?”

“I mean, c’mon. You’re an Awakened now, right? Don’t tell me, you still can’t win against a regular person?”

“So what if I am? You think I’m gonna start throwing punches at my older brother or something?”

“Well, not really, no. But....”

Yu Soo-Hyun bit on her rather shapely lower lip.

Imagining the kind of punishment the patriarch of the family might saddle the poor Yu Jin-Ho with, if the latter did throw a knuckle sandwich to his much more successful older brother....

The prospect of that alone was quite terrifying, to say the least.

It wasn’t as if she didn’t understand Yu Jin-Ho’s inner thoughts while he had to remain on the receiving end of the ridicule. Yu Soo-Hyun narrowed her eyes and glared in the direction that Yu Jin-Seong had disappeared to.

“Whatever. He’s still a stuck-up, no fun jerkoff, that guy.”

She too disliked Yu Jin-Seong as much as Yu Jin-Ho did. She just so happened to be one of the few people who knew what Yu Jin-Seong’s real personality was like, hidden beneath that fakey, smiley facade.

However, Yu Jin-Ho didn’t agree with her. It wasn’t because that guy was his older brother, no.

No, he simply wanted to win against his older brother in an upfront manner, not badmouth him from behind like this.

When Yu Jin-Ho kept his mouth shut, Yu Soo-Hyun cautiously asked him.

“Hey, so... that plan, is it still ongoing?”

“Mm?”

“You know, you said you’d become a Guild Master. At that guy’s expense.”

Instead of a reply, Yu Jin-Ho simply smiled.

Who’d believe him even if he said that out loud? It’d be a relief if no one mocked him or something. Him and his brother battling like that?

However, now that he held the huge ace called ‘hyung-nim’, the odds of his victory had risen up by quite a lot.

‘If I manage to get the Master licence....’

It’d be possible to duke it out with his older brother, then.

He might even win.

Yu Soo-Hyun saw the determination burning in Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes and spoke in no uncertain terms while placing her hands on her hips.

“I’d rather kill myself instead of working for that man. So, you do everything you can, okay? Cuz I don’t wanna fight your old man over this.”

“...Thanks.”

This was how Yu Soo-Hyun would usually cheer him on.

She was actually a rank A Hunter who started her career as a famous child actor.

Even with her background of being a lady or a chaebol was not taken into account, many Guilds still tried their darnedest to scout her because of her rank and fame.

For some reason, though, she had refused all of their offers and continued to act as a model every now and then.

However, a new offer that she couldn't really refuse had arrived at her doorstep recently.

And that was to become one of the founding members of the soon-to-launch Yujin Guild. It was a direct order from the chairman himself, Yu Myung-Hwan.

She couldn't outright ignore the orders of the family patriarch, but she also didn't want to work for Yu Jin-Seong, either.

Yu Soo-Hyun herself had a lot to worry about now.

Although the kid was not all that trustworthy, she had little choice but to place her faith in Yu Jin-Ho.

Brrrr.... Brrr....

Hearing the sound of a phone vibrating coming from Yu Jin-Ho's pocket, Yu Soo-Hyun asked him.

"Aren't you going to answer that?"

"...Oh."

He was daydreaming about something else just then; he hurriedly pulled his phone out after it had been ringing for a while. The number appearing on the phone's screen was a familiar one.

[Hyung-nim]

Yu Jin-Ho's expression brightened up immediately after realising who it was.

"Hello, hyung-nim!"

He answered the call with an energetic voice.

"Yes? Yes, hyung-nim. No, I can be there, no problem. Yes. I'll be there shortly, hyung-nim."

Yu Jin-Ho ended the call there.

Yu Soo-Hyun displayed her interest after sensing Yu Jin-Ho's moods doing a 180.

"What the heck? Who was that?"

Too bad for her, this was absolutely not the time for him to stand around leisurely explaining the situation to her. After all, didn't hyung-nim ask him for a favour just now?

And with the desire to escape from this place added on top, his mind could only think about leaving as soon as possible, even if it was only a second faster.

“Let’s talk later!”

Watching Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly run away, Yu Soo-Hyun's head tilted from side to side.

“And why is he so pumped up like that now?”

Every time he participated in a family meeting of some sort, Yu Jin-Ho always walked around with slumped shoulders, but it was a different story today.

“....How odd.”

Yu Soo-Hyun told herself to definitely interrogate the kid later.

While that was happening, Yu Jin-Ho was searching for his father.

It'd soon be dinner time. And Yu Jin-Ho couldn't be excused from the family gathering without his father's approval, especially when every single family member and relatives were present.

Yu Jin-Ho scanned his surroundings. And eventually, spotted his father over in the distance, conversing with some people.

He had a countenance of a tiger. His personality was just as strict, him never cracking a smile with matters he thought were insignificant.

For someone like Yu Jin-Ho, his father was a very difficult person to talk to.

‘And I haven’t even started yet....’

Yet, he was already getting nervous. But, he needed to be courageous here.

‘Yeah, well. I made a promise.’

Yu Jin-Ho took a couple of deep breaths and slowly walked to where his father was.

He almost turned around several times on his way, though. However, he held the urges back.

And finally, Yu Jin-Ho managed to arrive before his father, Yu Myung-Hwan.

“Father....?”

Their distance was a bit too far for a relationship between a father and a son, though.

Yu Myung-Hwan shifted his gaze over to Yu Jin-Ho.

“What do you want?”

Sensing the uncertain air, the people around Yu Myung-Hwan distanced themselves all at the same time as if they had a prior agreement.

“Father, will it be okay if I went out for a little while?”

Yu Jin-Ho’s voice lacked any discernible energy as he spoke to his father.

“I, I will return before dinner.”

“.....”

Yu Myung-Hwan stood there with an expression of someone getting ready to scold his disappointing son, but then, he let off a sigh and gave his permission, albeit quite unwillingly so.

“.....Fine. Go, but return on time.”

Yu Jin-Ho’s expression brightened and bowed his head.

“Thank you, father.”

He then ran out of there like a streak of lightning.

Yu Myung-Hwan stood there and looked at the back of Yu Jin-Ho with a stiff face. Meanwhile, his wife walked closer to him.

“Dear? I just got a call from Vienna.”

That was one of the messages he’d been eagerly waiting for. Yu Myung-Hwan immediately shifted his attention over to his wife.

“And the results of the concours are?”

“She won, of course. She’s our daughter, so it’s expected, really.”

A subtle smile formed on Yu Myung-Hwan’s face. But it disappeared without a trace before anyone had the chance to see it.

“Hmm. When will she be returning to Korea, then?”

“She says that she’s far too busy during the semester, but will come around once it ends.”

Yu Myung-Hwan frowned deeply.

“I told her to attend her grandfather’s ancestral ceremony regardless of how busy she was.”

“Dear. Children nowadays don’t place much importance on such matters anymore.”

“Tsk, tsk.”

The madam of the Yu family carefully fixed Yu Myung-Hwan’s slightly out of shape tie and spoke to him intimately.

“Also, dear.... how about paying more attention to Jin-Ho?”

“You’re speaking about that again... A tiger is supposed to rear tiger cubs, not kittens.”

“Whether he’s a tiger or a kitten, he’s still my child. And your child, too.”

“Hmm.....”

“Did you notice? After his graduation from middle school, it was Jin-Ho’s first time smiling in front of you.”

Did he do that?

Yu Myung-Hwan fixed his gaze in the direction Yu Jin-Ho had disappeared to, his expression showing just the slightest hint of puzzlement.

But, that lasted only for a brief second.

Yu Myung-Hwan spoke dismissively.

“Maybe he found himself a girlfriend. Anyway, others must be waiting for us now. Let us go back inside.”

Inside the Hunter Association’s HQ, located in Seoul’s Guro-gu.

One of the Association’s employees was checking various equipment located within the building and came to a sudden stop in front of a miniature magic energy measuring equipment.

“What the hell? What’s wrong with this guy?”

The number on the display panel should’ve stayed ‘0’, yet the value was climbing up and down continuously. It was as if it had lost its mind.

However, this employee didn’t think too much about it. As these measuring equipments were very sensitive, they broke down more often than not.

“Hey, Kim Gun-Ah.”

“Yes, sir?”

A subordinate quickly jogged closer.

“How many Gates has this guy measured recently?”

“What is its serial number, sir?”

The subordinate scanned through the log, and nodded his head.

“Seven Gates, a couple of days ago.”

“A couple of days ago? Let me see.”

Indeed, it was the truth. Two days ago, this equipment measured the ranks of seven Gates, and out of them, four had been closed by the Hunters already.

“Were there any problems with the Gates this guy measured?”

“No, sir. I didn’t hear anything.”

“Oh, really?”

The senior employee slowly scratched the stubble on his chin.

Now normally, when magic measuring equipment like this one was found to be malfunctioning, the raid permits issued for all the Gates the faulty device had measured would be rescinded immediately.

It was an obvious thing if one thought about it; what would happen to Hunters who entered a Gate thinking that it was only a rank C, but it turned out to be A or B?

None of them would return alive and in one piece.

High ranked dungeons were such places.

Just as the boundary between lower ranked Hunters and higher ranked ones were crystal-clear and impossible to bridge, the differences between the higher ranked dungeons and lower ranked ones were also quite humongous.

It was not for nothing that high ranked dungeons were all dealt with exclusively by the large Guilds until now.

‘Should I send out notices now?’

Letting others know wasn’t all that difficult.

However, never mind the discontent voices of anger coming from the teams that paid for the permits, taking more time to measure the Gates again could mean that a dungeon break might occur in the meantime. And if that happened, the Association wouldn’t be able to dodge the pointed criticism flying in their way.

Hell, if things went wrong somewhere, he might even lose his job.

'I worked so hard to get to this position, too.'

The Hunter Association received similar levels of treatment to state-run public enterprises. If one wanted to enter this organisation, one had to put in as much effort as passing the bar exam, for instance. Just thinking about losing this job, he almost blacked out right there and then.

'No freaking way. Nope.'

He shook his head.

The subordinate also more or less knew what the superior's dilemma was. That was why he asked rather cautiously.

"This.... What should we do now?"

"Hmm."

It'd been two days already.

If there were problems, shouldn't he have heard about it by now?

"....Let it be."

"W-will it be fine that way?"

"Well, I'm sure nothing much will happen. It's been two days already, right?"

"Well, that is true."

The subordinate nodded his head.

"On the report, write that N-1744B was working fine until yesterday, but developed a fault earlier today. Okay?"

"Okay, sir."

The private residence of the Chief of the White Tiger Guild's Second Division, Ahn Sahng-Min.

He stopped cutting the spring onion and straightened his back, and his bones issued a loud complaint.

Crackle....

"Aigoo...."

Today dinner: doenjang stew.

As befitting a bachelor going on eight years strong, he had mastered the art of cooking a fair number of dishes already.

It all happened five years ago.

Back then, he filled himself up all the time with instant foods, until he realised that his health was rapidly deteriorating, and reflected on his stupidity. He made up his mind to learn cooking, and now, he was at the level of almost replicating a dish that appeared on the TV in passing.

However...

Didn't they say that end of tuning is pure love? (TL: not sure what this line is supposed to mean, but I TLED it as it appears in the raw.)

As his skill grew, the types of dishes that he prepared for himself became simple side dishes.

Such as today's doenjang stew.

“Kyah, now this is what I'm talking about!”

Ahn Sahng-Min tasted his own creation and nodded his head as if he was truly amazed by his own skills.

Too bad, only one person could taste this wonderful stew, though. He really felt sorry about that.

‘Should I invite someone over for a meal?’

He immediately thought of a certain subordinate, but soon, shook his head.

He was already sick and tired of being called an old bachelor, yet just what kind of a misunderstanding would he arouse if he invited a fellow male employee?

‘I wonder if he's properly doing the job I gave him.’

That guy was quite attentive and smart most of the time, yet there was this part of him that was undeniably sloppy, too.

‘Eii, why am I worried about work even though I'm at home, relaxing?’

Time to eat his dinner, then.

Ahn Sahng-Min placed the doenjang stew on the coffee table by the living room while humming to himself.

It was now a normal thing for him to watch TV in the living room while eating dinner alone. The dining table in the kitchen was far too big and lonesome for a bachelor to have a meal alone there.

Click.

He switched the TV on with the remote and settled down on the couch.

A news broadcast came on.

[Today's breaking news.]

One of the main advantages of being a bachelor was that he'd never have to fight someone else for the TV remote.

When he turned that boobtube on, it'd always be on the channel he preferred.

Ahn Sahng-Min watched the large flat screen TV mounted on the wall with the corner of his eyes while he scooped up a spoonful of rice.

[...The entirety of the United States of America is in deep shock after an unexplainable explosion took place in the American Hunter's Association headquarters in Washington D.C. A rumour is rising among some experts, that the explosion was due to a new rising talent causing irreparable friction among S-ranked Hunters....]

"Uh-huh.... What is this world coming to, huh. Really now."

Ahn Sahng-Min clicked his tongue with a rueful expression, but still didn't forget to carefully choose the side dish that would signal the beginning of his dinner.

Well, there weren't that many side dishes to choose from, anyway.

'Well, it just has to be kimchi, no?'

[...This is the CCTV footage recorded near the American Monitoring Division's building. Cracks suddenly formed on the walls of the building, and....]

Not really caring what the news bulletin was saying, the steamy rice resting on top of his spoon now acted as a home for a cold piece of kimchi he took out from the separate kimchi refrigerator.

And just as Ahn Sahng-Min was bringing the pair to his mouth, his phone suddenly issued a loud ring.

'Argh! Who the heck is it this time??'

Ahn Sahng-Min inwardly complained and picked up the smartphone. But he hurriedly answered the phone after discovering who was calling him.

"Hello, this is Ahn Sahng-Min speaking."

The one calling him was, of course, Seong Jin-Woo.

Ahn Sahng-Min's expression was bright as he answered the call.

However...

While listening to Jin-Woo's story, Ahn Sahng-Min's expression progressively became puzzled.

“Pardon me? You were wondering if you could tag along during the training of our new recruits?”

Chapter 58 Fin.

REPORT

'It's done.'

Jin-Woo ended the call.

Initially, Chief Ahn Sahng-Min was confused by the sudden request, but once he heard Jin-Woo's reasons, he gave his okay rather easily. And now, Jin-Woo would be able to check out White Tiger's method of training their new recruits.

'And I also managed to borrow the van, too.'

Even though the kid was busy, Yu Jin-Ho still showed up.

Jin-Woo couldn't help but think that the kid should be praised wholeheartedly; Yu Jin-Ho came running even though he was tied up with something, and didn't even forget to greet him properly, too.

And so, the preparations were complete.

Right now, Jin-Woo was standing in front of the apartment building that the problematic female student lived in.

'It's really close to my own place, isn't it?'

It only took two minutes of walking to get here. It was the proverbial stone's throw away.

He took a look around his vicinity. And he was still in the familiar district, too tiny and cramped, with lots of old apartment buildings standing close to one another.

Meaning, this girl's family circumstances weren't that good, just how his used to be not too long ago.

He could understand where she was coming from, now that she was nominally a Hunter. Well, Jin-Woo was also like that once upon a time.

'Too bad, those people die the quickest.'

Didn't he get injured every single time?

Just how many times did he come close to getting killed? If it weren't for his mom suffering from the d*mn rare illness, he'd have quit this crap a long time ago.

For a rank E Hunter, a dungeon was a horrible place to be in.

If left alone, this girl would definitely grow to regret ever being a Hunter. No, it'd be more likely that she'd die long before she had the chance to regret making that decision.

'Of course, that happens all the time, unfortunately.'

The incidents of Hunters dying or getting gravely injured happened dozens of times in a single day, after all.

It was impossible to talk all these people out of going on a raid, nor was there any reason to do so. Well, they made their choices so they had to bear the responsibilities of their decisions accordingly.

'However....'

If he didn't know the girl in question, he wouldn't have cared. But now that he knew who she was, he couldn't just ignore this one.

Indeed, Jin-Woo was rather familiar with this girl.

He sensed the presence of a person and raised his head, and spotted the problem child walking towards him.

Her hair rolled up into a bun above her head; slightly rough and tired eyes – she was definitely someone he knew.

"Uh?"

The female student discovered Jin-Woo there and tilted her head.

"What are you doing here, ahjussi?"

Just as Jin-Woo did, the female student also recognised him right away.

'Yup, this world is indeed too dang small.'

Jin-Woo scratched the side of his head.

The female student who declared that she'd become a Hunter; she was none other than the underage kid, the lone female in the 'raiding team' Yu Jin-Ho had assembled. The one that briefly caused Jin-Woo to worry slightly since she was still so young and all.

'...Hahn Song-Yi.'

When he heard that name from Jin-Ah's homeroom teacher, a flood of emotions briefly inundated him. So, he just had to confirm it for himself.

And sure enough, the date Hahn Song-Yi began missing school coincided with the day Yu Jin-Ho's team began its raiding 'missions'.

With that, it kinda became a bit harder to think of this matter as someone else's mess.

In a way, he felt responsible for it.

As a matter of fact, he couldn't help but wonder if he was the cause of this mess, to begin with, after letting a kid who didn't know how the world really operated taste some easy cash, and give her false impressions that she was capable of doing anything now.

'At least, one thing's for sure.'

No matter when it might be, he'd feel really bad if he heard of Hahn Song-Yi perishing inside a dungeon. He had done nothing wrong, so he shouldn't suffer through a couple of nights' sleep, lost through guilty consciousness, no?

And so, he decided to make time for this evening and sort this mess out. It wasn't that difficult, to begin with, anyway.

"What's going on?"

Hahn Song-Yi's eyes opened wider as she stared up at Jin-Woo. And then, her expression became rather unimpressed.

"Wait, could it be that the Hunter my teacher wanted to introduce me to was you, ahjussi??"

Her continuously calling him ahjussi got on his nerves a bit, but Jin-Woo maintained his smile and nodded his head.

But then....

"I don't know what my teacher told you, but I'm not interested in going back to school anymore. And I'm definitely not gonna give up being a Hunter."

Hahn Song-Yi curtly stated her position.

She seemed to be a quiet kid when she was with the raid team, but, her attitude definitely changed when the story involved her.

She was definitely one of those headstrong modern kids who thought they knew how to draw the line on where their opinions and viewpoints lied.

'Well, the thing is, there's a girl back in my house who's exactly like you, you know?'

Jin-Woo grinned slightly.

Hahn Song-Yi thought that she had managed to come across tough and intimidating, but seeing that Jin-Woo's response was completely out of her expectations, she began to get flustered somewhat.

Jin-Woo spoke to her in an even tone of voice.

“I wasn't planning to tell you to quit being a Hunter.”

Hahn Song-Yi's eyes widened further.

“I'm sorry?”

Kids like her would always act completely opposite to what you tell them to do. So, he wasn't even planning to talk her out of it. No, all he had to was to show her what the reality was like, just once.

‘That's what happened to me, anyway.’

He realised the truth after participating in his first raid.

And that was... reality was far crueller and heartless than his imagination had been.

Hahn Song-Yi did her very best to hide her fluster and asked him.

“T-then, what brings you here?”

Jin-Woo took a step closer.

Hahn Song-Yi flinched noticeably and was about to retreat a step back, but upon realising that such an action would make her look weak, she forcibly stopped her body from moving.

Jin-Woo now stood before Hahn Song-Yi.

Although he didn't mean to, and no one would understand the meaning behind it, an ominous smile still found its way to Jin-Woo's lips.

“I'm here to mould you into a better Hunter.”

There was no need to persuade her to accompany him to a dungeon.

She said “Okay, I'm coming!” as soon as he told her that she now had an indelible opportunity to witness how the White Tiger Guild conducted its new recruit training exercise.

She didn't even suspect that Jin-Woo had any ulterior motives.

As they walked to the van, Hahn Song-Yi asked him how he knew her teacher, and he simply showed her the photo of him and Jin-Ah stored on the phone.

“Ahjussi, you were Jin-Ah's oppa??”

“....”

For a while now, a certain word was really getting on his nerves, but since everything was going according to his plan, he endured it and let it slide.

“Get in.”

“Thanks!”

Jin-Woo drove Hahn Song-Yi to the location where the White Tiger Guild was holding its evening training. Since he was told that the training exercise would only commence at 9 PM, there were still plenty of time left.

Vrroom....

The van that was clearly too big for only two people glided across the road.

Was this because both his Agility and Perception had been enhanced a great deal? He had never driven a car after getting his driver’s licence some time ago, yet the actual driving proved to be rather easy.

When he concentrated a bit harder, all the other cars on the road looked as slow as worms to him.

‘Yup, Stats really come in handy in all sorts of things, don’t they?’

Meanwhile, Hahn Song-Yi asked him from the passenger seat.

“Does Jin-Ah really study the whole day even back home? I mean, I heard rumours that she actually plastered pages of a dictionary on her walls so she can memorise them even when she falls asleep.”

There was a such a rumour about Jin-Ah?

But, she was such a fried chicken-loving sleepyhead when she was at home....

“Jin-Ah’s just like you, you know. When she’s home, all she does is play games, eat, and sleep.”

Well, it was mostly sleeping, but still.

“Eii.... That must be a lie. How come her grades are so amazing, then?”

“I can hardly believe it myself. She used to frequent arcades with me back when she was still in middle school, you know?”

They chatted about this and that, and eventually arrived near the vicinity of the Gate. Jin-Woo stopped the van.

Screech...

The area they were in was designated as a location where Gates frequently appeared. Almost no human beings dared to live around here anymore, so it was quite convenient to park the van.

From what he heard, almost 80% of houses here were deserted. The story went that, once the remaining populace moved out, the whole district would be shut down.

Jin-Woo and Hahn Song-Yi exited from the van.

He scanned the surroundings, and immediately picked up on the overflowing amount of eerie, creepy chill in the air.

Vrrrr.....

For some reason, he thought that he could hear loud cheering coming from the shadow beneath his feet. He was probably imagining it, though.

Hahn Song-Yi got a bit scared by the eerie atmosphere of the place, but after spotting the group of Hunters in the distance, regained most of her self confidence back.

The way her eyes sparkled, it was as if she had just ran into a super celebrity or something.

‘Oh well. They are Hunters from the super Guild, White Tiger, so it can’t be helped.’

To a high schooler who yearned to become a real Hunter, those people would be no different than actual celebrities, no?

Also, such a thought process wasn’t so strange, to begin with, when considering how mass media packaged these Hunters on the TV and such.

“Oh, so you really came.”

Hyun Ki-Cheol quickly ran over to Jin-Woo after discovering him.

“Do you still remember me?”

Jin-Woo lightly nodded his head.

Sensing that Hyun Ki-Cheol’s smile wasn’t the fakey business one but the real thing, a smile also formed naturally on Jin-Woo’s face as well.

They haven’t met too many times before, but this Hyun Ki-Cheol character seemed to be someone good-natured and easy to talk to.

“I heard it from the Chief. Ah, so this young woman is her?”

“Hello there.”

Hahn Song-Yi lowered her head in greeting.

While they were saying hellos in this fashion, a big muscular guy sauntered over and spoke in an irked tone of voice.

“Let’s stop with useless chatter and get started already. We didn’t come here for a picnic, and it’s almost 9 PM.”

The muscular guy didn’t even wait for the response and walked back towards the Gate. Something didn’t feel quite right with that guy, so Jin-Woo asked Hyun Ki-Cheol.

“Who was that?”

“Oh. He’s one of our new recruit. He’s ranked A, actually. He must be feeling a bit unhappy after I asked him for his understanding earlier. He even asked me if I thought that going to a dungeon was a fun pastime or some such.”

“He’s a rank A?”

Hyun Ki-Cheol nodded his head, thinking that such a reaction was reasonable, coming from a proud rank A Hunter like that guy.

Jin-Woo asked again.

“What are the ranks of today’s raid team members?”

“One rank A, seven rank Bs, and four rank Cs, for the total of 12 members.”

“A rank A and several Bs, just for a rank C dungeon....?”

“Well, their ranks might be high, sure, but they are still newbies, you see. We’re trying to help them earn first-hand experience inside an easier dungeon.”

Hyun Ki-Cheol spoke with some pride in his voice.

He then added quickly that after today, these guys would immediately be inserted into high ranked dungeons. Meaning, they could definitely be counted as a proper combat force.

‘Still, one A and seven Bs, huh...’

Jin-Woo’s expression subtly changed.

Actually, this was the reason why Chief Ahn Sahng-Min gave his permission. He was thinking of convincing Jin-Woo with the mighty display from the White Tiger Guild’s new, talented recruits.

However, quite contrary to Ahn Sahng-Min’s and Hyun Ki-Cheol’s expectations, Jin-Woo could only look on at the Gate with a disappointed expression.

The Gate was rated at C.

Compared to that, the members of the raiding team were simply too brilliant to the point that they were even blinding the onlookers with their auras.

‘If the raid is too easy, the shock factor will lessen, though...’

That was what his main worry was about.

But, he slowly shook his head.

‘No, wait. If she sees it with her own eyes, she should still be able to feel it.’

....Feel how weak and powerless a rank E would become inside a dungeon, that was. That alone would be sufficient.

“When can we enter?”

Still utterly oblivious to Jin-Woo’s real intentions, Hahn Song-Yi began whining already. When Jin-Woo took a look at her, her expression showed how pumped up she was.

‘Let’s see how long you can keep that up.’

Jin-Woo inwardly swallowed his laughter and spoke to Hyun Ki-Cheol.

“We’ll be on our way now.”

“Ah, yes. Wait, hold up for a second, please.”

Hyun Ki-Cheol sneaked a glance around him, and then whispered something to Jin-Woo’s ears.

“Uhm, excuse me, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim. If you decide to step in, today’s raid will become too easy, so please, refrain from doing anything in there. Please?”

Since Jin-Woo’s purpose today was to simply observe, obviously he wouldn’t enter the fray.

“I won’t step in.”

He’d be going around other rank C dungeons with Yu Jin-Ho from tomorrow onwards, so what point was there for him to disrupt the White Tiger’s training exercise?

Of course, he’d use his shadow soldiers to conquer those dungeons. For that reason alone, he had to bring Hahn Song-Yi over here.

‘Besides, I don’t feel like revealing my shadow soldiers with a matter this simple, either.'

If he showed how easy it was to clear a dungeon with his shadows busy beating monsters to bloody messes, there was a real danger that Hahn Song-Yi's delusions of grandeur might get inflated, instead.

And so, Jin-Woo and Hahn Song-Yi approached the Gate. Unlike that rank A Hunter, there were some people who welcomed the duo rather happily.

"Hello."

"Nice to meet you."

Since they weren't here to make money, the higher the headcount, the better it would be for everyone. As it was customary, they introduced each other.

But when it was the turn of the rank A Hunter....

"I don't care."

He simply walked inside the Gate.

"Well, let us get going as well."

The new recruits of the White Tiger also began entering the Gate one by one.

Before Hahn Song-Yi entered, she turned her head to look at Jin-Woo.

"What about you, ahjussi?"

Jin-Woo crossed his arms and replied to her.

"After I see you enter first."

Hahn Song-Yi's face was stiff with nervousness, but she still resolutely nodded her head and jumped into the Gate.

'Hmm....'

Jin-Woo took a quick breath and stood before the Gate.

He sensed someone looking at him, so turned around to confirm, only to spot Hyun Ki-Cheol over yonder, waving at him and cheering him on.

'.....'

He reverted his gaze back to the Gate.

However.....

'...??'

The surface of the Gate continued to ripple softly non-stop.

‘But, shouldn’t the surface return to being a solid black barrier once a person goes through it?’

Right now, it was continuously rippling about like the surface of water.

Something was off here.

Jin-Woo placed the tip of his hand against the surface.

And it reacted like a sticky liquid, clinging to his fingers and following him as he lifted his hand away.

‘Could this be....??’

Jin-Woo quickly spun his head around and met Hyun Ki-Cheol’s gaze.

At this point, even Hyun Ki-Cheol had sensed something was very wrong.

Jin-Woo loudly shouted at him.

“Call your main raid team!! Hurry!”

As soon as he finished shouting, Jin-Woo was automatically sucked into the Gate.

“W-what the hell was that?!”

“V-Vice Chief Hyun?!”

Hyun Ki-Cheol hurriedly ran towards the Gate.

The three remaining employees of White Tiger Guild also hurriedly followed after him.

Once he got to the Gate, though, Hyun Ki-Cheol began freaking out.

“This... this can’t be!!”

Hunters weren’t the only newbies today; the new employees were also brought along in order to train them as well. So, none of the newbies had experienced anything remotely like this.

The trio of new employees looked at Hyun Ki-Cheol with completely stunned expressions.

“V-Vice Chief!! The Gate’s surface!! It’s changing to a red colour!!”

As if a drop of blood had fallen in it, the surface of the once-black Gate was now slowly changing to the crimson-red colour.

Hyun Ki-Cheol ignored the confused employees and hurriedly called someone.

Click.

“Chief!! It’s the Red Gate!! The Gate our people just walked into changed to a Red Gate!!”

Ahn Sahng-Min’s voice became urgent, shocked.

Hyun Ki-Cheol raised his head and stared at the Gate, now dyed completely in the colour of blood.

The ripples on the surface had stopped now, too.

Hyun Ki-Chole nervously swallowed his dried saliva.

“I don’t know how... but it’s definitely a Red Gate, Chief.”

REPORT

“A Red Gate?! Just what on earth is going on here!!”

The CEO of the White Tiger Guild, Baek Yun-Ho, ran straight to the Gate’s location as soon as he received the urgent call.

The complexion of Hyun Ki-Cheol could only be described as ashen.

“Well, sir.....”

“I’m going to see for myself first.”

Baek Yun-Ho walked past the Guild employees who looked like they were in the middle of a funeral.

‘It really is a Red Gate!!’

Baek Yun-Ho’s own complexion hardened instantly after checking out the Gate’s colour.

What was a Red Gate?

It was a terrifying phenomenon where the dungeon beyond it would actually connect to a whole new world, not some underground cavern. And in order to escape from it, either you had to kill the boss of the area, or wait for the dungeon break to occur.

In other words, once you stepped inside, it’d be the end.

Once the Gate changed its colour to red, all external influences would be completely cut off. Escaping from it, and trying to enter it – both of these activities were now impossible.

Baek Yun-Ho pressed his hand against the Gate’s surface. As he thought, it was hard, impossible to enter.

‘God d*mn it.’

From here onwards, there was no way to lend aid to those trapped inside.

Baek Yun-Ho asked Hyun Ki-Cheol.

“I thought this was supposed to be a rank C Gate?”

“Sir, it was a rank C.”

“Did you call the Association to confirm it?”

“Yes, sir. However..... The Association is insisting that it’s still a rank C Gate....”

“Those god dmn sons of btches!!”

Baek Yun-Ho angrily cursed out.

A Red Gate would only occur when the dungeon itself was ranked very high, to begin with.

There was a whole new world on the other side of the Gate, yet the leaking magical energy only equalled that of a rank C dungeon? That crap wouldn’t fly anywhere.

Even from a casual glance, he could tell this thing should’ve been ranked B, at the bare minimum. If unlucky, rank A. Or worse, something even higher than that.

However, the only reason why the Association still had the audacity to insist they were not wrong?

“Sir, should we use our own equipment to measure the magic energy?”

When Hyun Ki-Cheol asked him, Baek Yun-Ho shook his head.

“No magic energy leaks out from a Red Gate, so it’s impossible to measure it now.”

...Because, it would be almost impossible to take another measurement, that was why.

There was no concrete way to find out what the problematic Gate’s actual rank was at this point in time.

And besides, the rank of this d*mn Gate wasn’t important anymore.

“How many of our people went in there?”

“Total of 12, sir.”

“How many are high ranked Hunters?”

“As the leader, rank A Kim Cheol Hunter-nim, and there are also seven rank B Hunters, as well.”

“One rank A and seven rank Bs....”

“The new recruits.... Will they be alright?”

Baek Yun-Ho slowly shook his head.

“We don’t have a choice but to think of them as all KIA. If lucky, the rank A, and two, three rank Bs might make out alive.”

...Only if those trapped inside enjoy lady luck’s blessing, that was.

That was how lacking these numbers were. With the current composition of the raid team, they should only be enough to barely conquer the weakest of rank B dungeons.

Anything tougher than that, and you’d be asking for way too much.

Without some kind of a miracle, the odds of their new recruits returning alive was as good as none.

Baek Yun-Ho’s complexion darkened even further.

Hyun Ki-Cheol studied the mood of his boss and cautiously opened his mouth.

“Sir, actually... there was someone else who also entered the Gate along with our recruits.”

Baek Yun-Ho shifted his gaze to his subordinate, his expression changing slightly.

Could it be that a high-ranking Hunter was in the vicinity and entered along with the team after getting curious about the training process?

What else could qualify as a miracle?

This would certainly be it!

Baek Yun-Ho’s voice rose up.

“Who was that person?”

“He’s the Hunter I’ve been trying to scout for the last few days, sir.”

The reply came from behind, instead.

When Baek Yun-Ho and Hyun Ki-Cheol looked over to confirm who it was, they spotted Ahn Sahng-Min, soaked in his own sweat and breathing roughly.

“Apologies for being late, sir. The traffic was unexpectedly heavy.”

Ahn Sahng-Min’s home was furthest from everyone here so he ended up arriving last.

Ahn Sahng-Min shifted his gaze over to the Gate. The Red Gate reminded him of the entrance to an impregnable fortress. Just looking at it made it harder to breathe.

‘However, if it’s Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, then.....’

A man who overcame several ‘incidents’ already unscathed could potentially create a new miracle all by himself.

That’s what he thought.

Baek Yun-Ho hurriedly approached Ahn Sahng-Min.

“Are you saying that the Hunter you’ve been keeping an eye on is in there, too? Is that it?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Ah!”

Baek Yun-Ho suddenly recalled something.

‘Now that I think about it....’

Chief Ahn had been rather busy lately. And as it so happened, there was a Hunter he had been trying to scout to the Guild.

Chief Ahn’s instincts were almost always never wrong.

‘What if....’

A spark of hope was lit in Baek Yun-Ho’s heart.

“What is his rank? Is it A? Or maybe, a B?”

If this Hunter was ranked S, then Baek Yun-Ho would’ve known the identity of this mystery Hunter. There were less than 10 rank S Hunters in the whole of South Korea, after all.

However, Ahn Sahng-Min was shaking his head!

‘Oh my god!’

Baek Yun-Ho’s hardened face finally brightened up considerably.

“Are you saying that a rank S Hunter also went in there?!”

Ahn Sahng-Min calmly replied.

“No, sir. He’s a rank E.”

Almost right away, Baek Yun-Ho’s expression crumpled to a man who accidentally chewed on bugs.

Jin-Woo couldn’t help but get flustered here.

‘Could this be the Gate that supposedly takes you to another world?’

It’d be his first time experiencing one, but he had read all about it online, from the testimonies of those who managed to survive it. And they all said the same thing – that it felt like they were being sucked in.

Jin-Woo had to agree with that assessment, too.

As soon as the Gate sucked him in, a deep darkness swallowed him, and a little while later, he felt like he was being slid across something slick and smooth.

‘Heok!’

When he opened his eyes, he was standing in the middle of a wintry forest, completely covered in white snow.

“What is this place?!”

“This doesn’t look like the interior of a dungeon, does it?!”

“Hey, look! The Gate’s disappeared, too!”

Other Hunters were looking around in confusion, unable to hide their panic as well.

While they were getting more and more flustered, Jin-Woo calmed himself down, narrowed his eyes, and scanned the surrounding area.

‘I don’t sense anything suspicious.’

Thanks to the System repeatedly sending him to weird places, Jin-Woo had gotten used to being in an unexpected foreign environment, which also meant that he could gain his calmness quickly.

The first thing that entered his view was a huge tree.

Not just one, but countless coniferous trees, the kind never seen before on Korean soil, were shooting up straight to the sky with nary a visible gap in between them.

As he scanned his surroundings, his eyes ran into someone else’s. And it was the rank A Hunter Kim Cheol, who was also cautiously scanning the vicinity like him.

‘.....’

‘.....’

The two of them glared at each other for a little while, before looking away.

Hahn Song-Yi had approached him and began tugging at his clothes in the meantime.

“Uhm, excuse me... something bad happened just now, right?”

She looked really scared. Her previous self-confidence was nowhere to be found.

But then... Jin-Woo's hand suddenly shot out towards Hahn Song-Yi's face.

'.....?!'

Hahn Song-Yi's eyes opened super wide.

Grab!

The arrow caught in Jin-Woo's hand trembled continuously as if it lamented missing its target. And that would be the middle of Hahn Song-Yi's forehead.

"Ahh?! Ah...!"

Finally realising what just happened, her face paled in an instant. However, the expected scream came from somewhere else.

"Kyaaaahhk!!"

"Uwa, uwaaahk!!"

Plop.

A male Hunter fell to the snowy ground with blood bubbling out of his mouth, an arrow lodged deep in his temple.

The snowy ground was soon dyed in his blood.

"Euh, euh...."

Hunters began gasping out in shock.

Two arrows flew in at the same time, one aimed at Hahn Song-Yi, while the other one hit its mark. Because of that, though – no one saw Jin-Woo catching the other arrow.

"Over there!"

"It's those b*stards!!"

One of the rank B Hunters pointed towards the top of a tree located far away.

But, even before he had begun pointing his finger, both the gazes of Jin-Woo and Kim Cheol were fixed there.

They could see two lifeforms standing over there, on the snow-covered branches.

'Two people? No, I should say two creatures, huh.'

Long white hair, icy-white skin, and silver eyes.

And the race-specific trait of pointy ears.

These ‘monsters’ were famed for their particularly beautiful countenances, as well as for their rarity, as they could only be encountered in high ranked dungeons.

‘Ice Elves.’

...Also known as ‘White Phantoms’. (TL: The author used pun here. The Korean letter for ‘phantom’ can also mean ‘ear’.)

Those who had never encountered one referred to them as Ice Elves, but the Hunters who did encounter them and fought with them, all took to calling them White Phantoms, instead. While also adding that a pretty name like ‘Elf’ shouldn’t be mixed together with these abominable creatures.

Jin-Woo could immediately guess why the Hunters before him all gnashed their teeth at the mere mention of the White Phantoms.

‘...They are laughing at us, huh.’

The two archers had lowered their bows and disgusting smiles were clearly visible on their faces. It was as if they were staring at a table full of delicacies and couldn’t decide which one to start eating.

‘And you decided on this, huh?’

Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed to a slit.

One arrow to the far left. And another one to the far right. That was no coincidence.

The Hunter with an arrow stuck in his head was a thirty-something who had gone through the Awakening process only recently. With the exception of Hahn Song-Yi, he’d be the weakest of the group.

As for the other arrow....

‘It was aimed at Hahn Song-Yi.’

Indeed, the arrows were meant for the two weakest members of the team.

‘If it weren’t for the System, I’d be the one with an arrow stuck in my head, instead.’

The cheap tactic of the White Phantoms certainly managed to bring out Jin-Woo’s ire. He raised the caught arrow so the creatures could see, and broke it in half.

Crack!

Perhaps taking that as a challenge, the White Phantom who shot that arrow pointed at Jin-Woo and drew a line under his chin.

Seeing that, Jin-Woo simply smirked. However, his eyes were definitely not laughing.

‘...I’ll kill you with my own hands.’

Receiving the trivial provocation of the monster, Jin-Woo simply glared coldly as his reply.

Soon, the pair of White Phantoms disappeared below the tree.

“Looks like this is their way of welcoming us.”

Finally, Kim Cheol opened his mouth.

The lone rank A of the group opened his mouth, prompting everyone to focus their gazes on him as if they had made an agreement prior to coming here.

Actually, he was the leader of this raid team, so that might have been it, though.

“I’m sure some of you have realised it by now. This is inside the Red Gate.”

Kim Cheol spoke as if it was the most obvious thing in the whole world. Of course, no one complained about that.

“Which means, no one will be able to enter here after us, until either we all die, or there is a dungeon break.”

The group all gasped out softly.

“M-mm....”

“Euh....”

The fact that they could no longer hope for a rescue came across as a big mental shock.

“If we remain here, we’ll all die from this freezing cold, or from those b*stards ambushing us. However, I’m going to clear this place and get out of here, by myself if necessary. Are there any of you who wish to join me?”

Kim Cheol’s powerful, confident stare and his broad shoulders imparted a certain sense of trust.

Hunters glanced at each other for a bit, before unanimously voicing their desire to travel together with him.

“Let us move together.”

“I’d like to join you.”

“Let’s go back together, alive.”

“I want to help, too!”

However, Kim Cheol shoved away the chest of the male Hunter who said he wanted to help.

“Keok!”

Even though he controlled his physical strength, at the end of the day, he was still a rank A. The male Hunter retreated several steps back, a deep frown etched on his face from the immense pain coming from his chest.

“Excluding you.”

“Excuse me?”

“And also, you, you, you, and you.”

Kim Cheol pointed to a few more others, not just that male Hunter. Of course, both Jin-Woo and Hahn Song-Yi were included in that.

It was here that Jin-Woo’s own forehead creased up ever so slightly.

All in all, five people in total. They were all either rank C, or lower.

“What did you say?!”

“Do you know anything about Red Gates?”

The male Hunter shook his head at Kim Cheol’s question.

“In here, one day equates to one hour outside. The worst case scenario, it’ll take several months for the dungeon break to occur, or I kill the boss. Under that kind of situation, I can’t walk around with baggage like you.”

“We’re baggage to you?!”

The Hunters who were pointed out by Kim Cheol got all riled up, but once the rank A Hunter glared at them, they all shut their mouths close.

Kim Cheol continued on, now sounding as if he was being considerate and all.

“Don’t feel too bad, however. If all of you manage to survive until we kill the boss, then all of you will go back home alive, too.”

“Even still....”

The singled-out Hunters sent out desperate, pleading stares to the Hunters near Kim Cheol, but not a single one stepped forward.

No, they were far too busy avoiding meeting the gazes.

It was then....

“Excuse me.”

A rank B female Hunter from Kim Cheol’s group raised her hand. Kim Cheol turned to look at her, and she pointed at Jin-Woo.

“It’s fine to go over there from here, right?”

“....Do what you want.”

She didn’t even look back once and walked straight to Jin-Woo’s side.

Kim Cheol alternated his gaze between the woman and Jin-Woo, and smirked derisively, before declaring out loudly.

“We’ve got an opening this side, so I’ll accept one more person!”

“Me, me!!”

The male Hunter who got shoved away by Kim Cheol just now hurriedly ran over, fearing that the lone rank A in the group, and the leader, might change his mind.

Well, that was how it should be. Jin-Woo thought as much.

‘Yup, this woman is the strange one here.’

Jin-Woo stared at the woman now standing next to him with a puzzled expression on his face. Her gaze met with Jin-Woo’s, and she whispered in a low voice so no one else could hear.

“That man Kim Cheol? Well, he couldn’t see the arrow flying in, you see.”

Even if one was a high ranked Hunter, there was no way every Stat of his would be developed equally. For instance, he might be a rank A, but his Agility could be low. Jin-Woo knew how Stats worked, so he didn’t think too much about that.

“So, what are you saying?”

Then, the woman smiled refreshingly.

“I’m guessing you’re not a rank E. Am I right?”

REPORT

In front of the Red Gate.

Baek Yun-Ho's expression remained gloomy. Ahn Sahng-Min provided a short summary on who Seong Jin-Woo was, but his anxiety level hadn't decreased by one bit.

“In the end, that’s all speculation, isn’t it?”

“Yes, sir. You’re right.”

Ahn Sahng-Min readily accepted that assessment. It was true that he didn't know anything about Seong Jin-Woo, after all.

‘But, if the boss checked Hunter Seong Jin-Woo out with his own eyes, he’d have changed his mind right away.’

There was something different about Seong Jin-Woo.

And the fact that he couldn't adequately describe that with words frustrated Ahn Sahng-Min to no end.

Baek Yun-Ho's gaze shifted back to the Red Gate.

“In the end, the only person I can believe in is Kim Cheol....”

It was then.

“Sir, there won’t be any problems with Hunter Kim Cheol, I assure you.”

One more person butted in among the group of Baek Yun-Ho, Ahn Sahng-Min, and Hyun Ki-Cheol. The gazes of three men automatically shifted in that direction simultaneously.

It was Ju Seong-Chan, Chief of the First Division of the White Tiger Guild.

He scanned the three people in front and spoke in a proud voice.

“I’ve been training Hunter Kim Cheol quite strictly, so he could be ready for all contingencies.”

Originally, the initial training of new recruits was left to the Second Division, but the First Division would be in charge of the Awakened ranked A or higher.

Those promising individuals who were scheduled to enter the ranks of the main combat force soon got to enjoy a different starting point from everyone else.

Seeing Ju Seong-Chan's confidence, Baek Yun-Ho's expression softened slightly.

"How were Hunter Kim Cheol's grades?"

"They are excellent, sir. Just his combat capabilities alone, he'd not fall behind anyone from the current members of the Guild's main combat force."

"Is that so?"

A smile managed to return to Baek Yun-Ho's lips.

Kim Cheol was a rank A. Even among high ranked Hunters, he was a talent that must be held on to.

If, as the leader of this raid team, he commanded the rank B Hunters well and managed to clear this Gate...!

There would be some losses among the rank C Hunters, but from the White Tiger's perspective, the survival of high ranked Hunters came first.

'It's a relief that Hunter Kim Cheol's abilities are top-notch....'

The weakened sparks of hope regained some life again.

Ju Seong-Chan managed to calm the boss man down and narrowed his eyes at Ahn Sahng-Min, clearly in derision.

"From what I heard just now... A rank E Hunter who might have gone through a Re-Awakening process, was it? You were saying something about that...."

Ju Seong-Chan snorted dismissively.

"My Hunter Kim Cheol should prove to be more effective than someone like that, a Hunter with no proven qualities."

Ahn Sahng-Min's expression hardened. He was being looked down on here. However, he didn't raise his voice and let anger take over him.

'Let's just wait and see who's correct at the end of the day....'

The four men shifted their gazes at the same time over to the Red Gate that had trapped their Hunters.

Wuwuwu...

The crimson light oozing from the Gate seemed especially more ominous than ever before.

“I’m guessing you’re not a rank E. Am I right?”

The female Hunter asked Jin-Woo quite openly.

Jin-Woo opened his mouth in response.

“Well, then. Let me ask you something as well.”

“Of course.”

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to Kim Cheol and the Hunters gathering around him. They were busy planning their next move before they got going.

“You guys, you’re supposed to be new recruits, yet how can you be this calm?”

“The first thing we’ve been taught is that ‘Anything can happen inside a dungeon’, you see.”

....Anything could happen inside a dungeon, she said.

Jin-Woo knew this fact better than anyone here, actually.

“Every one of us has been trained properly. Especially that Kim Cheol over there. He even received a special training regime, too. He’s scheduled to join up with the White Tiger’s main combat force.”

They didn’t fear dungeons, because they had received prior training.

Jin-Woo could only be flabbergasted by that revelation. And then, almost right away, he realised that all of these people were no different from Hahn Song-Yi.

She said that they had been sufficiently trained or whatever, but just what kind of uses would that have here? They were simply showing off without realising how terrifying a dungeon could become.

‘Knowing something and experiencing it are two different things.’

More so, when your fragile belief of you knowing everything about dungeons develops just a tiny little crack – it’d all come crashing down like a dam with a hole getting swept away by the deluge of water.

Building up one’s confidence took a long time, but breaking it down only took a single moment. He could see the fate in store for Kim Cheol’s team already.

They might look okay from the outside, but in the end, they were all helpless noobs.

“You still haven’t answered me, though.”

“Excuse me?”

After hearing that, Jin-Woo’s gaze shifted back to the strange woman.

“My question. You haven’t answered it yet.”

The question about whether he was a rank E or not.

She seemed to be a rather tenacious customer, this woman.

“Why should I tell you that?”

He replied in a blunt and a bit curt manner, but the female Hunter, Park Hui-Jin, was now crying out in elation and clenched her fist. Inwardly, of course.

Park Hui-Jin had met many people in her life and she immediately knew what Jin-Woo’s response meant.

And that would be his unbridled confidence.

‘Yes, I didn’t see it wrong!’

There was another thing that gave her even more assurance; while she was being trained back in the White Tiger Guild, she had often witnessed the movements of many high-ranked Hunters.

However, Jin-Woo’s hand just now....

She had never seen anyone move as quickly as Jin-Woo’s hand catching that arrow.

‘I mean, all I could do was to barely confirm what just happened, even with my eyesight!’

She used to be a top-tier athlete before becoming a melee-type Hunter through her Awakening, so she was pretty confident of her dynamic vision.

Park Hui-Jin’s eyes began sparkling.

‘This guy, he’s at least rank A.’

Or, even higher than that....

In order to ascertain a more definite answer, Park Hui-Jin asked him again.

“Don’t be like that now. Can’t you tell me, please?”

“Don’t feel like it.”

That was the end of their conversation. Jin-Woo turned his head away.

He definitely didn’t feel like being in the receiving end of endless stream of questions, and also, Kim Cheol was walking closer to them as well.

Jin-Woo's eyes and Kim Cheol's met.

"We will...."

Kim Cheol's voice was harsh, low. Didn't matter what he was trying to convey here, he sounded threatening and menacing.

"...Be using the road."

He didn't saunter over here just to declare which path they would be using, though. No, Kim Cheol's eyes were asking what Jin-Woo's group would do. Along with the hidden threat of 'Don't you dare follow us'.

'.....'

Jin-Woo scanned his surroundings once more, before reverting his gaze back to Kim Cheol.

"And we will be going through the forest."

"...I'll wish you luck."

'Well, you guys will be the ones needing that luck later on, though...'

Jin-Woo didn't mouth his inner thoughts, however.

"Sure thing. You too."

With that, Jin-Woo's group headed towards the forest.

After ensuring that the group had completely disappeared into the forest, Kim Cheol began guffawing out uncontrollably.

"What a bunch of idiots."

"Excuse me?"

"Look over there."

Kim Cheol uncrossed his arms and pointed towards some trees.

Not just one or two, either – everywhere he pointed at, trees bore the scars that suspiciously looked like claw marks of potentially gigantic creatures.

"That.... isn't that?!"

"It's a bear."

"An Ice Bear?!"

A bear-type monster, infamous among all the beast-type monsters as the most ferocious! Those claw marks were them marking their territory.

The Hunters in Kim Cheol's group saw those and clicked their tongues.

"Tsk, tsk...."

"It'd been better if they stayed put here and waited till the end...."

"Looks like innocent people will die because of a rank E taking the lead."

"I mean, would that rank E have received any prior training like us?"

Kim Cheol stared at the forest and chuckled derisively.

'That's to be expected from a measly rank E.'

.....Wait.

Suddenly, Kim Cheol's smile disappeared.

'Most of that group is rank Cs, and there is a rank B among them too, so how come.....?'

How come he thought Jin-Woo was that group's leader? Indeed, he hadn't felt that anything was amiss, right up until he realised this weird incongruity by himself.

Still, Kim Cheol shook his head.

'...Well, it doesn't matter.'

They were all going to die soon, anyway. Worrying about themselves took precedence over what would happen to the weaklings who wouldn't last for long, to begin with.

There was nothing he could do about the dead, but well, shouldn't the ones that were supposed to live, live on?

Kim Cheol turned towards the road and spoke up.

"Let's depart."

Jin-Woo took the lead and walked up ahead.

But before long, Park Hui-Jin stood in front of him.

"What is it?"

"Have you lost your mind?"

Jin-Woo crossed his arms and displayed how unhappy he was to hear that. Meaning, she'd have to be careful with her follow-up.

Perhaps she understood Jin-Woo's warning, Park Hui-Jin's voice had softened somewhat.

"I'm sorry. But I need to say this."

Park Hui-Jin's finger pointed towards one of the surrounding trees.

“Can you see that?”

There was a huge claw mark on the tree's bark.

“Over there, too! And there!”

Almost every single tree had their barks greatly damaged and it was hard to find one that was still intact.

“This entire place is full of the bear's territorial markings, you know?! This entire forest is the bear type monster's habitat!”

Dogs or apes were weaker than tigers or lions. Such logic also applied to monsters as well. The tiger or lion type monsters were much more difficult to fight against when compared to dog or ape type monsters.

So, what about a bear-type, then?

A bear, a polar bear no less, was seen as one of the strongest carnivorous land animals out there. And right now, Jin-Woo's group had entered a forest where monsters based on such animals were residing.

Of course, Park Hui-Jin would get angry.

“We need to go back right now! Before the monsters show up!”

“Tsk, tsk.”

Jin-Woo clicked his tongue.

Park Hui-Jin thought that Jin-Woo would show one of the three responses – get angry, get stunned, or accept what she told him.

Unfortunately for her, her expectation was wide off the mark.

She was the one advising him against the irrational and hasty decision here, yet it was Jin-Woo looking at her as if she was the idiot.

‘Why... why is he looking at me like that?!’

Park Hui-Jin's face reddened up from anger.

“W-what is it?”

Her voice rose up again.

Jin-Woo spat out a long sigh and opened his mouth.

“It's difficult to find a tree without the territorial markings, which means that there are more than one or two Ice Bears here, yes?”

“T-tthat is why we much go ba.....”

“That is precisely why we’re moving through the forest.”

“Eh?”

Park Hui-Jin’s eyes went round in confusion.

‘She still doesn’t get it even with that massive hint?’

Jin-Woo had little choice but to tell it straight to her.

“When we’re moving through the forest, we only have to worry about Ice Bears.”

“...Ah!”

Only then did Park Hui-Jin understood Jin-Woo’s intention.

The meaning behind lots of Ice Bears was simple – that there were no other monsters strong enough to hunt Ice Bears in this forest.

To be more precise, the group didn’t have to worry about fighting monsters stronger than Ice Bears here.

‘Why haven’t I thought about that....?’

Park Hui-Jin became ashamed about shouting at Jin-Woo just now.

Her head dropped low, even the skin of her neck reddening up from embarrassment.

Jin-Woo continued to click his tongue.

The whole reason why a dungeon was a scary place was that no one knew what might pop out when you were inside. Well, you wouldn’t be able to come up with a plan if you didn’t know what kind of enemies were waiting for you there.

However, didn’t the enemies of this place graciously reveal themselves already?

‘...Bear-type monsters, is it?’

Jin-Woo didn’t know how strong these Ice Bears were, but he was sure of them being weaker than those two White Phantom archers. They were wearing clothing that looked to be made out of bear felt.

That was why had chosen the forest route.

He was thinking of traversing the forest and increasing his level, and at the same time, keep an eye out on Kim Cheol’s group and the movements of the White Phantoms while waiting for his chance to act.

That was the safest way available.

‘.....??’

Abruptly, Jin-Woo became rather puzzled by what he saw.

“...Why is your face still so red?”

Park Hui-Jin’s face was far too red to be normal. She couldn’t raise her head and managed to squeeze out a voice that was smaller than a buzzing mosquito.

“It... it’s because... too cold....”

“Fuu....”

Jin-Woo spat out a long groan and summoned his Store. He quickly browsed through the items for sale and spotted thick fur coats and shoes designed for Winter.

Tti-ring.

[Item: Warm fur coat]

Rarity: None

Type: Miscellaneous

Warms up the wearer’s body.

Price: 10 Gold

[Item: Warm boots]

Rarity: None

Type: Miscellaneous

Once worn, provides warmth to wearer’s feet.

Price: 10 Gold

‘Fur coat and the shoes cost 10 Gold each....’

Unlike items with added effects, regular items didn’t cost a lot to buy. No, compared to the amount of Gold in his possession, they were oh-so-cheap.

[Remaining Gold: 431,930]

‘Still, I’d never have guessed that I have to buy japtem with my Gold....’

Jin-Woo chose ‘Buy’ for all of them.

Since he couldn’t just give to some and ignore others, Jin-Woo spent 100 Gold and bought the articles of clothing for all five people.

Poof.

Five coats and five pairs of boots suddenly popped up in front of his eyes. And of course, the eyes of all four people, excluding Jin-Woo, all grew super-wide.

“Heok?!”

“W-what the heck?! Was that separate space magic?!”

Park Hui-Jin was taken aback, too, and she hurriedly raised her head to look at Jin-Woo.

Not caring whether they were shocked or not, Jin-Woo spoke to them disinterestedly.

“Put them on.”

He finished speaking and reached down to grab the closest fur coat, but then, Hahn Song-Yi suddenly grasped his sleeve.

‘.....?’

When their gazes met, Hahn Song-Yi asked him while looking rather scared and confused.

“A-ahjussi, just what’s going on with you? You managed to catch that arrow, and now, you used some strange magic to take these clothes out, too.”

Frowns formed on the forehead of Jin-Woo. It didn’t take a genius to figure out that, at this rate, he’d be swarmed by the endless streams of questions and get irritated to no end.

‘Right, let’s use this chance to clearly draw the line.’

Jin-Woo raised his voice and spoke in a firm voice.

“Hahn Song-Yi, I brought you here with me, so I will take full responsibility and protect you. However...”

Jin-Woo’s voice became colder next.

“...Don’t ask me about anything.”

Jin-Woo then swept his gaze against Park Hui-Jin as well as other Hunters tagging along.

“The same goes for the rest of you. Do not ask me anything, and do not demand anything from me.”

He didn’t stop there, though.

“If you don’t like it, then you can just leave now. I won’t stop you.”

The two male Hunters originally didn’t choose to follow Jin-Woo, but only tagged along because of the rank B Park Hui-Jin. They alternated their gazes between the fur coats and Jin-Woo, before hurriedly shaking their heads.

REPORT

There was one more thing – one more reason why Jin-Woo chose the forest route.

‘Status window.’

[Name: Seong Jin-Woo]

[Level: 51]

[Class: Shadow Sovereign]

[Title: The one who overcame the adversity (extra 1)]

Jin-Woo silently summoned his Status window and swapped his current Title from ‘the one who overcame the adversity’ to that of the ‘Slaughterer of Wolves’.

[Title: Slaughterer of Wolves (extra 1)]

A Title given to a hunter skilled in hunting wolves. When facing animal-type monsters, all of your Stats will increase by 40%.

A chance to abuse this plainly-cheating buff had fallen on his laps, so why should he go anywhere else now?

Tti-ring.

[An animal-type monster has appeared.]

[The effect of the current Title will activate.]

A smile crept up on Jin-Woo’s face after he confirmed his Stat values shooting up.

‘Nice.’

It was then.

The Hunters all began screaming out, loudly.

“It, it’s the bear!”

“It’s the Ice Bear!”

An Ice Bear that had picked up on the scents of humans was slowly trudging towards the group.

These humans were its enemies that had invaded its territory. Obviously, it'd not look too kindly towards the intruders.

Growl....

The Ice Bear bared its fangs, transparent-like-ice, and slowly raised its massive frame on its hind legs. It's huge and hulking figure completely filled up the Hunters' vision!

“Ah....”

The creature did resemble a polar bear, but it was almost twice the size, and the magic crystal, the symbol of all monsters, could be seen in the middle of its chest area as if it was some kind of a proud emblem.

ROAR!!

It roared out furiously, the ground seemingly quaking under its might!

All the Hunters, excluding Jin-Woo, all froze stiff on the spot after hearing the ice Bear's roar.

Park Hui-Jin's expression crumpled unsightly.

‘Oh, so we only need to be mindful of Ice Bears, was it?!’

How could anyone say that sort of nonsense after seeing that monster?!

She almost fell for Seong Jin-Woo's pretty convincing argument. But, upon seeing an Ice Bear, she was certain of one thing.

‘We definitely shouldn't have chosen the forest route!’

Sensing the approaching danger to the group, Park Hui-Jin stepped out in front of the group and shouted out.

“I'll draw its attention towards me, so everyone must... Kyah?!”

The scruff of Park Hui-Jin's neck was yanked back by a considerable force, and she had to back step several times to make sure that she didn't end up on her butt.

After somehow regaining her balance, she raised her head only to find Jin-Woo standing before her.

“Hey, what was that all about?!” Jin-Woo pointed at Park Hui-Jin. “I'm telling you this right now. I'll be killing all the monsters from now on.”

Obviously, he couldn't let anyone steal his experience points, now could he?

For Jin-Woo, these bears were perfect health tonics to buff him up for his inevitable showdown with the true enemies of this place, the White Phantoms.

“Hah?!”

Park Hui-Jin couldn't hide her astonishment.

‘Did he just yank me back because he wants to monopolise the monster?’

The other two male Hunters, who so happened to be Mage-types, also stopped casting their spells in sheer dumbfoundedness.

“No matter how strong you think you are, that thing is a monster of a high-rank dungeon!”

Completely ignoring Park Hui-Jin's furious voice coming from behind him, Jin-Woo walked right towards the Ice Bear.

‘Well, it's not going to be okay to use daggers for this one.’

The blood splatter would make a mess of things, wouldn't it?

Jin-Woo had already summoned his two daggers almost out of reflex, but stored them back in his Inventory. Instead, he clenched his fists tightly.

‘Well, I promised to just observe, but this is an emergency, so I'm sure they'll understand. Right?’

Jin-Woo's glare collided mid-air with the Ice Bear's.

Roar!

The Ice Bear swung its telephone-pole-thick front arm towards Jin-Woo like a streak of lightning.

Swish-!!

However, the attack only swiped at the empty air.

‘Why is it so fast compared to its size?’

Jin-Woo was already above the Ice Bear's head. It was here that he kind of understood the reason for this monster's infamy.

“Even then....”

He also sensed that all his level ups until now weren't in vain.

Before the Ice Bear could lift its head up, Jin-Woo punched with all his might right in the middle of the monster's forehead.

Kaboom!!

The head of the Ice Bear slammed down on the snowy ground with an explosive force.

Its skull was completely obliterated; with its limp tongue hanging outside the slack maw, the Ice Bear stopped moving completely.

[Level up!]

'Hell yeah!'

He was thinking that his level up was just around the corner, and now, he was glad to have stopped Park Hui-Jin from taking any action.

"You... you, just what are you??"

Jin-Woo heard that trembling voice and looked behind him, only to spot four speechless faces staring back at him.

Jin-Woo sheepishly scratched the side of his head.

'I warned them earlier because I didn't want to run into this sort of situation....'

It seemed that a person would become rather forgetful whenever he or she witnessed something utterly beyond their capacity to understand.

Left with little choice, Jin-Woo had to state his position once more.

"I told you, I'll not tolerate anyone asking me questions. If you're unhappy with my methods, then...." Jin-Woo pointed his finger in the direction of Kim Cheol's team. "You can always go that way."

Only then did Park Hui-Jin regain her senses, and her facial expression changed.

"You think I'll leave your side after seeing how you one-punched that Ice Bear??"

Honestly, Park Hui-Jin was now overflowing with joy.

She only chose to follow this youth because her gut feeling said he'd be a better option than Kim Cheol, but holy cow, she quickly discovered that she had quite literally stumbled onto an unexpected jackpot here.

She was blessed with a quick head, so it was easy to come to a conclusion. If she really wanted to get out of this place alive, then she had to follow Seong Jin-Woo.

She feared that Seong Jin-Woo might suggest they go their separate ways, so she hurriedly made a suggestion first, her heart beating anxiously.

"Mister Jin-Woo, please take over the leader's position. We'll definitely follow every one of your commands from now on."

'...Well, I did say I wouldn't humour their demands at all, but....'

Jin-Woo pondered for a bit, before nodding his head. Thinking about the near future, it seemed that this arrangement would prove to be convenient for him.

Park Hui-Jin looked behind her.

The student named Hahn Song-Yi was someone Seong Jin-Woo brought along, so there was no need to ask her. So, that left the two male Hunters.

“I’m sure you two also agree with my suggestion, yes?”

The two Hunters, now being on the receiving end of the unexpected stare, alternated their gazes between the corpse of the Ice Bear and Jin-Woo, before hurriedly nodding their heads.

Once more, in front of the Red Gate.

Hyun Ki-Cheol used his handkerchief to wipe away the cold sweat from his brows, his eyes locked on his watch.

Baek Yun-Ho asked him.

“How long has it been?”

“It’s been about three hours now, sir.”

“Three hours.... Meaning, it’s almost been three days inside.”

Baek Yun-Ho’s voice sounded grave. Out of four people gathered here, only he had personally experienced entering a Red Gate before.

One of the S-ranked Hunters representing South Korea – Baek Yun-Ho.

Even to someone like him, a Red Gate was a challenging place to survive.

With a complicated expression, Baek Yun-Ho recalled his experiences.

“The most terrifying aspect of the Red Gate is that... you’re thrown into a completely different world.”

This was a rare recollection of the past as told by an S-rank Hunter. Naturally, the attention of Ahn Sahng-Min, Joo Sung-Chan, and Hyun Ki-Cheol focused on him.

Baek Yun-Ho continued on.

“Once you cross the Gate, the place you end up could be a desert with temperatures soaring past 60 degrees Celsius, or it could be a dense jungle full of poisonous insects and snakes. Or, it could be the middle of a snow-covered field where it’s so cold that you’d immediately develop frost bites.”

Gulp.

The three men simultaneously swallowed their dry saliva.

“Until you actually enter it, no one knows what awaits them beyond the Red Gate. So, how can anyone prepare for something like this?”

It was the same story as today. The Gate that looked plain and normal immediately changed its colour to red as soon as Hunters entered it.

“Your skin is burning under the hot glares of the sun, or you’re tormented by poisonous insects throughout the day, or your flesh rots from the skin-peeling cold.... And so, the weakest of your group would start dying first.”

“Oh, my god....”

Hyun Ki-Cheol spat out a gasp as if he could hardly calm himself down.

“But, even when you’re in such a perilous situation, you still have to fight monsters as well.”

Just from listening to his explanations, they could understand the hopelessness of the current situation. However, the explanation didn’t end there.

“Okay, then. Let’s say that you’ve somehow adapted to your new environments. From then on, you will have to procure food.”

Indeed, one would have to secure enough food to last a few weeks at a minimum, or at worst, for several months. Now that would be a huge challenge in and of itself.

“While stuck in the unforgiving surroundings and suffering from constant hunger, all you can trust is your magic energy compass.”

The magic energy compass always pointed towards the source of a powerful magic energy emission.

The only ways to escape from a Red Gate were to follow the needle of the magic energy compass, locate the boss and kill it, or wait until the dungeon break occurs.

“Now, think about waiting for days, weeks, or even months while only staring at that compass. How can anyone not go mad from that?”

The three men nodded their heads. These three knew that normal people like them would not last one day in places as hostile as those.

“I said that it’s been three days already, didn’t I?”

“Yes.”

After hearing Hyun Ki-Cheol's reply, Baek Yun-Ho formed a distressed expression.

"Most likely, all Hunters ranked C and below have died by now."

Kim Cheol was ranked 'A'. However, no matter how good his skills were, it was impossible for a rank A to protect everyone. Unless it was a rank S Hunter standing by their side....

Which meant....

"All we can pray for now is the safe return of the higher ranked Hunters."

This was the conclusion derived from his personal experience.

In Baek Yun-Ho's mind, the Hunters ranked C and below were already as good as dead by now.

Evening.

Large chunks of meat were nicely sizzling on top of a campfire.

"You know, this bear meat, it's a bit chewy but not as bad as I thought."

"Would you like some more?"

"Aigoo, thank you kindly."

Goh Myung-Hwan expertly sliced the meat of the Ice Bear and placed them on a plate pushed forward by Yun Ki-Joong. These two men were the rank C Hunters following Jin-Woo.

Both Park Hui-Jin and Hahn Song-Yi were also slowly chewing on the bear meat, although their portions weren't as large as the men's.

"Unni, please pass me the pepper."

"What about salt?"

"Mm, the seasoning's just about fine, so it's okay."

They all looked to, more or less, have adapted to the living conditions of the dungeon. From the campfire, to the blankets wrapped around them, and the tents all set up, too...

They didn't seem to be in trouble at all.

Heck, from a certain perspective, one could say that they looked rather comfy, instead.

Goh Myung-Hwan scanned the vicinity and spoke up.

"Don't you think the attacks of the Ice Bears have lessened lately?"

Park Hui-Jin replied to that question.

“Well, that’s because the team leader has annihilated their numbers, that’s why.”

“That man, it’s like he has some sort of unresolved vendetta against these bears from his previous life or something. His eyes go all crazy when he spots an Ice Bear. He’s so scary whenever he does that. Really, really scary.”

By now, Jin-Woo’s title had been set as the team leader.

Park Hui-Jin felt Jin-Woo’s absence and craned her neck a little to scan the surroundings herself.

“Now that I think about it, where did the team leader disappear to?”

Yun Ki-Joong had his head almost buried in the plate as he chomped down on the meat, but still, raised his head to make his reply.

“He went out a little while ago, saying that he’s going to take a look around here.”

“Huh.” Park Hui-Jin formed a helpless expression. “Roaming inside a high ranked dungeon all alone..... Isn’t he scared at all?”

Yun Ki-Joong formed a sly grin.

“If it’s him, it’s not going to be a problem.”

“Oh, well. He’s strong enough to kill Ice Bears, high-rank monsters, with his bare hands, after all.”

Goh Myung-Hwan followed up to Yun Ki-Joong’s words and continued on.

“But, by the way.... since we’re discussing this and all.... Just how high must your rank be, if you can beat up a nonsensically huge monster like that?”

Stop.

Everyone suddenly became utterly silent.

They were all curious about the same thing as well. But, they dared not say anything, fearful of being kicked out of this place.

“....Let’s just finish out meals first.”

Everyone nodded their heads at Park Hui-Jin’s suggestion.

Jin-Woo searched through the forest, and made his exit as he brushed past some thickets.

‘It must be somewhere nearby....’

He could sense the presences of multiple Ice Bears coming from somewhere. From last night, he had been carefully tracking the Ice Bears.

This was all because he had finally realised that Ice Bears were coming from the same direction.

Jin-Woo continued to search, before his eyes began glittering dangerously.

‘Found you!’

He spotted dozens of caverns on a cliff-like wall, lying beyond some bushes. And he sensed presences of more than one lifeform coming from each of the caves.

Hell, he didn’t even have to expand his Perception here; his eyes could clearly see many Ice Bears lazily moving in and out of several caves.

Just a quick head count and he found over 30 bears.

In other words, this was literally a bear farm.

The corners of Jin-Woo’s lips arched up.

He deliberately came here alone to eliminate the possibility of eyewitnesses. This would be the perfect opportunity to utilise his shadow soldiers.

Indeed, he had been waiting for a moment like this.

‘Come out.’

When he inwardly called out, the soldiers wearing black armour soundlessly materialised and surrounded him.

“You all understand that this is your first sortie, right?”

What he meant by that was, just as one’s impression was decided upon through the first encounter, these guys would have to impress him with their first battle, too.

‘.....’

‘.....’

The shadow soldiers stood at attention in eerie silence, with nary a hint of disorder.

‘Nice.’

Jin-Woo smirked deeply, seeing them like that.

Sniff, sniff....

Meanwhile, more and more Ice Bears began emerging from the caves after detecting Jin-Woo's scent.

'Looks like the other side is done preparing, too.'

Jin-Woo pointed at the Ice Bears.

"Go."

As soon as his order was issued, the shadow soldiers rushed forward as if they were sliding on ice.

REPORT

The shadow soldiers rapidly closed in on their targets. Unfortunately, the angry swipes of the Ice Bears' front paws were faster than their movements.

Swing!

Kwajeek!!

A single hit, and one shadow soldier was obliterated.

If it wasn't a 'shadow' underneath the armours but an actual human being, that attack would surely have ripped him apart into several pieces.

'Hmm...'

Jin-Woo frowned deeply.

'As I thought, did I ask for too much?'

Whether it was their physical strength or their body sizes, these Ice Bears were difficult enemies for the shadow soldiers to fight against.

However, something quite surprising happened next.

'Heok!'

Jin-Woo's eyes opened wider.

The soldier with its chest torn open by the Ice Bear's attack suddenly transformed into a clump of black smoke just before it fell to the ground.

Poof!

The black smoke coagulated in a spot a couple of steps away and it reverted back to its original appearance.

'Very good!'

Jin-Woo's expression brightened up.

The 'undeads' – he remembered this crucial fact that he had unwittingly forgotten about until now.

The Ice Bear became even more agitated than before after realising its attack was all for nothing, and it roared out loudly.

ROOOAR!!

And so, as the infantrymen bought time out in front, the magic soldiers standing at the back had completed their spells.

Boom!!

Kaboom!!

The balls of flames leaving the ends of the magic soldiers' hands exploded here, there, and everywhere. The shadow soldiers swept up in the explosions regenerated right away, but on the other hand, the Ice Bears could only roll around screaming in sheer pain and agony, as their bodies caught on fire.

Rooooar!!

Growl!!

Meanwhile, the shadow soldiers didn't waste time and swiftly approached the defenceless Bears, before stabbing down on them with their blades.

Stab!!

Staaaaab!!!

One by one, the triumphant and arrogant Ice Bears were falling at the cooperative tactics of the shadow infantrymen and the magic soldiers.

'Hiya....'

Jin-Woo continued to spectate on the proceedings with an expression filled with great interest and happiness.

The infantrymen and their quick regenerative abilities; the magic soldiers and their superb firepower.

The overall combat prowess of the shadow soldiers had far exceeded his initial expectations.

Soon, the Ice Bears were forced into retreat by the might of the shadow soldiers and were pushed back towards the entrance of the caves.

He was thinking that the end of the battle was drawing near, but then....

ROOOOAR!!

Accompanied by the eardrum-shaking roar, a huge shadow slowly emerged from one of the caves.

"Isn't that...."

Even Jin-Woo's eyes grew extra round and super-large.

The bear that came out was at least a head taller and double the body size compared to others around it.

Roar!!

Just a single swipe from this huge bear, and multiple soldiers were blown away.

SWOOOSH-!!

Kabboooooom!!

The regeneration rate of the soldiers could not keep up with the huge Ice Bear's relentless attacks.

Kwajeeeck!!

Slam!!

Jin-Woo could only leak out a groan after seeing that.

“So, it's the leader of the pack, is it....?”

He kind of suspected that, since there was a pack, there should be a leader leading it, too. However, the b*stard turned out to be much bigger and stronger than he had anticipated.

“Krooaar!!”

The huge Ice Bear leader obliterated all the shadow soldiers appearing before it, and approached Jin-Woo at a frightening speed.

It was at this point that a message popped up in his view.

Tti-ring.

[Your Mana has been depleted and shadow soldiers cannot regenerate anymore.]

[Your Mana has been depleted and shadow soldiers cannot regenerate anymore.]

‘What??’

He hurriedly checked his MP value, and just as the System had warned him, it was totally gone.

[MP: 0/1860]

Once his MP had been drained. The obliterated shadow soldiers didn't regenerate and simply entered back into Jin-Woo's shadow.

In other words, in order to regenerate the lost soldiers, he needed lots more Mana.

‘That d*mn Mana....’

One more reason to enhance his Intelligence Stat, then.

Jin-Woo scratched the side of his head. With the appearance of the Ice Bear leader, the flow of the battle had reversed completely.

However, Jin-Woo still had plenty of leeway.

‘Since their boss has shown up, this side should also step up.’

Jin-Woo, still standing there with his arms crossed, summoned the ‘boss’ of the shadow soldiers.

“Igrit!!”

One more shadow escaped from Jin-Woo’s shadow.

And from that shadow, a knight wearing a helm with decorative mane rose up soundlessly.

Jin-Woo pointed forward with his chin.

Igrit bowed to Jin-Woo, before rushing towards the Ice Bear leader.

Tap, tap, tap, tap!

Igrit lightly evaded the Ice Bear leader’s front paw, and slid between its hind legs. It brushed past the hind legs again, pulled out a dagger and cut the Bear’s tendon.

“Roar?!”

That was the beginning.

Igrit unsheathed his longsword and deftly evaded the Bear’s enraged attacks, all the while shaving away at the giant monster’s body with his blade.

Tendons, claws, front paw, legs, torso – bits and chunks of meat from various areas of the monster sheared off and fell to the ground piece by piece.

“Huh....”

Jin-Woo could only gasp out in admiration at Igrit’s crafty and elaborate movements.

The last place Igrit hit was the bear’s head.

Slice!

The giant Ice Bear’s head separated from its body and flew away. Before it landed on the ground, though, Igrit easily snatched it. He trod proudly towards Jin-Woo, and knelt before him.

Plop.

And then, he placed the dead bear's head before Jin-Woo's feet. It was as if the knight was presenting the spoils of victory to his sovereign.

Jin-Woo swallowed dry saliva and gazed at the kneeling Igrit and his bowed head.

'If Igrit decided to use his sword from the beginning, would I have been able to defeat him?'

The Ice Bears, without their leader present, lost all semblance of order and became utterly confused, before they were cleanly swept away by the remaining shadow soldiers. That brought about the end to the battles.

The result was truly satisfying.

[Shadow Infantryman Lv. 2]

[Shadow Infantryman Lv. 3]

[Shadow Infantryman Lv. 2]

[Shadow magic soldier Lv. 2]

The levels of the soldiers had risen up nicely. Also, as these shadow soldiers were seen as a part of his skill, even Jin-Woo's level had risen up by 3.

Most of all, there was another point he found much to his liking.

"Rise up."

[Shadow extraction was a success.]

[Shadow extraction was a success.]

[Shadow extraction was a success.]

....And that point would be the fact that he could recruit new 'friends' now.

Roooarr....

From the shadows of several Ice Bears that Jin-Woo had selected, which obviously included the boss bear, black shapes began to slowly rise up.

'And I thought that armour-wearing bears would pop up....'

His expectation turned out to be far off the mark, unfortunately.

These creatures came with the name tag that said 'shadow beast soldier'; at a casual glance, they kind of resembled bears, but it was still difficult to tell whether these monsters were actually corporeal or not.

The creatures continued to pant as the black steam-like fog rose up from their backs.

‘Well, uh, they might not look that great but, they are definitely the shadows of the Ice Bears.’

That explosive strength, that destructive power!! Without a doubt, they would prove to be useful.

It happened then.

Rooaarr...

Jin-Woo’s ears twitched after hearing the roars of bears coming from the distance. There were several of them, as a matter of fact.

‘Meaning, this isn’t the only bear farm, huh?’

It was already getting too late today, so should he pay a visit there tomorrow?

A bright smile formed on Jin-Woo’s face.

“Uwaaahk!!”

“Keo-heok!!”

His comrades screamed in despair.

Kim Cheol’s bloodshot eyes shot open wide.

‘No, this can’t be!!’

How can I....

How can this Kim Cheol fail?!

He was supposed to become the elite of the White Tiger Guild. They even trained him with the special program so he’d enter the Guild’s main combat force right away.

However, to fail like this?

He could not acknowledge it.

While enduring against the biting cold and starvation, they fought off against a group of snowmen. Then, they encountered snow giants. They lost two of their numbers, but in the end, emerged victorious against the giants. He thought that the conquest of this ‘dungeon’ was going according to plan.

However....

However!!

As soon as the desperate struggle against the snow giants ended, the White Phantoms sneak attacked from the rear as if they were waiting for this chance.

These wicked, treacherous b*stards had been in hiding, waiting for the raid team to exhaust all their stamina first.

What happened next was a one-sided massacre. In the blink of an eye, the Hunters were annihilated.

“C-captain!!”

A fallen Hunter reached out towards Kim Cheol with his bloodied hand.

Kim Cheol could only retreat in faltering steps.

Suddenly, a White Phantom appeared on top of this fallen Hunter. It pulled out a dagger and swiped it under the Hunter’s neck.

“K-keogeok?!”

The White Phantom smiled as it sliced the neck off and raised its head to look at Kim Cheol.

Kim Cheol could only scream in terror.

“U, uwaaaaaah!!”

And then, not even taking one look behind him, he ran straight into the forest.

There were Ice Bears in the forest?

Compared to snowmen, snow giants, and the White Phantoms that appeared before him, those unseen Ice Bears came across as laughable existences right now.

Kim Cheol summoned every ounce of his energy and ran, and then ran even harder.

The White Phantoms glared at the departing back of fleeing Kim Cheol and raised their bow. Just as they took aim and got ready to fire....

A White Phantom with white hair extending all the way down to its waist raised its arm and stopped the attack.

The White Phantoms lowered their bows.

‘.....’

When the long-haired ‘Elf’ signalled the others to follow Kim Cheol, the White Phantoms began disappearing from where they stood one by one.

Kim Cheol ran out of the thick bushes.

“Pant, pant, pant....”

He couldn’t catch his breaths at all. Still, when he recalled the derisive smirks on the White Phantoms' faces as they massacred the Hunters, he felt like peeing himself from fear.

His gaze inexplicably lowered to his hands.

He couldn't feel much from his frozen hands now. He had lost all feelings in his feet a long time ago.

In his current condition, he couldn't even fight properly.

'If it weren't for this d*mn cold.... No, if we weren't starving for several days, we wouldn't have been annihilated like that.'

In the end, Kim Cheol couldn't acknowledge the failure of the raid team... no, his own failure.

Muttering to himself, Kim Cheol raised his head.

'By the way, where am I? How deep in the forest is this?'

Kim Cheol began scanning the surroundings. Then, he picked up on a faint smell coming from a distance.

Kim Cheol began following that smell.

It wasn't that far.

Once he walked past the trees and escaped out into an open area, he was greeted by an unbelievable spectacle.

'But, how can this be?!'

He found over twenty dead Ice Bears surrounding a cave entrance.

And he thought it was odd to not see a single Ice Bear when every single tree was marked by them!

"What is going on here?"

Kim Cheol investigated the conditions of the carcasses. They all showed sword-inflicted wounds. Some of them even had signs of being burnt alive.

Almost immediately, Kim Cheol thought about Seong Jin-Woo and the Hunters following him.

"Could they have....? Did they do this to these Ice Bears?"

No, it couldn't be.

Kim Cheol shook his head.

The wounds on Ice Bears were inflicted with long swords. As far as he knew, none of the Hunters that went into the forest used a sword.

‘Besides, the two rank E Hunters didn’t even wield any weapons.’

If he were to look at the situation objectively, then there was no chance that those people were still alive. In that case, there could be only one explanation.

‘There are White Phantoms nearby!’

His heart fell to the pit of his stomach.

Here he was, thinking that he had finally lost those d*mnable White Phantoms, yet they were actually residing close by!

Scared stiff now, Kim Cheol held his breath and hurriedly returned to the forest.

A little bit further away, and a little bit faster than before...

He wanted to escape from the territory of the White Phantoms as soon as possible.

Around the same time.

“Krrooaar....”

An Ice Bear cried out and fell to the ground.

Shadow soldiers pounced on it and made sure it was no longer able to draw breath.

[Level up!]

“Very nice....”

Jin-Woo was standing at another ‘bear farm’.

It had been five days since his arrival in this snowy world. He had already cleaned up three bear farms in the meantime.

‘Looks like I’ve killed most of the bears in this forest.’

His level had risen up quite a bit during this time. It was the same story for his soldiers, too. Initially, they had to attack a bear in a pair to kill it, but now, they could eke out a victory in a one-on-one fight.

This was very satisfying.

Once the Stats of the soldiers rose up, Jin-Woo assigned them different roles.

He could store 30 shadows now. 28 soldiers participated in battles, one went around picking up magic crystals, while the remaining one secured the bear meat.

He didn’t even have to move a finger but still ended up with loot from the Hunts, so this was proving to be oh-so-convenient for him.

‘I can’t sense the presence of other monsters around here anymore.’

It seemed that he had more or less took care of all the monsters inside the forest.

In that case....

‘Should I think about killing the boss?’

It could be at least a month, or in the worst case scenario, several months before the dungeon break occurs. He couldn’t just sit here and wait for a Gate that who knows when it’d open up.

‘And, I still need to kill that insolent little Elf b*stard, too....’

That measly monster that dared to provoke Hunters. Its cocky grin still remained etched in his memory.

The scent of meat coming was from somewhere.

Sniff, sniff....

Kim Cheol sniffed the air with his nose, now super-perceptive due to his extreme hunger.

The only food he ate since his imprisonment behind the Red Gate was a single rabbit. Picking up on the smell of food, he reflexively swallowed down his ravenous saliva.

‘Gulp.’

Perhaps, the White Phantoms were having a meal nearby.

‘Still, if their numbers are low, then....’

Then, he could subdue them and snatch away their food. His hunger was extreme enough for him to arrive at such a conclusion.

‘Let’s go and take a look.’

Kim Cheol walked as silently as possible and cautiously approached the source of the smell.

And eventually....

He hid inside the bush, and discovered the Hunters who had left along with Jin-Woo. Kim Cheol’s eyes grew wider from the revelation.

‘What the hell??’

The smell of meat was coming from the campfire they had raised.

‘How can they still be alive?!’

Kim Cheol began glaring.

He couldn’t find one rank E Hunter among their midst.

‘He must’ve been killed first after taking the lead like a fool.’

That would be an obvious thing, wasn’t it?

However, there was a not-so-obvious spectacle unfolding before his eyes. So, how should he go about explaining this situation, then?

Something didn’t add up.

‘Wait, hold up. Their attire....?!’

Clothes and blankets designed to keep warm, tents and several pieces of equipment could be seen. They were obviously well prepared.

‘Just how can this be?!’

Kim Cheol was getting flustered even more, but then, his gaze had stopped by at a certain place.

It was a piece of bread sitting next to sizzling meat.

Meaning, these people even had food ready.

His confusion immediately morphed into a rage.

‘These b*stards....!!’

Grit.

Kim Cheol began gritting his teeth.

They had enough supplies to ensure their continued survival, yet they wanted to hog them all for themselves?!

‘If my hands hadn’t frozen up, no, if only I wasn’t starving, I’d have easily dealt with those Ice Elves!!’

Realising that these b*stards had snatched away the crucial supplies that should’ve been shared among the rest of the team, he couldn’t hold back his fury anymore.

Kim Cheol angrily ran out of the bush.

“You sons of b*tches!!”

Park Hui-Jin quickly shot up from her spot, clearly surprised.

“Kim Cheol? How did you get here??”

She found it rather difficult to lie here and say it was good to see him again. Because... Kim Cheol's glare was full of murderous intent.

Indeed, he didn't even bother to mask his hostility.

“My raid team failed to conquer this dungeon because of the lack of supplies, yet how can all of you find yourselves with this much food and this type of equipment?!”

“That is.....”

Park Hui-Jin couldn't continue on. If she mentioned Jin-Woo here, then Kim Cheol's rage would be directed towards the youth. To her, Jin-Woo was her saviour.

‘Also, that man always looked at Jin-Woo in a suspicious manner.’

Park Hui-Jin shut her mouth immediately.

That prompted Kim Cheol's eyes to open even wider in anger.

“Even I don't think all of you were complicit in this crime. So, who had hidden these?! Tell me the truth, and I will ignore everything else.”

A thick vein popped up on Kim Cheol's neck.

“Tell me who monopolised all the gear and drove his comrades to death!!”

His angry roar reverberated throughout the forest.

Kim Cheol was planning to shed blood here if it would appease the sin of betraying his comrades.

“I'll count to three. If you don't reveal who it was by then, I'll take it as the sign of all of you being complicit in this matter.”

Hahn Song-Yi tugged at Park Hui-Jin's sleeve.

“U-unni....”

Park Hui-Jin hugged Hahn Song-Yi. Both Goh Myung-Hwan and Yun Ki-Joong swallowed their saliva as cold sweat soaked their backs.

Kim Cheol was a rank A. Even if everyone present worked together, they wouldn't be able to win against him. However, none of them still mentioned Jin-Woo's name.

“One.”

Kim Cheol yanked loose his sword from the scabbard attached to his waist.

“Two!”

Even then, the lower ranked Hunters showed not one sign of opening their mouths.

How dare lower ranked Hunters ignore his order?

That point alone stoked the flames of Kim Cheol's anger even higher.

'Just what these b*stards think of me as....?'

Murderous intent burned brightly in his eyes.

He'd kill that woman first.

He'd kill Park Hui-Jin before anyone else, the one who betrayed the raid team and left along with these lower ranked Hunters.

'That's right, she left the raid team because she must've been scheming something.'

He could only think that way.

Kim Cheol stood before Park Hui-Jin and spat out the last countdown.

"Three."

Park Hui-Jin squeezed her eyes shut.

It was then.

"Four."

POW!

Kim Cheol was struck super-hard by something in the back of his head and kissed the ground as his entire body slid across the snowy ground for several metres.

The eyes of the Hunters grew wider.

"Team leader!!"

Jin-Woo had hit Kim Cheol so hard that steam was still rising up from his palm.

Jin-Woo spoke in a dumbfounded voice.

"How dare you speak rubbish when it was you who drove your friends to death?!"

REPORT

“Jin-Woo oppa!”

Hahn Song-Yi displayed her happiness as tears formed in her eyes.

“Team leader!”

It wasn't as much as Hahn Song-Yi, but still, the two male Hunters' expressions also brightened up considerably. Park Hui-Jin also breathed a sigh of relief after confirming Jin-Woo's face.

Unfortunately, Jin-Woo didn't have much leeway to respond to their welcomes.

“Ssh!”

Jin-Woo placed his finger on his lips and gestured them to keep quiet. The four people, seemingly getting ready to embrace Jin-Woo at any moment now, all froze up like ice statues.

Park Hui-Jin cautiously asked.

“W-what's the matter?”

Jin-Woo glared at the fainted Kim Cheol, the dumb b*stard who deserved to be beaten up, before turning around.

“Looks like Kim Cheol brought along unwanted visitors.”

He sensed countless presences hiding in the forest. Right now wasn't the time to worry about Kim Cheol or Go Cheol or whatever. The real problem lay elsewhere, after all.

Shururu...

After sensing Jin-Woo's glare, the White Phantoms undid their stealth and revealed themselves one by one. At a quick count, there were around 20 of them.

And among them...

Jin-Woo's glare was fixed on a long-haired White Phantom riding on horseback.

‘...That has to be the boss.’

An overwhelmingly mighty aura was coming from that creature, incomparably heavier than any Ice bears and the White Phantoms near it.

If that guy wasn't the boss of this dungeon, then just who else could be?

For the first time in a long while, Jin-Woo's skin broke out in goosebumps.

Just as Jin-Woo was shivering ever so softly from its powerful aura, the boss also recognised Jin-Woo's strength in one go.

“So, there really was one. A truly worthy being among all the human trash.”

“...What did you just say?”

“...?”

When Jin-Woo spat out a response purely out of reflex, the boss displayed an expression of pure surprise.

“You, can you understand our language?”

Jin-Woo was also taken aback.

‘How is it possible to converse with this guy?!’

Not only could he understand what a monster was saying, but he could also actually converse with it, too.

A language he couldn't even remember learning before fluently rolled out of his mouth as if it was his mother tongue.

“You.... You know how to speak the language of the monsters?!”

Park Hui-Jin's expression said her shock was so extreme that she didn't know what to do now. Seeing that, Jin-Woo realised that only he could understand what that boss was saying here.

‘Is this because of the System?’

Like, an automatic translation feature?

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze back to the boss. The boss returned the gaze with great interest.

“To be able to converse.... Very good. There is someone I wanted to introduce to you.”

The boss pointed at one of the White Phantoms standing behind it.

“I'm sure you're familiar with him already.”

Jin-Woo's glare sharpened instantly. Indeed, he recognised that particular White Phantom.

‘That guy is....’

That guy was none other than the bastard that fired an arrow at Hahn Song-Yi before breaking out in a mocking grin. How could he forget that arrogant bastard’s face?

That exact same smile was still etched on the monster’s face.

“This friend informed me of a truly strong being among the humans. And this friend wishes to challenge you to a duel, so how ab.....”

Even before the boss finished his words, the ‘Knight Killer’ Jin-Woo threw flew in a straight line.

Stab!!

And the dagger landed right in the middle of the grinning White Phantom’s face.

“Heok!”

The shocked cry came from the Hunters, though, Yun Ki-Joong hurriedly covered his mouth to stifle the cry he let loose inadvertently just now.

Plop.

The White Phantom collapsed on the ground.

Jin-Woo extended his hand out, and the ‘Knight Killer’ buried in the dead Elf’s face shook around a little before it got pulled out and flew back to him. Jin-Woo grasped the returned ‘Knight Killer’ in reverse grip and lowered his posture.

“Anything else you want to say?”

The boss spoke up in admiration.

“....You are indeed very strong.”

Then, it climbed off the horse. However, as if it wasn’t planning to fight yet, it didn’t draw its weapons nor showed any willingness to engage in battles.

“However, you know this already, don’t you?”

The boss maintained a leisurely expression and continued to engage him.

“....That you can’t fight this number all by yourself.”

There were over twenty Ice Elves here.

However, their number wasn’t important. No, the real danger came from the fact that there was the boss monster among them.

The rest of the White Phantoms were no match for Jin-Woo, who had raised his level as much as he could by hunting every single Ice bear in this forest.

...Exactly like the fool who got killed with a dagger to its face.

‘So, how should I go about killing the boss?’

While Jin-Woo began kicking his brain into gear, the boss continued on.

“So, I shall make a simple suggestion.”

“A suggestion?”

“That’s right. It won’t be such a bad suggestion for yourself.”

“....”

Jin-Woo was inwardly surprised.

It was a well-known fact that humanoid type monsters possessed intelligence. But he never expected to see a monster trying to negotiate with a human. So, he couldn’t help but get curious here.

“...I’ll hear it.”

The boss smiled as if it had expected that answer and opened its mouth.

“Before that, I want to ask you something.”

“.....?”

“Why are you among these humans, when you’re not one of them?”

Jin-Woo’s expression crumpled deeply.

“What nonsense are you talking about?”

“Ahaha. It seems that you have no idea.”

The boss guffawed out loudly, before pointing to its temple.

“Every one of us can hear a certain voice repeating itself in our heads. It tells us to kill humans. However, I can’t hear that voice when I’m looking at you.”

‘Ah.’

That’s what this guy meant?

In that case, Jin-Woo could think of a reason for that.

‘When the boss says humans, it’s probably talking about Hunters.’

The thing was, he had changed to this strange something called ‘Player’ through the System, during his ordeal in the underground temple. Technically speaking, he was slightly different from other Hunters – meaning, other Awakened human beings.

‘That’s why that guy thinks I’m not a human.’

That made perfect sense.

When Jin-Woo’s expression slowly changed to that of an understanding, the boss nodded its head.

“There is no need for us to fight each other. And our side does not wish to see needless casualties, as well.”

The boss finally got to the main topic.

“Hand over the humans behind you. Then, we will guarantee your life. How does my suggestion sound to you?”

Before he answered, Jin-Woo asked back.

“I want to ask you something, too.”

“Fine. Go ahead.”

“Just who are you? Where did you come from, and why do you wish to kill humans?”

“We are....”

It happened then.

The smiling face of the boss suddenly froze stiff. But, that odd state lasted only for a brief moment. The boss regained its original expression and continued on.

“There is no need for us to fight each other. And our side does not wish to see needless casualties, as well.”

‘What the hell was that?’

Jin-Woo frowned deeply.

The boss repeated itself like an NPC from a game that was asked a question that was not in the script, or one that it was not permitted to answer, to begin with.

“Hand over the humans behind you. Then, we will guarantee your life. How does my suggestion sound to you?”

Its expression showed how relaxed it was. In other words, it had not recognised how odd its own actions were. The White Phantoms standing behind didn't display any reaction towards the boss's strange behaviour, either.

'.....'

Jin-Woo continued to wordlessly observe then, prompting the boss to begin urging him.

"Will you accept my suggestion or not?"

Jin-Woo wanted to find out more about the monsters' origins and their true intentions, but as it turned out, it was all a waste of time.

"In that case...."

The only thing remaining was to choose. But then again, he had made up his mind already a long time ago.

"I refuse."

The corner's of Jin-Woo's lips arched up.

"You see, you possess a far too tempting shadow for me to let go."

He was planning to kill the boss and take away its shadow. And there was no way he'd change his mind now when he was constantly thinking about how to carry the plan out ever since the boss made its entrance.

"Are you planning to fight my soldiers all by yourself? Do you truly believe that you can overcome the disadvantages in numbers all alone?"

Jin-Woo smirked derisively.

'Soldiers', was it?

"You think you're the only one? I've got them too."

He summoned his shadows. According to his wishes, the soldiers hiding in Jin-Woo's shadow all revealed themselves in the blink of an eye right behind him.

"Uwa?! Uwaaak!"

Again, the cry came from the Hunters this time as well.

Yun Ki-Joong cried out in fright as the shadow of the Ice Bear, the shadow beast soldier, suddenly materialised right next to him and he fell hard on his a*s.

"Ah, ahh...."

When Jin-Woo took a glance at the pale faces of the surviving raid team, he felt that it was a bit regretful, but this was an emergency situation. There was no time to explain things to them here.

‘Well, I wouldn’t explain things to them even if this wasn’t an emergency, though.’

After summoning 29 shadow soldiers, Jin-Woo stood before them and glared at the boss.

“So, who’s disadvantaged now?”

Finally, the boss displayed its hostility.

“...You seem to know some petty tricks, don’t you? Fine. If it’s your wish, I shall grant your death.”

The boss unsheathed two daggers from his sides.

This was what Jin-Woo wanted, as well. He grasped the ‘Knight Killer’ in his right hand, while the left grasped the ‘Poison Fang of Kasaka’ as he got ready for battle.

‘Petty tricks, is it?’

The boss had a point there. Jin-Woo might hold an advantage in numbers, but his ‘army’ was slightly lacking if he wanted to hunt the boss down.

Jin-Woo knew this very well.

The boss’s self-confidence could have come from this fact.

Indeed, he now needed more comrades. Powerful comrades.

‘If it’s a powerful comrade, then....’

There was one candidate here.

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance to his side. The still-unconscious Kim Cheol was lying there, unmoving.

“Attack!”

When the boss issued the order, the White Phantoms pulled on their bowstrings.

“Bears!”

Jin-Woo placed the beast soldiers at the front.

Stab! Stab! Stab! Stab!

Kkrrrooar!!

The beast soldiers, with arrows sticking out of their bodies, all roared out in anger.

Before the White Phantoms could nock the next volley of arrows, the infantrymen rushed forward. The magic soldiers also began chanting their spells.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed dangerously.

'You're mine!'

Jin-Woo deliberately pushed Kim Cheol's longsword towards its owner with his heel, before pouncing forward himself as well.

His sight was fixed solely on the boss of the White Phantoms. The boss too was waiting for Jin-Woo's arrival.

Soon, sparks endlessly flew as the four daggers wielded by two creatures clashed in mid-air.

Clang! Clang!! Clillaang!!

At the same time, the shadow soldiers and White Phantoms also slammed into each other as well.

Goh Myung-Hwan looked at Park Hui-Jin next to him.

"Uhm.... So, like, shouldn't we lend assistance here?"

Park Hui-Jin shook her head.

"This isn't a fight where we can butt in, you know."

This was a battle where huge black monsters were swinging their giant claws; the destroyed black soldiers were regenerating to their original state in the blink of an eye; and the gleaming blades and the arrows fired from the upper-rank monsters, White Phantoms, were chaotically flying around in the snowy field.

'So, what can a rank B or C do in this place?'

Indeed, the only thing they were permitted to do here was to pray. Park Hui-Jin could only stare at Jin-Woo with a tight chest as he fought the long-haired White Phantom.

"Keu-heuk!"

Jin-Woo gasped out.

As expected of a boss from the high-ranking dungeon!

The fight looked to be even from the side, but Jin-Woo was getting cut and sliced constantly all over his body. Would he be able to last three minutes at this rate?

His MP was also rapidly depleting away as his soldiers constantly regenerated.

Finally, the magic soldiers managed to finish their chants. A ball of flames larger than a volleyball flew in the midst of the White Phantoms.

KABOOM–!!

That was the power of the levelled-up magic soldiers in full display.

Awakened by the resounding eardrum-shaking explosion, Kim Cheol regained his consciousness and opened his eyes.

“M-mm.....”

Kim Cheol raised his head to look.

Clang! Clang!! Pow-!!

His blurry vision picked up on the sight of White Phantoms fighting against the unknown black soldiers.

‘What the... hell is going on here?’

He couldn’t figure out what happened while he blacked out, but at least, he knew very well why he was lying on the ground like this.

The hand that slapped him in the back of his head!!

And the voice that came from behind him!

‘That voice definitely belonged to Seong Jin-Woo!!’

Now that he had regained his bearing, the sense of shame and rage bubbled over like crazy and the ends of his fingertips trembled.

How fortunate that he could feel the hilt of his sword.

If he was surrounded by the White Phantoms, then he’d not get out of here alive. In that case, he must....

‘I’ll kill that b*stard Seong Jin-Woo with my own hands.’

His maddened eyes finally spotted the back of Seong Jin-Woo.

.....There he was!

He was too busy fighting a White Phantom and wasn’t paying any attention to his rear.

This was his chance.

Kim Cheol stood up right away. And then, ran.

“Uwaaaahhhh!!!”

After sensing Kim Cheol running towards him, Jin-Woo laughed out inwardly in elation.

‘Right, if it’s you....’

Kim Cheol ran with all his might and after taking aim at Jin-Woo’s neck, swung the sword, hard.

“Die!!”

In front, the boss. From behind, Kim Cheol.

Even though he was stuck in a seemingly dangerous situation, Jin-Woo still managed to shout out.

“Igrit!!”

As if he’d been waiting for that call, Igrit jumped out from his shadow immediately and easily deflected Kim Cheol’s sword.

Clang!!

“No!”

Kim Cheol’s bloodshot eyes opened wider.

However, even before he could say anything, Igrit’s sword pierced deeply into his chest.

Stab!!

The blade ran straight through his chest and emerged from his back.

“Keo-heok!!”

Jin-Woo quickly took several steps back.

‘I knew Kim Cheol would act this way.’

This fool was someone who didn’t think about anything in depth, and only acted according to his emotions. They had been together only for a short while, but that was enough for Jin-Woo to figure this guy out.

Kim Cheol glared at Jin-Woo.

“You.... You....!”

And with that, Kim Cheol breathed his last.

As Igrit stepped up to delay the boss, Jin-Woo issued an order to the shadow of the dead Kim Cheol.

“Rise up!!”

When that happened....

Uwaaaahhh-!!

Accompanied by a heavy, sombre cry, a huge hand emerged from the shadow.

REPORT

'There you go!'

Jin-Woo clenched his fist tightly. The final piece of this puzzle called the boss raid had fallen into its place.

The black knight that emerged from Kim Cheol's shadow was far bigger and sturdier than the original version. And it even carried a huge war hammer in one hand as well.

The other hand held a shield as tall as a grown man, and the overall impression this guy gave off was truly oppressive and threatening.

'Kim Cheol was a muscular man, but this shadow is just too over-the-top....'

Even though it was an urgent situation, Jin-Woo couldn't help but leak out a gasp of admiration.

[Please set the soldier's name.]

'Ah, right. The name.'

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance to his side.

Perhaps finding the battle quite tough, Igrit was having a hard time right now, being pushed around by the boss. Currently, he was barely buying enough time by relying on his cheat-like regenerative ability.

Slice!

Igrit's arm was sliced off, then.

'I don't have much time to waste here.'

A name, was it?

Should he go with whatever? Maybe, Kim Cheol?

Jin-Woo immediately shook his head.

To call an undead with a name it used while it was still alive... That just didn't sit well with him.

‘Right, his name was Kim Cheol. Cheol, so Iron, it is!’ (TL: ‘cheol’ is a Korean word for ‘iron’)

The name had been decided.

As soon as Jin-Woo thought of that name, it was bestowed on the newly-birthed shadow knight.

[Iron Lv. 1]

Knight grade.

A knight grade!

It was the same grade as Igrit, but again, there was no time to celebrate.

‘I can’t waste any more time than this!’

Jin-Woo pointed to the boss.

“Iron!!”

Iron’s large frame lumbered forward quite heavily like a mountain.

Thud, thud, thud!!

Jin-Woo really liked the new guy’s huge frame, but he couldn’t help but worry whether that lumbering speed could even catch up to the agile boss or not. Fortunately, such a worry was put to bed really fast.

Iron leaned back and roared out loudly.

WUOOOAAARRR!!

‘What was that?!’

Just as Jin-Woo was getting flustered, several messages popped up in his view.

Tti-ring.

[Iron has used ‘Skill: Shout of Provocation’.]

[The owner of the dungeon has fallen into an ‘aggro’ed’ state.]

“An aggro skill!”

Kim Cheol was actually a rank A Tanker.

So, quite obviously, he possessed a high-level aggro skill, and the shadow knight extracted from his shadow, Iron, had retained that skill in full and was able to use it no problem.

The head of the boss swivelled towards Iron.

Although it could've chosen to finish Igrit off right in front of its eyes, the boss simply pounced on Iron as if it had been hypnotised by a ghost or some such.

Iron used the skill 'Reinforcement' and endured the sharp dagger attacks of the boss digging into his body.

'Nice!'

Jin-Woo nodded his head in approval.

In the meantime, Igrit's sliced arm regenerated to full.

Shurururu...

The black smoke began oozing out from the stump and coagulated to form a new arm.

Meanwhile, the boss was still preoccupied with Iron.

And seizing this chance, Jin-Woo and Igrit's combined assault began on the boss.

'.....'

Park Hui-Jin became utterly speechless as the unbelievable spectacle unfolded right before her eyes.

What she was seeing right now proved to be too unrealistic, too outlandish. She didn't even want to ask for clarification. Not anymore.

From her side, Hahn Song-Yi asked her with a timid voice.

"Unni...."

Park Hui-Jin responded belatedly to her.

"Uh, ng?"

"Do all fights of Hunters look like that?"

She must've been frightened silly, because Hahn Song-Yi's voice was trembling noticeably. Park Hui-Jin replied to her, sounding helpless as well.

"....If that were the case, then I'd never have earned my licence, you know."

Goh Myung-Hwan asked next, looking utterly dazed out of his mind.

"Could it be.... that we are dreaming right now?"

If this was indeed a dream, then it must've been a nightmare, instead.

Park Hui-Jin looked back at the battlefield where the monsters and the black ‘somethings’ were having a chaotic throwdown, and spat out a long sigh.

At the same time, a new worry formed in her head.

‘When we get out of here, without a doubt...’

There was no doubt that, as a survivor, she’d be asked several uncomfortable questions. How should she go about explaining what she was seeing here, then?

Park Hui-Jin couldn’t even begin to fathom just where she’d start her explanations on what happened inside the Red Gate, and in particular, the man named Seong Jin-Woo.

After she raised that point to everyone....

“But, still...”

Yun Ki-Joong, sitting on the ground and shaking like a leaf, spoke with some difficulty.

“Isn’t it an incredible thing that we can actually worry about what’ll happen to us once we get out of here?”

The Hunters all nodded their heads in unison.

This was an upper-rank dungeon. Not only that, a Red Gate, too.

Even though they found themselves in such a dangerous area, they were now worrying about the matters that would take place outside.

This was all due to the power of one man.

Park Hui-Jin’s gaze was directed to Jin-Woo.

‘Mister Seong Jin-Woo, you’re...’

Her feelings had moved way past shock and gratefulness, and she was beginning to feel a sense of awe towards him now.

Stab!

The ‘Poison Fang of Kasaka’ stabbed into the boss’s shoulder.

[‘Effect: Paralysis’ has been activated.]

[The effect has been cancelled due to the high resistance of the target.]

[‘Effect: Bleeding’ has been activated.]

[The effect has been cancelled due to the high resistance of the target.]

With the increased levels of the enemies he’d been facing lately, the additional effects of the 'Poison Fang of Kasaka' failed to activate properly more often than not.

Still, inflicting injuries was a good thing in a fight.

'Nice!'

The boss's agile movements were being hampered gradually due to the increasing number of wounds being inflicted on its body.

"Keuahahahk!!"

The smile had disappeared from the boss's face a long time ago.

The boss had been dodging the combined attacks of Jin-Woo, Igrit and Iron rather freely until then, but now, it was quite obviously running out of breath.

'Just a little bit more!'

Iron suddenly bear-hugged the boss.

"Now!!"

When Jin-Woo gave the signal, Igrit rapidly retreated. Jin-Woo too quickly stepped back. The boss's eyes widened in confusion.

"What are you tryin.....?"

Before he could finish, the magic soldiers completed the explosion spells and they rained down on Iron's position.

KWABOOOM!!

BOOM!!

"Keo-heok!!"

For the first time ever, the boss spat out a sharp cry of pain. The b*stard twisted its body around, and Iron's arms fell off.

Grit!

The boss's enraged, murderous eyes were now firmly fixed on Jin-Woo.

"Keuahahahahk-!!"

Seeing this, Jin-Woo could only feel admiration towards the boss once more.

'Even with such a heavy wound, it can still exhibit that much strength!'

As expected of a high-level dungeon's boss. Unfortunately for it, the scale had tilted away from it some time ago.

'Dagger Throw!'

Just like what he did to that arrogant White Phantom, Jin-Woo threw the ‘Knight Killer’ at the boss, and added even more momentum by using the Ruler’s Reach.

Shukk-!!

The dagger flew to its target in the blink of an eye.

‘Keuk!’

The boss realised that it was difficult to dodge the throw, so it used its own dagger to deflect Jin-Woo’s blade.

Crack!

The ‘Knight Killer’ flew at such a frightening speed that the boss’s dagger actually cracked from the impact force.

And at the same time....

Jin-Woo used ‘Stealth’ and ‘Dash’ skills to close the distance to the boss, and stabbed the ‘Poison Fang of Kasaka’ deeply into the b*stard’s waist.

Stab!!

The boss’s eyes widened considerably.

“Keo-heok!!”

However, the boss still managed to grab Jin-Woo’s wrist even in the midst of all this. It was not that hard to see the boss’s desire to not go down without a fight from its crazed eyes.

“Kuwaahhk!!”

Just as the boss raised its dagger above its head to stab at Jin-Woo....

Jin-Woo simply smirked. At the same time, a huge war hammer slammed into the head of the boss.

SLAM!!

The boss’s face crashed into the snowy ground.

Behind the boss, Iron was raising his hammer up high again, both of his arms already fully regenerated.

The huge hammer flew down again.

Swoooooosh-!!

Splat!!

Igrit was getting ready to attack, but then, sheathed his sword back into the scabbard attached to his waist.

Jin-Woo also stored his daggers back inside the Inventory.

And the expected messages popped up right away.

Tti-ring.

[You've killed the owner of this dungeon.]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

'Whew, it's finally over.'

Jin-Woo sighed grandly in relief.

What a hard-fought victory this was.

He was about to take a breather, but then, saw Iron and his eyes went extra round in surprise.

"Hey, hey! You can stop now."

Jin-Woo hurriedly stopped Iron.

He was about to smash down with his hammer again, but finally stayed his hands. Perhaps it resembled the original too much, because the guy turned out to be a bit simple in the head like the original.

Meanwhile, the boss's corpse had been pummelled into a meat paste already.

'However, its shadow isn't affected, so it's fine.'

Jin-Woo smirked deeply.

Finally, the reward for this incredibly hard battle, the one he'd been salivating over, was right by his feet, waiting to be taken.

Jin-Woo issued his order.

"Rise up."

It was now 3 AM.

The facial expressions of four men waiting around the Red Gate were, as expected, not so good.

Unable to endure any longer, Hyun Ki-Cheol finally opened his mouth.

"Guild Master, we'll remain here and wait, so how about going home first, sir?"

“My Guild members are trapped in there, so how can I even think about going home to relax now?”

Baek Yun-Ho was resolute in his decision. Indeed, that wasn't something the leader of a large Guild, not to mention as a currently-active rank S Hunter, should entertain under this sort of situation.

It was here that Ahn Sahng-Min's eyes widened.

“Huh? Look, the Red Gate!!”

Hyun Ki-Cheol and Joo Sung-Chan also discovered an oddity with the Red Gate.

“The, the Red Gate is opening up!!”

“The dungeon's been cleared!”

“There are... there are people coming out!!”

Baek Yun-Ho clenched his fists tightly.

‘That Kim Cheol!! Did he manage to pull it off?’

Everyone waiting there hurriedly rushed towards the front of the Gate.

Baek Yun-Ho, unable to hide his excitement, began searching for the leader of this team, Kim Cheol.

However.... even though all of the survivors came out, the big guy couldn't be seen.

‘Uh? Huh? This can't be right.’

The one who had been insisting on believing in Kim Cheol, Joo Sung-Chan's previously confident attitude was gone now, and his expression was getting warped as well.

“Park Hui-Jin Hunter-nim!! Goh Myung-Hwan, Yun Ki-Joong Hunter-nim!!”

“Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim!!”

After spotting Jin-Woo walking along with Hahn Song-Yi right behind the others, Ahn Sahng-Min's face was quickly filled up with a huge smile.

‘I thought as much!’

It was such a noticeable contrast from the face of Joo Sung-Chan.

However, his smile also faded away quickly. When five people, including Seong Jin-Woo, walked out from the Gate, the portal to another world slowly disappeared from their view.

“It can’t be.... Is this everyone?”

Jin-Woo nodded his head, looking rather exhausted.

Hyun Ki-Cheol had asked that question, and after getting that silent answer, his expression hardened instantly.

‘How can this be....?’

Hyun Ki-Cheol’s eyes teared up, and he reluctantly began crossing out the names of the deceased off the member list. This was a terrible job, but it had to be done regardless.

Baek Yun-Ho had been staring at this in a daze, before gasping out in sheer shock and disbelief.

‘Only the lower ranked Hunters returned?! Never mind the A rank, only a single rank B survived?!’

Such a thing should not happen. Just what on earth happened inside that dungeon?

“Let’s go. I’ll take you home.”

Jin-Woo was about to lead Hahn Song-Yi and leave the location, but Baek Yun-Ho reached out and grabbed his wrist first.

“Excuse me. Wait.”

Slap!

Jin-Woo fiercely shook off that hand. Baek Yun-Ho’s eyes sharpened immediately.

“We need to talk for a second here.”

Jin-Woo turned around.

“I’m too tired. If you have questions, you should ask your own Guild members.”

Baek Yun-Ho couldn’t hold back and revealed his identity.

“I’m Baek Yun-Ho, the Guild Master of the White Tiger.”

Jin-Woo’s eyes remained cold, however.

“So what?”

Being on the receiving end of Jin-Woo cold response, Baek Yun-Ho’s eyes suddenly transformed to that of a monster’s. No, they completely resembled a beast now, instead.

“We lost nine Guild members through this incident. As the Master, I have the right to ask you a couple of questions regarding this matter.”

This was no longer a request.

It was an order.

Or, even a threat.

Didn't matter what anyone thought of his words, he was not planning to let Jin-Woo go that easily here.

But then, Jin-Woo too angrily glared back.

He was not being cowered by the intense hostile aura oozing out in full force from the rank S Hunter, Baek Yun-Ho.

“I rescued three of your people. If you're really their leader, shouldn't you be saying thanks to me first?”

It was Baek Yun-Ho who had to withdraw his threatening aura first, as he was bombarded with this incredible pressure emanating from Jin-Woo.

Besides that, what he said was logical, as well. Baek Yun-Ho couldn't argue against the point raised.

“...I apologise.”

Baek Yun-Ho lowered his head. Seeing this, Jin-Woo turned around once more to leave.

“Hahn Song-Yi, let's get going.”

“Okay.”

Hahn Song-Yi carefully studied the mood of this place and followed after Jin-Woo. The two of them got on the van and not too long after, left the location.

‘This doesn't make any sense....’

Baek Yun-Ho's thoughts were now in complete disarray. He quickly ran towards the sole surviving upper-rank Hunter, Park Hui-Jin.

“Excuse me, Miss Park Hui-Jin.”

She had been trying to warm herself up with the cup of hot tea Hyun Ki-Cheol had handed over. She raised her head to meet Baek Yun-Ho's gaze.

“What is the matter with that guy? Why was he so downbeat like that?”

Indeed, that man had probably gone through an unimaginable hell and finally managed to escape from the Red Gate, yet why was his attitude so murderous?

Park Hui-Jin shook her head, displaying her own confusion.

“I also don’t know, sir. After killing the boss, he stood in front of the dead body and shouted something out three times, and after that, he’s been like that....”

“He was okay until then?”

Park Hui-Jin looked at Goh Myung-Hwan and Yun Ki-Joong. The two men nodded their heads simultaneously.

“What a strange man....”

Baek Yun-Ho muttered to himself as he stared helplessly at the street Jin-Woo had disappeared in.

Ahn Sahng-Min saw the state his boss was in, and became incredibly nervous as if he had done something wrong instead.

“My apologies, Guild Master. I’m sure he’s like that because he’s just exhausted. He’s not a bad person, I assure you. At least, I believe he’s not.”

“No.... That’s not the problem.”

“Pardon me?”

Baek Yun-Ho turned around to stare squarely at Ahn Sahng-Min.

“Why haven’t you scouted that man already?”

“Ehhh?”

Ahn Sahng-Min couldn’t hide his fluster. But, it wasn’t strong enough to best the fluster Baek Yun-Ho had felt just now.

‘Against me....’

Baek Yun-Ho recalled Jin-Woo’s fierce glare and could only nervously swallow his dry saliva.

Gulp.

Abruptly, he thought that, were he to fight that man, he’d have to resolve himself to lose an arm or two.

‘Maybe, even worse than that....’

Quickly figuring out what Baek Yun-Ho meant, Ahn Sahng-Min hurriedly replied.

“We’re doing our very best, sir.”

“That is clearly not enough.”

Baek Yun-Ho's eyes began to sparkle rather dangerously.

Seong Jin-Woo.

Indeed, Chief Ahn's discerning eyes were on the money again.

“From today onwards, you'll receive all the resources you need. You must bring that man into our Guild, no matter what.”

REPORT

On the way home.

Vroom....

Jin-Woo was busy licking his lips in unhappiness as he drove the van.

'Tsk....'

Was it because the gap between his Stat values and the extraction target's were too great? What a disappointment it was, but his extraction attempts ended in failure.

'What a waste, but there's nothing I can do now.'

He'd still be able to kill a boss from a high ranking dungeon in the future. What's important now was to quickly raise his skill levels high enough so that he'd not miss out on another chance.

Levelling up. Now that was something Jin-Woo excelled in.

And also....

Jin-Woo's hand left the steering wheel for a little while, as a dagger with an elegant, flowing, arched blade appeared in his grip.

[Item: Baruka's Dagger]

Rarity: A

Type: Dagger

A dagger used by the great warrior 'Baruka'. Weight reduction magic has been applied to it, allowing the wielder's movements to become even more agile than before.

Attack: +110

Agility: +10

Well, he didn't walk away completely empty-handed; this was the dagger the boss had been using. There were two, but one of them was broken, so he threw that away and took the remaining dagger.

'The Baruka's Dagger, eh?'

Not only did it feature high attacking power, but it also raised his Agility, too.

On that front alone, there was no need to compare it to ‘Knight Killer’, a dagger ranked ‘B’ he paid handsomely for, never mind the rank C ‘Poison Fang of Kasaka’.

Its rarity alone was at A, too!

This was probably one of the best weapons to replace the Poison Fang of Kasaka that had been losing its effectiveness lately.

‘I like the way it feels in my hand, too.’

While he was mulling over the things that happened inside the Red Gate, they had arrived before Hahn Song-Yi’s home.

Screech.

She had been sitting in the passenger seat without saying a word as if she wasn’t even there in the first place. As soon as the van came to a stop, she climbed out of the seat and bowed her head.

“Drive safely.”

“I will. Good night.”

Hahn Song-Yi turned around to leave.

Seeing her slumped shoulders and powerless gait, it seemed that the original goal of this trip had been met, one way or the other.

‘Well, although things did get a lot complicated, I was trying to change her mind anyway....’

It was rather likely that she wouldn’t try to become a Hunter in the future. It’d be the same story for anybody if their first dungeon experience just so happened to be a Red Gate.

He nodded his head in satisfaction and was about to start the van again, but then, the passenger side door was abruptly opened from the outside.

‘.....?’

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze. Hahn Song-Yi had returned to the van and was holding on to the door.

‘What’s the matter with her?’

His curiosity only lasted for a little while.

Hahn Song-Yi bowed her head deeply again, this time looking much calmer than before.

“Thank you for everything, oppa.”

He only now realised that, from some time ago, the honorific she used to address him changed from ‘ahjussi’ to ‘oppa’.

“Uh, sure thing. Don’t mention it.”

“Uhm, excuse me....”

“Mm?”

“Tomorrow.... No, see you later.”

Later?

Before he could ask her for clarification, Hahn Song-Yi hurriedly ran away. After her back disappeared from his view did he realise what she was talking about.

‘Aha.’

From today onwards, he’d be teaming up with Yu Jin-Ho again to mop up the rest of the raids. Hahn Song-Yi was a raid team member, so of course, they’d see each other again later on.

‘Ah, so she meant that, huh.’

What a relief that was, though.

His plan would’ve been affected pretty badly if Hahn Song-Yi refused to come out of her house because of the trauma from this incident.

‘This worked out for the best.’

And now, he would use his shadow soldiers to clear out the rank C dungeons even faster than before. He felt utterly confident of clearing up the remaining raids in the shortest time possible.

Also, he couldn’t wait to see how Yu Jin-Ho would react after witnessing his shadow soldiers in action, too.

‘The reactions of that man Yun Ki-Joong were really priceless, weren’t they?’

Jin-Woo chuckled softly and leisurely turned the steering wheel.

The next morning.

“Yawn~.”

Jin-Woo yawned grandly as he stepped out of the apartment’s foyer. He only closed his eyes for a bit, but hell, it was time to meet up with Yu Jin-Ho already.

“Hyung-nim, good morning!”

He heard the familiar energetic voice greeting him. Yu Jin-Ho was already here, waiting.

“You don’t even have a car, so how did you get here?”

The raid team’s favourite ride, ‘Mister Van’ had been commandeered by Jin-Woo last night and was currently parked neatly in the apartment’s parking lot nearby.

“I caught a taxi, hyung-nim.”

“Ah, a taxi.”

And here he was, thinking of going to fetch the kid instead....

“Oh no, it’s fine, hyung-nim. I’m the one asking for your help, so it’s only right that I’m the one driving you around, at least.”

Yu Jin-Ho grinned happily and replied.

This morning started like any other.

However....

“Uh?”

Yu Jin-Ho discovered something new. And that was a cylindrical something held in Jin-Woo’s hand. Yu Jin-Ho’s curiosity peeked in an instant.

“Hyung-nim, what is that?”

“Ah, this?”

Jin-Woo grinned mysteriously.

“I’m going to use it inside the dungeon today.”

“Heok!”

Suddenly, the chill invaded Yu Jin-Ho’s back.

‘Is it a weapon he’s going to use inside the dungeon?’

Hyung-nim had already displayed many extraordinary things before; just what kind of a horrifying weapon was he bringing to a dungeon today, then?

Yu Jin-Ho was getting pretty psyched up already.

Gulp.

Yu Jin-Ho swallowed his dry saliva and raised his head after finally settling his mind.

“Hyung-nim, let’s get going.”

“Hold on.”

Jin-Woo pulled out his phone and dialled someone.

“There’s someone we should take along, as well.”

“Excuse me? Who?”

“Hey, Song-Yi. It’s me. Meet us at the parking lot. We’ll go to the Gate together.”

Song-Yi.... Could it be that Song-Yi?

As soon as Jin-Woo ended the call, Yu Jin-Ho asked him.

“Hyung-nim, the person you want to take with us, is she that high-schooler in our team?”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

Hahn Song-Yi lived near here, and their destination was the same, so there wasn’t any reason to go there separately, now was there?

Unfortunately, Yu Jin-Ho didn’t see it that way.

Hahn Song-Yi....

The rather-cute high school girl with her hair tied up in a bun.

‘He already knows her number, and can talk to her in such a friendly manner, too.... Could hyung-nim and her have formed a much deeper relationship than meets the eye?’

For sure, hyung-nim was a cool guy even from another man’s perspective.

‘Especially when he uses nothing but a dagger to totally rip apart a monster....’

While hyung-nim wouldn’t be interested at all, it’d not be a strange thing for an impressionable school girl to fall for a man like that.

Yu Jin-Ho nodded his head. If this was the case, then there was something he had to make sure right away.

“Hyung-nim. Should I call Miss Hahn sister-in-law from now on?”

‘....Did this guy fall off the bed and hit his head or something??’

Jin-Woo’s crumpled expression was implicitly implying that. Even if Yu Jin-Ho was not too quick on the uptake, he should still be able to figure that one out pretty easily.

“Uhm.... You two aren’t dating?”

“She’s a friend of my little sister.”

“Oh. Ahhh....”

So, that’s what happened. Yu Jin-Ho finally understood the situation. He didn’t even know what was going on, yet he was thinking of calling that girl his sister-in-law....

His face reddened up considerably.

Soon enough, Hahn Song-Yi came to the parking lot.

Not only that, she was noticeably better dressed than how she was usually.

Seeing this, Yu Jin-Ho grinned slightly.

‘Yup, she’s definitely a teen girl, wanting to look nice in front of the brother of her friend and all.’

As the leader of the raid team, he was thinking of praising the fellow raid team member’s choice of wardrobe, but then, Jin-Woo greeted her first.

“Did you get some sleep?”

In that instant, Yu Jin-Ho’s expression froze stiff.

‘.....’

Hahn Song-Yi smiled and shook her head.

“I couldn’t catch a wink.”

“I’m sure you’re still exhausted, so get some rest in the van.”

Listening to the two young people’s conversation, the thought process of Yu Jin-Ho became more and more messed up.

‘Uh? Uhhh??’

Hahn Song-Yi asked Jin-Woo this time.

“What about you, oppa? Did you get some sleep?”

“Well, only for a little bit. It was already 4 AM by the time I got back home, anyway.”

“Well, true that....”

Night? Couldn’t catch a wink? Still exhausted? 4 AM by the time he got back home????

Just as Yu Jin-Ho's panicked state was morphing into a full-blown freak-out, Jin-Woo stopped walking towards the van and looked back at him.

"What are you doing, Yu Jin-Ho?"

"Uhm..... Well, uh, hyung-nim?"

".....?"

"Well, the thing is.... Miss Hahn Song-Yi is still a minor, hyung-nim."

"Okay. So?"

".....Never mind, hyung-nim."

Truly now, hyung-nim was a man among man.

Yu Jin-Ho was deeply impressed by Jin-Woo who didn't care about the glares of the public and thought that....

'Indeed, he's extraordinary.'

He also began to reflect on his foolish ways of trying to apply the standards of the regular people on hyung-nim.

Around the same time.

Inside the private conference room of the White Tiger Guild.

"That's everything I saw."

Park Hui-Jin finished her report.

Although Baek Yun-Ho tried to dissuade her, saying that she should rest up first, she readily agreed to participate in the debriefing right away.

She added that her stay over there was comfortable (?), comparatively speaking.

"..."

"..."

The two men who sat through the debriefing, the Guild Master Baek Yun-Ho and the section chief Ahn Sahng-Min, were left utterly speechless.

The agent in charge of yesterday's disastrous training, Hyun Ki-Cheol was not present, currently in the Hunter's Association to discuss how to handle the fallout from this incident.

So, there were only three people inside this conference room.

Ahn Sahng-Min was the first one to break the silence.

"Everything you told us, are they all true?"

“You can speak to Goh Myung-Hwan and Yun Ki-Joong. They will corroborate everything I’ve said.”

Those two Hunters went home right away, saying they missed their families. Park Hui-Jin was 100% certain that her testimony and theirs would not be any different.

‘Well, I only described the things I saw, after all.’

Such as, when that man wasn’t around, she’d hear the pitiful screams of Ice Bears every now and then coming from the forest some distance away, or such as, when he’d suddenly wake up in the middle of the night to perform push-ups while everyone was fast asleep.

She didn’t bother to talk about things other Hunters might have experienced, those that she didn’t get to see.

“Huh.....”

Ahn Sahng-Min spat out a gasp that could either be a sigh or a groan.

Seong Jin-Woo knocked out cold a rank A Hunter in one hit, he could use separate space magic freely, and most important of all, he controlled dozens of summoned creatures.

Every one of those were unbelievable things to swallow.

And even more shocking news than that was....

“He had cleared the upper-rank dungeon almost all by himself.”

Baek Yun-Ho broke his silence and said that sentence, word by word, syllable by syllable. He was qualified to say that, because he was an S rank.

“Now that is the most unbelievable thing out of all of them.”

Sure, the summoned creatures fought alongside him, but then again, those summons weren’t his comrades, to begin with. No, they were simply a part of Seong Jin-Woo Hunter’s skill.

In other words, it was pretty much the same thing as Seong Jin-Woo clearing the dungeon alone.

“Even if you’re a really high-ranked Hunter, clearing an upper-rank dungeon by yourself is incredibly difficult.”

Not only that, it was a Red Gate, to boot.

What if it was Baek Yun-Ho?

Perhaps, he might be able to solo a rank B Red Gate, albeit just barely.

This feat was only achievable because Hunter Seong Jin-Woo was capable of summoning and controlling dozens of summons.

Ahn Sahng-Min remained stupefied as he spoke up.

“There’s no doubt that he’s a Re-Awakened possessing an extremely rare skill.”

Baek Yun-Ho agreed.

“It is already rare to see a Hunter controlling a summoned creature, but he can control several tens of them....”

While working as the S-rank Hunter, Baek Yun-Ho had met countless other capable Hunters, and had talked to a lot of them, too. But he had never, ever heard of such a skill before.

“A Re-Awakened possessing a rare skill that’s on another dimension compared to every other rare skill....”

Baek Yun-Ho expressed his admiration once more.

It was here that Ahn Sahng-Min thought of a question.

“If we were to evaluate Mister Seong Jin-Woo’s ability in monetary terms, how much could it possibly be?”

“.....”

Even Baek Yun-Ho couldn’t answer that.

However, without a doubt, it didn’t matter what Seong Jin-Woo’s current value was – as soon as he went through the re-assignment test, his value would shoot up several times more.

They needed to sign him up before that happened.

The White Tiger Guild had already lost a rank A and several rank Bs through this incident. If they failed to secure the winning lottery ticket called Seong Jin-Woo at this time, then the losses incurred would be rather too severe to just write them off.

“I shall place my full trust in you, Chief Ahn.”

Baek Yun-Ho’s eyes gleamed in the light of faith. Ahn Sahng-Min formed a dignified expression.

It was then.

“Mm?”

The gazes of Baek Yun-Ho and Ahn Sahng-Min were directed to Park Hui-

Jin. She had her hand raised slightly.

Baek Yun-Ho asked her.

“Is there something you’d like to ask us?”

Succeeding in her mission to draw the attention of the two men, she lowered her hand and spoke.

“Please, allow me to participate.”

“In what?”

“The recruiting of the raid team leader... No, I mean, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

Baek Yun-Ho and Ahn Sahng-Min exchanged glances for a bit, before looking back at her.

The person in charge of scouting and recruitment, Ahn Sahng-Min, tilted his head.

“But, why would Park Hui-Jin Hunter-nim....?”

“I’ve spent the most amount of time with Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim out of everyone in the White Tiger Guild, so surely, my familiarity with him would prove to be useful in reeling him in.”

It had been six hours in reality. But, inside the Red Gate, it was almost a week. Park Hui-Jin’s suggestion sounded logical from Baek Yun-Ho’s and Ahn Sahng-Min’s point of view.

On top of this, Park Hui-Jin was a beauty as well.

One could say that the power of a beautiful face was absolute when seducing another person.

Sensing that the thoughts of the Guild Master and the section chief had been swayed, Park Hui-Jin finally got to the main topic.

“However, I have a condition.”

Baek Yun-Ho asked her.

“And what could that be?”

“When Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim signs up with our Guild, please place me in his raid team, no questions asked.”

REPORT

Park Hui-Jin had realised something back then.

And that would be the level of terror an upper-ranked dungeon could possess, and how powerless she was in front of such overwhelming odds.

‘It’s like, I’m the one who ended up learning what Mister Seong Jin-Woo wanted to teach Hahn Song-Yi....’

It was kind of embarrassing, but what could she do? Pretending that terrifying things weren’t terrifying was an exercise in foolhardiness and stupidity.

The experiences she had back in the Red Gate were enough to make her skin crawl. However...

However, just because of her fear, she couldn’t give up on all the sweet treatment and the status enjoyed by a rank B Hunter.

The sky-high annual salary!

The plentiful societal benefits!!

And finally, the public recognition!

If one disregarded the inherent danger, then being a Hunter was pretty much the perfect career. Precisely because of the high-risk factor, the return on ‘investment’ was equally huge.

But now, Park Hui-Jin had figured out a sure-fire way to decrease the risk associated with her job.

‘And that is to go on a raid together with the team leader Seong Jin-Woo.’

The one person Park Hui-Jin was utterly envious of back in the Red Gate dungeon was none other than Hahn Song-Yi. There was only one reason for that.

And that would be the promise Seong Jin-Woo made towards Hahn Song-Yi.

If you analyse those words in a different way, then he was trying to say that he had no reason whatsoever to protect other team members besides Hahn

Song-Yi. No, they were just baggage.

So, she was constantly worried that those two folks would abandon the group and sneak away unnoticed.

But on the sixth day....

Seong Jin-Woo really did clear the upper-rank dungeon all by himself and took Hahn Song-Yi home, safe and sound.

He had kept his promise.

Seeing that, Park Hui-Jin became sure of one thing. And that would be...

As long as she was working for him during the raids, she'd never find herself in danger.

The moment she realised this, her heart began pounding uncontrollably. And the level of her excitement hadn't cooled off even until now.

His calm and cold decision making.

His excellent abilities.

And not only that, his sense of responsibility, too.

She really wanted to go on a raid together with Seong Jin-Woo. That was why she came up with that term of hers.

'They must put me in the team leader Seong Jin-Woo's raid team, no questions asked.'

Baek Yun-Ho and Ahn Sahng-Min chatted to each other. And a little bit later....

"We accept your terms."

Baek Yun-Ho smiled genially.

"In that case, Miss Park Hui-Jin, act together with Chief Ahn for the time being."

"Thank you very much, sir."

However, she was well aware that scouting that man wouldn't be easy. Seong Jin-Woo was more than well aware of his own true worth, after all.

'Even during the Red Gate, he was always so full of confidence.'

indeed, making him 'move' would be one hell of a challenge.

'Still...'

She now had another chance to meet him again. An imperceptible smile formed on Park Hui-Jin's lips.

Baek Yun-Ho was pondering something until then, before opening his lips in some difficulty.

“Chief Ahn.”

“Yes, sir.”

“I'd like to know Mister Seong Jin-Woo's contact details.”

“Guild Master, that is....”

Ahn Sahng-Min decided to tell everything regarding on why he had to conceal the matters regarding Jin-Woo until now.

Baek Yun-Ho wordlessly listened to it and gravely nodded his head.

“It's understandable that he wishes to remain anonymous, what with him possessing such incredible abilities. After all, there are enough people in this world who wish to stay out of the limelight, too.”

But then, such a guy did reveal his powers in front of quite a few eyewitnesses. Sure, the situation back then might have been urgent, but it was also likely that he felt more or less okay about letting the world know of his powers.

“As long as the matter isn't blown out of proportion, I'm sure Mister Seong Jin-Woo won't blame you, Chief Ahn.”

Ahn Sahng-Min nodded his head.

Of course, no one present in this room wished to leak this story beyond these walls. Never mind for Seong Jin-Woo, it would not be a good thing for both the Association and the White Tiger, as well.

“That's that, but....”

Ahn Sahng-Min was worried about something else, though.

And that would be his boss rushing things and ending up screwing everything up because he didn't know of Hunter Seong Jin-Woo's rather decisive character.

He dearly wanted to prevent that, at least.

“Sir. I think... you directly contacting him is a bit....”

Baek Yun-Ho quickly figured out what Ahn Sahng-Min was trying to say here.

“Ahh, don't worry. I'm not trying to contact him in regards to the recruitment.”

“Pardon me? But then, why....?”

“It’s as Mister Seong Jin-Woo said last night.”

Baek Yun-Ho realised something after listening to Park Hui-Jin’s debriefing. Seong Jin-Woo was the White Tiger Guild’s benefactor.

He had saved three new recruits of the Guild. Not only that, but he also took care of the Red Gate, thereby ensuring that the honour of the White Tiger wasn’t tarnished.

Even though the Association’s people made the blunder, just how bad would the impact on the Guild’s public image have been if this news got out, and everyone learned of them losing almost all of their new recruits?

Just imagining it gave Baek Yun-Ho nightmares – enough to have a total freak out, almost, right here.

‘And there I was, trying to stop that person no matter what just to get to the bottom of the incident....’

He could now understand the reason why the youth was feeling quite grumpy at that time.

If he didn’t know the circumstances, fine, but now that he knew, he simply had to do a certain thing as a living, breathing human being.

“As the representative of the White Tiger Guild, I’d like to officially express my gratitude to Mister Seong Jin-Woo. And to properly apologise for yesterday’s incident, as well.”

‘Ahh, if that’s what he means, then....’

Ahn Sahng-Min could understand now.

With Baek Yun-Ho’s straight-forward, no-nonsense personality, he wouldn’t bother Seong Jin-Woo with the matters of recruitment under the pretext of thanking the youth.

And well, he also wanted to convey his gratitude as well.

“I understand.”

Ahn Sahng-Min pulled his phone out and found Seong Jin-Woo’s numbers rather quickly.

“What is his number?”

Baek Yun-Ho also pulled his own phone out to save the contact number.

It was then.

“His number is....”

Just as Ahn Sahng-Min was about to read the phone number, he felt something was off, and turned his head to his side.

“Uhm, excuse me. What are you doing, Park Hui-Jin Hunter-nim?”

“Ah, well, I....”

With an awkward smile on her face, Park Hui-Jin sneakily hid her phone away, its screen still displaying “Add new contacts”.

Inside the number one Guild in Korea, the Hunters.

A rather interesting piece of news found its way to the owner of the Hunters and the currently-active rank S Hunter, Choi Jong-In.

“This... has this been confirmed?”

Would anyone knock on their bosses' doors with unconfirmed information?

Chief of the recruitment department, Joh Myoung-Ki, nodded his head.

“Yes, Sir. We received this info earlier today from the Association.”

Every major Guild had one or two informants inside the Association.

It might not be a kosher thing to do, but this was the only way to stay one step ahead of the competition, contacting an exciting new talent first if one were to emerge out of nowhere.

However, earlier today, the Hunters' informant had leaked a pretty strange story. And after lengthy deliberation, Joh Myoung-Ki decided to come to his boss's office with this news.

‘Why? Because, the White Tiger Guild is on a roll nowadays, and they are large enough to threaten us, the Hunters.’

So, he figured that this information was worth reporting to the boss man. Exactly as Joh Myoung-Ki had suspected, Choi Jong-In displayed great interest in the matter right away.

“From a Red Gate that killed one rank A and six rank Bs, two rank Cs returned alive? Not only that, they managed to clear the dungeon, too? That is pure nonsense.”

....Even if there was one rank B among them, there was no way that this was true.

Choi Jong-In shook his head as he continued to read the memo.

“Without a doubt, there was someone else helping them out. Someone not mentioned in here.”

Choi Jong-In was certain of this. His extensive experiences in raiding dungeons told him as so.

Joh Myoung-Ki replied.

“Looks like the Association also suspects that, Sir. However....”

“However?”

“It seems that the White Tiger isn’t saying anything.”

“So, is the Association planning to overlook it, then?”

“I heard that they don’t want to conflate the matters any further, since their fault in this incident is already too significant, Sir.”

“H-mm....”

Choi Jong-In rested his hand against his chin. It was a habit of his whenever he fell into deep thought.

It was understandable from the Association’s point of view, but why was the White Tiger keeping quiet on this matter? There could be only one reason.

“The White Tiger must’ve received help from someone they don’t want others to know about.”

“I also thought the same thing, sir.”

The opinions of the two people present matched.

Choi Jong-In’s brain rapidly kicked into gear.

‘A nameless helper who can rescue lower ranked Hunters from a dungeon that’s difficult enough to kill most of the higher ranked Hunters....’

He could barely hold himself back from the curiosity now.

‘A newbie who hasn’t gone through the rank assignment test? Or, maybe a convict whose identity can’t be revealed?’

Either case was okay with him.

If it was a newbie, then the Hunters must bring that person to their fold. If it was a convict, on the other hand, then he’d be able to throw some mud in the White Tiger’s direction.

Choi Jong-In’s eyes began sparkling.

“Looks like we need to find out who was there.”

“Have you thought of a good way, sir?”

“If you want to catch a hidden racoon, you have to set the racoon’s hole on fire first.”

Joh Myoung-Ki’s eyes grew extra round.

“Are you planning to set the White Tiger Guild on fire?!”

“You think I’m crazy?? Why should I set someone else’s perfectly fine organisation on fire??”

“Ahh, my apologies, Sir. Since you are such an excellent magic-type Hunter and all, I, uh.....”

His nickname wouldn’t be ‘the ultimate weapon’ for no reason, now would it? If Choi Jong-In got serious and used his powers in full, then blowing up a building would be as easy as pie.

In any case, Choi Jong-In continued on.

“Not that. We just have to create a hot mess.”

“So, it was fire.....”

When Choi Jong-In began glaring at his underling, Joh Myoung-Ki hurriedly shut his mouth.

“We leak this to the media.”

‘That is...!’

Joh Myoung-Ki’s eyes widened.

“The big mistake of the Hunters’ Association, a massacre of the large Guild’s members, and finally, the ensuing mystery that got buried underfoot. The media just loves that kind of stuff. Wouldn’t you agree?”

Joh Myoung-Ki’s head automatically went up and down in a nod.

Choi Jong-In chuckled slyly.

“Once they get bombarded by the non-stop barrage from the media, the White Tiger will grow too fed up and in the end, reveal the identity of this mystery helper.”

“So, there was a method like that!”

Joh Myoung-Ki also began smiling as well.

This was a great chance to sucker-punch the persistent White Tiger that dared to chase after the Hunters Guild.

The ends of Choi Jong-In’s lips arched up.

“Call the reporters right away.”

[You have entered a dungeon.]

As soon as he stepped foot inside the dungeon, Jin-Woo took in a deep breath.

‘Hmm.’

After being ‘confined’ to an open-field type dungeon for a few days, the air inside the cavern-type dungeon felt new and refreshing.

Yu Jin-Ho followed him into the dungeon soon afterwards.

“Hyung-nim, I wonder just what kind of monsters would come out in this dungeon.”

“Yeah, me too.”

‘I can sense their presence close by, though.’

Indeed, they were quite close, but they couldn’t spot any.

But, when Jin-Woo took one step forward...

The floor of the cave began rising up here, there, and everywhere.

Crumble...

Rumble....

Humanoid monsters with skins made out of rocks appeared. Yu Jin-Ho quickly recalled their name.

“Hyung-nim, it’s the Stonemen.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

These b*stards were known to possess the toughest exterior out of all the monsters that appeared within lower ranked dungeons. Common sense was to use magic when one was to hunt down a Stoneman, but....

“Hold this for me, will ya?”

Jin-Woo entrusted the cylindrical vinyl package to Yu Jin-Ho and walked towards the monsters.

‘Heok!!’

Yu Jin-Ho flinched grandly, thinking that the content was a weapon, but nothing particularly noteworthy happened.

‘It wasn’t a weapon?’

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo stood before the Stonemen and summoned both the ‘Baruka’s dagger’ and ‘Knight Killer’.

Slice!

In the blink of an eye, the head of the Stoneman in front of the pack rolled to the ground.

Jin-Woo looked at the ‘Baruka’s dagger’ and smiled in satisfaction.

Then, suddenly, the smiling Jin-Woo disappeared from the spot.

Tab.

Just as Jin-Woo reappeared past the group of the Stonemen, all ten-plus of them collapsed to the ground.

Rumble – crash!

‘My body has gotten a step lighter and faster after the Red Gate thing, hasn’t it?’

But, of course it would have.

His current level was 60. His level had risen up by nine from 51 after killing all those Ice Bears and White Phantoms. And now, the rank C monsters felt like those Goblins from the rank E dungeon to him.

‘At this rate, I don’t even need to use my weapons.’

Now that he had warmed up nicely....

‘Should I increase the hunting speed, then?’

Time to summon his shadow soldiers.

With an excellent timing, another group of Stonemen was slowly lumbering towards his position from the deeper part of the cave.

‘Summon.’

As soon as he issued an order, the soldiers confined to Jin-Woo’s shadow rapidly revealed themselves behind him.

And sure enough, there was a loud scream accompanying that, too.

“Uwaaaak!!”

Oopsie.

Jin-Woo facepalmed and turned around.

‘I forgot he was here with me.’

He got way too excited and completely forgot about Yu Jin-Ho for a moment there.

“H-hyu-hyung-nim!!”

While plopped on his a*s, Yu Jin-Ho pointed his trembling finger at the shadow soldiers standing right in front of him.

“W-w-what are these??”

“It’s a bit complicated to explain... well, it’s my skill.”

“You, you can summon these things as your, your s-skill?”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

Yu Jin-Ho’s jaw remained slack and didn’t want to close.

“Ahh...”

Him and hyung-nim had entered dungeons together eleven times already. He thought that he wouldn’t get shocked anymore, but he was proven wrong once more.

As expected, hyung-nim was an existence that easily exceeded one’s imagination.

Gulp.

Yu Jin-Ho laboriously swallowed his saliva as his eyes took on the black-armoured soldiers emitting a blood-chilling aura.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo shifted his gaze away. The lumbering Stonemen had already arrived near their vicinity.

Jin-Woo pointed at them with his chin.

“Go.”

As if they were waiting for that, the soldiers silently rushed forward.

Rumble!!

The floor of the cave shook hard as the forty-odd armoured soldiers all ran at the same time. For sure, with the addition of Iron and the beast soldiers, the overall weight of the group had increased by a lot.

‘It’s like I’m looking at a fleet of tanks, isn’t it?’

Jin-Woo formed a very satisfied expression.

What with the shadow soldiers sweeping through everything, the dungeon got cleared in the proverbial blink of an eye.

The only things remaining on the floor were the scattered and broken bits of Stonemen that resembled cookies made out of dirt.

A rank C dungeon was destroyed in no time at all, in other words.

“Hoh...”

Jin-Woo exclaimed in admiration.

‘At this rate, we might get to mop up the rest of the raids pretty quickly, no?’

It seemed that the remaining eight raids would not take that long to finish up.

As soon as the battle ended, the shadow soldiers retrieved the magic crystals and stood before Jin-Woo in orderly columns. Igrit and Iron stood in front of them.

The two knights stepped to the front and knelt down.

Once the soldiers stopped moving, Yu Jin-Ho finally sneaked in closer to Jin-Woo’s side.

“Hyung-nim, here....”

He then returned the mystery vinyl package back to Jin-Woo.

Jin-Woo wordlessly took out the tumbler contained with the vinyl pack and began sucking on the straw.

“Oh....”

“I kinda like its taste, actually.”

Slurp, slurp....

After he almost completely drained the tumbler, Jin-Woo asked Yu Jin-Ho.

“Hey, Jin-Ho. How many Gates did you book today?”

Yu Jin-Ho was in the middle of cautiously reaching out to touch the fur of one of the beast soldiers, but he quickly pulled his hand back and turned back to Jin-Woo.

“Four Gates, hyung-nim.”

With four today, only five would remain. He didn’t see any reason to waste any more time on this.

“In that case, let’s finish up everything by tomorrow. It doesn’t matter if a Gate is a bit far away, anyway.”

“You mean, tomorrow?”

Inexplicably, Yu Jin-Ho took a look around him. Seeing all the broken wreckage of Stonemen littering the floor, he couldn’t help but slowly nod his head.

‘For sure, with this kind of speed....’

“Understood, hyung-nim. By the way....”

Yu Jin-Ho hesitated slightly, before opening his mouth with some difficulty.

“Can I be the one to retrieve the magic stones?”

“....Why?”

“I’m kinda upset because it feels like my role’s been stolen by these guys, hyung-nim.”

Jin-Woo burst out into a soft chuckle.

‘Yup, this kid really is a weird one.’

And a day later....

Jin-Woo finished the 19 raids he had promised Yu Jin-Ho.

REPORT

“Hyung-nim! Now that the raids are over, how about we celebrate with a hearty meal?”

As they were driving back home, Yu Jin-Ho cautiously asked.

“Celebrate? But, there’s no one with us, though?”

The raid team was disbanded as soon as the last raid was completed. Even Hahn Song-Yi said that she had someplace she had to stop by, so there were only Jin-Woo and Yu Jin-Ho in the van.

Yu Jin-Ho spoke as if he was embarrassed by something.

“I’ve been receiving your help all this time, hyung-nim, so like, I just wanted to treat you to a good meal, at least.”

Why was he having so much trouble saying the words “Let’s have a meal together?”

Jin-Woo chuckled wryly.

Since the kid was implying that he wanted to splurge on a grand feast, there was no reason for Jin-Woo to refuse the invitation, now was there?

“Alright.”

Yu Jin-Ho’s expression brightened considerably as soon as Jin-Woo said okay.

“Hyung-nim! Should I take you to this restaurant in a certain hotel that I know? They know how to make a mean steak, you see.”

“No, not something like that.”

Unless such dishes came out in public engagements he simply had to attend, Jin-Woo would rather prefer to eat a simpler meal in peace with Yu Jin-Ho in an easy-going, relaxed atmosphere.

What a good timing it was, since he spotted one such place that fit the criteria.

The tip of Jin-Woo’s pointing finger pressed on the van’s window.

“How about that place over there?”

“Ahh, you wanted to enjoy ‘han-wu’, hyung-nim?” (TL: han-wu – Korean beef. Much more expensive than imported beef.)

“No, the place next to that one.”

Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes narrowed to a slit.

A restaurant next to that one.... He could only see a common diner there.

[Day of Flower Blooming on Pork Belly – thinly-sliced pork belly specialists]

“By any chance, are you talking about that pork belly place, hyung-nim?”

“What, you don’t like pork?”

Yu Jin-Ho grinned refreshingly.

“Not at all. I also love pork belly, hyung-nim.”

They parked the van in the nearby parking lot and went inside the diner, only to find the place was packed to the brim with patrons, as well as part-time workers busy moving around without a moment of rest.

Right now, it was seven in the evening. No wonder the diner was so full.

“Welcome. How may I help you?”

One of the part-time workers walked over with a smile and engaged the two men.

“How many customers will we be serving this evening?”

“Us two.”

“Please follow me.”

After hearing Yu Jin-Ho’s answer, the part-time worker guided the two men to a spot in a secluded corner.

However...

“Hold on for a second.”

Yu Jin-Ho took a look around, and pointed towards the empty table by the windows.

“Can’t we sit over there?”

“I’m sorry, sir. That table has been booked already....”

A large group must’ve made a booking, because several tables had been brought together. Currently, they were all empty.

Yu Jin-Ho stared at the empty tables with a rueful expression and shook his head. In the end, the two of them had to occupy the most secluded, out of the way spot in the diner.

Yu Jin-Ho lowered his head in shame.

“I’m sorry, hyung-nim.”

“There’s nothing for you to apologise for. I was the one who suggested that we come here, anyway.”

“Even still, I should’ve taken you to a bit better spot than this one.”

Jin-Woo smirked and lightly patted Yu Jin-Ho on the shoulder.

“Don’t sweat over such things and enjoy the food, okay?”

Actually, Jin-Woo was inwardly worried about a scion of a chaebol finding the taste of such cheap meat to his liking or not.

‘Also, even though I didn’t say anything, but well...’

Jin-Woo scanned his surroundings.

He could see people, and then, more people.

He spent quite a lot of his time in a silent apartment with no one in it, so he kind of enjoyed this hustle and bustle.

“Here are your orders of three portions of pork belly, and two bottles of soju.” (TL: Soju – Korean distilled spirit.)

Soon, the part-time worker brought out their orders.

Sizzle–

The thinly-sliced portions of pork sizzled enticingly on the heating plate. And sure enough, pieces of meat began disappearing real fast. Fortunately enough, Yu Jin-Ho seemed to like it.

“Well, the thing is, me and my friends frequent pork belly diners whenever we have the chance, hyung-nim.”

“Oh, really? Friends from the university?”

“Yes, hyung-nim. It’s just that, I seem to mix better with friends from my university rather than the classmates from the expensive private schools I went to.”

Jin-Woo smirked slightly and nodded his head. If it was Yu Jin-Ho, then that sounded about right.

“Here, let me pour you a glass, hyung-nim.”

“Yeah, you too.”

Gulp, gulp, gulp.

They filled their glasses with soju, clinked them a little and one-shotted them.

“Kyaha.”

Unlike Yu Jin-Ho, who was immensely enjoying the bitter taste of soju, Jin-Woo could only frown deeply in unhappiness.

“Mm? Hyung-nim, is something wrong?”

“No, it’s nothing....”

Jin-Woo could only stare at the empty glass with a bitter expression on his face. He had forgotten one crucial fact about his body, what with him being so busy lately and all.

Tti-ring.

[Harmful substances have been detected.]

[Effects of ‘Buff: Detox’ will now commence.]

[3, 2, 1.... Detoxification has been completed.]

‘I forgot that I can’t get drunk anymore. D*mn....’

It was the same story regardless of how many glasses he knocked back.

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring.....

As long as the buff ‘Good health and Long Life’ was in effect, soju would remain as only slightly bitter-tasting water and nothing more. Jin-Woo angrily spat out a cuss in his mind.

‘God d*mn it.’

Rather than drinking bitter water like an idiot, he decided that it’d be infinitely better to order a soda, instead.

“Excuse me.”

A part-time worker hurriedly came over to their table.

“I want to order two more portions of pork belly, as well as a bottle of Sprite, please.” (TL note at the end.)

“Okay, please wait for a moment.”

After the waiter left, Yu Jin-Ho began tilting his head.

“Hyung-nim? Why didn’t you order more alcohol?”

“I’m not that good with alcohol, you see.”

Jin-Woo replied, his expression not even changing slightly, but as usual, Yu Jin-Ho didn’t quite catch that. Instead, a loose smile crept up on his alcohol-tinged reddened face.

‘Hyung-nim still has a humane side, like this one....’

Yu Jin-Ho kept on giving him a strange but meaningful look, but Jin-Woo simply ignored him outright.

‘It’s not as if he started acting strange all of a sudden just today or anything....’

Actually, he was getting curious about something else here.

“What are you planning to do from now on?”

When Jin-Woo asked in a serious voice, Yu Jin-Ho sat upright like a job seeker waiting for his job interview to start.

“As soon as I complete a simple written test at the Hunter’s Association, they should issue my Guild Master licence right away, hyung-nim. I’m planning to negotiate with my father with that licence in hand.”

Determination flooded in Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes. He had invested a lot of his own moolah for this purpose, and there was no room to retreat now.

‘Besides, I also made a promise with hyung-nim, too.’

The Guild building he promised to Jin-Woo. That part of the bargain could be upheld only after Yu Jin-Ho successfully persuades his father, Yu Myung-Hwan, to install him as the new Guild Master.

On the other hand, Jin-Woo was feeling rather liberated.

‘Sure, it’d be nice to get my hands on that 30 billion Won building.’

But well, that would only be an added bonus to him. His real purpose had always been levelling up. While entering all those rank C Gates, he had reached a far higher level than he initially bargained for.

In other words, he had achieved his goal.

And the results of his frantic levelling up spree?

One punch from him, and the rank A Hunter with a guaranteed annual salary of billions of Won, Kim Cheol, lost his consciousness. Just like that.

‘At the bare minimum, I can make more money than that guy now.’

If one possessed excellent abilities, wealth was sure to follow. There was no need to feel nervous at all. And his relaxed mindset could clearly be seen on his demeanor.

Jin-Woo began reminiscing about the last few days and smiled to himself. It was at this moment that Yu Jin-Ho asked him a question.

“What are your own plans now, hyung-nim?”

“Oh, me?”

Did I ask something that I shouldn't?

Yu Jin-Ho thought like this and flinched slightly. But he breathed a sigh of relief after spotting Jin-Woo's relaxed expression.

“I'll be out of reach for a while, actually. There's this place I have to go to, you see.”

That one sentence caused Yu Jin-Ho's face to harden visibly. After forming an expression of an abandoned puppy, Yu Jin-Ho emptied the soju glass in one go.

Tap.

He then placed the empty glass on the table, filling it up back to the brim. After knocking back another glass, he began to open his mouth with some difficulty.

“Hyung-nim. Please tell me straight if I've been bothering you. If that's been the case, I shall make sure never to bother you again in the future.”

‘This idiot....’

The moment Jin-Woo said that he'd be out of reach, this idiot must've misunderstood his words again.

Jin-Woo scratched the side of his head and asked a question instead of a proper reply.

“Hey, Jin-Ho.”

“Yes, hyung-nim?”

“What do you think of me as?”

“Well, I....”

Yu Jin-Ho's eyes rolled around this way and that as if he couldn't come up with a good enough answer, before he raised his head.

“Hyung-nim, I have a brother who's over ten years older than me.”

Jin-Woo remembered hearing that from somewhere.

The firstborn son of Yu Myung-Hwan, Yu Jin-Seong.

“My brother doesn’t really like me, so I think, the time I spent with him is far shorter than what I’ve spent with you, hyung-nim. Compared to him, you have saved my life, helped me out with my dream, and....”

Yu Jin-Ho stared straight at Jin-Woo.

“To me, you’re more like my real brother than him, hyung-nim.”

He was still a bit scared of Jin-Woo, though.

Still, he’d never, ever forget these past few days following around Jin-Woo for the rest of his life. Indeed, his respect was far greater than fear of Jin-Woo at this point.

“If you see me as your brother, then....”

Jin-Woo smiled deeply.

“I’ll think of you as my younger brother as well.”

“Hyu..... Hyung-nim....”

The tip of Yu Jin-Ho’s nose reddened and he began to get teary-eyed all of a sudden. If that was all, it’d have been fine, but then, he tried to get closer to Jin-Woo out of nowhere.

“Hyung-nim! I want to give you a big hug! It’s fine, right?”

“Hey, hey!! You’re drunk, dude!! Stop it!”

“No, that’s not true! Hyung-nim, I’ve never been this clear-minded in my life before! Hyung-niiiiim!”

“Say that with your eyes open, will ya?!”

“Waaaail~~!”

Either he was far too moved by his emotions, or he just was a bad drunk, Yu Jin-Ho collapsed over the table and began crying his eyes out, prompting Jin-Woo to pat him on the shoulder.

Soon enough, Yu Jin-Ho fell asleep and the table had quietened down now.

“Hah-ah... what a helpless kid....”

Jin-Woo leaned back on his seat and lightly clicked his tongue.

Yu Jin-Ho.

He was a troublesome kid in many ways, but for some reason, Jin-Woo didn’t find him dislikeable at all.

Jin-Woo heard that voice and shifted his gaze over to its source.

A TV mounted on the wall of the diner was showing a news bulletin.

‘Is it nine in the evening already?’

He thought like that and stared the screen, only to spot someone rather familiar appearing there.

‘Huh?’

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened.

It was none other than Baek Yun-Ho, and he was being bombarded with an unending stream of questions from the reporters as he exited from the White Tiger’s headquarters.

“Is it true that there was a huge incident during the training of your new recruits?”

“Is it also true that only the lower ranked Hunters returned alive while all the higher ranked ones had perished?”

“What do you think about the rumour of a mystery person allegedly aiding the survivors during this incident?”

Baek Yun-Ho was doing his best to ignore the reporters, but in the end, he had no choice but to respond.

“This incident has been investigated by the Association already. It was true that there was an incident, but there was no mystery helper at the scene. No, the White Tiger Guild’s proud Hunters combined their powers and managed to clear the upper-rank dungeon. And many Hunters lost their lives or got injured during the process. That is all.”

Another reporter quickly fired in a follow-up question.

“If that’s the case, why are you forbidding us from interviewing the survivors?”

“Those folks managed to avoid death’s doorstep by a hair’s breadth. So, why do you wish to speak to those people regarding this deeply traumatic event? That’s as far as I’m prepared to answer you people.”

Baek Yun-Ho made a quick getaway from there after climbing into a car.

Jin-Woo’s eyes remained wide-open.

‘They were talking about me, right?’

A little while ago, somewhere in the Eastern United States of America.

A shrill scream exploded out inside a certain dungeon.

“Uwaaaahhk?!”

A Hunter named ‘James’ plopped down on his butt.

His legs had lost all strength and he could only crawl on the floor to run away. But when he realised that he only managed to corner himself against a wall, despair quickly dyed his expression.

“Oh, dear god!”

The rank for this dungeon was estimated to be ‘A’. And in order to clear this Gate, suitable Hunters were recruited to form a raid team.

However, every single one of them was annihilated. Technically speaking, they weren’t dead, but unconscious on the floor, though.

‘I can’t believe this!’

James leaned against the wall and breathed heavily before roughly shaking his head around several times.

Today had been a series of truly unbelievable events.

When the raid team entered the dungeon, they could not find a single monster. Because there was seemingly no monster inside.

A dungeon without monsters?

Can such a thing even exist?

If that was the case, where did the magic power emission that the measuring equipment had picked up outside the Gate, come from?

The Hunters came up with all sorts of theories by themselves.

This was already a hard-to-believe phenomenon, yet something even more shocking was waiting for them by the boss room.

When they entered it, they did find a single ‘monster’.

And it looked exactly like a human being.

Indeed, there was only one, but....

From that monster’s single attack, every raid team member lost their consciousness. This creature proved to be far, far too powerful for them.

Only James had somehow escaped from the boss room.

‘Wait, could it be that all the magic energy emission detected on the outside of the dungeon is coming from that thing alone??’

The measurement took place far away, from outside the Gate itself, yet its magic power was already exceeding the level of a rank A?

James shook his head again.

‘That’s just f*cking impossible!’

But then....

“Hah.... This, really now.”

That lone ‘monster’ walked out from the darkness and stepped into the light.

James began screaming once more after he saw the approaching creature.

“U, uwaaaahk?!!”

“Uh-whew. That hurts my ears, you know.”

The monster – no, an Oriental man with long, unkempt hair and a bushy beard roughly scratched the top of his head.

“Ah, aaaah....”

James no longer screamed but began leaking out scared gasps instead.

The mystery Oriental man stood before James and placed his hands on his waist.

“What the hell?! So, who told you to attack first without warning?! I told you that I’m not a monster, but a human being. I’m a human!”

Unfortunately, James could not understand a single word of this strange language. Naturally, his complexion progressively worsened.

The Oriental man stared at the terrified American Hunter with a troubled expression on his face.

Eventually, he spat out a long, long sigh.

“Dang it. What a pain, trying to talk to these big-nosed foreigners....”

In any case, he tried to initiate another conversation one more time.

He squatted down low enough to match the American’s eye level and did his best to sound as friendly and non-threatening as possible.

“Hey, hey, man.”

He could recall a few English words. With such a poor grasp in that language, he couldn’t really tell if he was making any sense at all, grammar-wise.

“I, am, a, Korean.”

So, he tried to enunciate every word to the best of his ability.

“I, want, to, go, home.”

(TL: Originally, the raw said our MC ordered “cider”, but the thing is, in Korea, all non-alcoholic soda-like beverages with clear colouring, like Sprite, are colloquially referred to as ‘cider’. Not sure how that came about, though. So, if you hear/read about someone ordering cider in other forms of Korean media, such as Kdramas or other KR novels, don’t be surprised, as there is no alcohol involved.)

(TL: In case you haven’t noticed it yet, the mystery Korean man had been speaking in Korean, while “James” was speaking/thinking in English.)

REPORT

An event of an unprecedented scale!

A trapped person walked out of a dungeon, alive!

The US Hunter Bureau went into overdrive right away.

The deputy director of the Bureau personally came down to the interview room after hearing this news. Beyond the one-way mirror, he could see an Oriental man quietly sitting on a chair, with a pair of handcuffs on his wrists.

“Is he that man?”

“That’s correct, sir.”

“He looks like a regular civilian, doesn’t he?”

“Yes, sir.”

It was as he said; once that man’s unkempt hair and the messy beard were taken care of, his facial features would be that of an average middle-aged Oriental male commonly found everywhere.

“Have you found out his identity yet?”

“He has repeatedly stated that he’s a Korean Hunter.”

“South Korea?”

“Yes, sir.”

“How can a South Korean Hunter come out of a dungeon on the other side of the world?”

“He says that he was trapped inside the dungeon for the past ten years after the Gate closed on him.”

“And when he reopened his eyes, he’s in America? Is that it?”

“That’s what he’d been saying until now, sir.”

The deputy director massaged his forehead. How was he to explain this to the director? He felt a migraine beginning its vicious assault on his head.

“If that’s the case, then what are you guys waiting for? Why aren’t you in there, trying to get more information out of him?”

Never mind his director, the deputy was worried about having to report directly to someone even higher than that. Or worse, someone much, much higher up the food chain.

In other words, there was no time to wait around sucking on thumbs like this.

Too bad, the section chief in charge of information did not share his sentiment.

“Sir, we’re currently focusing on the possibility of this man being a monster who possesses a human’s memories, instead.”

“Okay, so?”

“If it suddenly reveals its true intentions during the interview process, the entirety of Washington could be in danger.”

That made sense.

A raid team consisting of several rank A Hunters proved to be utterly helpless against that man, after all. They could not afford to be careless here.

“Looks like we’ll have to get a powerful Hunter to continue on with the investigation, then.”

Preferably, a rank S, too.

The section chief nodded his head in agreement.

“There is a rank S Hunter who can converse in Korean residing nearby.”

The deputy director’s expression brightened.

He was none other than the deputy director of the Hunter Bureau. He had memorised back to front the list of all rank S Hunters living in the States already.

“Mister Hwang! Is he coming here?”

“Yes, sir.”

One of the main Hunters of the Scavenger Guild, Hwang Dong-Su.

Just how much effort did the Hunter Bureau have to put in, in order to bring that man here and naturalise him as an American citizen?

‘If it’s him....’

Even if something bad did happen, it’d not be too much of a big problem. The deputy director smiled deeply.

“Oh, right. I almost forgot.”

A question belatedly formed in his head. If he were to make a report to the higher-ups, he at least needed to know the subject's name.

“What was the name of that man?”

It was a difficult-to-pronounce name, that's for sure.

The section chief confirmed it on the report submitted to him by one of his underlings and spoke up.

“His name is Seong Il-Hwan, a Hunter from South Korea.”

Hwang Dong-Su had no time for such things as mercy. Especially if it was against monsters.

He lost his parents to a dungeon break many years ago and grew up with only his older brother as the sole surviving family member. That was why when he Awakened as a rank S, he knew this was his heaven-sent opportunity.

‘The opportunity to rip apart and kill as many monsters as I can!’

Perhaps that was the reason why the glare of Hwang Dong-Su as he entered the interview room was icier than usual.

A man who came out from a dungeon – even the magic energy wavelength this man emitted apparently had a similar pattern to that of a monster.

‘If a monster is pretending to be a human....’

Then, he'd kill this abominable creature right here, right now.

His glare met the man's gaze.

‘.....’

‘.....’

They silently exchanged their gazes.

Hwang Dong-Su put the file with this man's information down on the table, pulled the chair out to sit, and opened his mouth.

“It'll be better for you to cooperate with me. One word from me will determine how others will see you: a human or a monster. Got that?”

“Understood.”

Before he got started, though, a deeply personal question floated up in Hwang Dong-Su's head.

His older brother who died inside the dungeon – was there any possibility that Hwang Dong-Seok could return alive?

He wanted to know about that first.

“Is there any chance of other Hunters returning from a dungeon, just as you have?”

The man shook his head.

Hwang Dong-Su’s brows quivered just then.

“How can you be so sure?”

“Because... I’m well aware of the reason why I came back.”

“The reason? What is it?”

“Let me ask you something before I answer that.”

“...I’ll be the one asking questions here.”

Hwang Dong-Su’s eyes narrowed to a slit. However, the man continued on with what he wanted to say regardless.

“The Gates, monsters, and dungeon breaks. How much do you know about them?”

“...”

If this man had asked a stupid question, Hwang Dong-Su might’ve used force to shut this man up right away. But, he couldn’t do that right now.

Because that question was something that countless tried to answer ever since the first Gate opened and Awakened people began appearing ten years ago.

This very moment could be when the answer finally revealed itself.

“Deputy director....”

“Shush.”

The agents of the Hunter Bureau all nervously swallowed their saliva as they stared into the one-way mirror.

Hwang Dong-Su asked.

“Are you saying that you know?”

“Dungeons, Gates, monsters... all these are merely preludes to a true war about to happen soon. And recently, a being that will become the greatest calamity ever seen has opened its eyes.”

“So, the reason why you returned here is...?”

“In order to stop that calamity.”

“And what is, or who is, this ‘greatest calamity ever seen’?”

“.....That, I can’t tell you.”

Hwang Dong-Su smirked derisively.

“A man who came here to stop a calamity can’t talk about what it is? I don’t know what that thing could be, but surely, rather than trying to stop it all by yourself, wouldn’t it be better to work together with others?”

The man shook his head.

“The number of people means nothing when facing this being. Doesn’t matter whether lots of amateurs decide to work together or not, they will only become its prey and become its pawns, instead.”

“So, you are saying that only you can stop it?”

The man nodded his head.

Hwang Dong-Su inwardly clicked his tongue.

‘This guy’s gone off the deep end.’

It wasn’t that hard to understand, though, if this man had been truly trapped inside a dungeon for ten years.

Or, alternatively, there had been some kind of an error, a mistake, during the process of the monster trying to copy a human’s memories and consequently, its brain had melted somewhat.

In any case, Hwang Dong-Su decided to humour the other party for the time being, and see where this thing would go.

“You must be awfully confident of your skills, then.”

“Let’s just say that, besides my skills, I’ve other factors in my favour.”

“Well... if you say so.”

Just what kind of information could he even extract from a madman?

Hwang Dong-Su decided to stop the questioning here.

Instead, he opened the man’s case file, thinking of finishing up the Bureau’s request, which was to investigate the man’s background.

“Your name is Seong Il-Hwan.....”

The photo supplied certainly matched the man’s face.

‘Rather than ten years, though, it’s like only a couple of weeks, maybe months, have passed by, instead.’

However, Hwang Dong-Su decided not to mind it. He heard that high-ranked Hunters could even skirt past the ageing process.

“Your records as a Hunter look pretty good. You could have earned quite a lot of money these days.”

Seong Il-Hwan didn't respond to that.

Back then, there was no proper system of Hunters in place. Hell, there wasn't a ranking system for Hunters, even!

Hwang Dong-Su began reading the file.

“Your spouse, Park Gyung-Hye. Two children. The son's name is....”

As he read down the names of the children with no emotion on his face, Hwang Dong-Su's eyes opened up slightly wider for a moment.

‘....Seong Jin-Woo?’

But, it only lasted for a truly brief second. Hwang Dong-Su did his best to remain calm and continued on.

“....Seong Jin-Woo. And the name of your daughter is?”

“Seong Jin-Ah.”

“Okay. .”

It happened, then.

“Wait.”

Before Hwang Dong-Su could flip to the next page, Seong Il-Hwan stopped him.

Hwang Dong-Su raised his head. And he found Seong Il-Hwan's glare had become as cold as his own.

“Why did you emit a murderous intent when mentioning the name of my son?”

“...”

Hwang Dong-Su placed the file on the desk between them. And then, killed the mic feed to the outside of this room.

“I told you that I'll be the one asking questions.”

“I'll have to hear your answer, first.”

“What if I'm not interested in answering you?”

“I'll use force, if necessary.”

Seong Il-Hwan's eyes began gleaming coldly. He didn't even show any hints of backing down. Which prompted Hwang Dong-Su to smirk deeply.

“I got it. So, you were a monster, then.”

How dare a measly little monster threaten a Hunter?

An intense hostility directed to him – now that was enough of an evidence to label this man as a monster.

‘No, wait. This could be my second heaven-sent opportunity.’

Hwang Dong-Su decided as such, and switched the mic on again.

Click, beep.

“Deputy director? This guy is a monster. Evacuate immediately, because he might start attacking very soon.”

Beep.

People panicking beyond the one-way mirror quickly ran out of the room. And soon, a loud wail of a siren resounded within the building.

Meanwhile, a silver light began emanating from Hwang Dong-Su’s hands.

“I’m planning to visit South Korea soon.”

After getting ready, Hwang Dong-Su threw an insidious smile at Seong Il-Hwan.

“So, what last words from his father should I deliver to your son?”

The TV was still talking about the Red Gate incident.

Jin-Woo scratched the back of his head.

‘This thing is getting out of hand.’

Still, he didn’t feel all that troubled. It was like, he felt a bit weird, instead?

He found it rather odd that some people who didn’t even know anything about him were trying their darnedest to find more about him. Especially when he wasn’t even there....

But, what if they find out about him?

Didn’t matter, really.

‘Well, I’ve already levelled up to the point I was aiming for, anyway.’

The reason why he decided to keep his abilities hidden in the beginning was that he had a lingering fear that he might end up being used by some unscrupulous b*stards.

But now, the story was different.

Even when the Guild Master of the White Tiger, as well as a rank S Hunter,

Baek Yun-Ho had grabbed his arm, Jin-Woo could yank his arm free without a problem.

He wouldn't have even dreamed of achieving such a feat in the past.

'Surely, I'd have wet myself just from meeting eyes with that man.'

An imperceptible smile formed on Jin-Woo's lips. In times like this, he should've been enjoying the drunken bliss, with reminiscence serving as the perfect side dish, but then....

Tti-ring.

[Harmful substances have been detected.]

[Effects of 'Buff: Detox' will now commence.]

[3, 2, 1.... Detoxification has been completed.]

What a regretful thing it was, his wish couldn't be granted.

Jin-Woo smiled rather ruefully. But, his facial expression became serious and determined, more than ever before as he put the soju glass down.

'I don't have any plans to stop here, though.'

Jin-Woo summoned his Status Window.

Tti-ring.

[Name: Seong Jin-Woo]

[Level: 61]

[Class: Shadow Sovereign]

[Title: The One Who Overcame the Adversity (extra 1)]

[HP: 13,001]

[MP: 1,677]

[Tiredness: 0]

[Stats]

Strength: 142

Endurance: 101

Agility: 121

Intelligence: 89

Perception: 103

(Available Stat points to distribute: 0)

Reduction in physical damage: 46%

His level was 61.

Thanks to investing all of the points he earned via Daily Quests in Intelligence, that stat was getting ever closer to the '100' mark.

'I've got a long road ahead of me, though....'

But, he knew he could climb even higher. To an even higher place.

To a place that possibly no one else could get to. That possibility made his heart palpitate.

And the beginning of this climb would be at the Demon's Castle.

'The System definitely said that's the one item I wanted more than anything else.'

He recalled the time he got the blessed random box.

[Blessed random box]

Presents the Player with the item he wants.

And he got the key to the instant dungeon, Demon's Castle, from it.

The monster he ran into had a high level, and the rewards were top-notch, too. He had confirmed these two facts before exiting from there.

He had no idea what might come out on the higher floors, but it'd not deviate too much.

And so, it was now the time to go and reap his rewards. He was planning to enter there and spend a good few days inside.

Jin-Woo's only worry was...

'Once I'm inside, I won't be able to contact the outside.'

What should he tell his little sister, then?

Deciding to come up with a suitable excuse on his way back home, Jin-Woo got up from his seat.

Tap, tap.

"Hey, Jin-Ho."

Tap, tap.

"Yu Jin-Ho."

“Slurrrp~.”

Jin-Woo shook and lightly tapped Yu Jin-Ho, but the kid had completely blacked out. What should he do now?

‘And he’s supposed to go to the Association tomorrow to take the written test, too....’

Well, taking a test was one thing, but the most urgent thing to worry about right now was sending him home safely from here.

Jin-Woo pulled out Yu Jin-Ho’s phone.

“Obviously, I can’t call either the Chairman Yu Myung-Hwan or Yu Jin-Seong....”

Just who should he call here that would inflict the least amount of harm on Yu Jin-Ho? Jin-Woo pondered his choices, before spotting a name on the contact list.

‘Yu Soo-Hyun?’

Unlike with his father or his older brother, Yu Jin-Ho had exchanged quite a few messages with this person.

It had to be a woman, judging from the name....

Jin-Woo deliberated for a while on whether to call this woman or not, before putting the phone down.

‘Wait a minute.’

He quickly confirmed his Store just in case.

And sure enough, there was a certain item he was thinking of.

He found it!

[Item: Status recovery potion]

Rarity: E

Type: Consumable

A liquid potion that can recover one’s status. Once consumed, undesirable status ailments will be cured. Can be stored in your Inventory, but it can’t be handed over to someone else.

As soon as he confirmed the purchase, a yellow potion vial suddenly materialised on the top of the diner’s table. It was of a noticeably brighter colour than the healing potion’s deep red colour or the blue of the MP recovery potion.

Jin-Woo took a look around him to make sure no one was looking before he quickly tipped Yu Jin-Ho's head over and poured the status recovery potion down the kid's throat.

It was then.

Yu Jin-Ho's eyes snapped open.

“Hyung-nim?!”

“Are you awake now?”

Yu Jin-Ho's head was tipped backwards. And hyung-nim was staring down at him from above.

“...Hyung-nim, what are you doing there?”

“....”

Jin-Woo couldn't come up with a good enough explanation right away. In times like these, pretending that nothing had happened was for the best.

“Let's go.”

“Oh. Yes, hyung-nim!”

Yu Jin-Ho stood right up from his seat, before tilting his head slightly.

‘Uh? Why do I feel so refreshed?’

Yu Jin-Ho moved his body this way and that, before a refreshing smile formed on his face as he followed after Jin-Woo.

And as they left the diner, the news continued on.

[This is next item on the bulletin. The American government has continuously delayed releasing any official statement on the mysterious explosion that rocked the headquarters of the American Hunter Bureau....]

REPORT

On the first light of the day, Jin-Woo headed to the Daesung Tower.

‘It sure is really big.’

Trying to look up at the top of this 100-floor-tall skyscraper from nearby made his neck hurt.

‘But, why are there so many people around here?’

Unlike the last time, there were way too many people coming in and out of the Tower. The difference in foot traffic between the nighttime and daytime was far too huge.

Not only the building’s entrance but the streets surrounding it was packed full as well.

‘It’ll probably get real noisy if a person suddenly vanishes in a place with so many people in it, right?’

Not only that, the media was casting a spotlight on this mystery helper or whatever, so there wasn’t any reason for him to go out of his way and draw attention to himself, was there?

‘Obviously not.’

Jin-Woo wasn’t someone who enjoyed the attention, to begin with.

He made his way to an area with not much foot traffic and pulled out the key to the Demon’s Castle from his Inventory.

It was a long, slender, golden key. At a casual glance, it even resembled a fancy decorative item.

‘No one’s around me, right?’

After scanning his surroundings, Jin-Woo nodded his head.

‘Let’s enter from here.’

Jin-Woo activated his ‘Stealth’ skill.

Shururuk...

After vanishing from view, he returned to the main street and walked closer to the Tower while brushing past the countless passersby.

Tap.

Tap.

As befitting the busy street in the middle of the city – and during the daytime, no less – the distance he had to walk wasn't far but he still ended up bumping into quite a few shoulders as he blended in with the crowd.

However, not one person noticed it.

'If I were to abuse this Stealth skill, I can do pretty much anything, no?'

He even thought that this had to be the reason why high-ranking Hunters possessing the Stealth skill were closely monitored at all times.

His aimlessly wandering mind didn't stay like that for long. Just like the first time he came here, the surrounding view suddenly transformed as soon as he stepped across the invisible boundary.

Rumble....

'I can already hear the sounds of flames burning from this far away, so just how hot is it in there?'

The giant tower enveloped in flames – the Demon's Castle, replacing the Daesung Tower, filled up his entire view.

The thing was, though, humans were supposedly capable of quickly adapting to their situations.

'Well, it's not as bad as the first time.'

For sure, he didn't feel as nervous as the first time he saw the Demon's Castle.

No, maybe...

'Maybe, it's because I have levelled up sufficiently enough.'

Jin-Woo stored the key to the Demon's Castle in his Inventory, and summoned an ash-coloured key, instead.

[Item: Key to the Castle's Gate]

Rarity: A

Type: Key

The key to unlock the gates of the Demon's Castle. Can be acquired only after killing the Gatekeeper.

It was the key he got after killing the gatekeeper, the Cerberus. Back then, he didn't even dare to use it after getting almost bitten to death by the Cerberus, but now, he could use it.

Shururuk...

up, he summoned his weapon.

On his left hand, the key; and on his right hand, the Baruka's Dagger. Jin-Woo cautiously approached the front gate of the Tower.

He couldn't see the Cerberus.

'Could it be that monsters don't respawn in the Demon's Castle?'

He couldn't be sure, but there was some possibility that it might be, just like with the Cerberus.

'In that case....'

In that case, the layout of this dungeon could be very different from other instant dungeons where monsters always respawned.

Jin-Woo expanded his Perception to the limit.

Thump, thump, thump!

By expanding his Perception Stat that had broke past the 100 mark, he could even hear his own heart beating as loudly as thunderclaps.

'However, I'm not scared at all.'

Unlike before, he was certainly feeling a lot more confident, knowing how strong he was currently. Maintaining his vigilance and shivering from fear were two very different stories, after all.

Tti-ring.

When he stood before the castle's gate, a new message popped up.

[Will you use the Key to the Castle's Gate to enter?] (Y/N)

'...You think I'm going back home after coming this far?'

Jin-Woo snorted at this nonsensical question and chose 'Yes'.

Creeaaaak....

He didn't even do anything, yet the huge pair of doors began moving as the hinges issued loud creaks.

Slam!

'Huh....?'

Jin-Woo was flustered next.

He had had his Perception expanded to the max, yet he couldn't sense a single presence of monsters from beyond the castle gates.

'There are no monsters??'

Jin-Woo had been worried about precisely the opposite situation happening to him.

He had even thought about going through a special training by deliberately entering the penalty zone to fight against those desert centipedes or whatever, in case monsters crazily rushed out as soon as the castle gate opened up.

'But, what the hell....'

What the hell was the meaning of this?

All his effort so far seemed to be in vain.

The interior was utterly devoid of any life.

'Huh.... Well, this is....'

Feeling somewhat dumbfounded, Jin-Woo stored 'Baruka's Dagger' back to his Inventory and entered the Demon's Castle.

It happened, then.

Tti-ring.

As soon as a mechanical beep rang inside his head, he immediately summoned both of his daggers. But, that beep was nothing more than an alert to let him know that a new message had arrived.

'Uh?'

[A new quest is available.]

'A new quest, is it?'

It wasn't a Daily Quest?

Well, it'd be strange if it was, since Jin-Woo made sure to complete the Daily Quest and pocketed the rewards before coming here. Meaning, this had to be a regular quest....

And that would be his first, ever.

'Well, yeah, I've been getting only the Hidden Quests or Emergency Quests until now, so....'

Excluding the Daily Quests that showed up every day regardless of how he felt, of course.

Jin-Woo tilted his head slightly and confirmed the contents of the message.

‘Confirm.’

Then, the information on the quest appeared before him.

Tti-ring.

[Normal Quest: Collect the Souls of Demons! (1)]

Demons are everywhere within the Demon’s Castle. Kill the demons and collect their souls to receive special rewards.

One soul can be collected from a single demon, but on higher floors, there are demons with multiple souls.

Quest generation condition:

Quest clear condition:

Rewards:

20 bonus Stat points!

That was the very first thing that attracted Jin-Woo’s attention – the Stat points.

‘I can raise my Intelligence by 20 points!’

A smile instinctively formed on his face.

He’d been feeling his lack of MP for quite some time now.

‘I need lots of Mana if the shadow soldiers need to regenerate.’

And, was Mana his only problem? He had already confirmed that the number of shadows he could extract, as well as the number of soldiers he could store, increased when his Intelligence Stat also improved.

So, for him, increasing the ‘Intelligence’ Stat was a must.

‘There always has been a limit to increasing that Stat through level-ups and Daily Quests, but now....’

If he could get his hands on that 20 points via the completion of this quest, then his problems would be solved in one fell swoop.

Gulp.

He was salivating already.

‘Not only that....’

Jin-Woo’s gaze landed on other rewards.

[Rewards]

He was feeling grateful for the bonus Stat points, but now, he could even choose one item from the Store, too?

‘Can I really choose anything?’

Jin-Woo recalled those ultra-expensive items he saw in the Store’s menu.

‘I definitely saw....’

There were some S-rarity items that cost billions, hell, even tens of billions there. Well, those billions weren’t the real-world currency but Gold that only existed within the System, though.

Still, just how amazing was this?

The ‘Knight Killer’ he’d been using so nicely until now cost only three million Gold.

‘A three million B-rarity item already possesses this high quality and attack power, so just what will those costing billions be like?’

His curiosity had been stoked for sure.

Never mind the mystery third reward, just from looking at those two rewards alone, he knew right away that he couldn’t let this quest slip through his fingers.

‘For this kind of rewards, killing one or two monsters is a walk in the park.’

Jin-Woo was genuinely elated now and thought about finishing this quest real fast to receive those rewards, only for his eyes to bulge out after confirming the quest clear condition.

“Ten thousand?!”

He gasped out in sheer shock.

This was already far beyond the notion of killing one or two monsters.

‘What the hell, what kind of slave labour is this?!’

He had no idea what kind of a monster these demons could be, but hell, ten thousand was a scary-high number, indeed.

Still, a smile crept up on Jin-Woo’s face.

‘Well, that would have been, if I was alone.’

Currently, the number of shadow soldiers he possessed was 50.

If each one killed 200, this quest would be cleared. If he pushed his soldiers to work hard, surely this sort of quest would prove to be nothing but a cakewalk.

[Will you accept the 'Normal Quest: Collect the Souls of Demons! (1)'?]

'Of course.'

He had no reason to refuse.

[You have accepted the quest.]

The penalty for failing this quest would be him wasting a bit of time, that'd be all.

'Compared to other quests, uh-whew.....'

Without a doubt, this was truly a wonderful quest when compared to the Class Change Quest or Emergency Quests where his life was on the line.

Jin-Woo raised his head.

'I wonder, is that thing supposed to display my progress from now on?'

As soon as he accepted the quest, a counter he hadn't seen before appeared in the air, just above his line of sight.

[Collected souls of demons: 0/10,000]

'Ten thousand... so far away....'

A bitter chuckle leaked out of his mouth once he got to physically confirm the number that had been floating inside his head as nothing but a vague notion until now.

It was then that he discovered a different counter to the left of that one.

'Huh?'

[Exp. needed for the next level up: 60,000]

There it was, sixty thousand clearly displayed via the holographic display.

As soon as he met that, he'd level up, or at least that's what was written there.

'Even my experience points are being displayed now?'

However, he had never seen anything like that prior to his entry into the Demon's Castle.

'Maybe....'

To make sure, Jin-Woo took a step backwards and left the Demon's Castle.

Sure enough, both the counter for souls and experience points disappeared. When he stepped back inside, they showed up again as if they had never disappeared in the first place.

‘Yeah, they only show up inside the Demon’s Castle.’

Although it was unfortunate that he couldn’t see them outside the castle, but at the least, it’d be quite convenient to have them inside, that’s for sure.

If he looked at it from another perspective....

‘Does this mean that it’ll take a long, long time for me to conquer this place?’

That was a distinct possibility.

Jin-Woo carefully read through the quest details one more time and closed the message windows.

‘That should be enough preparation, I think.’

Finally, he had some leeway to take a closer look at the interior of the Demon’s Castle.

‘Heok?!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened immediately once he did.

Wuuuuu-....

Inside of the castle was.... a ruined city. Quite unexpectedly, it was a field-type dungeon.

‘What is this place? Is this Seoul?’

If everyone in Seoul died and a hundred years had passed by, would the city look like this?

Within this lifeless, ash-grey cityscape, only the lonesome street lights flickered as if they were having a seizure.

‘I never expected it to be a field-type dungeon, though....’

Not only that, a dungeon created to look like the metropolis of Seoul.

This was the kind of scale that utterly disallowed any comparison to other instant dungeons that were based around a special location such as subway stations or department stores.

Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed to a slit.

‘So, like, where should I go now?’

Where should be his destination?

Jin-Woo’s gaze scanned the surroundings and the distant horizon.

Thankfully, his dilemma didn't last for long.

In the far-off distance, in the direction where the famed Namsan Tower should have been, there stood a massive pillar of light stretching beyond the sky.

'Let's head over there.'

Jin-Woo began walking in that direction. He also made sure to memorise the surrounding area of the castle's gates in case he got lost on the way, too.

However....

His steps had to come to a stop not long after.

"Kekeke."

"Kekekek."

Monsters with smallish physical sizes began creeping out from the gaps of ruined buildings, one by one.

[Low-Ranked Demon]

Jin-Woo immediately recognised what they were from the dark-red name floating above their heads.

'They look like....'

These creatures reminded him of Gargoyles, but without wings. There were a total of eight of them.

Seeing them, the corners of Jin-Woo's lips arched up.

'Well, for starters, I got myself eight souls.'

Right away....

Kwajeeck!

The 'Baruka's Dagger' pierced deeply into the forehead of one of the demons.

[You killed a Low-Ranked Demon.]

[You have earned 100 experience points.]

[You have collected (1) Soul of Demons.]

"Kiaahk?"

"Kiiehk?"

The moment the demons' attention had shifted to the one with the dagger stuck to its forehead, Jin-Woo rapidly approached another one to separate its head from its body.

Slice!

[You killed a Low-Ranked Demon.]

[You have earned 100 experience points.]

[You have collected (1) Soul of Demons.]

This one also gave him 100 EXP.

‘And I need sixty thousand experience points....’

If he hunted down 600 Low-Ranked Demons, then he’d get to raise his level.

The remaining demons were taken care of in the blink of an eye.

“Kiiiihhk?!”

“Khek!!”

He had collected eight souls, and the experience points earned were eight hundred.

‘Hey, this is not too bad.’

And they said that the journey of a thousand miles started with the first step – Jin-Woo’s eyes began sparkling brightly as he began searching for his next prey.

Inside the office of the White Tiger Guild’s Guild Master.

Baek Yun-Ho was browsing through several documents he had been neglecting in the past few days because of his busy schedule.

Beep-!

He picked the phone up after hearing that beep.

“Let him through.”

A short while later, a familiar voice came from the phone’s speaker.

Baek Yun-Ho spat out a long sigh.

“Because of the d*mn reporters. I was thinking of being out of the public’s eye until this whole thing dies down.”

“Stop riling me up, man. I’m not in the mood to kid around. If I find out just who leaked it to the media, I’m gonna...”

“Big news, is it? From Japan?”

“What happened?”

About a week ago, the Japanese Hunter’s Association secretly contacted several of Korea’s large Guilds. They said that they needed advice from the Korean Hunters.

And so, two days after that, a few of Korea’s elite Hunters travelled to Japan. The Hunter Min Byung-Gu was one of them.

Baek Yun-Ho had been curious about that matter for a while now.

“Stop building up the suspense and tell me what happened already. This was the first time the Japs have asked for advice from us. What made them do that? What did those prideful b*stards want?”

Four years ago, a rank S Gate opened up on the island of Jeju. Ants came out of there.

There had been three separate subjugation operations since then, and all of them ended in failure.

In the end, the Korean government gave up on the island, and it was now a barren land ruled by monsters.

“How could I forget? I nearly died back then.”

“A mutation, is it? But, what does it matter to us? Aren’t they just going to fight among themselves while being confined to that island?”

The voice coming from the phone sounded rather troubled.

[You killed a Low-Ranked Demon.]

[You have collected (1) Soul of Demons.]

.....

.....

[You have earned 100 experience points.]

[You have collected (1) Soul of Demons.]

For the next two hours, he madly hunted down every Low-Ranked Demon he could find.

Afterwards, Jin-Woo confirmed the number of souls he managed to collect.

[Collected Souls of Demons: 309/10,000]

He had now completed about 3% of the quest. If he could continue hunting at this speed, then according to his calculations, he could level up in another two hours.

His current level was 61.

In the past, he needed experience points from nine rank C dungeons in order to level up from 60 to 61. And the time spent was around two days, too.

But here, he could already think about levelling up only after four hours?

‘This is crazy.’

A thick smile formed on Jin-Woo’s lips.

Just how long had it been since he could hunt this enthusiastically?

‘Is this the first time since then?’

He couldn’t really remember ever being in a similar situation since he went to the Hapjeong subway station and repeatedly cleared the first two underground floors until his level didn’t want to rise anymore.

“Kkiiieehk!”

Whenever Jin-Woo’s dagger flashed, one Low-Ranked Demon fell without exception.

“Kiaahk!”

“Kiehk.”

“Keehhgehk, khek!”

Sometimes, even several of them, too.

In the blink of an eye, Jin-Woo killed twenty more Low-Ranked Demons.

‘This is a gold mine.’

Both his experience points and the number of souls continued to rise as he continued to hunt down the demons. Not only that, there was the added bonus of loot drops, too.

A bright smile formed on Jin-Woo’s face as he collected the loot.

‘Their horns come out almost all the time, don’t they?’

[Item: Low-Ranked Demon’s Horns]

Rarity: None

Type: Miscellaneous

Two horns attached to the head of a Low-Ranked Demon. Demon’s horns are used as base ingredients for high-grade magic spells and therefore can be sold at a high price.

The japtem ‘demon’s horns’ – selling it in the Store would net him two hundred thousand Gold.

‘Each of those fangs of Cerberus or whatever got me 150 grand each, but this... well, monsters of the Demon’s Castle are really generous, aren’t they?’

After experiencing the usefulness of the Store multiple times recently, these japtems no longer remained japtems in Jin-Woo’s eyes. All the Gold earned through here would eventually become his flesh and blood later.

‘I can’t throw anything away.’

Feeling really chuffed, Jin-Woo sold off what could be sold and stored what should be stored as he rummaged through the remains of the demons.

In the midst of this...

‘What’s this?’

He found an item he hadn’t seen before. And the thing with its end poking out from the busted gut of a demon was....

[Item: Entry Permit]

Rarity: ??

Type: ??

A permit allowing you to enter the 2nd floor of the Demon's Castle. Can only be used on the 1st-floor floor-transfer magic circle. (TL: I'll use the North American way of counting floors from here onwards.)

...It was a document scroll, tightly rolled up.

'An entry permit?'

When he unfurled it and took a look, he found all sorts of undecipherable drawings and letters adorning its surface. In the end, the only thing that helped him understand its purpose was the item explanation.

'An item that lets me go up from the first floor to the second, is it....?'

Could it be?

Jin-Woo took a look around.

This place was inside the Demon's Castle, but at the same time, he was also inside the Daesung Tower. If the Demon's Castle was also divided into floors like the Tower, then he'd be on the first floor.

'Since this place looked like a field-type dungeon, I didn't expect there to be different floors....'

Could it be that, just like the Daesung Tower, there were 100 floors here, too? Jin-Woo was left agape by the sheer scale of this particular dungeon.

'...It can't really be 100 floors, can it?!'

There was only one way to confirm this. And that would be to locate that transfer magic circle and see for himself.

'Now, where would this floor-transfer magic circle thing be in this place....?'

Jin-Woo's wandering gaze stopped at the pillar of light piercing the sky.

'Well, that has to be it.'

Getting there was his initial goal, but his attention got robbed by the hunting of the Low-Ranked Demons and before he knew it, he had moved further away from his destination than before.

'Should I head there now?'

He thought that this might be a good time to think about heading there.

Also, he had hunted down all of the Low-Ranked Demons nearby, too.

Jin-Woo grinned brightly.

'Summon.'

The shadow soldiers stored inside his shadows via the Shadow Storage skill didn't require any chanting or whatever to summon them, unlike when he was trying to extract shadows.

Shururuk....

In front of Jin-Woo, the giant beast soldier extracted from the leader of the Ice Bear pack appeared silently.

"Growl...."

And it was a giant monster-ish bear standing on its hind legs. It was as large as a house. But to Jin-Woo, it was not much different from a mild-mannered lovable puppy.

"Get down."

"Growl."

When the shadow beast soldier laid down on the ground, Jin-Woo lightly jumped on top of its back.

"Giddy up!"

As soon as Jin-Woo lightly tapped the side of the beast with his leg, the shadow creature rushed towards the pillar of light with a frightening turn of speed.

Thud, thud, thud, thud!!

The massive creature also possessed incredible agility as well, and before long, the distance between him and the destination rapidly closed up.

Of course, they still encountered obstructions every now and then.

"Kiireek!"

"Keek, keek!!"

Roar!!

One thunderous swipe from the beast soldier, and the situation normalised right away.

"Ho-oh."

Jin-Woo formed a deeply impressed expression.

‘I only decided to ride it for fun, but isn’t this actually pretty cool?’

Thinking that he should utilise this means of transportation often from now on, he even named his new ride right there and then.

“From now on, your name shall be Tank.”

“Roar!!”

The beast soldier, no, Tank, roared out while raising its head high up.

Was it trying to say it liked it, or hated it?

What with its incredibly powerful vocal cord, Jin-Woo couldn’t really tell which was which.

In the meantime, the light pillar got closer and closer. Tank gradually slowed down and eventually, stopped before the light pillar.

“Nice work.”

Jin-Woo got down to the ground and patted Tank once, before storing the big guy back into his shadow. Then, he turned around to face the magic circle. The familiar mechanical beep rang inside his head as soon as he did.

Tti-ring.

[You have discovered floor-transfer magic circle.]

There was a magic circle carved on the ground. The light shooting out from it was reaching into the sky. Without hesitation, Jin-Woo stepped inside.

‘.....’

...Nothing happened.

Jin-Woo tilted his head this way and that, before taking a few more steps to stand in the middle of the circle.

Only then another message popped up in his view.

[No floors have been opened.]

[Which floor would you like to transfer to?]

“How many floors are there?”

Of course, there was no reply.

‘Is there no other way to find out how many floors are there, except for finding out for myself?’

Jin-Woo pondered for a moment.

There wasn’t that much left for the experience points, so should he stay and raise his level before going up, or should he just go up and level up there?

‘Unlike other instant dungeons, there is no monster respawn in this place, so staying on one floor will be inefficient in the long run.’

Besides, the System said that demons with more souls existed on upper floors as well. He concluded that, for both his experience points and to clear the quest, it could be more advantageous to get to higher floors as quickly as possible.

‘Fine.’

Let’s go up, then.

Jin-Woo spoke up.

“Second floor.”

[You need the entry permit.]

Jin-Woo summoned the scroll as per the instruction. As soon as it appeared, it dissolved into the light.

[The second floor of the Demon’s Castle has been unlocked.]

[You are transferring to the second floor.]

Buzz.....

An even stronger ray of light began rising up from the magic circle. At the same time, Jin-Woo realised something.

‘Ah.... So that’s how it works.’

As it turned out, this whole thing was just an elevator.

The moment he realised what this pillar of light actually was, Jin-Woo was immediately transferred to the second floor, along with the blinding explosion of light.

Second floor, third, fourth... and eventually, the 27th floor. That was the result of grinding for two days straight.

He told Jin-Ah, his little sister, that he’d be on a week-long trip.

‘I have five more days.’

Considering his gradually-increasing clearing speed, he began to think that it might be doable to get to what he assumed to be the last floor, the 100th floor, within the next five days. Maybe even sooner than that.

Jin-Woo took a look at his surroundings. It was still a ruined city.

‘I can’t tell which city this floor is based on anymore.’

Every floor was modelled off on a different city.

However, the higher he climbed, the state of destruction the city was in got worse and worse, and on this 27th floor, he found it hard to tell whether this place used to be a city or not.

Would a city look like this after having experienced a concentrated carpet bombing?

Jin-Woo quickly threw away useless thoughts and shook his head.

‘I shouldn’t be wasting time like this.’

He checked the time with his wristwatch, and it was already 11 in the evening.

There was no daytime or night inside this dungeon. So he needed to rely on his watch to keep time. 11 would be a good time to get some shut-eye if he wanted to continue clearing this dungeon tomorrow with a refreshed body and mind.

But before that....

‘Should I check the result of my hard work first?’

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to the quest progress window.

[Collected souls of demons: 2,116/10,000]

‘Over 2,100, is it...’

Meaning, he had hunted down over a thousand demons in a day.

He had killed quite a lot during the last two days, that’s for sure.

It was still a long way off from the goal of ten thousand souls, but he was betting on the demons of the upper floors that allegedly possessed multiple souls.

‘Right, getting to higher floors should remain as my priority.’

up, his level.

“Heok!!”

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened wider.

[Level: 67]

His level had climbed to 67 even before he had noticed it.

He’d been hunting Low-Ranked Demons worth 100 EXP for a while, but then, his levelling up speed exploded upwards after he began hunting Mid-Ranked Demons that gave out 300 EXP each.

‘My level is climbing up real nicely, too.’

Lots of monsters, rich experience points, and the perfect level of difficulty.

The Demon’s Castle was the best level-up zone one could ever hope for.

His level wasn’t the only thing experiencing a rise, either. Jin-Woo’s proficiency with his various skills was also rising up, as well.

Currently, the ‘Knight Killer’ was floating above Jin-Woo’s palm. He was using the skill ‘Ruler’s Reach’. The power that allowed him to physically manipulate objects without actually touching them.

Even when he was doing nothing, like right now, he devoted himself to increasing his proficiency with the skill.

‘Well, this Ruler’s Reach skill doesn’t require any Mana, to begin with.’

It was a bit tiring mentally because he had to constantly focus on the skill, but compared to the potential uses this skill had, a small little headache was a cheap price to pay.

With a nice timing, a good piece of news arrived before his eyes.

[The level of the skill, ‘Ruler’s Reach’ has increased!]

‘Nice!’

Jin-Woo grinned brightly and leaned against a wall. He felt safer and more content as he became stronger bit by bit. His eyelids slowly closed.

‘Now that I think about it, the Guild Master licence must’ve been issued by now.’

Was Yu Jin-Ho doing well?

Perhaps because it had been a while since he acted alone, he couldn’t help but recall the mug of Yu Jin-Ho who used to follow him around.

The successful first-born who had become an excellent entrepreneur, and the second born with the qualification to become a Master, but who was still a university student. The fight between them would not be easy.

‘Do your best, Yu Jin-Ho.’

After cheering Yu Jin-Ho on in his mind, Jin-Woo slowly drifted off to a deep slumber.

Yu Jin-Ho entered a luxurious traditional Korean restaurant with a determined face. He chose this place after taking into account his father’s taste.

“Has the Chairman arrived yet?”

“Yes, he’s waiting for you.”

Yu Jin-Ho swallowed his saliva after hearing the maître d’hôtel.

“Please, this way.”

He was guided to the private room where his father, Yu Myung-Han, was waiting for him.

The traditional sliding paper door was opened and immediately, Yu Jin-Ho’s nervousness increased by several folds after seeing his father’s face.

He wondered if he was getting weak-kneed again, but Yu Jin-Ho hardened his resolve and settled down on the opposite side of his father.

“What’s the occasion? You even called me first for this meeting.”

“Father, before I begin, I’d like you to take a look at this first.”

“And this is....?”

“This is my Guild Master licence, as well as the records of the raids I’ve been in so far.”

“Your Master.... licence? Yours?”

When Yu Myung-Han formed a disbelieving face, Yu Jin-Ho nodded his head with a smile.

“Yes, Father.”

Yu Myung-Han wordlessly took a look at the documents his son had handed over. And then, a certain light began gleaming in his eyes.

“....”

While his father maintained a weighty silence, Yu Jin-Ho’s heart was beating so madly that he found it hard to even breathe properly.

“And so....”

Yu Myung-Han carefully placed the documents on the table and continued on.

“....You wish to run the Yujin Guild, is that right?”

“That’s correct.”

“H-mm....”

It was at this point that a hint of a dilemma, alongside the emotion of shock, appeared on Yu Myung-Han’s face.

‘To think that father is pondering between me and my older brother....’

Yu Jin-Ho was genuinely moved inside. The fact that his father was thinking about this matter was a big win for Yu Jin-Ho.

If it was in the past, he’d be satisfied with this much. However, he had no desire whatsoever to back off now.

“As you know already, Father, giving the position of the Guild Master to an outsider carries too much risk....”

“Enough.”

Yu Myung-Han raised his hand.

At the same time, Yu Jin-Ho’s mouth stopped moving.

Father’s ‘Enough’ was one of the most absolute commands that no one in the Yu household could go against.

“There is someone I want you to meet.”

“Pardon me?”

Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes went round at that. He was the one who called and asked for this meeting, yet, his father wanted to introduce him to someone?

Who could it be?

Just as Yu Jin-Ho’s curiosity peaked, the door opposite to the one he used to enter the room slid open.

“Ah.... Hello, there.”

Was he in the late twenties? Or early thirties? A man around that age group awkwardly greeted Yu Jin-Ho as he entered the room.

Who was this man?

Yu Jin-Ho couldn’t recognise this man at all.

When Yu Myung-Han signalled with his chin, this unknown man settled down next to him.

“This here is... Hunter Goh Myung-Hwan.”

‘Goh Myung-Hwan?’

Yu Jin-Ho tilted his head.

He had never heard of this name before.

Father nodded his head as if he had expected this already, and continued on.

“He is one of the survivors from the White Tiger Guild’s Red Gate incident, the one that’s been making so much noise lately.”

REPORT

Yu Jin-Ho was taken by surprise.

‘...The Red Gate?’

Why was the story of the Red Gate brought up here, out of the blue?

Since the incident had been talked about non-stop in mass media, even Yu Jin-Ho knew what had happened. But, this timing was suspiciously coincidental and so, he found it difficult to figure out where his father was going with this.

‘And this man here...’

A man who was supposed to be a survivor of that incident.

Why did the survivor that the media was madly scrambling over to find appear here? Yu Jin-Ho’s curiosity continued to balloon greatly.

After staring at his son for a little while, Yu Myung-Han slowly opened his mouth.

“Looks like you haven’t heard of it yet.”

“Pardon me?”

Yu Myung-Han disregarded the still-confused Yu Jin-Ho for the time being and shifted his gaze over to Goh Myung-Hwan, sitting there in nervousness.

“Mister Hunter.”

“Yes, Chairman.”

“Please inform my son who was there besides the White Tiger Guild’s new recruits on that day.”

“Understood.”

Goh Myung-Hwan’s stare now was directed to Yu Jin-Ho.

Unintentionally, Yu Jin-Ho met Goh Myung-Hwan’s gaze, and a question mark floated up on his face.

Goh Myung-Hwan opened his mouth.

“There was a young female Hunter who looked to be a high schooler, and.....”

‘A young female Hunter?’

Even then, Yu Jin-Ho couldn't imagine just whose name would pop out from Goh Myung-Hwan's lips.

“....And, Mister Seong Jin-Woo.”

Tumble.

Yu Jin-Ho thought that he could hear his own heart fall to the pit of his stomach.

‘H-hyung-nim was there at the Red Gate incident?’

What was going on here?

He was already feeling quite confused, but now, his thought process devolved into an even more complicated mess. In the middle of his confusion, he suddenly remembered something.

‘Wait. Now that I think about it, a few days ago....’

....Hyung-nim was conversing with such familiarity with Hahn Song-Yi, someone whom he didn't even share a casual greeting before that day.

“Do you still remember the name of that female Hunter, by any chance?”

“It was Miss Hahn Song-Yi.”

How can this be?

Yu Jin-Ho's jaw dropped to the floor.

To think, there was such a secret to the mysterious relationship between those two people.....

‘Wait, if that's the case, then...?’

Then, the identity of the potential helper the news outlets were talking about was....

As if he knew what Yu Jin-Ho was about to ask, Goh Myung-Hwan quickly confirmed the truth.

“We, the members of the White Tiger Guild and Miss Hahn Song-Yi, could escape from the Red Gate all safe and sound thanks to Mister Seong Jin-Woo.”

‘Hah, haha, ha...’

....Hyung-nim, just what did you do in there?

Yu Jin-Ho formed an expression comprised of half surprise and half joy. He even forgot that he was in front of his father, and asked out loud.

“What happened inside the Red Gate?”

Goh Myung-Hwan glanced to his side, to the head of the dining table.

Yu Myung-Han nodded his head.

Goh Myung-Hwan carried a face of a man dying to open his mouth until then, and as soon as the permission was given, he began to tell his story with great relish.

“So, what happened was....”

Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes twinkled as he listened.

“At first, everyone was taken back somewhat, after learning that a pair of rank E Hunters were coming to observe the new recruit training process. But then....”

Goh Myung-Hwan began describing what happened that day with a hyped-up voice reminiscent of a little kid proudly showing off to a friend the brand new toy he got as a gift.

However....

“He did what to a rank A Hunter??”

Goh Myung-Hwan wasn’t the only over-excited person in the room.

“Exactly!! With his palm, he went like, Pah!! He smacked the back of Kim Cheol’s head, and....”

“Huh....”

As he listened to the exploits of hyung-nim, Yu Jin-Ho’s heart beat faster as if he was there, experiencing everything personally.

‘As expected of hyung-nim....’

To him, hunting down high-ranked monsters was nothing. Well, he could knock out a rank A Hunter with a single slap, after all.

Yu Jin-Ho felt so moved and proud at the same time after realising that such an incredible person had been standing by his side until now.

“....I really thought that we’d die for sure when dozens of Ice Elves showed up. But then again....”

Was he paying too close an attention to the story? Time flew by really quickly. The definitely-not-short story of that day's events was finally coming to its end.

The excited Goh Myung-Hwan's voice became louder.

“So, what I’m saying is, this whole thing is just too unfair. Mister Seong Jin-Woo saved our a*s*es back there. He’s my life’s saviour.”

Yu Jin-Ho unconsciously nodded his head in agreement. He could understand where Goh Myung-Hwan was coming from. He also had received similar help before, too.

“But then, I’m not supposed to reveal the existence of Mister Seong Jin-Woo? I find it difficult to accept the decision of the White Tiger Guild. However, Chairman Yu has given me a call out of the blue, and so, here I am.”

It was at this point that Yu Myung-Han stopped Goh Myung-Hwan in a dignified manner.

“Goh Myung-Hwan Hunter-nim.”

“Yes?”

“I believe that should be sufficient.”

“Ah. My apologies, sir. I got carried away.”

Goh Myung-Hwan embarrassedly lowered his head.

Yu Myung-Han's stare then shifted over to his son, Yu Jin-Ho.

“In the process of investigating more about Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, a name that I never expected to hear popped up.”

At the ends of Yu Myung-Han's pointing finger....

His index finger pointed to a piece of paper with Yu Jin-Ho's name written on it. And it was none other than the raid records Yu Jin-Ho handed over to his father.

His index finger pointed lower and stopped at the three words 'Seong Jin-Woo' next.

The raid leader, Yu Jin-Ho. The raid member, Seong Jin-Woo.

This was irrefutable evidence.

‘...I’m busted.’

The truth about hyung-nim helping him out during the process of acquiring his Guild Master licence was now out in the open. Yu Jin-Ho's expression hardened.

“Hunter Seong Jin-Woo aided you greatly during your attempt to earn the Guild Master licence. Do you acknowledge this fact?”

“....Yes, Father.”

“Is there anything else you want to add?”

“...”

Yu Jin-Ho’s vision darkened.

Now that the matter of hyung-nim lending aid was out in the open, it was impossible to convince his father that he was the right person to take on the position of the Yujin Guild’s new Master.

‘.....’

He sensed his father’s strict eyes bearing down on him. In the past, being subjected to that withering glare, Yu Jin-Ho would lose all strength in his legs.

‘However!’

He couldn’t give up like this. For the first time ever, Yu Jin-Ho summoned his courage in front of his father.

He lowered his head and raised his voice.

“Can you entrust the Yujin Guild to me, Father?”

“I will.”

“Eh?”

At that refreshingly simple answer, Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly raised his head.

“I shall entrust the Yujin Guild to you.”

“But, why....?”

“Didn’t you say it yourself? It is too risky to entrust the Guild to an outsider. With you here, is there a reason to take on that risk now?”

“B-but, I tried to deceive you, father.”

“You thought I’d scold you and kick you out because of that?”

What was going on here?

Yu Jin-Ho thought that his father was smiling, for some reason. But, Yu Myung-Han’s lips would always remain in a straight line, no matter what the occasion was. So, how come?

“If you entered the dungeons without any plans whatsoever, then I’d have done just that. Because I don't remember raising an idiot son like that."

Yu Jin-Ho's face became hot at that moment.

'If I hadn't met hyung-nim, then I'd be getting scolded by father right about now....'

No, wait – he'd be dead long before that.

Yu Jin-Ho spat out a sigh of relief inwardly.

"However, I have a condition."

"Yes, Father."

"This Hunter Seong Jin-Woo... can you bring him over to Yujin?"

Yu Jin-Ho's eyes opened wider.

"You mean, hyung-nim??"

'...Hyung-nim?'

The light within Yu Myung-Han's eyes flickered a little just then. But that didn't last for long.

"That's correct."

Yu Jin-Ho became speechless, then.

'Groan...'

Even a snot-nosed brat would know that now was the right time to confidently say something in order to leave behind a positive impression. However, the one they were talking about was none other than hyung-nim.

Yu Jin-Ho could ask, sure, but he wasn't confident of anything else besides. So, he replied honestly.

"I can't be certain."

"Very good. There is no meaning if the challenge is too easy for you."

The Chairman Yu Myung-Han took a sip of water and lightly wiped the corners of his lips with a handkerchief.

"If you fail, I shall hand over the Guild to your brother. So, how about it? Will you accept?"

Yu Jin-Ho's expression became grave.

'This is the shot I struggled so hard to get....'

If he backed out now, then he wouldn't be able to show himself in front of hyung-nim, who helped him right until the end for this opportunity.

Yu Jin-Ho became deeply earnest as he replied.

“I accept, Father.”

“Good.”

With that reply, the negotiation between a father and a son had come to a conclusion. Yu Myung-Han wordlessly nodded his head, and Yu Jin-Ho stood up, bowed his waist, and left the room.

Yu Myung-Han took the handkerchief away from his lips. It was getting harder to suppress the smile trying to form on his lips.

‘This kid....’

This boy wanted Yujin Guild.

He suspected something was up when they agreed to meet today, but he didn’t expect his son to be this daring.

‘Indeed, a tiger’s cub is still a tiger at the end of the day.’

The smile finally began to spread on Yu Myung-Han’s lips.

‘...That famous Chairman Yu Myung-Han is actually smiling!!’

Goh Myung-Hwan’s eyes were growing large as he witnessed everything.

The widely-known nickname of Chairman Yu Myung-Han was ‘Pokerface’. He was famed for never showing any emotion whatsoever, whether it be a joyful occasion or a sorrowful one.

When Goh Myung-Hwan continued to stare utterly mystified, Chairman Yu Myung-Han turned to him and asked.

“Hunter-nim. Was there anything you wanted to add?”

Suddenly finding himself on the receiving end of that stare, Goh Myung-Hwan got flustered and hurriedly shook his head.

“N-no. Not at all.”

...47, 48, 49, 50.

With a frightening clearing speed, Jin-Woo climbed up the floors.

[You have killed the Mid-Ranked Demon.]

[You have acquired (1) Soul of Demons.]

...

....

.....

[You have killed the Mid-Ranked Demon.]

[You have killed the Mid-Ranked Demon.]

He didn't feel tired at all when looking at the total experience points and the accumulated number of souls climbing up higher every time he hunted a monster down.

[Collected Number of Souls: 4,388/10,000]

'It's not even at the halfway mark yet, huh.'

He had been endlessly hunting demons down ever since entering this place, but as expected, the wall of ten thousand souls was indeed high, and difficult to overcome.

However, what about his level?

[Level: 69]

In the space of one day, it had risen by another two.

The levelling up speed had slowed down compared to the beginning, but it could still be considered as blistering when looking at the rate of collecting the required souls. Even now, the experience points were quietly piling up.

"Kiieehk!"

[...Killed the Mid-Ranked Demon.]

[You have collected (1) Soul of....]

"Whew!"

After finishing off the last demon still standing before his eyes, Jin-Woo stretched his back and scanned his surroundings. Beneath the confidence-inspiring shadow soldiers standing around him, the countless corpses of mid-ranked demons could be seen littering the ground.

Clap!

Jin-Woo smiled deeply and clapped his hands.

"Nice work."

The soldiers who fought hard for him all returned to his shadow in an instant. The magic crystal could be collected by them, sure, but loot had to be manually collected by Jin-Woo.

[Will you take.....]

Well, he had to manually click ‘yes’ on every System message that popped into his view, that was why.

‘This is a bit cumbersome, isn’t it.’

So, that was why when there weren’t that many demons, he took care of them himself real fast. And, when there were in a big group like this time, he fought together with his soldiers.

As soon as the battle was over, he’d start collecting the loot right away.

‘Just what’s so fun about this that Yu Jin-Ho insisted on doing it?’

Jin-Woo extracted a piece of loot from the dead demon and smirked to himself.

There was one more cumbersome thing about this place; it was impossible to extract shadows inside the Demon’s Castle.

Didn’t matter whether it was a mid-ranked or low-ranked, the black fog-like thing that denoted if he could perform the shadow extraction or not didn’t rise up from the demon’s corpses.

‘Even when I’m staring at the remains, too.’

[This Mana is tainted.]

[It’s impossible to perform shadow extraction.]

Nope, he only got some messages saying that he couldn’t extract shadows because Mana was supposedly tainted.

‘Is there anything I can do about this?’

Just as Jin-Woo scanned the remains of the demons with a helpless expression on his face, a new message popped into his view.

Tti-ring.

[You have discovered 29 ‘Item: Horns of Mid-Ranked Demon’.]

[Will you take them all?]

Jin-Woo grinned brightly.

‘Of course!’

Jin-Woo quickly shook away the regret he felt over the shadow extraction problem, with the help from the abundant loot falling on his lap.

‘Nothing I can use directly among the pile, eh.’

In that case, sell them all!

As soon as he sold off all the japtem, more Gold got neatly deposited into his bank balance.

[Current Gold: 914,690,772]

‘Heok!!’

Jin-Woo checked his Inventory without thinking too much, only for his eyes to shot open real wide. The amount of Gold sitting pretty in there had shot past 900 million already.

‘Well, each pair of demon’s horns are worth about 200,000, and I hunted down well over 4000, so....’

Not to forget, he also sold off other unnecessary japtem on his way here as well, so it was understandable that Gold would accumulate at a frightening pace.

‘Should I buy a rarity S weapon or armour?’

Before long, though, Jin-Woo shook his head.

He wasn’t in a need for one, so no real need to force himself to spend money just because he had some.

‘Right, there will come a time when I need to splurge on something.’

Jin-Woo closed the Inventory window and lightly dusted his hands.

He was done with cleaning up his surroundings.

He had procured the important entry permit for the 51st floor a long time ago. So, the only thing remaining was to get to the floor-transfer magic circle and go upstairs, but....

Jin-Woo’s sight shifted towards the pillar of light. More specifically, a short distance in front of that pillar.

And a massive demon, plus scores of high-ranked demons, were standing there, waiting.

Jin-Woo raised his sight up higher.

And he could see the giant demon’s name, floating in the air in a deep crimson hue.

[The Sovereign of the Lower Floors, The Avaricious Vulcan]

That thing consisted of a huge mess of fatty flesh that must’ve weighed dozens of tons. No, maybe even several hundred, instead. And then, the massive club this thing was holding in hand looked rather horrifying as well.

However, a smile was etched on Jin-Woo's face.

'So, that's the mid-boss of this place, huh?'

He held only the nicest memories of the bosses found inside the instant dungeons. They all gave him plenty of experience points as well as wonderful items.

Compared to the boss-level monsters found in regular dungeons that required lots of hard work to kill but little reward to show for it, these boss monsters of instant dungeons were more like boxes of gifts, all nicely wrapped up.

So, then. What items would that guy cough up?

Gulp.

Jin-Woo smiled brightly and began drooling.

REPORT

‘Should I get started, then?’

Shadow soldiers were summoned behind Jin-Woo. Not just the regular foot soldiers, but also the magic soldiers, the beast soldiers, as well as the two knights, too.

And in front of them stood Jin-Woo.

The two knights strode forward and stood on either side of him. Jin-Woo took a glance at Igrit to his right, and Iron to his left, and a grin formed on his lips.

‘Feels so reassuring.’

Even though this was his own skill, the fact that he had comrades watching his back helped greatly to calm his mind.

However....

‘Still, it’s a bit too much to go with a frontal assault, isn’t it?’

The whole thing looked kinda dangerous. And that was all thanks to that wooden-looking club held tight in Vulcan’s grip.

‘It’s just unbelievable that a tree that big actually existed, right?’

He guessed from the size of Vulcan and the wooden club that one swing from the demon would be enough to wipe away his entire platoon.

‘It’s fine if they get swept away, but....’

The real problem would be the MP required to regenerate the fallen soldiers. Without a doubt, continuously regenerating his soldiers that got repeatedly obliterated by that thick blunt weapon would bottom out his MP in no time at all.

In that case, there was only one way to do this.

‘I’ll have to take care of the boss.’

In other words, he’d let his boys deal with Vulcan’s underlings, while he himself would fight the boss.

This was the best plan he could think of.

‘Well, all I have to do is hunt it without getting hit.’

Unlike with his soldiers, Jin-Woo was confident of dodging Vulcan’s attacks. In order for his plan to work, though, he had to separate Vulcan from his underlings first.

Jin-Woo ordered his magic soldiers to initiate the assault first.

‘Use the ranged attacks to summon Vulcan’s lackeys over here first, and I’ll fight that big guy lumbering along at the rear.’

It was a simple enough plan to carry out.

‘Now.’

When Jin-Woo gave his signal, flames flew out from the hands of the magic soldiers.

Swiiiiish...

Swiiiiish....!

Kaboom!!

The flames exploded near the subordinates of Vulcan, signalling the beginning of the operation.

Tti-ring!

[The Sovereign of the Lower Floors, the Avaricious Vulcan has discovered the intruder!]

[Vulcan’s loyal guard has discovered....]

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring!!

The warning beeps resounded out in his head at a frightening pace. And at the same time, Vulcan and its lackeys all turned their heads towards Jin-Woo and his army.

‘Alright...’

He succeeded in drawing their attention.

In order to hit Vulcan coming up from the lackeys’ rear without getting discovered, Jin-Woo activated ‘Stealth’ and hid himself.

Shururu...

Everything seemed to be unfolding according to plan.

That’s what he thought, but then....

Thud, thud, thud, thud, thud, thud!!!

‘.....?!?!’

Vulcan broke his expectation and bolted forward like a streak of lightning.

‘What the hell?? What is up with that movement? It’s like I’m looking at video footage sped up several times!’

Quite literally, in the blink of an eye! Vulcan had ran past its lackeys and arrived before the shadow soldiers.

‘Oh, crap!!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened considerably.

This demon with a huge, mountain-sized body mass managed to exceed his imaginations.

“M-mm!”

Vulcan lifted the club up high.

Just before the club pointing to the sky fell down on the defenceless magic soldiers, Iron jumped out of nowhere and raised his black shield.

Whoosh-!!

Kwajeeck!!

The attack was defended against somehow, but.... Both arms of Iron were shattered into pieces. The sturdiest, toughest among the shadow soldiers couldn’t withstand a single attack and was rendered unable to fight any further.

Scatter....

The shattered pieces of Iron’s arms fell to the ground and scattered away.

“M-mm? M-mm?”

Perhaps finding its previous attack not to its liking, Vulcan tilted its head this way and that, while staring deeply at its club. But that was only for a brief period.

The b*stard slammed down with the club once more.

“M-mm!!”

Kwajeeck!!

Iron, who had lost all means to defend himself, as well as the magic soldiers behind him, were crushed to oblivion next.

Crack.

Witnessing that event unfold, something inside Jin-Woo loudly snapped into two.

‘This son of a b*tch dares to....’

Jin-Woo bit his lower lip.

What he did next wasn’t because his head told him to do it.

Paht!

When he regained his senses, he was already in mid-air, leaping towards Vulcan.

His target was already set. And that would be that surprisingly beady little head attached atop the mountainous body.

Jin-Woo twisted his body in mid-air. The muscles of his shoulder and the arm cocked rearward ballooned up. When he focused all his might on his clenched right fist, ‘Stealth’ came undone automatically.

“M-mm??”

Belatedly, Vulcan discovered Jin-Woo.

Too bad, Jin-Woo’s fist was not slow enough for the giant monster to dodge when it was already near its nose.

Swiiiiick!!

His fist punched out like a bullet and slammed into the side of Vulcan’s face.

KWABOOM

Vulcan was flung away. The giant demon rolled away on the ground for a long, long time, before crashing into the skeletal remains of a building and came to a stop.

Rumble, crash!!

Then, the barely-standing remains all tumbled on top of Vulcan, burying the demon underneath.

Tap.

Jin-Woo lightly landed back on the ground, his eyes quite wide open.

‘Why did it fly away that easily??’

Unable to comprehend what just happened, he stared at his own fist in disbelief. He couldn’t even spot a single nick or a scratch on his fist that managed to blow away such a huge creature.

Then, he suddenly recalled something.

‘Ahh... now that I think about it....’

Jin-Woo raised his head. He summoned the Stat Window, and it quickly floated up there.

[Stats]

Strength: 150

Endurance: 109

Agility: 139

Intelligence: 109

Perception: 111

‘...That’s how it was.’

He may have learned several assassin-related skills, and his Class was set as a magic type, so he had been forgetting about a crucial part until now.

[Strength: 150]

‘.....’

He had been using up all the spare bonus Stat points on Intelligence, yet Strength was still ahead by 1.5 times.

‘Well, uh, I really did invest in Strength blindly, didn’t I?’

On top of this, his level had increased explosively, as well.

Just from checking out each of his Stats, he could definitely feel the results of all that grinding. One of those results was this.

Jin-Woo stared at Vulcan, still buried underneath the rubble with a dumbfounded face, before a wry chuckle left his lips.

“Huh.....”

It was hard to feel it when he was busy massacring the ‘regular’ monsters, the Low-Ranked and Mid-Ranked Demons. But, after punching the boss-level creature, he was certain of it now.

‘I’ve definitely.... become stronger.’

Clench!

He felt strength flowing into his clenched fists. Heightened excitement filled every inch of his body.

It was then.

The familiar mechanical bleep rang inside his head.

Tti-ring.

‘What was that?’

Jin-Woo raised his head.

“M-mm? M-mm??”

The fallen Vulcan used the club to prop itself and stood up from the rubble.

‘Did the warning chime go off because the monster is getting up?’

Was his System that friendly, to begin with? As Jin-Woo tilted his head, the culprit for that beep popped up in front of his eyes.

[The Sovereign of the Lower Floors, the Avaricious Vulcan, has activated ‘Skill: Rage’.]

‘Uh??’

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring.

The warning chime went in his head one after the other.

[The ‘Rage’ state will be continuously maintained.]

[All of Vulcan’s Stats will be increased by 50%.]

[Vulcan will feel less pain.]

‘Isn’t that skill from...?’

Even before Jin-Woo managed to recall the memories of Cerberus, Vulcan, with its two reddened eyes, rushed towards him like an unstoppable tidal wave.

Thud, thud, thud, thud, thud, thud!!

The ground rumbled, accompanied with the loud rumbling footsteps.

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance behind him. Vulcan’s lackeys were currently engaged in a bitter battle with the shadow soldiers there.

“Krooar!!”

“Kiiehhck!!”

In the midst of this confusing melee, Jin-Woo still could locate Iron. The impact force must’ve been too great, because Iron was still in the middle of regeneration.

“Iron!”

Jin-Woo called out.

Iron quickly threw his shield to Jin-Woo.

After catching the shield, Jin-Woo shifted his glance away to find Vulcan standing right before him.

‘If I back off here, my soldiers will get wiped away.’

Without his soldiers, it’d become far too difficult to hunt down Vulcan and its subordinates. So, Jin-Woo chose the method that could ensure the safety of his soldiers.

He raised the shield, and his arm muscles tensed up.

“M-mm!!”

Shortly thereafter, Vulcan slammed down with its club.

Slam!!

Kwang!!

Boom!!

Fearsome attacks that rocked the earth landed several times in a row without rest, but Jin-Woo patiently endured them all. His high physical defence and Endurance Stat allowed him to block these attacks.

“Mm? Mm??”

When its attacks did not work, Vulcan became even more frenzied and pounded away with that massive club.

Slam!! Kwang!! Boom!! Kaboom!!

However, Jin-Woo was steadfast and his knees buckled not even once.

‘Still...’

Still, standing around like this blocking all the time wouldn’t let him hunt the boss down.

Deep frowns formed on Jin-Woo’s forehead.

The thing was, unlike how it was with Cerberus, Vulcan’s ‘Rage’ skill didn’t have a time limit, the trade-off being the skill not as overpowered as the gatekeeper’s version.

Meaning, he couldn’t remain passively defending forever like this.

Slam!! Boom!!

Jin-Woo gritted his teeth.

‘Constantly getting pounded on isn’t my thing, either....’

Kwang!!

Just as the club bounced off of the shield for the last time....

Jin-Woo had been getting ready to counter-attack and took the opening to leap towards Vulcan’s head.

However, he wasn’t the only one waiting for an opening.

“Mm!!”

Matching the timing of Jin-Woo’s jump, Vulcan quickly leaned its upper torso back.

‘What?!’

And then, the club flew in towards him from the side while drawing an arc in the air.

‘....He got me.’

If there were places where his hands or feet could touch, the story might have been different, but there was no way he’d be able to dodge the attack in the middle of air.

And, even if he managed to block it, who knew just where he would end up from the rebound?

Swoosh-!!

As the time slowed down in his perception, Jin-Woo stared at the club approaching ever closer and leaked out a groan.

‘A way.... There must be a way!’

If he could move his body, then surely, he’d be able to dodge this no problem.

When his thoughts arrived at this point....

‘Moving my body?’

An idea suddenly popped up in his head.

There was no time to think about this. As soon as the idea formed in his head, Jin-Woo activated the skill ‘Ruler’s Reach’ and pushed at Vulcan.

“M-mm?”

Of course, the power behind the skill ‘Ruler’s Reach’ was far too low to move the massive body of Vulcan. However, the rebound meant that it was Jin-Woo who was pushed back, instead.

Whooooosh!!

The tip of the club missed him by a hair's breadth.

'I did it!'

Jin-Woo was flung away some distance and rolled on the ground a few times, but compared to what might have happened when hit by that club, his landing this time should be seen as far, far gentler.

"Whew-!"

Jin-Woo managed to find his balance and sighed in relief.

"M-mm?"

On the other hand, Vulcan's expression had crumpled quite unsightly. It attacked, feeling proud and all, but in the end, it was all for nothing. That fact caused its fury to reach the peak.

"M-mm!! M-mm!!"

Jin-Woo scratched the side of his head while staring at Vulcan's reddened face.

'Now what should I do about this?'

If he jumped to its front, the d*mn thing would evade him with not much difficulty.

But then, attacking other body parts instead of its head didn't look like he'd be able to critically wound it, what with all those layers of flesh getting in the way.

'Is there a way to make it impossible to dodge?'

It was at this point that yet another, and an arguably excellent, idea popped up in his head.

The corners of Jin-Woo's lips arched up.

Suddenly, he turned around and ran. Vulcan mistook this action as him trying to escape, and hurriedly chased after him.

Rumble, thud, thud, thud!!

Jin-Woo moderated his running speed so Vulcan could chase after him. As soon as he discovered a suitable remnant of a building, his eyes began gleaming brightly.

‘That one.’

On the other hand...

“M-mm!!”

When the distance between Vulcan and Jin-Woo closed up, the giant demon lifted its club high up in the air behind it.

To squash this bug-like creature!

Finally, the chance to crush this annoying pest once and for all was here!

A disgusting smile formed on Vulcan’s face.

And so, as the club came down with a whoosh...

The insect-like creature suddenly sped up and ran up on the outer wall of the destroyed building.

“M-mm??”

Something felt wrong here, but it was too late for the demon to slow down the descent of the club.

“M-mm?? M-mm??”

In an instant, the insect had run up high enough to be at the demon’s eye line, before he powerfully kicked the wall.

Crack!

As the spiderweb-like cracks spread on the wall, something shot towards this demon with never-before-seen speed.

It was none other than that insect.

“M-mm!!”

Vulcan’s eyes grew wider.

A smile spread on Jin-Woo’s face as he looked into those large eyes.

The ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ gripped tightly in his right hand sliced past the bulging artery of Vulcan’s neck.

Slice!!

From the blood vessel as thick as a grown man, blood spurted out like an overflowing fountain.

“M-mm?! M-mm!!”

Vulcan hurriedly discarded the club and tried to stem the loss of blood with both of its hands.

“M-mm!!”

Unfortunately, it was insufficient to block the overflowing of blood.

At that moment, there was a visible tremor shaking Vulcan’s eyes.

“M, m-mm??”

Before it had the time to notice it, Jin-Woo had climbed up the demon’s back, and buried the blades of his daggers deeply into that thick neck.

‘I guess, once isn’t enough, huh?’

Jin-Woo tilted his head and pulled the daggers out, before activating his skill once more.

‘Vital Points Targetting!’

Two daggers stabbed deeply into Vulcan’s neck again.

Stab!!

Stab!!

Only then did the messages he was waiting for pop up.

Tti-ring.

REPORT

THUD!!

Vulcan fell to the ground, hard. Jin-Woo relaxedly walked out from the thick, ash-grey dust clouds rising up, and took a look around him.

He was thinking of assisting the Shadow Soldiers right away, but even they seemed to be getting close to finishing up, as well.

“Kiiechk!!”

“Khekeck!!”

“Kheeck!”

As the shadow soldiers hacked away with their swords, the number of Vulcan’s underlings rapidly decreased.

‘Status.’

Jin-Woo studied his Status Window. Since he had levelled up only a moment ago, both his HP and MP were full.

‘I’ve plenty of Mana, so I don’t really need to help out, huh.’

As long as there was sufficient Mana, shadow soldiers would be exactly like immortals. Now that was the true power of an undead army.

Leaving the mop-up of the remnants to his trusty soldiers, Jin-Woo turned around in order to collect the loot.

“Hmm.”

Was this feeling similar to unwrapping a gift? Seeing that dead body of Vulcan, a smile automatically formed on his lips.

‘I wonder what’ll come out this time?’

He could spy several lights sparkling on the body. Just like before, Jin-Woo extended his hand towards the lights. Then, item acquisition messages popped up in his view.

Tti-ring!

[You have discovered ‘Item: Demon Sovereign’s Earrings.’ Will you take it?]

[You have discovered ‘Item: Bead of Avarice’. Will you take it?]

[You have discovered ‘Item: Vulcan’s Horns’ x2. Will you take it?]

[You have discovered ‘Material Item: Fragment of the World Tree’. Will you take it?]

He had been feeling rather optimistic about fighting Vulcan, even before the battle started. And as he expected, items were quite literally pouring out from the dead demon.

Having checked the list only once, Jin-Woo’s face was brightening up considerably already.

‘I can pretty much tell that Vulcan’s Horns should be japtem.’

From its name to the total number he found, it wasn’t that hard to guess that ‘Vulcan’s Horns’ were japtem only good for additional Gold, just like the Demon’s Horns he got after killing various demons.

Which meant the remaining three were the ‘real’ items....

And there was this one item that attracted his attention more than the others.

[You have discovered ‘Material Item: Fragment of the World Tree’. Will you take it?]

‘What is this Material Item thing?’

What could he possibly make with something like that? Or, was the System trying to imply that it might be something related to a quest?

Jin-Woo’s curiosity roused from its slumber after reading about a type of item he hadn’t heard of before. If he wanted to read the explanations on the items, he had to acquire them first. So, he chose ‘yes’ on all the item acquisition messages.

“Take them all.”

The lights glittering from different parts of Vulcan all morphed into items and appeared near his feet as soon as he said that.

A pair of earrings, a red marble-like object, and timber as big as a grown woman. He could immediately tell which one was the ‘Fragment of the World Tree’ among them.

Jin-Woo looked at the timber. When he did, the information on the item popped up.

[Material Item: Fragment of the World Tree]

Rarity: ??

Type: Material

Remaining part of ‘Vulcan’s Club’, originally fashioned out of a branch of the World Tree, after the contaminated portion had been removed. Timber from the World Tree possess extraordinary magical energy, and is seen as top material for the crafting of the very best magic tools available.

‘Top material for the very best magic tool, is it?’

He was curious about just what could be made from this piece of wood, but too bad, that wasn’t disclosed. Still, there was no doubt this thing was no ordinary item. Simply by standing near it, he could sense a powerful aura coming off of it.

‘This timber... I think it’ll come in handy later.’

Instead of selling off this ‘Fragment of World Tree’ to the Store, he decided to store it in his Inventory.

After he finished doing that, Jin-Woo confirmed the details on the other loot as well.

[Item: Demon Sovereign’s Earrings]

Rarity: S

Type: Accessory

Endurance +20, Stamina +20

When worn together with ‘Demon Sovereign’s Necklace’ and ‘Demon Sovereign’s Ring’, set bonuses will be unlocked.

Set bonus effect 1. (locked)

Set bonus effect 2. (locked)

‘This one has hidden set bonuses?’

If only its additional Stat boosts were concerned, then it was not that different from the ‘Gatekeeper’s Necklace’ in terms of usefulness, but this ‘Demon Sovereign’s Earrings’ had hidden set bonus effects as well.

Even if those set bonuses were ignored, the item itself was still quite brilliant. Both his Endurance and Stamina got a boost of 20 points, which was considerable.

‘Every level up gives me 5 Stat points, so....’

He’d need to level up 8 times to get that many Stat points, in other words.

Feeling genuinely pleased now, Jin-Woo picked the earrings up.

[Will you equip 'Item: Demon Sovereign's Earrings']?

'Equip.'

Just like with other items, earrings disappeared from the view, but their options still activated with no problem. A satisfied smile formed on Jin-Woo's face after confirming the rise in his Stats.

So, the accessory set of a demon sovereign, then.

'Other accessories should be around here somewhere. Right?'

What with the word 'demon' in their names, he could easily guess that those items must be somewhere inside the Demon's Castle.

Just what kind of set bonuses would be unlocked if he managed to find the other two? He had found only one part of the set, but there was nothing he could do about his anticipation soaring higher.

However, Jin-Woo's smile didn't last for long.

'What is this now....?'

[Item: Bead of Avarice]

Rarity: A

Type: Magic Tool

Bead created by solidifying superior demon Vulcan's blood. Will strengthen all magical effects and cause greater damage.

Effect 'Appetite for Destruction': x2 magic damage

It was a spherical red object the size of a billiard ball.

Jin-Woo tightly grasped the 'Bead of Avarice'. But, there was no change to his Stats.

He then summoned and checked the Class-related skill windows, since those were the only things that could be called 'magic' in his repertoire, but he saw no change to the number of shadows he could extract nor the number that could be stored.

'Maybe it's not something I can use?'

Jin-Woo's head tilted this way and that.

An increase of 100% in magic damage. That kind of performance was quite incredible, indeed.

Now originally, tools that boosted magic cost an arm and a leg, so only a few mage-type Hunters could afford to use them. Even then, Jin-Woo had never heard of an item that could double the power of magic among all those uber-expensive artefacts.

If there were, then it'd been utter chaos, with headlines and special reports and whatnot. So, there was no way he'd be unaware of one until now.

However, this 'Bead of Avarice' or whatever could supposedly double the amount of magic damage.

'But, so what? It doesn't really help me, anyway.'

Jin-Woo licked his lips.

An item that doubled magic damage but did nothing else, would not have any effect on him. Both his 'shadow extraction' and 'shadow storage' had nothing to do with damaging something, to begin with. And the rest of his skills weren't magic-related, either.

At this point, he'd rather prefer to have an item that raised his Intelligence Stat, instead.

'Tsk.'

Jin-Woo formed a wistful expression and lightly tossed the Bead of Avarice up and down in the air. Meanwhile, his soldiers arrived near him one by one after taking down Vulcan's remaining underlings. The first one to arrive was Igrit.

In the right hand, three, and another three in the left; he carried a total of six demon heads and placed them before Jin-Woo.

"....."

Jin-Woo looked at Igrit kneeling before him and scratched the side of his head.

"Uhm, hey man. Can't you stop doing that?"

Of course, Igrit and his gravely-lowered head didn't reply.

"Because of you...."

Jin-Woo's gaze slowly shifted over to Iron.

Nobody could tell just when he did it, but Iron had cut Vulcan's head off and dragged it all the way to Jin-Woo, before kneeling on the ground

"....This guy is starting to imitate you, you know."

More importantly, Jin-Woo hunted Vulcan down, not Iron!

Jin-Woo spat out a long groan while keeping his stare fixed to Iron. It was at this point that an amusing idea popped up in his head.

‘Just like how I used Iron’s shield, maybe should I try and let these guys use this Bead of Avarice?’

What a good timing it was, since he spotted the magic soldiers slowly walking behind the regular infantrymen. They were far slower compared to normal shadow soldiers, never mind the two knights.

Jin-Woo summoned the first of the three magic soldiers to arrive in the vicinity.

When he beckoned with his hand, the magic soldier decked out in the black robe hurriedly walked towards him.

‘...Maybe I should go there myself.’

Jin-Woo lightly shook his head and took large strides towards the magic soldier, before handing over the Bead of Avarice. And then, pointed at the remnant of the building he used to run up during his battle against Vulcan.

Since all shadow soldiers could be controlled via his will, he didn’t really need to issue any particular commands here. Jin-Woo simply gave the signal.

“Fire.”

Right at that moment, a ball of flames that was double the size of the usual attack suddenly materialised at the tip of the magic soldier’s raised hand.

‘Heok?!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened super-wide. Without giving him enough time to get shocked, the ball of flames quickly flew out from the magic soldier’s hand.

Swoooooosh—!!

KWABOOM!!

“Huh?!”

Jin-Woo’s jaw dropped to the floor.

The building was swept up in the grand explosion and collapsed like a house of cards. And the ferocity of the burning flames didn’t show any signs of weakening at all afterwards.

Jin-Woo stared in pure shock at the roaring flames, before he hurriedly took the Bead of Avarice back from the magic soldier. He then quickly checked the item information once more.

‘It’s not there. It’s definitely not there.’

He went through the explanation several times to make sure, but without a doubt, there was nothing about him being prevented from lending this ‘Bead of Avarice’ to someone else.

Didn’t this mean he could potentially sell this item?

Gulp.

Jin-Woo swallowed his dry saliva, before his gaze shifted back to the burning building.

Rumble! Crackle!!

Yet another part of the still-burning building issued a loud rumble and collapsed to the ground. Seeing that, the corners of Jin-Woo’s lips began quivering uncontrollably.

‘Well now. This is...’

Mage-type Hunters would definitely go mad with greed over this thing.

His previous wistful look was long gone by now, replaced by the expression of anticipation slowly filling up his face.

In the middle of a sunny afternoon.

“The young man from the apartment 902, you say?”

An auntie tilted her head and replied a short while later.

“Hmm, I’m not sure. I haven’t seen him lately.”

“Ah, is that so? Thank you for your help.”

Hyun Ki-Cheol lowered his head and said thanks.

It had been four days since he began waiting for Hunter Seong Jin-Woo near the youth’s old apartment building. However, he hadn’t run into his target until now.

At this point, Hyun Ki-Cheol was beginning to feel that making veggie juice every morning was a bit of waste now. He let out a helpless sigh and pulled his phone out.

Ring.... ring....

Shortly afterwards, the recipient answered the call.

“Section Chief.”

The recipient was, of course, the Section Chief Ah Sahng-Min.

“Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim is nowhere to be seen. Residents of the building say they haven’t seen him lately, either.”

“Yes, sir.”

“Understood.”

Click.

Ahn Sahng-Min ended the call and tilted his head.

Just where did Hunter Seong Jin-Woo go to?

No one could contact him for the past few days now. Wondering if he was avoiding phone calls for the time being, Ahn Sahng-Min had dispatched Hyun Ki-Cheol over to where Seong Jin-Woo lived, but the news wasn't good. No one had seen the young Hunter for a while.

Ahn Sahng-Min couldn't help but wonder if something had strange happened.

‘I can't figure out why I should be worried about him, though.’

In any case, this kind of felt rather weird to him.

Tap, tap.

Someone tapped him on the shoulder, and when he turned around to look, he found Hunter Park Hui-Jin standing to his side. She opened her mouth first.

“Apparently, he told his little sister that he'd be going on a trip with his friend for a week or so.”

“You mean, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim said that?”

“Yes.”

“In that case... he's probably not on Earth anymore.”

“Pardon?”

Park Hui-Jin's eyes opened wide. Ahn Sahng-Min quickly explained himself.

“We haven't found any evidence of him going overseas. And there is no record of him drawing money from his bank or using his credit card, either.”

“You can even find out things like that?”

“Well, it's our job to follow around various Hunters, after all.”

“...Oh, my god.”

“Anyways. On top of this, according to the Association's last known location records, the communication with his phone was cut off in the middle of the city, as well. And that happened about five days ago. Doesn't all this sound too mysterious to you?"

"He couldn't have been kidnapped, right?"

Park Hui-Jin inadvertently voiced her worry in the ensuing confusion. However, the gazes of the two people soon met, and they began chuckling almost at the same time. It was hard to tell who started first.

Seriously now. Just who was Seong Jin-Woo?

He was none other than a Hunter who soloed a high-ranking dungeon. Not only that, a Red Gate, to boot.

Ahn Sahng-Min scratched his cheek and spoke up.

"If you want to kidnap Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim, well, you'd need at least the rumoured Chinese special forces to show up. You know, the one supposedly made up entirely of high-ranking Hunters."

Park Hui-Jin nodded her head in agreement.

Ahn Sahng-Min continued to grin, but then, found something rather odd and asked her.

"By the way, how did you find out about him going on a trip?"

"Ah, that. It's from Hahn Song-Yi. I talk to her often, you see. She goes to the same school with Mister Seong Jin-Woo's little sister, so I asked her for a favour."

"Aha...."

With Ahn Sahng-Min's reply, their conversation came to an abrupt end.

And then, they began thinking the exact same thing.

'Just where did that guy disappear to?'

REPORT

‘The upper floors are altogether on a different level, aren’t they?’

Jin-Woo began recalling the first – and so far, the only – boss-level monster he had encountered since he set foot inside the Demon’s Castle, Vulcan.

That guy’s title was ‘the Sovereign of the Lower Floors’.

As soon as he went past the fiftieth floor that demon resided in, the difficulty curve suddenly spiked up.

Before this, he’d climb up over ten floors in a day. As much as 20, even. But his clearing speed had decreased so much so that he found it hard to even clear 7 or 8 floors in a day now.

He was currently standing on the 74th floor.

The High-Ranked Demons now appeared as regular mobs now, and along with the infrequently-spotted Superior Demons, these two types of monsters displayed sizes and abilities that were worlds apart from those found on the lower floors.

Stab!

A High-Ranked Demon the size of a two-story building slowly collapsed on the ground with a dagger stuck to its chest.

SLAM!

[You have defeated a High-Ranked Demon.]

[You have acquired (1) Soul of Demons.]

Jin-Woo pulled the ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ out from the dead demon’s chest.

This one was the last. Yet another battle had come to an end. The victorious shadow soldiers crowded around Jin-Woo as well.

Jin-Woo surveyed their conditions.

There was no way that this was true for an undead army, but for some reason, he thought they all kind of looked exhausted.

Indeed, that was how strong the monsters had been on the upper floors.

Actually, this last battle happened to be on the easier side, simply because no Superior Demons showed up.

‘Each one of those guys is on the level of a boss.’

This wasn’t some random guess he just cooked up without any evidence, either.

The ‘Bead of Avarice’ he got after killing Vulcan. The explanation attached to this marble-like item said that it was created from condensing and solidifying the Superior Demon Vulcan’s blood.

If those words ‘Superior Demon’ denoted Vulcan’s grade, then it was about on the same level as regular monsters found on the upper floors. Because, since the 70th floor, Superior Demons appeared far more often than not.

‘Well, it’d been fine if it were only the monsters’ levels that had increased, but....’

No, there was another problem here, as well.

The surroundings began changing gradually the higher he climbed. From the 51st floor onwards, the ruined cityscapes were burning in flames. And the higher the floor, the fiercer the flames got.

When he finally went past the 70th floor, the surroundings had gotten so hot that, simply from standing still, he lost Stamina like sweat drops pouring out of his pores. Just from moving for a tiny bit, his Tiredness Stat shot up.

This place was no ‘Demon’s Castle’, but more like the ‘Burning Tower’.

The feeling he got before entering this dungeon was proven to be correct.

‘...Let’s get out of here.’

This was as far as he could go, this time. He urgently needed to find a way to block out the flames first.

‘Looks like I’ll have to find an artefact that can defend against fire-type magic.’

Equipment used by high-ranked Hunters was ruinously expensive. And, there was no need to even mention the cost of an item imbued with defensive magic, as well. He remembered hearing that a really expensive item could go for several tens of billions of Won from a news program in the past.

He managed to earn a fair amount of coin while clearing dungeons with Yu Jin-Ho, but even then, he couldn’t help but worry a bit about whether he’d be able to afford an artefact like that or not.

That was why he needed insurance.

‘Selling this guy should be more than enough.’

Jin-Woo smiled while looking at the ‘Bead of Avarice’ he oh-so-carefully tucked inside his Inventory. Any mage-type Hunter would drool non-stop at this item.

How much would this bead of avarice go for if he put it up for auction?

He guessed that, as long as he could properly demonstrate its effect, high-ranking Hunters would form a long queue in order to buy it.

Jin-Woo unsummoned the Inventory window.

The goal for entering this instant dungeon, to level up lots, had been successfully met. That was why he didn’t feel too bad about delaying the clearing of the dungeon to another time.

However, one thing did make him hesitate a little.

Jin-Woo’s gaze drifted upwards.

[Collected Souls of Demons: 9,624/10,000]

‘Less than 400 souls remaining....’

If he could collect a little more of these Souls of Demons, then he’d be able to clear this quest.

And today just so happened to be the sixth day. One more day should be enough to clear this quest.

One of the advantages of the upper floors was that killing a single demon netted him multiple souls. Meaning, collecting 400 should be a cinch.

‘I’ll go home after clearing the quest.’

Making up his mind, Jin-Woo turned around.

Maybe because he had a clear goal now, his steps felt doubly energetic.

[Floors 1 to 74 have been opened.]

[Which floor would you like to transfer to?]

Jin-Woo stood in the middle of the magic elevator, no, floor-transfer magic circle, and spoke up.

“75th floor.”

What kind of good fortune was this?

A smile spread on Jin-Woo’s face as he stared at the monster guarding the distant floor-transfer magic circle.

[The Guide of the Departed Souls, Metus]

Just from looking at that name alone, he could tell that the monster was a boss.

Also, that guy was very eye-catching, what with it wearing a jet-black robe and a shiny silver necklace.

‘I’m sure that is the Demon Sovereign’s Necklace.’

He originally was thinking of completing the quest, but at this rate, he should get to collect another part of the set equipment, too.

However, that item wasn’t the only thing making Jin-Woo smile here.

Even if it was a monster that would cough up some great loot, it’d be meaningless if he couldn’t hunt it.

Jin-Woo grasped his two daggers tightly. And then, he ran forward.

Soon enough, the skeletal mage decked out in the black robe discovered Jin-Woo’s presence.

Tti-ring!

[The Guide of the Departed Souls, Metus, has discovered the intruder!]

Fitting for a boss-level monster, it instantly finished chanting its magic spell. As soon as a crimson magic circle formed beneath its feet, an ominous aura rushed all around it.

[The Guide of the Departed Souls, Metus has activated ‘Skill: Accursed Voice’.]

Heeding Metus’s call, an army of undead suddenly rose up from the ground. And they numbered several thousand!!

A normal person would’ve been left breathless by the sight of this horrifying army, but when he found himself surrounded by so many enemies, Jin-Woo didn’t even panic for a second.

‘As I thought....’

Just as he expected.

There were endless streams of black smoke rising up all around the boss monster. Seeing that, it wasn’t all that difficult to guess what kind of monster this Metus happened to be.

‘The Guide of the Departed Souls, is it?’

And the monster’s title only helped to further confirm his suspicion.

Sure enough, Metus summoned a powerful undead army.

Too bad, Jin-Woo just so happened to possess the best type of Class within this field.

“Rise up!!”

Uwaaaaahhhhh-!!

Accompanied by painful screams, soldiers began rising up from the shadows of the undead. Their numbers were in the several hundreds!

Compared to Metus’s army, this number seemed completely ill-matched, but it was actually more than enough for him.

Because the real deal was somewhere else, that was why.

“Create a path for me!”

Soldiers emerged from Jin-Woo’s shadow. These guys were the real deal.

While the hundreds of soldiers created from the skill ‘Shadow Extraction’ bought them time, Jin-Woo’s direct subordinates, the ones he paid careful attention to levelling up ever since his entrance into the Demon’s Castle, carved out a path for him.

His destination was obvious!

Igrit and Iron took the lead and with frightening speed and destroyed the opposing undead creatures.

The distance to the boss, Metus had closed up in an instant.

‘This should be enough.’

Jin-Woo quickly shoved past and rushed out into the front.

‘Dash!’

[Skill level of ‘Dash’ has increased!]

Thanks to him running around all over the huge Demon’s Castle, the ‘Dash’ skill had risen up a level.

‘Nice.’

A grin formed on Jin-Woo’s face.

Jin-Woo escaped from the undead army’s siege and stood before Metus in an instant. Their gazes collided mid-air.

‘You didn’t expect this to happen, did you?’

Jin-Woo’s gaze was filled with victor’s leisure, and Metus could only flinch from that. No, he thought that the monster flinched.

‘Do monsters feel fear?’

Such a thought only lingered for a second, before Jin-Woo’s daggers left behind dozens of afterimages.

Plop.

The boss-level monster weakly fell to the ground.

He already knew through experience that mage-type monsters relying on controlling others to fight were very weak when the battle became one on one.

The moment he saw Metus in the distance, he had envisioned this end.

Jin-Woo returned the daggers to his Inventory.

Soon, the expected message popped up.

Tti-ring.

[You have defeated the ‘Guide of the Departed Souls, Metus’.]

[You have earned 200,000 experience points.]

[You have discovered Souls of Demons sealed within Metus’s pendant.]

[You have acquired (220) Souls of Demons.]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

Jin-Woo clenched his fists tightly.

220 souls in one go.

Now that was an unexpected windfall.

[Collected souls of demons: 9,971/10,000]

A thick smile floated up on Jin-Woo’s lips.

‘Not much remaining now.’

He only needed to collect less than 30 now. It was a small enough amount to quickly fill up by hunting down a handful more demons.

Jin-Woo really wanted to quickly finish this quest and so, he hurriedly retrieved all the loot and entered the floor-transfer magic circle.

[Which floor would you like to transfer to?]

“76th.”

The Eastern United States.

Hwang Dong-Su writhed this way and that as if he was having a nightmare, before he shot up from the bed.

‘.....??’

The first thing he saw was the white ceiling.

Hwang Dong-Su tilted his head at these unfamiliar surroundings.

“Is this.... a hospital?”

...It wasn’t...

...It wasn’t a dream?

Hwang Dong-Su wiped the strand of cold sweat travelling down to his chin. It was at this point that he discovered the patient gown he wore, and the IV needle stuck to his arm.

Hwang Dong-Su’s expression hardened in fury.

And then, he spoke in a cold voice.

“If you have something to say, hurry up and say it, and leave.”

The deputy director of the Hunter Bureau was there with him in the room. A middle-aged Caucasian man, with more white than black on his head, slowly approached Hwang Dong-Su’s bed.

“There is something I wanted to ask you personally, so I waited for you to come around.”

What did he want to ask?

Hwang Dong-Su raised his head.

The deputy director held his gaze without backing down and asked.

“That man named Seong Il-Hwan... was he really a monster?”

“Do you think I’d attack someone who was a human?”

“I’m not saying that I don’t trust you. Only that, I wish to confirm what I saw with my own eyes.”

The deputy director pushed forward his phone towards Hwang Dong-Su.

A certain video footage was playing on its screen.

“And this is....?”

“Footage captured by CCTV cameras nearby on that day.”

In the footage, one could see an Oriental man rescuing employees from the collapsing Hunter Bureau building.

There was no need to ask who that man was. How could Hwang Dong-Su forget? That face was the last thing he saw before he blacked out.

That man was Seong Il-Hwan.

The deputy director's complexion darkened.

“I... have never heard of a monster rescuing humans before. Is there no change to your opinion that this man is a monster?”

“...He's definitely a monster.”

“...Understood.”

The deputy director pocketed the phone.

“Once you're discharged from here, stop by the Bureau. There are a couple of documents you need to sign.”

Hwang Dong-Su asked the deputy director as the latter was about to turn around and leave.

“What happened to that man?”

“He disappeared after fighting you. We're in the midst of tracking him down, but he's powerful enough to knock you down easily, so whether he could be caught or not is, well....”

Just before he stepped out of the hospital room, the deputy director opened his mouth again, sounding more troubled than before.

“By any chance, do you have any idea where that man might head off to?”

“.....”

Seeing Hwang Dong-Su resolutely keep his mouth shut as if he had nothing more to say, the deputy director quietly left the room.

But, once he was gone, Hwang Dong-Su furiously yanked the IV needle out of his arm.

“F*ck!!!”

What a humiliating defeat that was.

Even before he could figure out what happened, he found his neck trampled on by Seong Il-Hwan. Not only that, shamefully cowering on the floor, too!

Just as he began gasping for air, Seong Il-Hwan spoke to him.

And that's where his memory ended. Once he regained his consciousness, he found himself here.

'Can't close my eyes even in death?'

What did he mean by that?

Was that a threat to kill Hwang Dong-Su in such a brutal way that he'd be unable to close his eyes?

'How dare he.... threaten me?!'

Hwang Dong-Su's clenched fists began shuddering in rage. Not only did he lose to a 'monster', but that man also managed to inflict an unforgettable disgrace on Hwang Dong-Su, as well.

'I know where he will go to.'

Hwang Dong-Su would do anything to catch that man.

But, how?

Didn't matter whether that b*stard's identity was a monster or not, there was no denying the fact that he was strong.

'I need better equipment if I want to kill him.'

Thankfully, it wouldn't be hard getting his hands on that equipment.

'I should call my Guild.'

The Guild Hwang Dong-Su was a part of, Scavenger, was one of the very best in the world.

Hell, there was even a joke doing the rounds that, if one were to tally up the value of all the artefacts in possession of the Scavenger Guild, it'd easily exceed the annual budget of a small nation.

'If I get my hands on some artefacts, there shouldn't be a problem.'

Madness burned bright within Hwang Dong-Su's eyes.

To South Korea.

That was Hwang Dong-Su's next destination.

[You have defeated a Superior Demon.]

[You have acquired (1) Souls of Demons.]

[You have acquired (3) Souls of Slave Demons.]

'I did it!!'

Jin-Woo couldn't hide his elation.

His luck was good, and he acquired four souls from the very last demon he killed. With that, he was able to meet the quest clear goal.

[Collected Souls of Demons: 10,001]

Tti-ring.

[You have completed 'Normal Quest: Collect the Souls of Demons! (1)']

[Your rewards are now available.]

[Will you confirm the rewards?] (Y/N)

'Obviously.'

Once he made his reply, the list of rewards popped up in his view.

Tti-ring.

[The following rewards are now available.]

[Will you accept them all?]

Other rewards did catch his eye, but right now, the first one on the list demanded the most of his attention. It wouldn't be much of an exaggeration to say that he completed this quest solely for the first reward, too.

'Accept the first reward.'

Tti-ring!

[You can choose from any of the items available from the System.]

[Is there an item you want?]

An item he wanted, was it?

Of course, there was one.

From the moment he saw the details of this quest, Jin-Woo was thinking of a certain item.

What kind of a result would be facing him now if he chose differently back then? He was curious about this ever since that fateful day.

However, he didn't know whether that thing was treated as an item or not. Still, it didn't hurt to try, at least.

[You can choose from any of the items available from the System.]

[Is there an item you want?]

The System asked him again, as if to urge him on.

After a short deliberation, Jin-Woo made his reply.

“The Cursed random box.”

Chapter 75 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

Back when he found himself standing on a crossroad, Jin-Woo chose the ‘Blessed random box’ instead of the ‘Cursed random box’.

And the result of that decision was the key to the Demon’s Castle.

Thanks to that, he gained entry to this instant dungeon and earned a lot. His level had risen up greatly, he acquired lots of items, and as for Gold... Well, it was overflowing to such an extent that he was beginning to think he should start spending some very soon.

‘Even if I was given a chance to do-over, I’d have chosen the same.’

However....

However, just because he chose to take this path, that didn’t mean he was not curious about the potential result of choosing a different path.

The ‘Blessed random box’, supposed to give him what he wanted, and the ‘Cursed random box’ that was supposed to give him what he needed.

Just what could be inside the latter?

‘I did get what I wanted from the Blessed random box, that’s for sure.’

And so, the perfect chance to satisfy that curiosity once and for all had landed in his lap.

‘.....’

His heart began beating a little bit faster than before; Jin-Woo quietly waited for the System’s answer. He thought that its reply was slower than usual.

Tti-ring!

His anxiety turned out to be groundless, though, because the System did reply pretty soon afterwards.

[You have chosen ‘Item: Cursed random box’.]

[The chosen item is now available.]

Shururu....

A small box slowly materialised in front of his feet.

‘Yes!!’

His heart beating much quicker now, Jin-Woo hurriedly picked the box up. However, he was suddenly overcome with this feeling that the weight of this box was rather familiar to him.

Could it be?

He quickly ripped the lid open and confirmed what was inside, only for his eyes to grow very large.

“.....Isn’t this...?!”

Upon exiting the Demon’s Castle, Jin-Woo headed home right away.

He just wanted to take a shower and clean himself.

While he was stuck inside the dungeon, he didn’t even get to wash his face once. He could buy all the water he needed from the Store, sure, but there was no space or time to wash inside the dungeon.

‘I mean, there are monsters everywhere in that place, so just where would I find the leeway to take a shower....?’

Pshuooooosh.....

Arriving home, he immediately entrusted himself to the cascading warm water. Only then did the fact that he left the dungeon feel like reality.

‘Yup, being home is the best.’

Changing to a new set of clothes, Jin-Woo left the towel on his wet hair and settled down on the edge of his bed. It was now time to get some things organised.

First of all, he summoned his Stat window.

‘Status.’

Tti-ring.

A long, long wall of text that managed to almost disorient him popped up in front of his view. Jin-Woo’s gaze stopped at the Status column.

[Stat points available to distribute: 20]

The additional Stat points he earned as the quest completion reward were still waiting for him. And of course, he put them all in Intelligence.

Tti-ring.

[Stats]

Strength: 178

Endurance: 137

Agility: 147

Intelligence: 149

Perception: 119

Finally, Intelligence had exceeded other Stats.

It was still some ways off Strength, but when considering the fact that he didn't even pay attention to the Intelligence Stat until recently, this growth could only be called lightning fast.

Strength, Endurance, Agility, Intelligence, and Perception. A good balance between them had been established now.

'Not one of these Stats are useless to me.'

As it so happened, he had gone through stages of seriously investing in each of his Stats. And now, he knew full well the effects and advantages each Stat brought to the table.

'Hold on....'

Now that things had come to this, how about him raising all of his Stats equally from now on, instead of focusing only on one?

An All-Stat Player.

Suddenly, the desire to become one gripped him tightly.

What a happy dilemma to have this was, something only possible because it felt like not one of his Stats was lagging behind others now.

'Once Intelligence rises past Strength, I should start slowly raising the others, too.'

Making up his mind, Jin-Woo shifted his gaze to the Skill window next.

That's where he discovered the third reward.

[Reward 3: Unknown reward]

He thought that the first reward 'the item he wanted' and the second reward 'bonus Stat points' were more than enough, so he didn't pay all that much attention to the third reward.

Maybe, he was just mildly curious? Was that about it?

But well, he already got the reward, so no need to be shy now, was there?

[Reward 3 has been made available.]

Along with that message, a scroll similar in size to the ‘entry permit’ appeared in his hands.

‘What’s this?’

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened wider at this unexpected type of reward, and he unfurled the scroll right away.

[Recipe: Divine Water of Life]

You can learn the crafting methods of ‘Divine Water of Life’.

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened even further.

‘I can craft an item... with this?’

And here he was, thinking that only those who had Awakened as mage-types could craft weapons containing magical energy... Now that he thought about it, though, he was also a mage-type, wasn’t he?

‘Still, to think, there was a way to craft something with just a recipe like this....’

Jin-Woo heart began palpitating. But, a question formed in his head at the same time. Just what could he make here, anyway?

‘What is this Divine Water of Life?’

Jin-Woo read the information on this ‘Divine Water of Life’ written inside the recipe.

[Item: Divine Water of Life]

Rarity: S

Type: Consumable

A mysterious liquid medicine that cures any and all illnesses through the powerful magic contained within. The effect will only manifest after one whole bottle has been consumed.

‘Cures.... any and all illnesses?’

The moment he read that information, he thought about his mother, still confined to the hospital.

He had already confirmed through Yu Jin-Ho multiple times that effects of various potions still worked on other people. If he could truly make this ‘Divine Water of Life’, then it meant that he’d be able to save his mother.

His hands holding the scroll trembled from excitement.

The ingredients were also on the simpler side, so to speak.

‘Fragment of the World Tree.’

He earned that after killing Vulcan on the 50th floor.

‘Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes.’

He got that after killing Metus the necromancer on the 75th floor.

And finally....

‘.....Purified Blood of the Demon King.’

This item hadn’t shown up, yet.

However, thinking back to the two ingredients that had come out so far, he could easily guess where he might find some of this ‘Purified Blood of the Demon King’ from.

The upper floors.

‘I’m sure it’s with the final boss of the Demon’s Castle, probably on the top floor.’

In other words, simply by clearing the Demon’s Castle dungeon, the ingredients to craft the ‘Divine Water of Life’ would fall into his lap one by one.

It happened, then.

“....Ah.”

A gasp of epiphany leaked out of his mouth, completely unbeknownst to him. That’s how surprised Jin-Woo was.

Could it be that... the item he wanted as per description on the Blessed random box said – could that be this Divine Water of Life?

‘Mom....’

Thinking about the possibility that he’d get to see his mother again all healthy, his eyes began welling up with emotions.

Then, a new message popped up.

Tti-ring.

[You can learn Crafting Skill via ‘Recipe: Divine Water of Life’.]

[Will you learn this Crafting Skill?]

The mechanical beep brought him back to his senses, fast.

In order to craft this Divine Water of Life, he needed to clear the Demon’s Castle first. Meaning, he had quickly get himself prepared and return to that place. He had no time to waste on sentimentality like this.

“....I’m learning it.”

[You have acquired Crafting Skill for ‘Item: Divine Water of Life’.]

‘I’m not dreaming, right?’

As if to imply that his memories were functioning fine, a new column called [Crafting Skill] appeared on the Skills window.

[Crafting Skill]

Consumable: Divine Water of Life (2/3)

The numbers behind the name probably indicated the two ingredients he already possessed – the ‘Fragment of the World Tree’, and the ‘Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes’.

‘Ah, right. up....’

Jin-Woo summoned his Inventory and retrieved an item stored right next to the spring water. It was a necklace, seemingly carved out from skulls of various small creatures.

[Item: Demon Sovereign’s Necklace]

Rarity: S

Type: Accessory

Agility +20, Intelligence +20

When worn together with ‘Demon Sovereign’s Earrings’ and ‘Demon Sovereign’s Ring’, set bonus effects will be unlocked.

Set effect 1: (locked)

Set effect 2: (locked)

The ‘Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes’ wasn’t the only loot he got from killing the Guide of the Departed Souls, Metus. Indeed, this rather vile-looking necklace also came out, too.

‘Why are the designs of all the necklaces I found so crappy....?’

Jin-Woo frowned deeply while recalling the appearance of the dog collar he was currently wearing. He slowly brought the ‘Demon Sovereign’s Necklace’ closer to his neck.

Tti-ring.

[Will you replace ‘Gatekeeper’s Necklace’ with ‘Demon Sovereign’s Necklace’?]

Both necklaces boasted rather similar additional effects. Both raised two of his Stats by 20 points each. However, the demon sovereign's also had the set effect to consider, as well.

'Replace.'

Shururuk...

[You have equipped 'Item: Demon Sovereign's Necklace'.]

The skull necklace disappeared from his hands, only to be replaced by a dog collar.

He quickly shoved that dog collar inside his Inventory, and checked the newly unlocked set effect of the 'demon sovereign's accessory set'.

[Item: Demon Sovereign's Necklace]

Set effect 1: All Stats +5

Set effect 2: (locked)

'All of my Stats rose up by 5 points.'

He only managed to unlock one set effect, yet he received a boost similar to levelling up five times. And then, he still had one more unknown effect to go, the one he'd receive after gathering all the accessories.

'The Demon Sovereign's Ring....'

When considering the possibility that the last unlocked set effect from all three accessories being in one place should be even greater than the individual parts on their own, this really was already an amazing performance.

However, acquiring accessories rated at S was only a part of the harvest he enjoyed after entering the Demon's Castle. The real profit was his level jumping up so high.

Jin-Woo stared at his level that had climbed up to 77 and smiled in content.

'I levelled up 16 times inside a week.'

Such a levelling up speed was unthinkable when entering rank C dungeons. He had definitely extracted suitable compensation for going through hell (?) for seven days.

He still had some unfinished matters there, but well, this week's conquest of the Demon's Castle should be called a roaring success, regardless of what.

'Just that....'

Except for one – there was one thing he couldn't really figure out yet.

Jin-Woo let the light from the lamp fall on the object that came out of the cursed random box.

‘Just what the hell is this thing?’

It was a pitch-black key that seemed to absorb all light. No information popped up in his view, either.

‘This is the first time seeing an item with absolutely no information...’

The keys to instant dungeons could be seen as pretty common, since he got them from random boxes every now and then. But this guy here, he had never seen anything quite like it.

‘Where am I supposed to use this?’

Perhaps because it came out of a box named Cursed random this-and-that, he couldn’t help but think that there was this ominous aura circling around the key.

He acquired this key through so much hard work, so he couldn’t even throw it away.

‘Well, I’m sure I’ll get to use it sooner or later.’

The Cursed random box was supposed to give him something that he needed, after all.

Jin-Woo stored the mystery key back inside his Inventory and got up from the bed.

He needed to purchase a few artefacts if he wanted to completely conquer the Demon’s Castle.

‘And, I’ve got something to sell, too.’

However, there was a problem. And that was – things would become quite complicated if a rank E Hunter wanted to buy and sell high-ranked artefacts.

Who wouldn’t suspect something was off when a low-ranked Hunter – no, someone right at the bottom – tried to sell an item that even the top Hunters found hard to acquire?

It was the same story if he wanted to buy something.

As long as the title of rank E followed him around, there would always be questions regarding the sources of his income.

‘And, it’ll be hard to answer when someone asks me about what I’m planning to do with expensive artefacts, too.’

Several troublesome situations would unfold at this rate.

“Which means, I should....”

Time to stop pretending to be a rank E, then.

Time... to get the rank reassignment test.

It was now time to get the rank that matched his current set of abilities.

Jin-Woo’s expression became serious.

‘With my current level, surely I won’t get jerked around by someone else.’

That was his original aim, to begin with.

In order to avoid situations where he was being under the thumb of someone stronger, he continued to act as a rank E, while taking on all the inconvenience that came along with it.

However, what about now?

He didn’t even falter slightly when Baek Yun-Ho, the Guild Master of the White Tiger, stood in front of him. Hell, he was pretty confident of not cowering no matter who stood in front of him now, be that Baek Yun-Ho or anyone else.

He saw no reason to hide his powers anymore.

Thump, thump, thump....

When he made up his mind to finally get rid of that irksome rank E tag for good, his heart began beating faster and faster.

‘...But, before that....’

There was something he had to confirm first.

Jin-Woo switched on his Hunter-only smartphone. It was his first time powering the device on in a week, so naturally, there were quite a lot of missed calls and messages waiting for him.

The majority of those numbers he failed to recognise. It was an unfortunate thing for those callers, but well, he didn’t have the time to manually check each and every one out.

‘If they are in a hurry, I’m sure they’ll contact me again.’

Thinking coolly like that, Jin-Woo scrolled down the list of contacts and eventually located the number he wanted. He dialled this number.

[Lalala~♪♪]

The bright, energetic pop song didn’t even get to play for a second longer, before the other side hurriedly answered the call.

....Maybe, Jin-Woo stayed inside the dungeon for far too long?

Because he was surprised by how nice it felt to hear the kid's voice again. A smile spread on Jin-Woo's lips as he spoke.

“Did the talk with your father go well?”

‘Oho?’

Now that was a good piece of news to hear.

Jin-Woo made this call to confirm, because he couldn't go ahead and do the rank reassignment test if Yu Jin-Ho hadn't made a deal with his father yet.

However, if the matters of that side were taken care of, then there really was nothing holding him back at this point.

He guessed the good news just from hearing the kid's excited tone of voice, but now that he got the confirmation from the horse's mouth, Jin-Woo was feeling really happy as well.

Click.

‘...What was that?’

The phone call abruptly came to an end, and when he checked, the battery in his phone was flat.

Well, at least he got to confirm what he wanted to confirm, so that was a relief.

Jin-Woo fixed his clothes and prepared to leave.

The main building of the Hunter's Association wasn't too far from here. He should be able to go through the reassignment test pretty quickly.

“Oh, hang on a second....”

Jin-Woo was just about to leave the apartment, but he hurriedly came back inside. He had forgotten all about his little sister.

Since she might get worried if her oppa left home again without saying anything, he scribbled a simple memo and placed it on the dining table. Well, he only came back home after a whole week of absence, after all.

With a satisfied smile on his face, Jin-Woo turned around to leave.

It really had been a while since Jin-Woo last came to the Awakened rank evaluation application kiosk.

'Has it been four years already?'

Or, maybe it was close to five now?

Jin-Woo's expression was full of reminiscence as he stood in front of the employee manning the reception kiosk.

The employee didn't even bother to look at him and spoke.

"Please jot down your identification and contact details, and give them to me."

Jin-Woo still remembered most of the process so he had prepared them before coming here. He readily presented both his identification and the contact details.

'Mm?'

The employee's head tilted this way and that after taking one look at Jin-Woo's choice of identification.

"Isn't this a Hunter licence?"

"It is."

Employee formed a confused expression.

"If you are unhappy with your assigned rank, you should head over to another depar...."

"No, it's not that. I wish to take the reassignment test."

"Ehhh?"

The employee continued to alternate his gaze between the Hunter licence and Jin-Woo's face, before raising a trembling finger in the air.

"P-please, wait for me here."

The employee then quickly ran over to a middle-aged man with a scowl on his face sitting somewhere behind him.

"Manager? A Hunter-nim wishes to take a reassignment test."

"A reassignment test? What's that person's rank?"

"It's an E."

The manager craned his neck out and took a look at the waiting Jin-Woo's face over by the reception desk. He then reverted back to his previous posture.

"There are guys like that every now and then. Hunters who are not satisfied by the reality of their situation, and swim inside daydreams, before coming back here hoping against hope.”

“So, is that guy also....?”

The manager nodded his head.

“Reawakened, my foot.... Others are busy raking in the dough as Hunters, getting famous and all that, but well, he drew the short straw and he ended up as a nobody. So, he’s just trying to escape from reality.”

“Aha.”

“Dealing with guys like that will only tire you out. So, just tell him that he’ll be paying the fee for the test and send him on his way to the measurement room.”

“Roger that.”

The employee no longer looked like he was suffering from abdominal pain, and returned to his seat.

Meanwhile, the manager alternated his gaze between the employee and Jin-Woo, clicked his tongue, before shifting his attention back to the computer monitor in front of him.

However....

The fingers of the manager stopped typing on the keyboard.

The name written on the Hunter licence... why did it feel like he had heard of that name before from somewhere?

‘Where was it?’

Once the young Hunter left for the building with the measurement room in it, the manager sneaked in closer to the employee and asked him.

“That rank E Hunter just now, what was his name again?”

“It’s Seong Jin-Woo. Do you know who he is?”

“No, it’s not that. But....”

But, he just couldn’t get over this feeling that he had heard of that name before, for sure. The manager did his absolute best to jog his memories, and then, his eyes widened as something did enter his mind.

‘....Ahh!!’

‘That man’ asked for a favour, didn’t he?

‘That man’ asked the manager to give him a call if a Hunter named Seong

Jin-Woo ever showed up here. Why couldn't he remember that sooner?

The manager sought out a deserted corner and hurriedly pulled out his phone.

Ring.... ring....

“Ah, hello there, Chairman Baek. I’m calling you because of the Hunter you spoke about the last time, the man named Seong Jin-Woo. He really came here today. But, how did you know that he might appear here?”

“Yes. He was here just now, applying to get a reassignment test.”

The conversation came to an abrupt halt and an awkward silence pervaded the line. However, only a short while later, an urgent voice came out from the phone's speaker.

The manager began tilting his head.

Did he just mishear that?

The Master of the one-and-only White Tiger Guild was speaking with an anxious voice?

‘Well, I’ll be.’

Besides all that, though – the evaluation process was out of his hands, already. The manager could only sheepishly reply while scratching the side of his head.

“That man must’ve entered the measurement building by now.”

REPORT

‘Wait a minute. This, just what on earth is....’

What happened just now?

Manager Jeong Ki-Soo ended the call with Baek Yun-Ho and tilted his head.

It was already a pretty surprising thing that a rank E Hunter stepped forward to get re-evaluated, yet the Master of the White Tiger Guild wanted to find out about the result of that test right away as well.

‘Maybe, there is something going on for real here...’

It wasn't just anyone but that Baek Yun-Ho. And he was being quite serious, so Jeong Ki-Soo couldn't help but wonder if something big was about to happen.

But soon, he shook his head dismissively.

‘Eii.... There's no way.’

The phenomenon of ‘Re-Awakening’ was a very rare occurrence.

How many months had it been?

There was this incident a few months ago when the whole Association had been in an uproar over a potential candidate who had gone through a Re-Awakening. Of course, it was all a big fat nothing.

That just served to illustrate how rare the real thing was, and plenty of so-called ‘Re-Awakening’ all turned out to be nothing more than just simple misunderstandings.

‘I mean, it's not just one or two kids who come here mistakenly believing that they had gone through a Re-Awakening, only to walk out of here after paying the cost for the test out of their pocket....’

Perhaps the White Tiger Guild was seriously mistaken about something here. Still, considering Jeong Ki-Soo's ‘relationship’ with that Guild, he just couldn't refuse outright to humour the Guild Master Baek Yun-Ho's request.

“Hey, listen. I have to go somewhere for a little while.”

“Pardon me? Where are you going, Manager Jeong?”

“I just remembered this little thing I gotta take care of in the Block B.”

The term ‘Block B’ was a sort of code word used by the Association employees to refer to the building where the magic power evaluation took place.

“Okay, I understand.”

“If something happens, call me right away.”

“Yes, Manager.”

Even though Jeong Ki-Soo was thinking ‘Re-Awakening, my a*s’, he nevertheless headed towards Block B while picturing the face of Baek Yun-Ho, who should’ve left the Guild offices by now.

Jin-Woo parked his butt on the very last spot available of the waiting room’s bench. Currently, there were three people waiting for their turn here.

All of them looked quite tense, nervous.

Jin-Woo could sympathise with what these people were going through inwardly at this moment.

‘Well, the directions of their lives would be decided with the results of today’s evaluation, after all.’

The first time Jin-Woo came here, he was thinking about the exact same things as these people.

...What if I was a rank A, no, even a rank B – or, could it be, I’m a rank S?

Swimming in a happy daydream, only to be shocked to the core after receiving the evaluation of rank E.

Thinking back to that day four years ago, Jin-Woo couldn’t help but smirk slightly.

‘What is he smiling about?’

‘How can you even think about smiling here?’

Others waiting around sent him weird looks, but Jin-Woo didn’t pay them any mind.

‘Was he born with a steely heart or something?’

‘Maybe, he’s not feeling nervous at all.’

Seeing Jin-Woo’s undaunted attitude, others became a bit sheepish and tilted their heads this way and that, before shifting their gazes away.

‘Nothing much has changed since then.’

Jin-Woo also remembered something similar happening back then.

Back then, he started paying attention to the person sitting next to him for no reason, and he also became curious about what other people's evaluation was going to be like.

Jin-Woo continued to smile while slowly studying the interior of the waiting area. Just like the people waiting inside, the building didn't change much, either.

The Hunter Association itself was established less than ten years ago, so perhaps unsurprisingly, the building was still clean and neat as if it opened its doors only yesterday.

The interior layout was pretty much the same as back then, too.

If there was one thing different, then it'd be....

'Those people over there.'

When Jin-Woo quietly stared at a contingent of men and women decked out in clean-cut business suits across from where he was, an ahjussi sitting next to him opened his mouth. (TL: ahjussi = 'uncle', or older man)

"They are all from various Guilds, apparently."

"Various Guilds, is it?"

"Yes. Well, Hunters don't usually seek out smaller Guilds, so they resorted to sending people over here and set up camp, just so they can sweet-talk Awakened like us after we're done with the evaluation."

Indeed, there was a certain chilly, unfriendly and competitive air circulating among those folks.

'And, the way they are looking in this direction is pretty predatory, too.'

Well, there was a reason for that, of course.

"I'm telling you this because it might help you, but you see, it's better not to sign up with Guilds like theirs."

"Why not?"

"From what I hear, smaller Guilds take on lots of dangerous raids, and their Hunter fatality rate is far higher than average, too."

Jin-Woo nodded his head in agreement.

At the end of the day, the circumstances of smaller Guilds would always remain a bit ambiguous.

Unlike privately-organised freelancer-led raid parties, clearing low ranked dungeons wouldn't satisfy them financially, but then again, the skills of the Hunters signed up with them wasn't quite good enough to clear higher ranked dungeons.

So, 'accidents' happened frequently during their raids.

'Which means, recruiting new Hunters becomes doubly important for them.'

And so, they arrived at a point where they had to follow the potential newbies right into the Association building and prey on them.

"Ah, right."

Ahjussi dabbed the sweat drops away from his wide-open forehead with a handkerchief, and cautiously extended his hand towards Jin-Woo.

"Well, it's fate that we meet like this, so how about we introduce each other? My name is Yun Jeong-Hoon."

"I'm Seong Jin-Woo."

Their introduction was kept to a minimum, and they quietly waited for their turns.

“, please.”

Since the location for the evaluation itself was wide open, one could easily read the expressions on those who finished the test, as well as the employees performing the said test.

And the expression of the guy who had taken his test just now didn't look so good.

'I guess, it's either a D or an E....'

Those folks from the smaller Guilds must've thought about the same thing as Jin-Woo, because they showed no interest whatsoever even when an Awakened walked right past them.

Wasn't that too honest a reaction from them?

Jin-Woo even began wondering if there was another, more discreet way to find out one's evaluation result or not.

” up, please.”

Yet another result came out.

This one also must not have been so good. The steps of the Awakened walking out of the building seemed heavy. But, that was par for the course, really.

‘Well, if high-ranked Hunters appeared frequently, they wouldn’t be paid big bucks, anyway.’

For regular citizens, even being a rank C would be a huge jackpot.

One could still earn a fair bit of money by entering freelancer raid parties, or if one’s luck was good, then entering large Guilds was a viable option, too.

Indeed, there were four rank Cs among the White Tiger Guild’s new recruits, weren’t there?

If one successfully managed to enter a large Guild, then it was pretty much guaranteed that you’d earn an annual salary similar to what doctors or lawyers made.

Ahjussi next to Jin-Woo spoke again.

“I heard that you’d get a ton of money upfront when signing with a large Guild.”

Ahjussi’s hand, still holding the handkerchief, trembled softly.

“Actually, I... I owe some money, you see. Because of that, I had to separate from my little girl and must live alone for the time being. Maybe it’s because of that, but I... I’m feeling really nervous.”

Ahjussi mumbled to himself, before flinching grandly and bowed his head to Jin-Woo in a hurry.

“Aigoo.... Saying something unnecessary to a stranger I’ve just met.... I’m a bit of disgrace, isn’t it? I end up talking a lot when I’m nervous, you see.”

“No, it’s fine.”

Jin-Woo smiled gently and lowered his head, as well.

Ahjussi continued to take deep breaths, as if to reinforce the notion that his earlier declaration of feeling nervous wasn’t an exaggeration.

Meanwhile, another Awakened walked out, and....

” up, please come this way.”

...And, it was the turn of ahjussi.

However, ahjussi cautiously shook Jin-Woo’s sleeve, his face full of cold sweat. Could he be feeling ill somewhere, thought Jin-Woo.

“Are you feeling okay?”

Jin-Woo asked, his voice sounding worried.

Ahjussi shook his head.

“No, no. It’s not that, but.... Uhm, do you mind going ahead first? I’m, I’m too tense right now, you see.....”

Ahjussi looked really desperate.

Was there a reason to refuse when someone wished to give up his spot in the queue? Jin-Woo quickly accepted the proposal.

Anyone would be feeling nervous if these few minutes determined the rest of their lives.

Jin-Woo stood up instead of ahjussi and walked over to the Association employee.

The employee spoke in a business-like manner.

“What is your name?”

“It’s Seong Jin-Woo.”

“Mister Seong Jin-Woo.... Right. Please place your hand on the black-coloured panel over there and wait for a little while.”

Following the instruction, Jin-Woo walked over to the measuring device and placed his hand on the black panel.

‘...Uh? This guy’s already been evaluated as an Awakened ranked E?’

The employee took a look at the documentation and glanced at Jin-Woo with a mystified expression. Just why were almost all the Hunters coming here to retake tests all rank E?

The employee’s expression changed to that of apathy, as he activated the measuring device.

SFX for a button being pressed

Bzzzz.....

The magic energy measuring device buzzed noisily, and a short while later, it stopped its operation. The results appeared on the display monitor.

‘Huh? What’s going on here?’

The employee tilted his head this way and that, before speaking to Jin-Woo, as the latter was about to take his hand off the panel.

“Hold up, please.”

“Yes?”

“I’d like to run the test one more time.”

“Okay.”

Jin-Woo placed his hand back on the panel.

SFX for a button being pressed

‘HUH?’

But, something like this never happened before?

The expression of the employee gradually hardened. Why was the measuring device malfunctioning all of a sudden?

The employee asked for Jin-Woo’s cooperation once more.

“I’m truly sorry. But, one more time, please.”

“.....”

Even before he was asked to take the test again, Jin-Woo had already decided to wait and thus didn’t bother to lift his hand away from the panel.

SFX for a button being pressed, repeated

‘W-why is the device behaving like this?!’

Cold sweat drops formed on the employee’s forehead.

Murmur, murmur....

People observing from the waiting room gradually grew aware of the fact that something weird was going down right now.

‘What’s going on? Did something happen?’

‘How many times did he activate the measuring device just now?’

‘Kinda looks like there’s a problem here, doesn’t it?’

When everyone’s gazes focused on him, the employee became completely soaked in cold sweat.

SFX for a button being pressed

‘Argh, c’mon now!! What do you want from me?’

Just as the employee was becoming a nervous wreck....

“What now? Where is Chang-Sik? Why are you alone here?”

The employee quickly looked behind him. And he found Manager Jeong Ki-Soo from the rank evaluation application department standing there.

“Manager Jeong!!”

Relief formed on the employee's face after an unexpected reinforcement made his entrance.

"The senior officer went to the bathroom just now."

"That fool, how dare he vacate his position in the middle of office hou....?"

Jeong Ki-Soo couldn't bring himself to finish that sentence.

'...Huh, I'm the same, isn't it?'

Hmm, hmm.

Whatever the case may have been, he did arrive at the perfect time. The poor newbie employee was sweating out buckets while the senior was nowhere to be seen. Perfect, indeed.

Time for a veteran to step forward, then.

"Okay, so what's going on?"

Jeong Ki-Soo displayed a bit of interest and took a step forward.

"The measuring device is acting a little weird."

"The device is what now?"

"Please, take a look. This error message keeps popping up."

Once the employee took a step back, Jeong Ki-Soo stood in his stead in front of the monitor that displayed the result of Jin-Woo's measurement.

And right away, Jeong Ki-Soo's expression froze up.

".....How long have you been working here?"

"It's been around six months, sir. Did I press the wrong button?"

"Nope. Just call Chang-Sik and tell him to get over here right now."

"Excuse me?"

"I'm saying, his toilet break or whatever isn't important anymore, so tell him to get his a*s over here right away!"

Jeong Ki-Soo raised his voice.

The employee flinched and asked.

"W-what's the matter, Manager?"

"This isn't an error message, but it's saying 'impossible to measure'! Don't you understand what that means?"

“Ehhhh?! But, that wasn’t an error message?”

Why was every single newbie employee such a dumba*s?

Jeong Ki-Soo’s gaze left the employee and landed on the person taking the evaluation test.

‘How can such a thing....’

Seong Jin-Woo.

The Master of the White Tiger Guild wanted to know about this man’s reassignment evaluation results.

Jeong Ki-Soo’s gaze remained locked on Seong Jin-Woo as he opened his mouth to speak to the newbie employee.

“You idiot. This message means that this device can’t measure that person’s magic power.”

“Excuse me? B-b-but, but, doesn’t that mean....?”

Did this newbie say it had been around six months since he started working here?

Forget about six months, something like this had not happened in the past two years, so of course, it wasn’t surprising at all to see a newbie employee being completely oblivious.

Jeong Ki-Soo’s voice trembled as he replied.

“Right.... He’s a rank S.”

Rank ‘S’ – ‘Special’.

This rank had been in wide use so people mistook it for an actual official rank, but in reality, this rank simply existed to group those Awakened who couldn’t be measured by any device.

“That’s why, call Chang-Sik right away. Hurry.”

“I’ll call him immediately!”

A short while later, Kim Chang-Sik ran over in a fluster after receiving the call. His breathing was heavy and fast, and he was even trying to fix his falling pants.

“Pant, pant! Okay, let me see.”

After confirming the monitor, Kim Chang-Sik’s complexion paled immediately. And then, when he looked at Jin-Woo, Kim Chang-Sik’s eyes quaked powerfully.

‘This man is the tenth in South Korea....’

Kim Chang-Sik quickly walked over to Jin-Woo.

It was only at this point that Jin-Woo withdrew his hand away from the black penal.

“Excuse me.... Mister Seong Jin-Woo, with the current device.....”

Kim Chang-Sik immediately remembered that Jin-Woo was already a Hunter, so he changed the way he addressed the youth.

“No, wait. Allow me to start over. It’s impossible to measure your magical energy output with this device, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim. We need to ask for permission from the higher-ups if we want to use the precision measuring device, so would you mind if you come and visit us again in three days’ time?”

Kim Chang-Sik followed protocol and spoke the official line. He couldn’t even remember properly the last time he said those words. Jin-Woo was an experienced Hunter himself too, and he immediately figured out what those words meant.

‘Fine.’

Postponing the evaluation.

Or, in other words, once the test result of ‘impossible to measure’ also pops up in the precision device three days later, then he’d definitely be ranked as an ‘S’.

‘This is for the better.’

If he was judged to be a rank A now, then he’d have to raise his Stats again and come back here again.

However, being a Re-Awakened was already an incredibly rare thing, so what would happen if he were to say that he Awakened once more on top of that?

People would see his ‘Re-Awakening’ as luck, but if something like that were to happen again, he’d no doubt receive gazes of suspicion. He definitely wanted to avoid getting mired in annoying complications and waste his valuable time.

‘Whew....’

Jin-Woo sighed in relief inwardly after seeing this rather fortunate turn of events. And then, when he turned around to leave....

“...Huh?”

Everyone present inside the building was looking at him weirdly.

“Aigoo, I know that you’re an extremely busy man, so it’d be fine even if you didn’t come personally to visit me, you know?”

“Eii~. Even then, you’re the one and only Chief Park of the Hunter Association, so how could I dare to use a mere phone to speak to you? It’s only correct and proper that I come to see you personally.”

Choi Jong-In smiled with his eyes and buttered up to the other guy, 40-something Chief Park, causing the latter to let out a gentle chuckle.

Just who was this man in front of Park?

He was none other than man leading South Korea’s top Guild, ‘Hunters’.

Also known as the ‘Ultimate Weapon’, Choi Jong-In. Just one word from him, and the country’s most powerful raid team would mobilise like a slick, well-oiled machine.

A man like that was fawning over you, so how could anyone feel bad about that?

Choi Jong-In pulled out a cigarette and asked.

“Will it be fine if I light one up?”

“Oh. Please, go ahead.”

“What about you, Chief Park?”

“I’m fine, thank you.”

Choi Jong-In, relaxedly sucking in the cigarette, exuded the air of a man who had achieved everything there was to achieve pretty early on in his life.

‘Is this that elusive thing called charisma?’

As the Chief Park stared at him as if he was bewitched, Choi Jong-In threw out a question.

“By the way, it sounds like Block B is a bit noisier than usual today.”

“Block B, you say?”

Chief Park looked out the window and at Block B.

Truth be told, Chief Park couldn’t hear anything at all.

However, Choi Jong-In was a rank S Hunter. His five senses should never be compared to that of a regular person’s. If Choi Jong-In said it was getting rowdier down there, then something must’ve happened for real.

An honourable guest had come to visit, so what a shameful blunder this was. Chief Park frowned slightly and spoke up.

“Let me go and find out what’s happening.”

“No, wait.”

Choi Jong-In discarded the cigarette and killed it with his foot.

“I’m also getting curious, so....”

Choi Jong-In raised his head, and a mysterious flash of light could be seen in his eyes for a moment. And an equally mysterious smile formed on his lips.

“Why don’t we go together?”

REPORT

The entirety of the Block B had become deathly silent.

‘J-just now, definitely, impossible to measure....’

‘D-does that mean, that guy’s a rank S?’

‘I’ve only ever heard of it, but seeing an impossible to measure rank with my own eyes is....’

Gulp.

The recruitment agents dispatched by various smaller Guilds were busy swallowing dry saliva as they stared at Jin-Woo turning in their direction.

However, none of them tried to talk to him.

“.....”

“.....”

If he was a rank C, then they would’ve started a war of nerves trying to sign him up to their respective Guilds. They would have formed the proverbial queue just for a chance to talk to him.

What about a rank B, then?

They would pounce on him like crazy while throwing around quite attractive-sounding offers, such as ‘guaranteed spot as a high-ranking officer in the Guild’, or ‘shares in the Guild’, etc., etc.

Onlookers would probably see it as an all-out war or something.

Well, it was not such a weird thing when considering the value of a Hunter ranked B, or the fact that they would receive a fat bonus by luring a high-ranked Awakened like that to their Guilds.

There were enough rank Bs who fell for the sweet-talk, after all; they would rather prefer to be the head of a snake, instead of the tail of a dragon.

However, the story changed when it came to a rank A. A rank A would be showered with a crap ton of special privileges by entering large Guilds, never mind small-to-medium Guilds.

Being selected as a member of the main raid team was a given, and since the main raid team only targetted high-ranked dungeons, the financial reward would be quite enormous as well.

Was that all?

If the offers of the Guilds weren't to your liking, you could just establish your own Guild and become its Master.

You could just make a small or a medium Guild by yourself, so was there a real reason to sign with one?

Indeed, rank As were that kind of existence.

However....

This man, who got his magic energy measured just now, was supposedly a rank S.

Not an 'A', but an 'S'.

It might be an easy thing to say, but the truth was, that single letter was only used to denote the very best Awakened in the country, with only nine of them existing in South Korea.

'With that man included, it'll be ten, isn't it?'

'The tenth rank S Hunter.....'

This youth was not someone these headhunters from the various small Guilds could even attempt to talk to.

Gulp....

Nope, all they could do now was to silently swallow their saliva. He was literally a pie in the sky to them.

But, it was then.

'Wait a minute.....'

'This, couldn't this be my opportunity?'

A handful of quick-witted scouts suddenly had this remarkable idea: How about acting as a middleman, guide this new rank S Awakened to a large Guild, and get paid handsomely for their efforts?

The contract signing fee for a rank S would easily exceed tens of billions of Won, at the least. Just one percent of that fee as their commission would prove to be a good enough incentive to quit their current Guilds.

And, if one got lucky and got on the good books of that youth to become his personal agent, then hell, you'd be set for life.

Didn't a personal agent of some rank S Hunter get a Po*sche as a birthday present or something?!

'...Should I try it?'

'My silver tongue won't lose to anyone, anywhere, so, like....'

'Should I just man up and jump in?'

Within a blink of time, all sorts of thoughts entered and exited the minds of the scouts. The ridicule of the failure would only last for a short while, but the sweetness of success would last forever.

Just as the scouts sneakily glanced at their peers and began inching forward....

Someone suddenly pointed towards the entrance of the Block B.

"Huh? Isn't that....?"

Was it because everyone was so tense already?

No one could tell who did it first – everyone seemingly shifted their gazes over in the direction the first man to open his mouth pointed at. The eyes of the scouts widened immediately.

"Heok!"

A man wearing a stylish business suit was entering Block B. There wasn't a single person present who didn't know that man's name.

"Choi.... Choi Jong-In?!"

"Why, why is the leader of the 'Hunters' here?"

Sure enough....

Choi Jong-In felt the gazes of the crowd and lightly tidied up his suit, before walking straight towards Jin-Woo.

'But, isn't this too fast for him to get here after receiving an alert?'

'No, wait a minute. Did he already sign up with the Hunters?'

'Did the Hunters know about him? Well, the top Guild sure operates on another level, no?'

'Yup, as expected....'

Scouts present all readily accepted the inevitable conclusion to come.

Perhaps, it was a relief that none of them stepped forward and tried to chat up the youth. How embarrassing would it have been, when one of them started yapping on and ended up running into Choi Jong-In, instead?

Only now did they realise the direction this situation had taken.

‘Well, with Choi Jong-In’s entrance, the picture is complete.’

‘Hiya~. This is so cool.’

‘To think that the leader of the Hunters Guild has personally stepped up.... Indeed, treatments for S ranks are totally different from the rest, no?’

Although the scouts did feel a bit rueful, they nevertheless witnessed this scene of the leader of the South Korea’s top Guild meeting with the Awakened blessed with the highest rank there was, with warm expressions on their faces.

On the other hand....

Jin-Woo was breathing a sigh of relief at the grand entrance of Choi Jong-In.

‘What a relief.’

He was pondering what to do next after being stared at by so many pairs of eyes. But what a wonderful timing it was, that man walking in and dividing the attention.

Jin-Woo inwardly thanked Choi Jong-In for providing some unexpected help, and simply walked past the latter. And Choi Jong-In’s eyes widened in surprise.

‘Huh? This can’t be right.’

Choi Jong-In hurriedly called out to Jin-Woo.

“Excuse me, can you stop for a second?”

Jin-Woo stopped walking away and turned around to look.

“.....?”

Choi Jong-In’s eyes gleamed brightly as he stared into Jin-Woo’s face.

‘This man’s the tenth....’

Choi Jong-In beat around the bush with Chief Park about checking out the situation together or some such, but the truth was, he already had sensed what was happening before coming here.

‘I mean, they’ve been yapping on so loudly about impossible to measure this and device error that, so how can I not hear them?’

Thanks to that, though, he was given a huge opportunity here.

This guy was a rank S. A rank S!!

By signing this man, the Hunters Guild would then boast the services of three S ranks, and be able to brush shoulders with the best Guilds in the world, never mind those found in South Korea.

How could he not salivate over that prospect?

‘There’s no need to borrow a measuring device, either.’

Just a short meeting of their gazes and he immediately sensed the depths of the youth’s strength. Without a doubt, this guy was the highest-grade Hunter there was. Hell, Choi Jong-In saw absolutely no reason to wait for three, four days at all.

“Hmm, hmm.”

Choi Jong-In cleared his throat and formed his trademark smile.

“I’m Choi Jong-In, the leader of the Hunters Guild.”

Of course, Jin-Woo knew that already. Well, that man’s face could be seen frequently enough whenever a TV was turned on, after all.

Jin-Woo wondered briefly why such a famous man was trying to talk to him after coming all the way to the Association, but well, he didn’t have the leeway to ask for the clarification.

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance at the clock mounted on one of the walls.

‘It’s already ten to six....’

If he thought about the time he needed to go ‘there’, then he was cutting it pretty close.

When Jin-Woo formed an expression that implied ‘Okay, you’re done with your introduction, so hurry up with what you want to say’, Choi Jong-In became a bit flustered as he continued on.

“Ah, well, actually.... I’m aware that you just had your Awakened rank evaluation.”

“Yes.”

“By any chance, have you thought of a Guild to join?”

“No.”

A bright smile formed on Choi Jong-In’s face when he heard that reply.

‘Yup, it’s done.’

One of the top three Guilds in the world – ‘Hunters’.

What a sweet title that was. From today onwards, it’d not be a simple daydream anymore.

'You're mine.'

Choi Jong-In's chest puffed up from happiness, and spoke the line that might be recorded in the annals of history.

"I'd like to speak to you regarding that issue, so can you spare a minute to talk, please?"

"Sorry, but don't have the time."

Jin-Woo quickly voiced his refusal and hurriedly left the Block B building.

"....."

It happened so fast that Choi Jong-In didn't even have the chance to think about stopping the youth from leaving. Meanwhile, the Association employees and the scouts from other Guilds belatedly realised what had transpired and began freaking out.

"What the hell??"

"Wait, did Choi Jong-In get kicked to the curve?!"

"No matter who sees it, he was ignored!"

Mutter, mutter.....

The waiting room became very noisy all of a sudden. Choi Jong-In did his best to maintain his calm and looked to his side.

"Chief Park?"

"Yes?"

Chief Park replied with an awkward look on his face.

"Did I make a mistake during my introduction?"

"W-well, I..... I wonder. I'm not sure."

Obviously, Chief Park heard everything as he was standing to the side. Still, this wasn't the right time to say that out loud, no?

When Chief Park shut his mouth, Choi Jong-In sheepishly scratched the side of his head.

'Was I too careless with my approach....?'

Still, there was no reason to feel disappointed here. Without a doubt, he was one step ahead of other Guilds.

'I'm the only one who knows about the appearance of the new rank S.'

The re-measurement was scheduled for three days later. There was still some time left until the official announcement.

‘Before that, though, I gotta find another opportunity to talk to him, no matter what....’

Wasn’t there a good way?

While Choi Jong-In began pondering his options, he spotted someone else hurriedly running towards the building.

‘.....Wait, isn’t he...?’

Now that was definitely a familiar face.

When that man pushed open the glass door and entered, Choi Jong-In spoke up with a surprised expression on his face.

“Chairman Baek? What are you.....?”

Baek Yun-Ho’s eyes also widened after recognising Choi Jong-In.

“Master Choi?”

Choi Jong-In quickly deciphered Baek Yun-Ho’s expression.

‘It’s like, he knows he’s been busted....’

It was not very likely that he came running after an informant rang him up just now. No, the time of his arrival didn’t make sense if that was the case.

‘I mean, the distance between the White Tiger Guild offices and the Hunter Association is great, so....’

That’s right – Baek Yun-Ho knew from the get-go.

....He had prior knowledge regarding what would happen here.

‘Meaning, he knows about the existence of that man already?’

But, that couldn’t be. If so, he’d never let that man go through the reassignment test in this fashion.

‘If it were me, I’d make him sign the contract first and then let him take the test.’

It was here that the scattered puzzle pieces in Choi Jong-In’s head began falling into their respective places.

‘.....No way. Could it be?’

The White Tiger Guild. The incident during their training. The Red Gate. The mystery helper. And then, the newly-appeared rank S Awakened.

Now everything made sense.

.....Found him.

'So, it was that man, huh.'

Baek Yun-Ho was completely out of breath. He must've ran really hard and fast to get here. Most likely, he had not left that man to his own devices. No, the Master of the White Tiger Guild actually couldn't stop the youth even if he wanted to.

Choi Jong-In stared at Baek Yun-Ho and formed a knowing smile.

'You let him slip through your fingers.'

Because, he wasn't the same as Baek Yun-Ho.....

'Thanks for the opportunity.'

Choi Jong-In didn't say anything else and relaxedly walked past Baek Yun-Ho.

Meanwhile, Baek Yun-Ho took a look around. He couldn't spot Jin-Woo anywhere.

'Am I too late?'

Baek Yun-Ho could only look on at the distancing back of Choi Jong-In and softly sigh.

"Fuu-woo...."

Who knew that the Master of Hunters Guild would be at the Hunters Association?

Baek Yun-Ho scratched the back of his head and muttered to himself.

"Things just got complicated...."

The visiting hours of the Seoul's Ilshin hospital ended at eight in the evening.

"Are you the guardian of the patient Park Kyoung-Hye?"

"That's correct."

"You can go and see her. Are you aware of the visiting hours cut-off time?"

"Yes, I'm aware."

Finishing his chat by the nursing station, Jin-Woo quickly walked to the patient ward his mother was in. Thanks to his hurried steps, he arrived there not too long afterwards.

Clang...

Jin-Woo opened the door and entered the ward, and quietly sat down on the chair next to the bed his mother was lying in. She seemed to be in a deep slumber.

‘With her like this, it’s like she’d wake up at any moment now....’

A slumber that no one could wake up from; it was a new type of illness that appeared with the advent of the Gates.

‘I heard from someone that this hospital alone has over ten patients suffering the same illness....’

Jin-Woo gently held his mother’s hand.

“Mom....”

Thankfully, the life support machines using the magic crystals as fuel managed to stop mom and her hand from wasting away, even though she had been in a coma for many years now.

However, magic crystals were expensive. The magic crystals to fuel the life-support machines for a month cost over five million Won.

A youth in his early twenties would never have been able to afford such a fee, if it weren’t for him working for the Hunters Association and was qualified to receive their medical aid scheme.

Because he’d been working his a*s off until now, he was able to hold his mom’s hand like this. However, everything would change soon.

He would no longer simply be satisfied with her still breathing like this, and actually be able to cure her outright.

The Divine Water of Life – the cure-all the System had gifted him with.

Whether it’d work or not was something to worry about later. Right now, crafting it was his first priority.

“I’ll save you.”

Mom did her best to stabilise the family when his father went missing, even though she never enjoyed robust health. Not too long from now, he’d get to see her up on her two feet again.

‘Please, just wait a little while longer.’

How long did he sit there by her side?

Jin-Woo finally pushed himself up after a lengthy vigil.

Ending his definitely-not short visit, Jin-Woo wordlessly walked out of the ward and carefully closed the door behind him. And when he turned around to leave, he got to spot a familiar face standing in the corridor.

“On that day... it was you who killed the monsters in the dual dungeon, wasn't it?”

A low and thick, manly voice.

Sharp, scary eyebrows.

He was none other than Woo Jin-Cheol from the Monitoring Division.

Jin-Woo didn't reply. There was no reason to, nor did he particularly feel like it, either. Instead, there was something else he wanted to ask.

“How did you find out that I was here?”

“I tried to guess the places you might head off to. I called the hospital and they informed me of your presence here.”

The Association was paying for mom's hospital fees, after all.

‘Well, that's going to change soon.’

It was possible that Woo Jin-Cheol checked the hospital first, before anywhere else. Should he chalk that up to the swift nature befitting the Monitoring Division?

Jin-Woo let a smirk form on his face.

“Did you seek me out just to ask me about that day's events?”

“No, I did not.”

“Well, then. How can I help you?”

“There is someone who'd like to speak to you. Would you mind accompanying me for a little while?”

The infamous Monitoring Division of the Hunters Association.

The main role the Monitoring Division performed was to watch and manage those high-risk Hunters, as well to punish those who broke the law. From a Hunter's perspective, they weren't really a welcoming presence.

Of course, Jin-Woo's gaze wasn't too friendly, either.

“Is that an order?”

“No.”

Woo Jin-Cheol took his sunglasses off. He then deeply bowed his head, his voice sounding much more serious than before.

“I’d like to ask you for this favour.”

“.....”

Jin-Woo didn’t expect Woo Jin-Cheol, with his fearsome countenance and all, to assume that kind of attitude.

Jin-Woo pondered a little, before deciding to find out who wanted to meet him first.

“Who wants to talk to me?”

Woo Jin-Cheol raised his head only then.

“It’s the President of the Hunters Association, Goh Gun-Hui.”

Woo Jin-Cheol then pointed towards the corner behind him and spoke.

“The Association President is currently here.”

REPORT

The office of the President of the Hunters Association.

The facial expression of the doctor examining Goh Gun-Hui wasn't so good. He removed the stethoscope from Goh Gun-Hui's chest.

"...President."

"No need to say it. I can already tell from the look on your face."

Goh Gun-Hui chuckled gently as he buttoned up his shirt.

The doctor couldn't bring himself to say anything.

'President Goh Gun-Hui... What with the state of your health, you walking around like this is a miracle in itself already.....'

Even then, the President of the Association did not show any signs of slowing down. He actually didn't even have the time to stop by at the hospital, and had his personal doctor come to see him at the office, instead!

"Actually...."

President Goh Gun-Hui slid his arm in the sleeve of the jacket and spoke.

"Back when the Healers began appearing here and there, and healing magic was discovered, I thought that for sure I'd be able to regain my youth, and that I would be saying bye bye to this terribly inconvenient old and decrepit body of mine."

Goh Gun-Hui then chuckled again.

"However, the truth didn't work out that way."

"There was no improvement from the treatment, sir?"

"It seems that this thing called 'age' is beyond the capability of the high-ranking Hunters and their magic."

If the Healer-type Hunters could heal any and all types of sickness with magic, then without a doubt, every single hospital in the land would've closed up, and doctors would've ended up on the street, begging for food.

But fortunately, or perhaps, unfortunately, such an event didn't occur.

Only speeding up the regeneration.

The healing magic was limited only to healing the external injuries.

Although magic could miraculously cause the amputated arm to grow back, it could not lower the temperature of a child sick with the flu.

‘Well, thanks to that, I managed to not end up as unemployed, though.....’

The doctor stared at the President of Association getting ready to leave the office.

‘If only I could borrow magical power as great as the President’s and cure him in full....’

However, both the healing magic and the modern medicine couldn’t do much at this stage. All this doctor could do was to offer his advice.

“You need to maintain calm no matter what, sir. Also, you need to take a regular break, even if it’s for a little while.”

“I wish I could do that, as well.”

Unfortunately, if he did take a break, then just what would happen to the Hunters Association? Goh Gun-Hui used his gentle laughter as a replacement for his words.

‘An Association without Goh Gun-Hui, is it?’

The large Guilds were spending huge sums of money to grow ever larger even at this very moment. Their might already equalled that of some nations’ military forces.

The only reason why the Association could still flex its muscle among these Guilds was because of the presence of Goh Gun-Hui as its President, not because the government was backing the Association.

The moment the Association lost its true trump card, the Hunters would become rein-less wild horses and run amok.

‘Not just yet.... Yes, not just yet.’

Indeed, he couldn’t retire just yet.

The Association was the only rope that could rein them in.

With no viable alternative in place, how could he even think about leaving the scene?

‘In order to show how robust and healthy the Association is, I must stay.’

The rank S above all the other S ranks.

Indeed, the name of Goh Gun-Hui was a must-have.

So, until that time, he must....

“M-mm!”

A pained moan leaked out of Goh Gun-Hui. He grabbed his chest and the tidy shirt crumpled under his grip.

“President, take this....”

The doctor brought along a pill of painkiller and a glass of water.

“Thank you.”

He could just barely regain his bearings after ingesting the painkiller.

It was then.

‘Mm?’

His phone issued a ring.

But, he ordered no one to disturb him when his doctor was here.

Goh Gun-Hui frowned slightly and picked the phone up.

“I’m with my doctor at the moment.”

It was at this point that the urgent voice of his male PA came from the phone’s speaker.

“Did the Japanese call again?”

Goh Gun-Hui’s brows quivered slightly.

‘A bigger problem than the ants of the Jeju island?’

Just what could it be?

“Tell me what’s going on.”

Before the patience of Goh Gun-Hui had the chance to run out, the PA replied in the nick of time.

“From the Evaluation Division? Why?”

The role of the Evaluation Division was to assign ranks to various Gates as well as to newly Awakened. Such a department wouldn’t be a likely candidate to cause much trouble.

‘Or, could it be....?’

Did they make another blunder with assigning a Gate’s rank?

Thinking back to the debt he had to owe the White Tiger Guild not too long ago, Goh Gun-Hui's expression crumpled a little. But his unhappiness lasted only for a short while.

The news conveyed by the PA easily exceeded the scope of 'problem' Goh Gun-Hui had been expecting.

"The President of the Hunters Association, Goh Gun-Hui??"

Did I hear that right?

Jin-Woo doubted his own hearing just then.

A man often referred to as the most powerful Hunter in South Korea wanted to talk to him and chased him all the way to this hospital??

'That must be some kind of joke....'

Just as Jin-Woo stood there not wholly convinced, Woo Jin-Cheol pointed behind him, further driving the point home.

"Yes, the Association President is here."

Woo Jin-Cheol looked a bit anxious as he waited for Jin-Woo's reply.

The current atmosphere definitely didn't come off as suitable for throwing around dumb jokes at all.

'.....He must be telling the truth.'

Why was someone like Goh Gun-Hui looking for him? A powerful curiosity suddenly invaded Jin-Woo's mind. The only thing he could think of was the result of the rank reassignment test he took.....

'Is it to lure me into signing with the Association?'

However, the Association was a non-profit organisation. Its President wouldn't necessarily show up with the top agent from the Monitoring Division in tow just to headhunt a lone Hunter.

Besides, Jin-Woo hadn't even finished with his evaluation yet.

The more he thought about it, the more curious he became regarding the President's reasons.

"Okay, I will."

Jin-Woo finally agreed.

Woo Jin-Cheol formed such a bright expression that the anxiety of a second ago seemed like a lie long forgotten.

"Thank you very much!!"

His voice sounded incredibly earnest just then.

‘This ahjussi with that stonewall of a face can also form such expressions, huh.’

Jin-Woo was inwardly surprised as he followed after Woo Jin-Cheol.

When they walked past the corner, he could see an old man sitting in one of the waiting room’s chairs.

‘So, that must be....’

Jin-Woo swallowed his saliva.

The heaven above heaven.

The S rank Hunter Goh Gun-Hui, also known as the sky above the sky.

After discovering Jin-Woo, Goh Gun-Hui stood up from the seat.

“You must be Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

He might be over 80 years old, but his physique was still quite amazing. Indeed, his size reminded one of either a retired pro wrestler or a traditional grappler.

However, he didn’t emit any of the overbearing aura one might expect from someone like that.

‘That’s surprising.’

Judged from his appearance or his station, Jin-Woo expected him to be a bit of douche, a stuck-up of sorts, yet the entourage accompanying that man carried scarier expressions instead.

“Yes, I’m Seong Jin-Woo.”

Jin-Woo replied.

Goh Gun-Hui extended his hand for a shake with a bright face.

“It’s a pleasure to make your acquaintance. I’m Goh Gun-Hui.”

The two men shared a short handshake. Goh Gun-Hui pointed towards the chairs in the waiting area, already rearranged in a way that those sitting there would look at each other.

“Why don’t we have a chat after taking seats?”

“Thank you.”

Jin-Woo sat down first, and Goh Gun-Hui too parked himself on the opposite chair.

Jin-Woo inadvertently caught the glimpse of a golden badge pinned to Goh Gun-Hui’s jacket. This man currently served as a member of the National Assembly, and at the same time, as the President of the Association as well.

‘And a rank S Awakened on top of that, too.’

Goh Gun-Hui wasn't someone anyone could meet just because they wanted to. One couldn't even count the number of people who wanted to speak to this man, be that the giants of the financial and political world as well as bigshots from other countries.

That was why Jin-Woo was getting even more curious now. Why was someone like Goh Gun-Hui seeking him out so urgently?

And, now that he thought about it....

‘After Choi Jong-In, it's the turn of Goh Gun-Hui, isn't it?’

Just in one day, he ran into two men who could proudly boast the title of the 'best' in a row.

...Even though he wasn't officially confirmed as a rank S yet.

Goh Gun-Hui began speaking.

“I'd like to congratulate you on becoming the newest rank S Hunter.”

Jin-Woo tilted his head.

“But, the result of the reassignment test hasn't come out yet.”

Goh Gun-Hui shook his head immediately.

“Actually, the test itself does not have much of a meaning.”

“Excuse me?”

While Jin-Woo formed a confused expression, Goh Gun-Hui was forming a gentle smile.

“The truth is, the so-called precision measuring device is used to draw a finer line on the level of one's powers. It's not designed to sense something that already has exceeded the scope of other device's measuring capability.”

“Then, how come....”

“Do you wish to ask me why we created another process called re-evaluation?”

Indeed, he did want to ask that. If the end results were going to be the same, then why go through yet another cumbersome process?

Goh Gun-Hui answered in rather a straightforward manner.

“It's because we were looking for a grace period.”

‘A grace period...?’

Even before Jin-Woo could ask what he meant by that, Goh Gun-Hui spoke up first, looking somewhat embarrassed.

“It’s to create an opportunity where we can meet and speak to someone like you, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

“...Ah.”

Listening to the Association President, Jin-Woo finally figured it out.

“As you may well know, there aren’t that many excellent Hunters in the Association, like Division Chief Woo Jin-Cheol here, compared to our size.”

That was because of large Guilds.

“And that’s because of the large Guilds.”

But, of course.

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

“Signing up with a large Guild guarantees you fat salaries and fame, so who would want to come and work for the Association?”

The salaries for the Association’s Hunters weren’t small by any means. But then again, when compared to what one could potentially be earning by working for large Guilds, the salary was pitifully pathetic.

It was the same story regarding fame, too.

“There are some people who can recite the names of every member of a large Guild’s main raid teams. But, you will have a very hard time trying to find someone who knows the name of our Division Chief Woo Jin-Cheol.”

Hearing the term ‘members of the main raid team’, Jin-Woo recalled the rank A Hunter Kim Cheol.

His Perception Stat allowed him to grasp another’s capability. From Jin-Woo’s perspective, Woo Jin-Cheol was definitely a level higher than Kim Cheol.

‘They both might be rank As, but the gap in their skills are pretty obvious.’

Jin-Woo took a deeper look at Woo Jin-Cheol.

Perhaps finding the praise of the Association President and the gaze of Jin-Woo burdensome, Woo Jin-Cheol lowered his head, looking a little flushed.

‘But, then....’

If Kim Cheol had made his debut as a Hunter without meeting that ‘accident’, then he’d have made a lot more money and become much more famous than Woo Jin-Cheol.

That was the difference between a Hunter working for the Association and someone signed to a large Guild.

“And so, we came up with a plan in case a truly exceptional Awakened decides to visit the Association.”

So, that would be the re-evaluation test, then?

‘Well, sure.....’

If the result of the evaluation was publicly made available and was spread everywhere, would the Association have the chance to make an approach like this? It certainly made sense.

“I won’t beat around the bush and get to the point.”

Before anyone had noticed it, that warm smile was no longer visible on the face of the Association’s President.

“We’re not a corporation, so we can’t promise you lots of money. However....”

Goh Gun-Hui touched his chest area, before extending his fist that was gripping onto something.

“However, we can help you in a different way.”

“I don’t quite understand.....?”

“What I’m saying here is that we can help guide you, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim, down a very different direction.”

His clenched fist slowly unfurled. On Goh Gun-Hui’s palm, a golden badge gleamed brightly.

‘Political power..... Is it?’

Even after that, Jin-Woo maintained a suspicious expression.

“I still don’t quite understand.”

“Pardon?”

“Is there a reason for you to go this far for me?”

That was a valid question. A certain glint flickered in Goh Gun-Hui’s eyes as he continued to gaze at Jin-Woo.

‘To think, this young man can still calmly ask what’s on his mind, without being scared by my background, nor influenced by potential benefit right in front of his eyes....'

...Was I in a too much of a rush?

Didn't someone once say this?

'Patience decreases with age.'

That concept certainly wasn't wrong.

Goh Gun-Hui suppressed his smile and continued on.

"You know about the five Guilds, yes?"

How could anyone not know of them? Jin-Woo silently nodded his head.

"Currently, you'll find that in South Korea, the heads of five large dragons are locked in a delicate balance."

Around the capital, the Hunters, the White Tiger, and the Reapers.

And in the countryside, the Shining Star and the Knight Order.

"If you decide to enter one of the five Guilds, doesn't matter which one, the delicate balance will shatter and everything will change."

Even now, the status and authority of large Guilds were soaring into high heavens. However, what if one of them managed to sign up another rank S Hunter, and used that as the springboard to soar even higher?

Would they listen to the Association anymore?

The Association's sole role was to remain as the centre of the balance among the Hunters by using power.

"It is simply far too inadequate to control and tie down Hunters with laws and regulations and the threat of prosecution."

Jin-Woo too thought like that before. Monsters found in dungeons weren't the only 'monsters' out there. Hunters were also, in a way, 'monsters'.

If one were to look only at the 'strength' aspect, then Hunters were far more dangerous 'monsters' than regular monsters found in dungeons.

"That is why the Association exists."

Goh Gun-Hui's expression became far more grave.

"And the Association needs your help, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim."

...The help from someone like you, who possessed great power.

Gou Gun-Hui's gaze became sharper.

‘Sure, I’ll have to keep an eye on him and find out what he’s like, but....’

But, as long as Seong Jin-Woo gave his OK here, the Association would support him to the utmost fullest.

A rank S was certainly worthy of such an investment, after all.

‘This should be enough of an explanation.’

That was why....

For the first time in a long, long while, Goh Gun-Hui was feeling nervous and expectant at the same time, as he asked the next question in a soft but firm voice.

“What will you choose, Hunter-nim?”

REPORT

That wasn't a bad suggestion.

If Goh Gun-Hui were to lend his support, then even the most average guy would be on the fast track to success.

The National Assembly, the government, the Hunters Association, and even the mass media, too – it'd be very hard to find a sector that Goh Gun-Hui's reach did not extend to.

Not only that, if the person receiving that support just so happened to a rank S Hunter?

'I can't even imagine how far a person like that would climb up.'

All of a sudden, Jin-Woo pictured himself sitting right next to the member of National Assembly Goh Gun-Hui while kitted out in a super-dope designer business suit.

His heart palpitated ever so slightly.

'Such an opportunity wouldn't come knocking every day, right?'

Even if one wanted to walk down on this 'different path' Goh Gun-Hui had suggested, not everyone was qualified to step on this road, after all.

However....

There was one important thing missing from that scenario.

'If I sign up with the Association, I won't be able to increase my level.'

The higher ranked Hunters working for the Association never participated in raids at all. Their main role was to deal with other Hunters, not to hunt down and kill monsters.

And, even if he managed to get permission and participate in raids organised by the Association....

'Dungeons the Association deals with are rank Ds and Es, those that the Guilds aren't interested in.'

Could he continue on by hunting down low-level mobs that didn't even give him any experience points? No, of course not.

Jin-Woo strongly balked at the idea.

'I wish to become even stronger.'

To a higher place.....

He wanted to climb up as high as he could.

Unless it was impossible, or there was no certainty, why should he give up on something he was fully capable of achieving?

What a nonsensical notion that was.

'As long as I keep levelling up, I will get stronger and stronger.'

Thump.

Thump.

Imagining that caused his heart to thump way harder and faster than imagining himself being next to the Association President Goh Gun-Hui.

Goh Gun-Hui too sensed the change in Jin-Woo.

'His breathing has suddenly picked up. Did he finally make up his mind?'

He could only hope that the decision was a good one.

'No, it simply has to be a good one.'

...If he thought about his remaining time.

His own anticipation no less than that of Jin-Woo's, Goh Gun-Hui waited for the answer. Each passing second felt like a minute.

Jin-Woo eventually opened his mouth.

'I'm sorry.'

Goh Gun-Hui's expression hardened immediately.

'I thought I saw determination fill up his face just now.... Was I mistaken?'

He couldn't hide the disappointment in his face.

'In the end, the ambition of the man named Seong Jin-Woo was only about this much....'

Goh Gun-Hui wasn't lying about lending support for the 'other path'. Actually, he was thinking of something even greater.

'A new rank S to appear in two years....'

Goh Gun-Hui was thinking of keeping this youth close and teaching him the ropes, and if the kid showed promise, groom him to become the next successor.

Because, a powerful figure was needed to support the Association when he was gone. Meaning, Goh Gun-Hui was planning to hand over everything he had.

However, for the result to be like this....

‘How laughable I am.’

Goh Gun-Hui took away the golden badge and asked in a dejected voice.

“Is it... because of money?”

Jin-Woo replied right away.

“No, it is not.”

Goh Gun-Hui snorted inwardly.

‘They all sound righteous, of course.’

However, they were all the same inside. In the end, it was all about the money. And, the accompanying fame would be like icing on cake.

‘Then again....’

Chasing after material wealth was an innate instinct found in all human beings, so Goh Gun-Hui didn’t have any thoughts of faulting the youth for that.

Only that, he found it utterly laughable that people couldn’t be honest with themselves.

“In that case, why did you say no?”

Goh Gun-Hui asked, even though he already knew the answer. He just wanted to see the youth’s response.

However.....

“I want to fight.”

Jin-Woo’s unhesitating reply smacked the back of Goh Gun-Hui’s head.

‘What did he say??’

It definitely felt like he got sucker-punched just now.

“That... Did you mean that you want to fight against the monsters?”

“That’s correct.”

Jin-Woo didn't bother with unnecessary explanations and spoke frankly.

"I want to enter Gates and hunt down monsters. I believe the place I belong is inside dungeons."

'How can this be?'

Goh Gun-Hui's eyes widened.

A man like him standing on top of many others knew whether someone was telling the truth or lying through their teeth simply from the light emitting from their eyes.

The position he occupied could only be reached by possessing such a skill, after all. That was why Goh Gun-Hui knew it.

'Those eyes.... He's being dead serious.'

Goh Gun-Hui's own eyes staring at Jin-Woo did a 180.

'How long has it been since I felt this?'

By the time Goh Gun-Hui had 'Awakened', his body was already too old. That was why, instead of fighting against monsters, he looked for other things he could do, instead.

By using the money he got from selling his company, he established the Korean Hunters Association, gathered Hunters, and with his fame serving as the foundation, he marched straight into the National Assembly, and even had a hand in creating laws that governed Hunters.

However, there was this lingering regret in his heart that would never go away, even though he worked tirelessly all this time.

'If only I was younger by 20, no, 10 years, I'd been.... With these young people, I.....!'

Thump, thump, thump....

Goh Gun-Hui pressed his hand on his chest. His heart that threatened to quit at any time was pounding quickly, rather noticeably, now.

'My heart can still make a noise like this?'

The rhythmic beating of the heart felt good.

On the other hand, Jin-Woo was tilting his head.

'Isn't this strange?'

He refused the suggestion of Goh Gun-Hui, fully preparing himself to be at odds with the Association in the process, yet the President seemed to be happy about something, instead.

‘Well, it doesn’t matter one way or the other....’

He had said what he wanted to, so Jin-Woo got up from his seat.

“My younger sister is watching the house alone, so I should get going now.”

“Thank you for your time.”

Goh Gun-Hui got up along with Jin-Woo and pulled something out from his inner pocket.

“And, please take this.”

It was a business card.

‘.....?’

“If you require my assistance, don’t hesitate and give me a call.”

Goh Gun-Hui was smiling brightly.

What Jin-Woo said was right. Powerful Hunters belonged in dungeons.

Although he had failed in recruiting Jin-Woo, as the President of the Association, or perhaps as a fellow Hunter, Goh Gun-Hui wished to help Jin-Woo out however he could.

If he were to be more honest, then....

‘This young man, I like him.’

That was why he needed to offer advice, as well. Nagging would only come from someone holding interest towards you, after all.

“It’s impossible to enter high-ranked dungeons by yourself. Please, give it a careful consideration when choosing a Guild to join.”

‘Your choice would change the status quo by a great deal.’

After hearing Goh Gun-Hui’s earnest advice, Jin-Woo briefly formed a mysterious smile.

“Thank you.”

Jin-Woo pocketed the business card in his wallet, lightly bowed towards Goh Gun-Hui and Woo Jin-Cheol, and left the waiting area.

“Fuu....”

While letting out a sigh, Goh Gun-Hui plopped down on the chair.

“Are you alright, sir?”

Woo Jin-Cheol guessed that Goh Gun-Hui wasn't feeling good, and quickly approached his boss. However, Goh Gun-Hui smiled and waved his hand away.

"No, I'm fine."

Actually, he was beyond fine.

What an enjoyable meeting this had been, a first in such a long while.

Goh Gun-Hui sat there smiling for a long time, before turning to his PA and handed out an order.

"Clear the schedule for the rest of the day."

"But, sir. The meeting with the Ministers...."

"Cancel them all."

Goh Gun-Hui chuckled to himself.

"I do not wish to waste this good feeling on those small-minded idiots."

He wished to retain this lingering feel-good attitude for today, at least.

Suddenly, Goh Gun-Hui shifted his gaze over to Woo Jin-Cheol. Seeing that rarely-seen smile on the President's face, even Woo Jin-Cheol began feeling a bit hyped up, as well.

"Is there something you need, sir?"

"No, well. It's nothing serious but, my man....."

Goh Gun-Hui took his time as he scratched below his chin.

"How about having a drink with me today?"

At this quite unexpected suggestion, Woo Jin-Cheol could only form an awkward smile.

"I'm not very good with holding my liquor, sir.... Will that be fine with you?"

"Uh-huh. I didn't take you for a person like that."

Goh Gun-Hui playfully clicked his tongue.

"Haven't you heard of the old saying about the cup size of a man's drink determining the extent of the world he can make his own?"

"My apologies, sir."

Woo Jin-Cheol's face reddened in embarrassment and scratched the back of his head.

“I was just kidding with you. I’m feeling rather good right now, and jokes just seem to come out on their own.”

Also, the one he wanted to share drinks with was someone else.

Goh Gun-Hui’s gaze shifted towards the end of the corridor that Jin-Woo had disappeared to.

‘Hunter Seong Jin-Woo....’

How well would he be able to hold his liquor?

Thinking that he’d like to find out someday, a thin smile formed on Goh Gun-Hui’s lips.

Screech....

Clunk.

Jin-Woo stepped down from the bus that came to a noisy stop.

‘Well, I did escape from there with my sister as an excuse, but....’

When he took a look at his watch, it was still too early for her to be home. Jin-Woo slowly walked towards his home.

Tick, tick.

Hearing an unfamiliar noise, he turned his head to look, and spotted a street lamp that was definitely malfunctioning.

‘Now that I think about it....’

He realised that the street was far too dark.

What with this district being so derelict, to begin with, just from walking a bit away from the main street one would find themselves in a dark and isolated location like this one.

It was at this point that a certain news item entered his mind.

‘The case of serial murders that have been happening around here lately.’

Weren’t the victims supposedly all women?

His little sister frequented this road, as well. Not only that, late at night, too.

‘Since her school’s nearby, we can’t just move house willy-nilly, either.’

He began to get worried now.

Apprehending the criminal wouldn’t be difficult at all as long as the murdering b*stard had been found, but he couldn't really stand around here every night because of his worries.

Wasn't there a better way?

He stood there thinking with his arms crossed, before a smile crept up on Jin-Woo's lips.

'Well, all I have to do is leave someone else here as a lookout, right?'

Didn't he possess the perfect candidates for that task?

"Come out."

At Jin-Woo's call, shadow soldiers popped up.

'Five should be enough.'

These guys had levelled up quite nicely during their conquest of the Demon's Castle. Just looking at them gave him lots of confidence.

"From today onwards, you guys will serve as this district's watchmen. Start your patrol."

As soon as he finished speaking, the soldiers melted into the shadow-like state. And then, they began moving while weaving in and out of the shades found between various buildings.

'That's right. Move around like that avoid being spotted by other people.'

Holy wowsers, what wonderful little kids they were turning out to be!

Unless that serial murderer was a high-ranked Hunter, he'd never be able to win against a shadow soldier. And even if that murdering b*stard did somehow win against his soldiers, Jin-Woo would know right away.

He was an S rank Hunter, after all.

'No, hang on. Since I don't have my revised licence yet, should I say that I'm an S rank Awakened, instead?'

Well, what did it matter anyway?

A suburb being protected by a rank S, didn't matter whether he was a Hunter or an Awakened.

If the truth of a free security system being deployed in this area for 24 hours became known, wouldn't the land price jump up overnight?

A smirk leaked out of his mouth.

'Very good.'

With this, he felt more relaxed.

Jin-Woo scanned his surroundings once more and turned around to leave while looking much more satisfied than before.

“I came running because you said you’d buy me a meal, but it’s just some measly pork belly??”

“Huh?! Are you looking down on the mighty pork belly now??”

“.....”

“This place is where my great memory of me and my hyung-nim was created, you know!!”

Yu Jin-Ho and his deeply-reddened face put the empty shot glass of alcohol down on the table and snorted out in drunkenness.

“Okay, so why did you bring me to this place of such a ‘wonderful’ memory?”

Yu Soo-Hyun formed a flabbergasted expression.

She was getting ready to sleep, but then, Yu Jin-Ho called her out of the blue.

She found his tearful whimpering rather desperate and pitiful, so she hurriedly came out to meet him, but to think, the place he brought her to was a diner....

It was only obvious for Yu Soo-Hyun to be less than impressed by her current situation, when considering the fact that she grew up as a refined lady of a chaebol’s family, and also from the fact that she was working as a top model nowadays.

Glance, glance....

Because she was in a hurry, she threw on whatever and even wore a baseball cap on top of that too, yet the glances from the surrounding men were still flying towards her non-stop.

“What’s going on? Will you just speak up?”

Yu Soo-Hyun asked while pouring more soju in Yu Jin-Ho’s empty shot glass.

“Look, look at this. This is the phone number of my dear hyung-nim. Right?”

Still sounding tearful, Yu Jin-Ho pushed forward his smartphone. On the screen, one could see the lengthy list of calls.

One successful call, and four failed attempts.

Even then, the first one that got through was apparently cut short in the middle, too.

“Wait. Did you call me out here because you couldn’t reach someone you know on the phone?!”

Nod, nod.

Yu Jin-Ho’s head bobbed up and down.

“Ha-ah...”

Yu Soo-Hyun could hardly believe this crap. She snatched Yu Jin-Ho’s phone away.

“Gimme that.”

She quickly tapped on the ‘Call’ icon.

Ringgg....

The ringtone got cut off a short while later. When that happened, Yu Soo-Hyun began glaring at him.

“Hey, you dumba*s.”

“Eh?”

Yu Jin-Ho raised his head from the table.

“The ringtone cuts out after 15 seconds. That guy’s not avoiding answering you, it’s just that his phone’s been switched off. And if the call got cut out in the middle, his battery must’ve run out.”

“...Really?”

“If you don’t believe me, call again.”

Ringgg....

Just as she said, the signal got cut off after 15 seconds.

“Hey, it’s for real?!”

Yu Jin-Ho’s expression brightened instantly.

Yu Soo-Hyun was about to leave without a shred of hesitation, but Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly latched onto her sleeve.

“Nooona~. Please hang around until I finish this bottle, at least!”

“Am I a noona only on occasions like this one, ah?”

And this fool usually called her ‘You’ this and ‘Hey you’ that all the time, too!

In the end, though, Yu Soo-Hyun settled back down on the chair.

“Huh? Noona, you also want a drink?”

“You wanted me to wait until you finish the bottle, right? It’s going to take a long time before you solo that bottle and I can’t wait around until you manage that.”

“As expected, there can only be one noona!”

“Stop it, please?”

Even though she replied like that, they began emptying the shot glasses in a fun, relaxed atmosphere.

“By the way, just who is this ‘hyung-nim’ guy?”

“You’ll find out soon enough.”

After signing up with the Yujin Guild, that is.

Yu Jin-Ho was about to say those words out loud, but then, his eyes widened slightly after seeing the footage being shown on the TV mounted high up on the diner’s wall.

“Uh? Isn’t that guy....?”

Yu Soo-Hyun also turned her gaze towards the TV.

The screen showed a news broadcast, and it carried the news regarding a top celebrity named Rhee Min-Seong, who had gone through the Awakening process recently.

Standing in front of the huge throngs of reporters, Rhee Min-Seong spoke as if he was abashed by the attention.

The ticker tape on the bottom of the screen said that Rhee Min-Seong was planning to stop by the Hunters Association soon and take his rank assignment test.

“Wowsers. As expected of the star of the Korean Wave, Rhee Min-Seong! Look at the number of reporters there. Aren’t those guys from the Chinese media?”

Yu Jin-Ho sighed in admiration.

However, Yu Soo-Hyun simply frowned.

“How can that guy lie so boldly in front of so many people?!”

“Eh?”

“Everyone who’s in the know all know it already. That’s all just a show. He already has been ranked A, you know? He’s just playing it up for the cameras because he wants to be the talk of the town!”

“He’s putting on an act? But, that symbol of modesty Rhee Min-Seong is?!”

Yu Soo-Hyun clicked her tongue in annoyance.

Tsk, tsk.

‘How come no one has got any clue?’

This kinda felt like she was badmouthing someone behind his back, but within the circle of those who knew Rhee Min-Seong personally, that man’s reputation was the absolute worst.

The difference in his personality between when the cameras were around and when they were not was, as the kids liked to say nowadays, the 4th dimensional wall that no one could cross. (TL: It’s a Korean slang.)

That was the type of person Yu Soo-Hyun detested the most.

If he was just two-faced, then she might have overlooked his faults, but then again, that b*stard was notorious for his flirtatious ways, too.

Not too long ago, he called her up totally out of the blue and started his shtick while saying something about being a Hunter like her. She had to go through a wringer trying to end that call.

‘What an unpleasant b*stard....’

Even before he had Awakened, he was infamous for his incredible arrogance, but now that he was about to become a rank A Hunter, how bad would it get now?

Not only that, it looked like that the occasion of him being labelled as a rank A would be broadcast live nationwide, too.

‘He’s really good at using his head for stuff like this, isn’t he?’

Yu Soo-Hyun shook her head and slammed back the remaining soju in her shot glass.

REPORT

“Excuse me? What are you even talking about?”

“President Goh Gun-Hui said that? But, he has never done anything like that before, so why now?”

“....”

“....I’ll call you again at a later date.”

Click.

And that’s how the phone call ended.

The expression of Im Tae-Gyu, the Master of the Reapers Guild, wasn’t good at all.

‘What on earth is happening here....?’

When the leader of this large Guild heard the news that, after two long years, a super-powerful rookie had appeared, he immediately called his contact in the Association.

However, he didn’t expect to hear this type of answer at all.

Taking responsibility after getting fired?

Who would be stupid enough to hire an ex-Association employee that got personally fired by none other than the Association President Goh Gun-Hui himself?

There was no guarantee the recruitment of the mystery rookie would be successful just because his identity was discovered, too.

‘Finding out the guilty ones by any means necessary and punishing them, is it....’

Coming from Goh Gun-Hui’s mouth, that sounded plausible.

‘But then, why is the geezer doing something he has never done before? Maybe, he’s finally gone senile?’

What had gotten into him?

To forbid everyone from leaking the identity of the mystery Awakened like this....

This was unprecedented.

Thanks to that, the Guild Master of the Reapers had no choice but to suck on his thumb and wait for the official announcement.

That wasn't the only thing he felt wronged about, though.

'Then, how did Choi Jong-In and Baek Yun-Ho find out and go there yesterday?'

Was it the difference in their spy networks?

Was this the sign of the Reapers influence waning even further?

If that powerful rookie appearing yesterday signed up with either the Hunters or the White Tiger, the already-widening gap between them and the Reapers would become impossible to bridge.

That was the current situation, yet that inexplicable gag order was blocking the Reaper's path.

'Could that geezer have a grudge with me from a past life or something??'

When Baek Yun-Ho decided to quit the Reapers Guild and created his own, the White Tiger Guild, it was precisely that geezer who helped facilitate the whole process and made sure everything went smoothly. The ensuing aftermath forced the Reapers off the position of the top Guild in the country.

Both the Hunters and the White Tiger were already so far ahead, yet the Reapers Guild was circling around in the exact same spot.

'I mean, isn't that enough by now? Can't you help out the Reapers at least once?!'

Suddenly, he began to resent Goh Gun-Hui.

Even then, he still found himself left with no tangible way forward.

Im Tae-Gyu could only anxiously stomp on the ground, feeling rather aggrieved over this development.

'I finished the Daily Quest.'

Feeling light-hearted, Jin-Woo began searching the internet.

There were two more days to the reassignment test. He decided to gather more information on the artefact trade during this time period, so he switched on his computer.

'Heok?!'

As he browsed through the available information on the auctioned goods, Jin-Woo's eyes grew wider and wider.

'...The minimum starts in the hundreds of millions, huh.'

Was that all? Items that looked okay to his eyes commanded an average of several dozen billion.

'Then again....'

To Hunters, good equipment was like their lifeline.

There was no need to even mention the obvious fact that using better, more expensive equipment made you safer.

Most Hunters made quite a bit of coin, and when given the chance to buy tools that would allow them to hunt faster and safer, was there a reason for them to hold back with their money?

Jin-Woo could understand it. Indeed, he could, but that didn't change the fact that he was taken greatly by surprise.

Seeing the pricing of various artefacts, he was getting more nervous by the minute.

'This... I don't think it'll be enough with what I have in the bank....'

He didn't find a defensive artefact designed to defend against flame-type damage, but it looked increasingly likely that the amount he had would not be enough to buy high-grade defensive equipment at all.

'And I thought that I had enough money now....'

That opinion was from the perspective of a normal person. As a Hunter, it fell far, far too short.

He had around 1.7 billion Won saved up in the bank. If he were to purchase artefacts he wanted, he definitely had to sell the 'Bead of Avarice'.

Now that he was the seller, Jin-Woo's expression rapidly changed.

'Needing a lot of money to buy an artefact means that I can sell my own artefact at a sky-high price.'

Click.

He moved the mouse and continued to search, until the list of the magical tools currently on sale appeared on the monitor.

'.....'

No matter how hard he searched, he could not find a single artefact that doubled the magic damage. The best ones he found had the enhancement of around 20~30 percent. And those artefacts boasted scarcely-believable asking prices.

‘Man, these prices for the magic tools are no laughing matter, aren’t they?’

When he thought about it, though, the boost of 20% was not small at all. Only the upper tier, no, the very best Hunters out there, would be able to afford such an expensive artefact.

However, with their already-excellent strengths being enhanced by 20%? The difference would be quite incredible to behold. The high-ranked Hunters knew this point as well, so no wonder they were prepared to shell out big bucks for them.

Actually, he could frequently spot the goods being on sale only a moment ago suddenly sporting a ‘Sold’ tag.

The ‘20%’ artefacts were selling out fast like this, so....

‘So, just how much should I sell this guy for?’

Gulp.

Jin-Woo swallowed his saliva.

Not too long ago, he didn’t even dare to dream about touching an artefact. Not too surprisingly, he couldn’t even begin to imagine how much money others were willing to pay for his artefact at the moment.

‘That’s why there’s the thing called auction, right?’

He prayed that, when he put the Bead of Avarice up for auction, a suitable bid would be called out in the end.

With a satisfied smile on his face, Jin-Woo exited the auction information page.

According to his research, there was two obvious way to sell an artefact.

One, selling it via the official route. Or, sell it in the black market.

However, he had no way of approaching this elusive black market at all. Well, there was a limit to the information one could find on the internet, after all.

‘I mean, if you can access it via a couple of mouse clicks, it shouldn’t even be called the black market anymore.’

Besides, the Bead of Avarice didn’t have any disreputable background

anyway, so there was no need to go through the black market in the first place. The best available option was to let the artefact specialists handle the bead and sell it via auction.

Sure, there was the issue of taxes and commission fee, but this was still the best and quickest method that wouldn't produce any unnecessary baggage in the long run.

'So, the only remaining issue would be with me providing the information on where I've found this thing....'

A rank E Hunter showing up with a crazy artefact that shouldn't even exist in the first place.

Would anyone quietly accept that?

The Korean Hunter Auction House was a huge corporation that oversaw all transactions between Hunters. They would surely try to confirm and investigate every single suspicious detail they find.

'That is why I need my new licence.'

The new Hunter licence with 'rank S' nicely printed on it – he took the reassignment test solely for that licence.

And the result was a resounding success.

If he went by what the Association President Goh Gun-Hui had said, he'd be able to get his hands on that licence in two days' time without an issue.

He did worry slightly there for a sec, thinking that he had complicated the matters by refusing to sign up with the Association, but...

'What a relief it is since the Association President doesn't look like that type of person.'

Even until they said their goodbyes, that deep smile never left the President's mouth.

When one spent a long time always minding other people's moods, one would become a master at reading the flow. Jin-Woo was one such example.

He spent four years as a rank E and always had to mind other Hunters. That was why he could more or less figure out what was what by simply looking at other people's expressions.

Goh Gun-Hui's expression was definitely not faked. At least, that's how Jin-Woo saw it. So, he shouldn't worry about anything and quietly wait for the reassignment test in two days' time.

'However.... what I am supposed to do in the meantime?'

Jin-Woo leaned against the back of the chair.

Two days. It was a bit too short to do anything substantial, and maybe a bit too long to do nothing but lounge around at home.

‘Should I just take a look anyway?’

Feeling half-interested, Jin-Woo moved the mouse cursor to the recruitment noticeboard in the Hunter forums.

Click.

One click later, and countless recruitment notices filled up his monitor. He quickly noticed a flood of requests from various freelancer raid teams searching for temps nearby this area.

‘.....’

The reason for this was simple. When he and Yu Jin-Ho monopolised every rank C Gate nearby for a little while, many raid teams temporarily lost their livelihood.

Perhaps as a rebound, the raid teams that had been sitting idle during that time suddenly went into an energetic overdrive in the last few days.

Jin-Woo smiled wryly and changed the page.

‘Well, I won’t level up anymore in rank C dungeons, anyway.’

It took him one full day to level up once in the very last rank C dungeon he entered. No, never mind one day, he actually needed nearly two days for that single level up. And his current level was higher than that time by 15.

If there was a gauge for the experience points, then the needle wouldn’t even budge.

‘Rank C Gates have no meaning to me anymore....’

Unfortunately, he couldn’t find a single recruitment offer for raiding higher ranked dungeons. Freelancer raid teams trying to clear high ranked dungeons was akin to them killing themselves. And the large Guilds wouldn’t really recruit temporary members like this, either.

Still, one would never know.

‘Should I change the search parameters?’

Jin-Woo changed the search condition and had it display only the results with ‘high-ranked dungeons’.

Click.

Even though he was hoping, he wasn't expecting much at all.

However...

'.....Huh?'

Something did pop up.

"You're a rank E?"

"Yes."

"You've never done anything like this before?"

"No, never."

"Well, uh... your speciality is?"

"I'm a close-quarter combat type."

'Well, at least that's a relief.'

The foreman wearing a hard hat swept his gaze up and down over Jin-Woo.

'For a rank E, he's got a pretty impressive physique, doesn't he? His eyes look okay, too.'

Jin-Woo patiently waited for the answer from the foreman.

The foreman returned Jin-Woo's Hunter licence and smiled jovially.

"Hahaha. There are quite a few people similar to you here, Mister Jin-Woo. Don't be too nervous and let's get along well."

The foreman ahjussi was over forty years old, yet he was overflowing with energy. As an added bonus, he even sported a cool moustache, too.

"You can wait here until everyone shows up, Then, you can go inside. And don't forget your equipment, too."

"My equipment....?"

"You can pick up any one of those lying on the ground over there."

".....Okay, got it."

Jin-Woo nodded his head while looking at the pile of pickaxes on the ground.

It was at this point that another ahjussi with a towel draped behind his neck hurriedly approached the two men.

"Mister Bae! Our team is also hurting for manpower, so how can you take people away willy-nilly like that??"

“Aigoo~. That many people’s fine for the retrieval team. Hey, will you take responsibility when a problem occurs during the operation and we miss the Gate closing down?”

“Even then!”

The moustached ahjussi spun the towel ahjussi around and grinned at Jin-Woo.

“Mister Seong? Why don’t you take five over there? This fella and me, we gonna have a bit of chat.”

“Hey, why don’t we just hash it out right over here? Where are you planning to take me now?”

“C’mon, my man. Come with me for a sec.”

The two ahjussis disappeared to somewhere while arguing with each other.

‘The other ahjussi is from the retrieval team, huh....’

The sizes of high-ranked dungeons were so great that a single raid team couldn’t do everything in one go. That was why the labour was divided.

The raid team that cleared the dungeons, the mining team that mined minerals from the dungeon’s interior, and finally, the retrieval team tasked with collecting the remains of the fallen monsters.

Both the mining and the retrieval team entered the dungeon once all the monsters inside except the boss were eliminated.

Jin-Woo applied to the mining team.

‘...Wait, is this all the so-called equipment there is?’

With a somewhat unconvinced expression, Jin-Woo picked up one of the pickaxes. Even though it was faint, he could sense the flow of magical energy in it.

‘Huh. It’s got magic energy inside.’

Modern technology that utilised electricity didn’t work inside dungeons. Because of that, the old fashioned tools like this pickaxe were used instead, with magic energy enhancing their performance.

‘.....’

Once he held the pickaxe tightly, he felt certain. It was not for nothing that Hunters in the mining team were roundly berated by others as dungeon miners.

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to the Gate. A giant hole was silently floating in the air. A Gate with a humongous size that no rank C Gates could even hope to compare filled up Jin-Woo's vision.

'So, that's the rank A Gate....'

That guy was his sole reason for showing up here today.

'I want to see high-rank dungeons with my own eyes.'

Even though all the monsters inside – except the boss, of course – were dead, he still wanted to confirm the interior layout of the rank A dungeon with his own two eyes.

'Well, I'll be entering one sooner or later.'

Knowledge was indeed power. However, there would always be a limit to learning from books and internet articles. Didn't the newbies of the White Tiger Guild meet with a huge misfortune simply because they had overlooked that crucial fact?

'If I wasn't there, none of them would have survived.'

Knowing something, and personally experiencing it, were two different things. When the opportunity arose, Jin-Woo readily applied to enter the mining team in order to get used to rank A dungeons.

He did feel a slight pang of regret when holding that deeply-uncool pickaxe, but when staring at that massive, fearsome Gate, such misgivings flew out of his mind.

'Looks like I've made the right choice.'

He still had some time left to kill until the reassignment test, so what a good opportunity this was.

The 'chat' must've gone well, because the moustached ahjussi – no, the foreman Bae Yun-Sek, ran to where Jin-Woo was with a smile on his face.

"Let's go inside. They say they are ready."

While gripping the pickaxe, Jin-Woo smiled and nodded his head.

REPORT

Knock, knock.

“Here are the requested files, sir.”

“Come in.”

Woo Jin-Cheol entered the Association President’s office.

As if he had been waiting a while, Goh Gun-Hui welcomed him as his expression brightened considerably. As soon as opening the file Woo Jin-Cheol handed over, a familiar youth’s face could be seen.

It was none other than Seong Jin-Woo.

The Jin-Woo in the identity photo looked immature and the atmosphere exuded seemed quite different compared to now, but it wasn’t enough to make it impossible to recognise him.

“H-mm...”

Reading the youth’s prior records, Goh Gun-Hui gradually became serious.

‘Four years of Hunter activity as a rank E? Not only that, the lowest grade there is?’

This was no different than him trying to kill himself.

Even if the Gates under the Association’s jurisdiction were of lower grades compared to what large Guilds or freelancers were in charge of, they should still be breathlessly difficult for a rank E!

And as expected....

Jin-Woo had spent as much time in the hospital as he was active as a Hunter.

“Even with all these frequent injuries, he still managed to tough it out.”

“Apparently, he couldn’t quit the Association because of his mother’s hospital fees.”

“...A rare type of youth in this age, indeed.”

An unreadable light flickered in Goh Gun-Hui’s eyes.

‘In place of his missing father, he has been looking after his sick mother and a younger sister who is still a student, all by himself....’

After learning that Seong Jin-Woo was a Re-Awakened, Goh Gun-Hui decided to take a peek at the youth’s files half out of interest, but he sure didn’t expect this.

Goh Gun-Hui found the youth even more likeable after reading more about the kid.

‘It’ll be just too much of a waste to hand him over to large Guilds.’

The longer he took a look at the information, the greater Goh Gun-Hui’s regret grew for failing to recruit the youth to the Association’s folds.

“Tsk.”

He smacked his lips a little and flipped the page, and eventually, arrived at the last one. Feeling satisfied now, Goh Gun-Hui closed the file folder.

“Thank you. This was informative.”

“Thank you, sir.”

Woo Jin-Cheol took the files being handed back to him and turned around to leave, only to stop and open his mouth, apparently in some difficulty.

“Excuse me... President, sir.”

“Mm?”

Goh Gun-Hui raised his head.

The look of hesitation could clearly be seen on Woo Jin-Cheol’s face.

‘...Why would Chief Woo make that kind of face, when normally, he looks hard enough to chew on rocks for breakfast?’

Was there a difficult matter to discuss?

Goh Gun-Hui’s curiosity had been stoked for good now.

“What’s the matter?”

Woo Jin-Cheol hesitated for a while before he finally replied.

“There is something you should know, sir..... The truth is, I received word not too long ago that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo has entered a raid team earlier today.”

“Already? Okay, so whose team are we talking about here?”

“Hmm... Hunters, is it?”

Seong Jin-Woo had chosen the Hunters. Not only that, in one day, too.

Goh Gun-Hui’s expression hardened.

‘Could he have been just all talk, and he got tempted by the massive contract signing fee of the Hunters...?’

If so, what a disappointing turn of events this was. Well, he was feeling genuinely moved for the first time in a long, long while after meeting a Hunter worthy of that job title.

However, when thinking back to the attitude the youth carried from yesterday’s meeting, as well as the information Goh Gun-Hui had read just now, Seong Jin-Woo definitely did not look like someone who’d change his mind with a flip of his hand.

There must be some other reason.

Such as...

“For sure, if he wished to combat truly powerful monsters, then the Hunters Guild should suit him the best.”

Goh Gun-Hui was ready to accept this explanation. Too bad, because Woo Jin-Cheol quickly tackled him off that thought process.

“It doesn’t sound like that’s the case, sir.”

“Have you heard of something?”

“It has been confirmed that he.... Hunter Seong Jin-Woo didn’t join with the main raid team, but actually with the mining team, instead. Sir.”

Goh Gun-Hui shot up from his chair.

“What did you say? A rank S Hunter applied to become a miner???”

His voice accurately conveyed his disbelief.

In all honesty, Woo Jin-Cheol reacted the same back then. That was why he confirmed it several times to make sure, but the result didn’t change no matter what.

‘That’s why I hesitated about telling him about this matter....’

Just what was Seong Jin-Woo thinking?

Cold sweat trickled down Woo Jin-Cheol’s face as he spoke.

“Yes, sir. He has indeed done so.”

Goh Gun-Hui plopped down on the chair and began chuckling in helplessness.

“What a hard to understand young man he is.”

After putting on the distributed hard hat and the miner’s overall, Jin-Woo followed after the foreman Bae Yun-Seok. He found a fairly large group of Hunters wearing hard hats like him near the Gate itself. Around twenty or so?

Their gazes focused on Foreman Bae. And the moustached man introduced Jin-Woo to everyone.

“This here is Mister Seong, and he’ll be working with us from today onwards.”

“Hello.”

Jin-Woo lightly bowed his head and tried to read the overall atmosphere of the mining team.

“....”

Their reactions were indifferent. But, that was understandable.

‘Of course....’

On one hand, he was a temp who may or may not show up tomorrow. And on the other side, they were Hunters who had signed formal contracts with the Guild to become full-time members of the mining team.

From their perspective, there was no reason to get particularly friendly with Jin-Woo.

“Gee whiz.... These guys. He’s a colleague who’s going to work together with you, you know.”

Foreman Bae smiled awkwardly and pointed at a guy with pretty scary facial features standing far back.

“Mister Seong, please stick with Mister Mok over there, and if you’re curious about something, learn from him. Mister Mok might be a silent type, but he’s the most experienced out of everyone here.”

“...Understood.”

Jin-Woo didn’t say anything else and stood next to this Mister Mok. When their gazes briefly met, Mister Mok spoke in a voice small enough to miss it.

“It’s Mok Jin-Su.”

“I’m Seong Jin-Woo.”

The introduction ended with that. Before long, Mok Jin-Su’s gaze had shifted to the foreman.

‘...What a friendly guy.’

Jin-Woo also shifted his gaze.

The foreman was conversing with a regular person who must’ve been the Guild employee in a location a bit of a distance away, looking rather serious. When Jin-Woo concentrated a little harder, he could hear the contents of that conversation.

“...The raid team hasn’t come out yet? Didn’t you say they were finished already? How many minutes ago was that?”

“They said that they are almost finished for real, this time. Please be patient for a little while longer until all the monsters inside are taken care of. This is all for the safety of you and your team, you know.”

“I’ve heard the exact same thing three times already.”

“Eii~. Mister Foreman, you know as much as I do how complicated it’ll become when we don’t do a thorough job, and a hidden monster pops out during the mining operation.”

When the male employee who was young enough to be his son smiled and went on a charm offensive, Foreman Bae could no longer stay angry anymore. The moustached man turned around with a smirk on his lips.

“Okay, okay. I got it.”

“Oh? Mister Foreman, you’re not angry anymore?”

“I said I got it. So get going already.”

“Yes, sir. As soon as the raid team exits from the Gate, I’ll definitely run over to you right away without a moment’s hesitation. Oh, by the way. You still remember that we’re all having a drink after today’s operation, yes?”

“Aigoo. I know. I know! So get going, young man.”

Fortunately, the conversation came to an end without any potential problems developing. That employee’s responses were quite excellent, indeed.

‘Most folks would think that, once you start working for a large Guild, you become more arrogant than before no matter where you are, but...’

The truth was, most of the Guild’s administrative staff were regular people, while those operating out in the field were mostly Hunters – those who had Awakened.

There were many things requiring the touch of an Awakened, but there would always be a finite number of them.

In other words, it was impossible to hire and fire Awakened at will as if they were parts of a factory machine that could easily be replaced. That was why all Guild employees did their best to mind the Hunters and their moods.

From others' perspective, they might seem like they had made it in life, but the employees of large Guilds all had to go through trials and tribulations that only they knew.

It was then.

'.....Mm?'

Jin-Woo was focusing on the conversation between the foreman and the employee, but out of the blue, he could also hear the whisperings coming from his side.

"Did you hear that? The newbie joining us today is supposed to be a rank E."

'Are they talking about me again?'

Sometimes, Jin-Woo couldn't help but resent his excellent sense of hearing.

'Still, doesn't mean I'm gonna cover up my ears or anything....'

While he bitterly smiled to himself, other Hunters were cautiously whispering to each other.

"What? A rank E?"

"A rank E has been selected?"

"That's right."

Jin-Woo could sense the sharp glares boring down on the back of his head.

"What the heck. What is the foreman thinking of, hiring a rank E and all?"

"Does a rank E even have enough strength, I wonder?"

"Yeah, I wonder about that, too."

"Huh, can we even finish today's operation on time?"

Worried voices could be heard coming from here and there.

Still, they kept their voices low, perhaps in consideration of the new guy. Too bad, such actions were meaningless in front of Jin-Woo, though.

Jin-Woo could only keep his chuckles down.

‘There was another reason for their reactions not being so welcoming, huh.’

As expected – a rank E would receive cold shoulders no matter where they went. He was already well used to this, so it didn’t faze him anymore.

‘Well, it’s not like I’ll be seeing them for long, anyway.’

But then, something else happened.

Noisy, noisy....

Suddenly, the front of the Gate became rather noisy.

“The raid team has come out.”

“Looks like they are finally finished.”

The tired expressions of the Hunters in the mining team, restless from all that waiting, brightened one by one. Foreman Bae had been observing the situation until then, and he gestured at his team.

“Okay, okay. Everyone, let’s get going.”

Hunters in the mining team checked their equipment and slowly shuffled towards their destination. Jin-Woo blended in and went along with them.

“Thank you for your hard work.”

“Thank you.”

“You all worked hard, everyone!”

The Hunters Guild employees stood in front of the Gate and welcomed the raid team members as they made their exit one by one.

The term raid team as used in the field seemed to refer to the members belonging to the Guild’s main assault force.

‘So, these people are.... the country’s best assault force.’

Studying the faces of each and every upper rank – no, the very highest ranked – Hunters walking by, Jin-Woo’s eyes sharpened considerably.

He spotted a familiar face among them.

‘....Choi Jong-In.’

The leader of the Hunters Guild, and a rank S mage-type Hunter.

Jin-Woo pulled the hard hat lower to hide his face, figuring that things might get complicated if Choi Jong-In recognised him here. Thankfully, there were many Hunters wearing a similar get-up as him nearby. So, Jin-Woo was able to blend in just fine.

And so, as he stood amidst the miners and silently studied the members of the country's very best assault force, Jin-Woo began thinking that...

'....Are they really the true elites of the Hunters Guild?'

He was feeling quite incredulous inwardly.

Quite contrary to his initial expectations, it was hard to find a single Hunter with a really powerful aura.

As befitting of the nickname 'Ultimate Weapon', Jin-Woo could sense an enormous amount of magical energy from Choi Jong-In, but besides that guy, not one was worthy of mention.

'Could they be the weak ones, instead?'

But, that simply made no sense.

Jin-Woo softly shook his head.

These were the members of the no.1 raid team selected from the cream of the crop found in the country's top Guild.

'I mean, the Guild Master himself has participated in the raid, so there's just no way that some nobodies would be chosen as team members.'

The word most ill-suited to describe these people would be 'Weak'. Then, there could be only one conclusion.

'No, it's me who has gotten stronger.'

A thin smile crept up on Jin-Woo's lips. Strength was relative, wasn't it?

The efforts of the last couple of months definitely did not betray his expectations. His Stats had increased by so much that he could think of the raid team that managed to conquer a rank A dungeon as weaklings.

By using the difference between himself and them, he could sense his own strength.

Thump, thump, thump....

His heart began beating faster from this realisation.

But, then....

No one told him to do so, and there was no sound attracting him, yet Jin-Woo's head instinctively swivelled back towards the Gate. And then, he gasped out in surprise.

'How can this be....?'

There was a woman with a short hairstyle relaxedly walking out from the Gate.

The very first things that caught his attention on her makeup-less face were a pair of large and clear eyes. up, her clean and pale skin, as well as her smoothly flowing neckline, also managed to attract his gaze.

If there were 100 men, 99 of them would unhesitatingly praise her looks and call it beautiful. However, besides all that, what attracted Jin-Woo's attention the most was not her looks but what was inside her.

The power that was hidden inside her.

From that expressionless woman, an incredible amount of magic energy was leaking out non-stop.

'At a bare minimum, she's on the same level as Choi Jong-In.'

Or maybe, even more than that.

She possessed an aura that easily overwhelmed her surroundings.

By the time his shock wore off and cold reasoning succeeded in driving his emotions out of his head, Jin-Woo recalled this woman's name.

'She must be....'

The only female rank S, Cha Hae-In.

The top-ranked Hunter who formed, along with Choi Jong-In, one of the core pillars of the Hunters Guild.

'I can't think of anyone else.'

Just how many women possessing such an aura existed in South Korea?

Compared to her 'rarity' though, Cha Hae-In's face wasn't all that well known. It was because she didn't enjoy being exposed to the cameras. And that was also why Jin-Woo saw Cha Hae-In's face for the first time today as well.

'Wait, her face doesn't even look weird like in some rumours, so how come she hates being in front of a camera?'

Indeed, pretty much all ladies in their early twenties loved taking photos. Sure, all those happened to be selfies, but still.

Perhaps his stare was too direct, Cha Hae-in's own gaze began shifting in Jin-Woo's direction.

'Stealth... shouldn't be necessary here, right?'

Jin-Woo easily hid his presence. Cha Hae-In continued to scan the area Jin-

Woo used to stand before tilting her head slightly.

‘What was that? I thought I felt a really strong presence just now.’

Was she mistaken?

Initially, she thought that the Association President Goh Gun-Hui had stopped by at the operations area. However, that powerful presence disappeared completely as if it was a lie.

‘Well, someone as busy as the Association President wouldn’t come unannounced, now would he?’

Too bad for her, the cost of her misunderstanding was rather great.

Because she was searching after the hint of that strong presence, she had to focus her senses, and that meant the heavy odour several times worse than normal assaulted her nose.

“Euk.”

As usual, Cha Hae-In pulled out a handkerchief to cover her nose, and while tottering around somewhat uneasily, escaped from the cordon of Hunters.

‘Her perception is better than I thought.’

Jin-Woo let out a sigh of relief while watching Cha Hae-In’s distancing back. With her exit, all the raid team members had come out of the Gate.

Having been waiting with bated breath for this moment, the foreman of the mining team Bae Yun-Seok turned around to face his boys. He clapped his hands loudly and spoke up with a bright voice.

“Well, it’s our turn now, so let’s all do our best!”

The unique nature of the job meant that the retrieval team would have to enter first, followed by the mining team.

Jin-Woo stood in front of the Gate.

‘.....’

As he stood there while silently admiring the splendour of the rank A Gate, something he hadn’t experienced before, Bae Yun-Seok approached him.

“Mister Seong, what are you doing? We should go inside.”

“Alright.”

Jin-Woo replied briefly and stepped through the Gate, just like other Hunters did before him.

And then, a familiar message popped up before his eyes.

‘There’s a breeze inside this dungeon?’

Jin-Woo raised his head.

As soon as stepping inside, he sensed an ominous wind blowing in from the deepest part of the cave-like dungeon.

Suddenly, he felt a chill run down his back. And at the same time, Jin-Woo realised the identity of this mysterious wind.

‘It’s no normal wind, is it?’

No, this was a ripple caused by the magic energy. The powerful magic energy emitted by the boss of this rank A dungeon was physically touching Jin-Woo’s body.

Considering that the rank S dungeons were incredibly hard to find, even in the entire world, the owner of this magic energy could very well be the highest levelled monster Jin-Woo could realistically meet.

‘The boss of a rank A dungeon....’

He was tempted to confirm the creature with his own two eyes now. And, if there was a chance....

Even though Jin-Woo was shuddering from the bone-chilling aura that managed to make his hair stand on end, he couldn’t stop smiling at the same time.

Was this the instinct of a hunter?

Wasn’t the act of pointing a gun at a powerful predator the most instinctive act there could be for a real hunter?

It was then.

Tap.

A guy coming inside the dungeon bumped into Jin-Woo’s shoulder.

“Eiii, come on, man. Walk faster.”

A man named Lee Seong-Gu frowned deeply, the words flying out of his mouth sounding sullen.

The interior of the rank A dungeon was huge. There was plenty of space to go around the person in front. However, Lee Seong-Gu found this newbie who stood there unmoving not to his liking at all.

So, he figured he'd embarrass the kid or something by bumping into his back, but.....

'What the fck is up with this guy? He's like a dmn concrete pillar!'

When he ran into the newbie's back, it was him who got bounced away instead. So, quite obviously, his irritation had shot up to the heavens.

'Why is a rank E this tough?'

Still, this kid was a measly E. And he was a rank C.

Although his skills lagged behind compared to other rank C Hunters, and therefore he had to work as a miner, but regardless of all that, it wouldn't do for him to lose out to a rank E like this.

However, the newbie didn't even show a single hint of a response.

Lee Seong-Gu's eyes narrowed to a slit.

'Oh? Would you look at this fool?'

Now that his ire had reached a boiling point, Lee Seong-Gu angrily glared at the newbie and raised his voice higher.

"Look here, man. Aren't you supposed to apologise if you run into someone?"

Jin-Woo finally turned around, then.

Lee Seong-Gu flinched and took a step back.

'Heok!!'

It was if a dangerous light was emanating from Jin-Woo's eyes just then. While being pressurised by an aura that robbed away his breaths, Lee Seong-Gu began panicking greatly. It was here that Jin-Woo finally opened his mouth.

"Sorry."

"N-no. I....."

Lee Seong-Gu stuttered before managing to squeeze his voice out.

"Well, uh, mistakes... happen."

His voice sounding unexpectedly meek now, Lee Seong-Gu lowered his reddened face and hurriedly walked past Jin-Woo.

“Fuu-woo....”

Only after distancing himself far away from the newbie did Lee Seong-Gu find some leeway to pat his pounding chest.

‘What the hell was up with those eyes, man? And why was he smiling so creepily like that?!’

Their gazes met for only a brief second, yet Lee Seong-Gu’s entire body froze up and he couldn’t even speak properly. Him managing to not avert his eyes right away was his desperate attempt to hold on to his pride.

‘.....Is he really a rank E?’

When he bumped into him, and that murderous glare – just what the heck was going on here?

‘Eiii, who cares anymore?’

Lee Seong-Gu shook his head hard in order to get rid of the distracting thoughts and hurried his steps.

“...D*mn it.”

Jin-Woo scratched the side of his head as he looked on at Lee Seong-Gu quickly rushing past him.

‘Because my nerves were in a heightened state due to the boss, I....’

He ended up frightening that guy, instead.

This was only because he lacked enough practice. Yup, more practice was needed. Jin-Woo inwardly reflected on how overly sensitive his response was and chased after the rest of the mining team.

He caught up with them pretty quickly. Jin-Woo stuck to the rear of the advancing miners and matched their walking pace.

‘Well, none of these guys would be able to catch up with me if I walk in my usual speed....’

So, he had to match theirs.

However....

The deeper they went in, the greater the ripples of the magic energy from the boss became.

‘My Perception Stat has risen up by a lot, hasn’t it.’

To be able to clearly sense the boss monster hidden in the deepest chamber of the dungeon like this....

Because of that, he was getting excited for no particular reason.

‘Would I even be able to concentrate on my job at this rate?’

As if to try answering his rhetorical question, he could hear the loud, manly roars coming from his front.

“Orya! Orya!!”

The retrieval team that had entered one step earlier than the mining team was already in the middle of their operation. And that would be to drag a corpse of a huge monster outside using the ropes tightly tied around it.

“One, two! One, two!”

“Eut-chaaa!”

The physical strength of the close-quarter combat-type Hunters was excellent, to begin with, so they didn’t require help from specialised tools to smoothly carry out their work.

Jin-Woo imprinted every step of a high-rank dungeon’s conquest into his brain.

‘First of all, the raid team enters before everyone else and eliminates all the monsters found inside, with the exception of the boss.’

Afterwards, the retrieval team entered to drag out the monster remains, and finally, the mining team entered to extract various minerals embedded in the dungeon’s walls.

In order to maximise profit, none of these steps could be omitted.

Both the Mana stones and magic crystals were a given, but the high-ranked monster’s body could be utilised in various ways as well, and thus was worth a lot of money.

‘Bones, hides, flesh, etc.... Not one part of a high-ranked monster is useless.’

And that was one of the differences between monsters found in low-ranked dungeons and those from the high-ranked ones.

After sweeping away every single thing worth money from a dungeon....

‘They kill the boss and close the Gate.’

Only after going through all four stages of this process could one declare that the high-ranked dungeon was perfectly conquered. At least, that would be from the Guild’s perspective.

However....

‘Wouldn’t my soldiers be enough to carry out these simple labours?’

While walking past the sweating Hunters of the retrieval team, Jin-Woo suddenly came up with that idea.

For sure, after all their level-ups, the shadow soldiers were much stronger than the members of the retrieval team, who were all Hunters ranked below rank C, to begin with.

Dividing his troops into three, and by making one group hunt, another one retrieve, while the remaining group took care of mining, then.....

‘Then, I might really be able to perfectly conquer a high-rank dungeon all by myself.’

A satisfied smile formed on Jin-Woo’s face.

The reason for him being here was to explore. And now, he was beginning to think that it was a good idea to come here, after all.

“Mister Seong? Did something good happen?”

The foreman asked him from the side.

Seeing that the rank E with no experience of being inside a high-ranked dungeon broke out in a grin like that, he couldn’t help but get curious.

“Well, I was just surprised by the sizes of the monsters that are bigger than I thought, that’s all.”

Perhaps finding Jin-Woo’s vague answer satisfying, the foreman replied jovially while trying to dig through his memory.

“Oh, is that so? Well, even I couldn’t keep my mouth shut the first time I entered one, too.”

Now that they were talking like this, Jin-Woo decided to ask a couple more questions.

“I heard that all the regular monsters have been killed off, but the boss is still alive, isn’t it?”

“That’s right. Well, if the boss dies, the Gate will close down, after all.”

His answer implied that, until the retrieval and mining operations were completed, the boss could not be hunted down.

“What if the boss comes out of the boss room?”

“Well, such a case is almost non-existent, but.... In that case, everyone remaining inside would be dead meat.”

Now that would be an obvious result.

The raid team exiting from the dungeon would take an extended break until the boss raid. And quite obviously, the Hunters in the mining team or the extraction team didn't possess enough power to fight against a boss of a rank A dungeon.

However, the commonly-accepted belief was that, before the dungeon break occurs, the boss would almost always remain inside the boss room. Perhaps that was why there was no trace of fear on the foreman's expression.

“But, such a horrifying monster is not too far from us. You aren't even remotely scared?”

“Not at all.”

The Foreman Bae sounded confident.

“In the last three years I worked for the Hunters Guild, not once was there an incident similar to that. So, you can rest easy, Mister Seong.”

Jin-Woo stared at the grinning foreman Bae lightly tapping him on the shoulder, and couldn't help but find it rather envious.

‘Ignorance is a blessing, isn't it?’

The ripples of magic energy coming from the boss were powerful enough to shake his body even when standing still.

It looked like only Jin-Woo could pick up on the boss's aura in this place.

“Ohh, so it starts from here!”

The Foreman Bae discovered Mana stones on the cave walls and smiled brightly.

The experienced miners began occupying their natural spots in front of the stones even though no one directed them to do so. They put down their gear and hefted the pickaxes up.

Jin-Woo too stood towards the end of the cavern wall filled with Mana stones.

‘So, am I suppose to just strike down?’

He grew worried that, were he to use his real strength and strike down, both the Mana stones and the pickaxe might shatter into tiny little pieces.

‘What should I do?’

Jin-Woo stood there hesitating, unable to start his job. But, he was able to take in the sight of Mok Jin-Su, the supposed veteran of the mining team as referred to by the Foreman Bae.

Swish! Crack! Swish-! Crack!!

Mok Jin-Su rhythmically mined the stones. Whenever he struck the walls, Mana stones noisily tumbled down to the ground.

‘Wow....’

Now that was some skill worthy of the ‘veteran’ label. He was mining the stones twice as quickly as compared to the speed of his colleagues.

Jin-Woo’s eyes gleamed brightly.

As the time slowed down in his perception, Jin-Woo observed and learned Mok Jin-Su’s postures and breathing patterns, as well as the movements of muscles.

And soon, Mok Jin-Su’s economical but effective movements were being replayed countless times in Jin-Woo’s head.

‘I think I get it now.’

Indeed, he thought he understood it, more or less. Jin-Woo lifted his pickaxe up. It was as if he was the mirror image of Mok Jin-Su.

Swish! Crack! Swish-! Crack!!

Even if their movements were similar, Jin-Woo’s strength was on a completely another level from Mok Jin-Su’s. Whenever Jin-Woo struck the cave walls, larger, more intact Mana stones tumbled down in droves.

Swish!!! Craaack! Swish-! Crack!!

A rather refreshing noise came from the end of the wall. The Hunters of the mining team realised one by one that something didn’t feel right.

“Uhm... Oii.”

“What’s up?”

“Look over there.”

“Heok?!”

“What the hell is up with him?”

The Hunters stopped what they were doing and dazedly stared at Jin-Woo. Even Mok Jin-Su’s tireless hands came to a stop, too.

‘.....’

Everyone was rendered speechless.

The supposedly mining-virgin rank E Hunter was currently making easy mincemeat out of the Mana stone wall with practised movements!

“What are you doing, guys?! You came here to do a job, so why are you all standing around like that?”

The Foreman Bae had been jotting down the scale of the Mana stone deposit on a ledger until then. But when he discovered that every member of the mining team had downed tools for some reason, he got shocked out of his mind and quickly ran to where they were.

“Foreman? Will you take a look over there?”

“What now?”

The Foreman Bae craned his neck to look. And then, his eyes grew super large.

“Heot?!”

Even the foreman displayed the same reaction as everyone else. He couldn't rip his eyes away from Jin-Woo and his speed, which was around three times faster than other miners.

“Foreman, didn't you say that it's the newbie's first time today?”

“...That I did.”

Lee Seong-Gu, who had been wondering about Jin-Woo's identity earlier, butted in suddenly.

“Is he really a rank E?”

“I confirmed it with his licence, obviously! You think I'll let a complete stranger into my team without confirming his Hunter licence first?”

“Well, then. How do you explain that?”

“...”

Wordlessly observing Jin-Woo, the Foreman Bae nervously swallowed his saliva as excitement dyed his expression.

“Without a doubt.... Mister Seong is the heaven-sent miner.”

Indeed, there was a reason why those rugged, tough-looking chest muscles caught the foreman's attention back when they were having a short job interview.

‘Yup, I really am good at finding the right people.’

A thick smile spread on the Foreman Bae's face.

Beep, beep, beep!

An alarm went off from Foreman Bae's wristwatch. He raised his wrist to confirm the time.

'Aigoo~. It's already.....'

It was lunch hour already.

"Everyone, let's take a break and have lunch."

"Yes!!"

Everyone dropped their tools and dusted their hands.

While the miners were walking towards the exit in pairs and groups, Jin-Woo showed no hint of moving from the spot. Foreman Bae got closer and asked him.

"Mister Seong? Aren't you going, too?"

"I'm not feeling all that hungry at the moment."

"Even then, you should eat something if you plan to continue working in the afternoon."

"Nah, I'm fine. I did eat my breakfast a bit later than usual, anyway."

"Really?Well, nothing I can do about that, then."

Bae was planning to talk about the future together with this young man during the lunch break, but that didn't mean he should forcibly drag the kid away, no?

Foreman Bae ruefully turned around towards the Gate's exit.

It was at this point that the corners of Jin-Woo's lips arched up. Watching the distancing backs of the miners, he formed a deep smile.

'I can't miss such a wonderful opportunity, right?'

Finally, he was left all alone. Both the mining team and the retrieval team had left the dungeon. For about one hour, he was free to do whatever he wanted.

Meaning, this was the best chance for him to seek out the boss hiding in the deepest part of the dungeon.

Jin-Woo put the pickaxe down, and slowly shifted his gaze to the direction of the boss room. He could still sense the thick aura of the monster.

'I'll just go and take a quick look.'

He wasn't thinking of doing anything at all. No, he just wanted to see what the boss looked like.

Thump, thump, thump...

Just from imagining him seeing the boss, his heart was pounding faster.

Jin-Woo forcibly controlled his wildly-beating heart and walked forward. He moved deeper into the cave, following after the aura of the boss.

And so, just how long did he have to walk?

A long stroll later, he finally arrived at the entrance of a huge chamber. It was the boss room. The cavern itself was already pretty huge, but the boss room was even bigger.

Was every high ranking dungeon as huge as this one? Just as he began wondering like that....

He discovered the boss and automatically accepted that this dungeon simply had to be this big.

‘If a monster like that gets outside...’

His eyes spotted the lone humanoid monster standing still at the far end of the boss room. Jin-Woo’s eyes began gleaming brightly like a young kid who got his hands on a toy he wanted so much as a gift.

‘A giant-type monster.’

He heard a few things about this type of monster before, but this would be his first time looking at one. Because a giant-type monster’s corpse was so huge, it was practically impossible to retrieve it in time, so most people would hardly ever get to see one outside of dungeon breaks.

Such a creature was right over there, and that was causing his heart to palpitate faster and faster.

‘That thing’s really strong.’

The hair on his body was standing up. But, for some reason, he didn’t think for once that hunting that thing down was impossible for him.

‘The current me can.....’

He’d be more than enough. The moment he thought like this, he reflexively swallowed his saliva.

Gulp.

Just how much experience points would he earn by hunting that guy down? By working his a*s off inside the Demon’s Castle, he levelled up 15 times in a week. But, if he could kill one boss and raise his level by 2, 3 times....

‘No, I shouldn’t be doing this.’

Even though he was telling himself he shouldn’t, both the ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ and the ‘Knight Killer’ were summoned into his hands already. More importantly, his expression wasn’t of someone stuck in a dilemma, wondering whether he should do something or not.

Should I just go ahead and do this thing?

A soft but excited grin formed on his lips.

However....

While Jin-Woo stood there deliberating with a smile on his face, a certain woman’s incredibly sharp voice flew at him from his behind.

“What do you think you’re doing?”

REPORT

Right then, Jin-Woo felt his heart crash down to the pit of his stomach.

‘When did she....?’

He was paying too much attention to the boss and failed to notice that someone had come closer.

‘I’m busted....’

Jin-Woo could only smack his lips in regret.

Tsk.

However, with an eyewitness around, it was no longer possible to stare avariciously at the boss.

The Hunters Guild had purchased the raid permit for his particular dungeon, so naturally, the boss of this place was also a part of their investment.

And, if the boss was killed off, the Gate would close down. The potential losses the Hunters Guild might incur would be a lot, then.

‘I nearly messed up.’

He got blinded by the desire to level up and nearly put his hands on someone else’s property. Jin-Woo regained his bearings and spat out a sigh of relief; meanwhile, the owner of the voice had walked closer.

“I asked you what you were doing.”

Jin-Woo formed an embarrassed smile and turned around to face her.

“I got lost and ended up here.”

“You got lost?!”

She sounded flabbergasted. Only then did Jin-Woo confirm who the owner of the voice was.

‘Huh? Isn’t she....?’

He saw that face just before entering the dungeon, didn’t he?

It was none other than the rank S Hunter Cha Hae-In. As Cha Hae-In slowly closed the distance, she carefully scanned both of Jin-Woo's hands.

'I definitely saw him holding weapons just now, though?'

Was she mistaken?

Whatever the case might have been, they had disappeared without a trace.

Cha Hae-In's gaze scanned the entirety of Jin-Woo, up and down.

'A hard hat and a worker's overall..... Is he from our mining team?'

She honestly believed him about getting lost here. She didn't know how he got this far, but well, the boss room was a very dangerous place to hang around.

Discovering the 'reason' was secondary. For now, Cha Hae-In figured that the priority should be on helping this man to leave this place.

"That chamber is where the boss is."

Cha Hae-In covered her nose with her handkerchief as usual and stood before Jin-Woo.

"Please exit from the dungeon as soon as possible. If you manage to attract its aggro, people inside this dungeon could all die."

"Ah. I'm sorry."

It seemed that his acting worked. Jin-Woo formed a satisfied expression and walked past Cha Hae-In. It was then.

'...Uh?'

Cha Hae-In's head snapped towards Jin-Woo.

Something impossible just happened.

Cha Hae-In's eyes opened wide and even before she realised it, she was calling out to him.

"Excuse me. Wait!"

"Yes?"

"Can you take a look at me for a sec?"

What's gotten into her?

And they said that thieves knew what they did wrong; Jin-Woo was not looking forward to Cha Hae-In coming in close to him. Too bad, she was already standing right in front of his nose.

"What.... what's the matter?"

He asked with a troubled look on his face, but she didn't answer and simply proceeded to lightly breathe in the air near him. She had already put away the handkerchief covering her nose.

'What's going on here?'

Jin-Woo failed to understand why she was doing this.

'Wait, why is she suddenly smelling me?'

Jin-Woo began panicking inwardly. However, the state of confusion Cha Hae-In was going through at the moment was several times greater than his.

'There is no.... stink coming from him.'

This would be her first time meeting another Hunter that didn't stink.

Cha Hae-In's surprised eyes stared at Jin-Woo. And a question mark floated above Jin-Woo's head as his reply.

'Is there some kind of a problem?'

'You... Are you a Hunter for real?'

Was there a need for words here? Jin-Woo pushed forward the Hunter licence hanging on his neck. Cha Hae-In took the licence and her gaze quickly alternated between Jin-Woo's face and the ID photo.

'Rank E.... Seong Jin-Woo....'

Was this because his rank was too low?

She could not pick up any type of smell coming from this man named Jin-Woo. No, wait. Actually, a pleasant odour was gently wafting out of him, instead.

Jin-Woo sneakily extracted his licence out of Cha Hae-In's hand.

'Can I go now?'

'Uhm, well, I....'

Cha Hae-In did call out to Jin-Woo, but then, realised that she had nothing else to say nor had a reason to keep him here.

'.....It's nothing. Please be careful on your way out. This dungeon is rather large, you see.'

'Ah, of course.'

Jin-Woo lightly nodded his head and turned towards the location of the mining operation. His back soon disappeared around the corner of the cavern.

However, Cha Hae-In's lingering gaze didn't shift away from the path Jin-

Woo had walked down on.

'He smelled really nice.'

Hunters of the mining team were returning to the mining operations area one by one after finishing their lunch.

Foreman Bae was walking with a toothpick stuck in between his teeth. Once he saw Jin-Woo appearing from the deeper parts of the dungeon, though, he flinched greatly in shock.

"Uh? Huh?? Mister Seong, why are you coming from there??"

"Oh, that...."

Jin-Woo sneakily shifted his gaze over in the direction of the boss.

'...I can't tell him about me stopping by the boss to see what it looks like out of curiosity, right?'

Jin-Woo's gaze returned to Foreman Bae.

"I got lost while searching for the bathroom, actually."

"Aigoo! You need to be more careful, young man. Interiors of these dungeons all look the same, so if you get lost inside, it won't be easy finding your way around! But still, how did you find your way back to here?"

"Oh, I ran into Cha Hae-In Hunter-nim on my way back, so...."

"Ahh, Cha Hunter-nim, was it? She's probably gone to stand guard by the boss room just in case the boss decides to take a stroll. That lady also worries a lot, maybe as much as you, Mister Seong."

Foreman Bae guffawed vigorously. It seemed that Jin-Woo being worried about the boss not too long ago had left a deep impression in his mind.

Jin-Woo could only smile wryly.

'The foreman can laugh like this only because he has no idea how terrifying the boss actually is.'

This was the difference between the Hunters doing these sorts of jobs, and the Hunters working in the assault team.

Cha Hae-In understood very well how dangerous and scary an existence the monsters could be, so she was just being meticulous in those areas that no one else was paying much attention to.

'I didn't know there was such a side to her, what with that expressionless face of hers and all.'

If the boss decided to come out of the boss room, the assault team wouldn't be the ones in danger. No, it would be the workers doing their job, as the raid team would be taking a break outside the dungeon.

And she was sacrificing the allure of sweet rest to stand guard in front of the boss room, just for the sake of total strangers.

'.....She's an amazing woman.'

That was Jin-Woo's honest impression of Cha Hae-In. It was at this point that he suddenly recalled her odd habit.

'Why was she covering her nose with a handkerchief?'

Thinking back, she never let go of the handkerchief not even once, except for their meeting a few moments ago.

"Foreman?"

"Yeah?"

Foreman Bae remained very friendly whenever Jin-Woo asked him a question, even though it'd be quite reasonable for him to get a bit annoyed by now.

'Right, the responses were pretty good back when I was doing my job, wasn't it?'

Indeed, one should strive to do their best in their jobs.

Thanks to his efforts, Jin-Woo could ask about this and that without holding back now. Heck, it was Foreman Bae who urged Jin-Woo to speak, instead.

"Mister Seong? You called for me, so how come you ain't saying a thing?"

"Oh, well, it's nothing important, but... By any chance, do you know why Cha Hae-In Hunter-nim walks around with a handkerchief?"

"Oh, that? Well, it's cuz Hunter Cha is a bit peculiar, you see."

"A bit peculiar?"

What did he mean by that?

Jin-Woo didn't have to ask, because Foreman Bae helpfully explained himself first.

"Hunter Cha can supposedly smell a kind of body odour coming from other Hunters. And I hear she finds them pretty horrible."

“She can smell other Hunters?!”

“I heard something or other about her special constitutions and stuff.”

Her special constitutions, he said.

Jin-Woo also possessed something similar to that – his excellent sense of hearing.

Even from his early years, his hearing could be considered better than average, but once he Awakened, it developed even further.

‘Probably, Cha Hae-In’s sense of smell also got enhanced like mine.’

So, he could more or less understand where she was coming from.

“Well, wouldn’t you agree that she is peculiar?”

Perhaps he enjoyed the sight of Jin-Woo focusing on his words more than he should, because Foreman Bae continued on with his explanations without any prompt from the youth.

“I heard that she finds it really hard to breathe near other Hunters because of the stink.”

“...”

Was that why?

‘...Asking me if I was a Hunter.’

Was it because, unlike other Hunters, he didn’t smell at all?

Back in the Red Gate, the leader of the White Phantoms said something similar.

Wasn’t this a bit similar in context with what that creature told him? He didn’t have the Hunter-specific stink, and they couldn’t hear the voice telling them to kill him.

‘Because, I’m a Player.....’

A unique existence who had received the advantages of the System.

Just what was this ‘Player’?

The question of his own identity rose up in Jin-Woo’s head, but he shook his head eventually.

‘This isn’t a problem I can figure out now, anyway.’

Jin-Woo emptied his mind. Problems that couldn’t be solved by thinking too hard would only tire him out if he continued to dwell on it.

Crack! Kwack!

It was then, he heard his colleagues getting back to work. So, Jin-Woo also lifted the pickaxe.

‘The rank A boss... I wish I could hunt it down.’

What would he have done if Cha Hae-In didn’t show up in time?

He couldn’t help but wonder.

Thanks to Jin-Woo’s brilliant efforts, the mining team was able to finish their operation well before the dinner time. According to the foreman, they had finished two hours faster than planned.

With that, the looks the fellow miners were giving him had gone through substantial changes.

“Nice work, Mister Seong!”

“You were really good, you know?”

“After seeing all those Mana stones tumbling down, I thought we somehow got ourselves on an excavator or something.”

Hunters surrounding Jin-Woo began praising him one by one. The cold, indifferent eyes before entering the Gate were nowhere to be seen now.

Jin-Woo was also feeling rather pleased with himself. This experience of being a dungeon miner proved to be surprisingly educational, and he also got to achieve the purpose of coming to this rank A dungeon as well.

“Well, let’s get out of here, everyone!”

“Roger that!”

“Let’s go!”

At Foreman Bae’s order, the miners all began moving at the same time.

“One, two!”

“Yu-cha!”

They left behind the retrieval team still suffering through their operation and, after changing out of their overalls, the miners re-gathered in one spot.

Unlike the other miners, who were all full-time employees of the Guild, Jin-Woo’s daily wage was handed to him immediately.

“Here. This is your share, Mister Seong.”

“Ah, thank you.”

While handing over the envelope containing the day's wage, Foreman Bae sneakily threw in a question as well.

“We’re planning to go and enjoy a drink together, so how about it? Would you like to join us?”

He sounded light and cheery, but his eyes were gleaming in a serious light.

‘Looks like he has something important to say to me, but...’

Jin-Woo could sense the man's desperation, even. Unfortunately, Jin-Woo declined the invite as tactfully as possible.

“I’m sorry.”

“Mm.... Is that so.”

Foreman Bae scratched his chin.

‘Well, this is a story best told after knocking back a few cold ones, but...’

He hurriedly changed his tactic.

“I’ve met quite a few people while doing this job for many years now.”

“Okay.”

“But, it’s my first time meeting someone like you. You have a natural-born talent to become a miner.”

It seemed that Foreman Bae really liked Jin-Woo here.

‘Haha.... Well, this is....’

All Jin-Woo could do here was to chuckle awkwardly, unable to neither agree or refute that notion. Deciding that the young man's smile was a good omen, Foreman Bae confidently moved on to the main topic at hand.

“I’d normally not say something like this, but.... Don’t you want to come and work for me full-time? I will definitely not treat you poorly, you see.”

This young man named Seong Jin-Woo.

Even though today was his first day as a miner, he managed to outperform the veterans by three, four times the amount.

If he couldn't hold on to such outstanding talent, wouldn't he be a failure of a foreman?

He was even thinking of discussing the matter with the person in charge and have Jin-Woo's wages paid separately from others. That was how badly he wanted to reel in this young man.

Too bad, Jin-Woo remained resolute.

“Thank you for your kind words, but.... Actually, I’m getting ready for something else at the moment.”

Just a few words from Jin-Woo, and Foreman Bae’s face was forming a dejected expression of a man who had lost his country.

“...R-really?”

Jin-Woo chuckled to himself.

‘What an interesting guy.’

To display his raw emotions so openly like this. More than likely, Foreman Bae must’ve thought that he had discovered an unpolished rough within the E rank.

Foreman Bae pondered something for a bit, before cautiously asking the youth.

“What about tomorrow, then? Can you come to work tomorrow as well?”

“Tomorrow? Hmm....”

Actually, he didn’t have anything else planned for tomorrow. The re-evaluation was scheduled for the day after, too.

Still, was there a reason for him to take another mining job now? He already got to learn the process of the dungeon conquest, and he even got to witness the rank A boss, too.

However....

‘Wait a minute.’

Just as he was opening his mouth to voice his refusal, a new question quickly entered Jin-Woo’s mind.

“Does that mean Hunters Guild will go on another raid tomorrow?”

“That’s right. And that one’s also a rank A.”

“But, is that even possible? They finished the raid today.”

Normally, a raid team would take about a week off after finishing up a raid.

‘And this raid only started from yesterday afternoon.’

Which meant the elites of the Hunters Guild were raiding this dungeon for two days in a row – yesterday and today.

And by the time they kill the boss after the retrieval operations finally end, it’d be the early dawn. Naturally, Jin-Woo couldn’t understand how there would be another raid tomorrow.

When Jin-Woo displayed a hint of interest, Foreman Bae also got more enthusiastic.

“You see, assault team B will be stepping forward tomorrow, not team A.”

Assault team B?

Could it be that they were thinking of clearing a rank A dungeon with a backup team?

“And this is precisely the power of the Hunters Guild, you see. I mean, we are probably the only Guild in entire South Korea who can conquer rank A dungeons with two different teams.”

Foreman Bae sounded quite proud, then.

“Does Hunters raid dungeons like this all the time?”

“No, no. Now normally, we wouldn’t have to split up the teams like that. But it looks like the schedule got overlapped this time.”

Because two rank A Gates appeared around the same time in the district the Hunters Guild operated in, Chairman Choi Jong-In had to sweat a lot in order to get the permits for both of them, apparently.

‘Ah. So, the reason for running into Chairman Choi in the Association yesterday was this....’

Someone as busy as Choi Jong-In wouldn’t just randomly show up in the Association for no reason whatsoever.

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

“Okay, so does that mean it’ll be your first time trying to raid the dungeon with the B team?”

“That’s right. However, the B team of the Hunters isn’t your regular backup team, okay? They are even better than the A team of some of the other large Guilds, I’ll have you know.”

“Still, it should be far more dangerous than today, yes?”

Foreman Bae became speechless, then.

Because, that would be quite obvious.

In today’s raid, two rank S Hunters participated. On the other hand, only the rank As and below would try to raid the dungeon tomorrow.

Sure, he heard that the size of tomorrow’s Gate was smaller than the one today, but still, losing two rank S Hunters was a big blow, indeed.

After all, Mister Seong was worried about the boss monster, even when the assault team featuring two rank S Hunters were nearby.

‘Doesn’t mean I can lie to the kid, now is it?’

Foreman Bae was thinking of changing the youth’s mind tomorrow while working beside him, but realising that he had failed, he expressed some regret.

“Yes, it’ll get more dangerous, for sure. If something goes wrong, then the raid itself might fail, too.”

It was here that the light in Jin-Woo’s eyes changed.

REPORT

Jin-Woo didn't ponder for long before speaking up.

"I see."

"If that's what you think, then there's not much I can do."

"Where should I show up tomorrow?"

"...Eh?"

After hearing this unexpected reply, Foreman Bae's eyes went extra round in shock.

'Wait, I haven't made a mistake just now with what I said, right?'

Didn't he definitely say that tomorrow was going to be more dangerous than today?

Mister Seong's expression wasn't so good after hearing Bae's story, so the older man was just about ready to forget about the matter completely. However, what was the meaning of this?

Thanks to this youth, it looked like Bae wouldn't have to worry about finding another miner for tomorrow.

'Is that all??'

Mister Seong could easily do the work of four or five people all by himself. And that was on his first day, too.

The boy's work speed that even managed to impress the 'ace' of the mining team, Mok Jin-Su, was indeed pretty shocking the first time Bae witnessed it.

From Jin-Woo's declaration that he'd come tomorrow, Foreman Bae felt like he had gained a powerful, trustworthy ally and he was filled up with lots of confidence.

"Mister Seong, you made the right choice!"

Foreman Bae's moustache quivered as he formed a blindingly brilliant smile. And then, to make sure that Jin-Woo's mind wouldn't change overnight, he even came up with an unprecedented offer, too.

"I'll have a good chat with the person in charge, and make sure that you get double the normal daily wages tomorrow.”

“Will that be okay?”

“Of course. You think I won’t be able to do that much for you, Mister Seong?”

Foreman Bae confidently pounded on his chest.

“Mister Seong, don’t you worry about a thing and just come to work tomorrow.”

Quite obviously, who would sweat over paying twice as much in daily wages to a guy capable of doing the work of 4-5 people?

If Bae was the Chairman, never mind double, he’d triple – no, maybe even more with an eye towards the future.

‘Didn’t expect myself to rue the day that I’m not the Chairman of the Hunters....’

Foreman Bae could only swallow back his laughter.

Jin-Woo asked him a question, then.

“Ahh, right. I promised to meet someone tomorrow evening, so will I be able to make that in time?”

Earlier this morning, Yu Jin-Ho gave him a call.

For some reason, he sounded worn out.

‘That kid was on the top of the world yesterday, saying that everything had worked out alright, yet today.....’

Jin-Woo was taken by surprise, but unfortunately, the call came only after he had already applied to become a miner. He had no choice but to delay the meeting until tomorrow evening.

Foreman Bae chuckled out loudly.

“From what I hear, tomorrow’s dungeon should be much smaller in scale than today’s one. So, we should be finished well before 6 o’clock.”

Weren’t they able to finish today’s work around five PM today? They should be even faster tomorrow, not the other way around.

Jin-Woo nodded his head. That would be fine for him, too.

“In that case, I’ll see you tomorrow.”

“Alright. Take care.”

Watching Jin-Woo turn around and walk away, a satisfied grin formed on Foreman Bae's lips.

'If I did marry, I'd probably have a son around his age by now.'

Why did that boy's back look so wide and trustworthy? How wonderful would it be if the world was filled with newbies as excellent as Mister Seong?

A thick smile refused to leave Foreman Bae's lips.

However, he wasn't the only one smiling.

While walking towards the bus stop, an imperceptible smile was floating on Jin-Woo's lips, too.

'Well, it's not like I'm wishing for the raid team to make a blunder tomorrow, but....'

But, if something were to happen, then his existence would prove to be a huge help either to the raid team or to the mining team.

It wasn't as if he had a change of heart, either.

Perhaps ironically, the success rate for clearing rank A Gates was actually greater than those of the lower ranks.

'For one, the Association doesn't hand over the permit to any ol' Guilds, and....'

And, once the Guild was given the opportunity, they would commit all of their resources and try to conquer the dungeon, too.

However....

'The Hunters Guild isn't committing their everything in tomorrow's dungeon raid.'

To think, they'd have the balls to split a single assault team into two and prey on two separate rank A Gates at the same time. That was some confidence befitting the holder of the top spot in their profession.

But, it was undeniable that the accompanying risk was incredibly high, too.

'Regardless of what happens, I won't lose out either way.'

If they managed to complete the raid safely, that'd be the best for everyone involved. On the other hand, if an accident did occur, he'd assist the Hunters Guild, but in return, he would get to monopolise the high-ranked monsters by himself.

'Very good.'

A deeper smile formed on Jin-Woo's face as he climbed into the bus.

Late at night.

Cha Hae-In was tossing and turning in her bed.

‘Why is he different from others?’

Occupied by various thoughts regarding the man she met back in the boss room, she couldn’t fall asleep at all.

After Awakening her abilities roughly two years ago, she ran into many, many Hunters but there had never been an exception. Whenever she approached Hunters, or to be more specific, the Awakened, a deeply unpleasant stink assaulted her nose.

At first, she thought she was sick, so she went to see various doctors. However, she made no progress in that regard.

One of the doctors she went to see cautiously told her of his hypothesis.

That guess certainly held some merit; the stink would get worse the higher the rank of a Hunter was. And sure enough, the lower the rank, the more tolerable the stink was, too. Of course, regular people didn’t emit any stink whatsoever.

However.....

‘...This is the first time meeting someone with a pleasant smell.’

Recalling the events of earlier, her heart began beating a bit faster.

She became quite curious who that man could be, so as soon as the raid ended, she connected to the Association’s website and searched for his details.

Rank E.

Seong Jin-Woo.

The information on the man, as seen on the Hunter licence, could be seen on the screen.

‘There are no contact details....’

But then again, what would she even do after finding out about his contact info?

Realising that there was nothing more she could glean from the Association’s website, she then ended up calling the phone number of Joh Myoung-Ki, the manager of the recruitment department. She didn’t even mean to do that, though.

It was already well past one AM by the time she called him.

He wouldn't have answered the phone if it wasn't from South Korea's sole female rank S Hunter, who also happened to be the Vice Chairman of the Hunters Guild.

She couldn't help but think that she made a mistake after hearing the still-sleepy voice of Joh Myoung-Ki, but that lasted only for a short while.

Cha Hae-In opened her mouth with some difficulty.

“Can you find some information on a Hunter named Seong Jin-Woo?”

Cha Hae-In was taken in by a huge surprise.

Joh Myoung-Ki was none other than the man in charge of recruiting in South Korea's best Guild. So, why did a man like that remember the name of a rank E Hunter?

“Do you know who he is?”

“Chairman did that?”

“Do you know what's going on?”

“...So, what did you find out?”

A voice that was thick with a helpless sigh came out of the phone's speaker.

“Ah.....”

“No, it's fine. I'm sorry for calling you so late. Good night.”

Click.

....Those were the contents of the phone call she made three hours ago.

She worked up her courage to find out more about a guy, only for more questions to bubble up in her mind.

A mystery Hunter whose identity was being sought after by the leader of the Hunters Guild, while the Association was doing their best to hide it.

‘There's definitely something going on here.’

No, wait. There simply had to be something....

She earnestly prayed for it.

He could very well be the person to unravel the mysterious and special constitution that continued to torment her ever since she turned 21 – two years ago, when she had Awakened her powers.

‘That man, can I meet him again?’

Could it be that she'd never get to see him again?

She was beset with worry all of a sudden.

Thankfully, Cha Hae-In recalled Seong Jin-Woo's hard hat. She remembered that the hard hat and the overall he was wearing both spotted the emblem of the Hunters Guild.

'I remember now. He was in the mining team, wasn't he?'

Unlike her, who was the part of the raid team A, the mining team would be working later today as well.

If Seong Jin-Woo hadn't left the mining team, then there was a chance that she could meet him again.

'Let's go and take a look.'

Since she was the Vice Chairman of the Guild, it'd not be a strange thing for her to stop by at the raid location.

'Right, I'll just show up there as if nothing's wrong, and see whether that man came to work or not.'

...But, why? As soon as she thought about the possibility of seeing that suspicious Hunter again, she felt much more relaxed.

'If I want to do that, I gotta get some sleep first.'

For the sake of today's schedule, Cha Hae-In forced her unwilling eyes to close.

Even before the morning sun rose up.

Jin-Woo left for the meeting area first thing in the morning. It was different from yesterday, when he had some leeway, as he only joined the crew during the middle of the raid.

'Maybe, I shouldn't have worried.'

He was worried about whether he was too early or not, but...

Well, many Hunters had gathered before the Gate already by the time he got there.

"Uh? Uhh?? Hey, Mister Seong!! Seong!"

Foreman Bae Yun-Seok greeted him first.

"Hey, it's Mister Seong."

"Heyyy, man. Mister Seong!"

Other Hunters began greeting him with a slight nod, and some even raised their hands as high as their chest to greet Jin-Woo, which was quite different from yesterday.

The work each of the miners did was important, so they'd wholeheartedly welcome a colleague with great skills any time. From the expressions of the Hunters of the mining team, their delight could clearly be seen.

'This is a bit... awkward.'

Jin-Woo had been subjected to poor treatment ever since becoming a rank E Hunter, so when he received such a warm welcome, he couldn't help be dazed somewhat.

Still, he didn't feel bad about their honest reactions.

"..."

Jin-Woo wordlessly lowered his head as his greeting.

"One, two, threeee...."

Foreman Bae counted the number of miners present today and jotted it down on the memo.

"Eighteen, Nineteen.... Well, it's almost everyone."

This should be more than enough. Well, it was fine for one or two to miss out on a day like today.

'Because, we have two aces in our midst now.'

Foreman Bae's gaze met those of Mok Jin-Su and Seong Jin-Woo. Bae grinned like a fool, causing Mok Jin-Su to hurriedly avert his gaze, while Seong Jin-Woo was tilting his head in confusion.

It was then.

"Excuse me, Foreman Bae."

"Argh?! You surprised me!"

Foreman Bae flinched and shuddered grandly from the voice suddenly coming from his side.

Moving around without revealing one's presence was clear evidence of one's excellent skills.

And as expected....

The one Foreman Bae's resentful gaze was directed to was the leader of today's raid team, Sohn Ki-Hoon.

"Aigoo.... My heart nearly stopped from fright just now, Sohn Hunter-nim."

“My apologies. It’s a bad habit I picked up from working in the dungeons for too long.”

Sohn Ki-Hoon grinned sheepishly.

It was then, the foreman of the retrieval team suddenly revealed himself from behind Sohn Ki-Hoon.

“An old man not acting his age...”

“What the? Even you? Why would you two be here where the mining team is?”

“What do you mean, why? We are here because we’ve got business with you, obviously.”

Foreman Bae stared at Sohn Ki-Hoon with a puzzled expression.

Meanwhile, Sohn Ki-Hoon was scanning the Hunters of the mining team as he opened his mouth.

“The thing is, our team’s porter decided to not show up today. Looks like I’ll have to borrow someone from the mining team.”

“Ehhh?”

Foreman Bae’s eyes went round in surprise.

“But, why from my team? When you got the retrieval team with lots of strong people who can carry luggage better than us....?”

As if he was waiting for that reply, the foreman of the retrieval team flew off his handle.

“My boys had to work overtime for three more hours just to finish our operation. They even missed dinner, too! But now, you want to use them as a porter, too?”

The reason why the retrieval team had to put in overtime while missing supper – because the mining team had finished their operation far too early. (TL note at the end)

‘Well, it’s true that we finished our operation which should’ve normally ended around seven in the evening, by around five o’clock all thanks to Mister Seong....’

When the foreman of the retrieval team glared daggers with veins popping up in his neck, Foreman Bae forgot what he wanted to say.

Perhaps he thought that this would be enough of an explanation, Sohn Ki-Hoon then addressed the miners.

“Is there anyone among you who wish to accompany the raid team? Once the raid is over, we will furnish you the additional hazard pay immediately.”

“.....”

Soh Ki-Hoon’s pleading eyes darted from here to there, but no one stepped forward. Either they looked down on the ground, or stared at the heavens, deliberately avoiding meeting his gaze.

That would be obvious, really.

‘I ain’t gonna risk my neck for a couple more bucks.’

‘Won’t do it, even if you beat me up....’

The highest ranked Hunter among the mining team was only a rank C. Most of them were rank Ds. Heck, they even had a rank E among them, too.

However, the place Sohn Ki-Hoon wanted to take them to was a rank A dungeon, seen as perhaps the most dangerous of the lot, realistically speaking.

The miners would still hesitate greatly even if the dungeon in question was rated B, yet it was an A!

Even a gentle graze would kill these Hunters in there. No, just stepping on the wrong spot would result in one’s death.

That dungeon was not a place where low ranked Hunters could survive.

Sure, porters only had to lug around the raid team’s gear, but still.... Compared to the job of mining, it was still far too dangerous.

“Is there... no one?”

Sohn Ki-Hoon’s expression became more and more crestfallen.

Who knew how much more time and effort he needed to waste in order to find another porter? Probably the whole morning, or even till the afternoon; or, if he was really unlucky, then the entire day might go down the drain.

‘This is going to be big trouble....’

It was at this point when his eyes met with a certain young Hunter’s.

‘...Uh?’

Unlike other Hunters, this guy was staring right back at him. It was, of course, Jin-Woo.

‘Hmm.....’

While Sohn Ki-Hoon was staring at him, Jin-Woo too was slowly scanning that man's appearance.

'Isn't he a bit sharp for a tanker?'

Common sense dictated that the leaders of raid teams were 'tankers' most of the time.

Compared to other tankers, though, Sohn Ki-Hoon was a bit on the lankier side. He was also quite tall, so, rather than a Hunter, he looked more like a basketball player more than anything else.

'.....'

Jin-Woo finally stopped looking at Sohn Ki-Hoon and his eyes drifted away.

"...Fuu-ha...."

Only then did Sohn Ki-Hoon spit out his deeply-held breaths.

What just happened?

Just now, his entire body had frozen up so much that he even forgot to breathe. He couldn't understand why.

'Am I getting too tense, since this will be my first raid as a leader and all?'

Up until now, he had participated in raids as an auxiliary tanker. That was why today's opportunity was doubly important to him. And he definitely could not afford to commit a blunder today.

Sohn Ki-Hoon was bent over and panting laboriously in order to recover, before raising himself back up again.

Murmur, murmur....

Probably because of his rather embarrassing conduct, the surroundings had gotten noisier. However, he soon realised that the cause for the disturbance was not him.

Sohn Ki-Hoon's gaze shifted back to the mining team's Hunters, only to spot a hand raised up to the sky.

Finally, someone was applying for the job. Someone he had been waiting so desperately for.

Sohn Ki-Hoon's expression brightened considerably.

When Jin-Woo took a step forward, he became the centre of the attention.

"I'll do it."

(TL: Well, I'm not sure what the mining team does has any bearing on what happens to the retrieval team, but okay. I'm just TL-ing according to what's in the raw, so don't question me.....) (ED: The only reason I can think of is it being a matter of workplace pride/appearance. Like, the mining team finished early, so the raid team was only waiting on the retrieval team, hence the overtime/meal skipping. Just my own guess, though.)

REPORT

A rank E Hunter wanted to enter an uncleared rank A dungeon!

Pure pandemonium broke out.

“Upper-rank monsters are waiting with bated breath inside, yet you wanna go in??”

“Mister Seong, what do you think you’re doing?!”

“You still have a whole life ahead of you, so why are you risking it all for a measly few extra bucks?!”

The members of the mining team surrounded Jin-Woo in no time. At the same time, Foreman Bae hurriedly explained it to Sohn Ki-Hoon.

“Aigoo. That friend only started this job yesterday so he probably raised his hand not knowing anything.”

“What’s his rank?”

“That is....”

Foreman Bae sneaked a glance towards Jin-Woo and then, spoke in a hushed voice.

“It’s E. Regardless of what else, his rank is too low, so how about going with someone else? It’ll be far too dangerous to take that friend along with you.”

Sohn Ki-Hoon’s expression became grave right away.

‘That man is only a rank E....??’

The man who locked gazes with him only a second ago - for sure, he couldn’t sense any exceptional fluctuation of magic energy coming from that man.

However, how should he put this?

A certain aura permeated from that man that... couldn’t be described in simple words, but at the same time, it also felt sharp and utterly under control.

‘He’s definitely not a rank E.’

No matter how hard Sohn Ki-Hoon looked, that man was definitely not the bottom-ranked Hunter he claimed to be. Of course, Foreman Bae had no reason to lie here but, from Sohn Ki-Hoon's perspective, his own assessment had to be correct.

'Besides all that. The rank of a porter isn't all that important, is it?'

Indeed, a porter only needed to carry luggage around well.

If the luggage carrier located at the very back of the raid team found himself in danger, then one should look at that raid as a complete failure. In a case like that, not even a rank A could guarantee his survival, so would it really matter if the porter's rank was a C or an E?

They'd die regardless, anyway.

When Sohn Ki-Hoon's thought process reached that point, he began regretting the fact that he actually wasted time worrying about it. The raid hadn't even started, yet they had wasted far too much time already.

Sohn Ki-Hoon stared at Jin-Woo and spoke.

"Nope. I'm taking him."

"Isn't it heavy?"

Sohn Ki-Hoon asked a question, and Jin-Woo simply shook his head.

"No, it's fine."

The large bag being carried on Jin-Woo's back was filled to the brim with extra sets of clothing, weapons, and defensive equipment, etc., for the raid team. Its volume was quite considerable, but honestly speaking, he didn't find it heavy at all. All thanks to his Strength Stat, of course.

'Doesn't look like he's straining himself.'

After studying Jin-Woo's expression for a bit, Sohn Ki-Hoon turned towards the Gate. Jin-Woo also shifted his gaze towards it.

A giant Gate, as big as the one from yesterday, silently floated in the air.

'Wait. Maybe this one's a little bit bigger?'

Even then, the detected amount of magic energy was supposedly less than yesterday's Gate. The raid difficulty was judged by the emitted magic energy and not the size of the Gate; that was probably the main reason why the B team was tasked with clearing this particular dungeon.

'For real... the leaking magic energy is incomparably smaller than yesterday.'

Jin-Woo could tell by standing in front of the Gate. The result of the Association's measurement didn't seem to be wrong.

But then, what was this?

Just like back when he was standing before the Red Gate, a certain creeping sense of ill omen was dawning on him.

'...I hope it's nothing.'

Meanwhile, Sohn Ki-Hoon gave out his order.

"Let's go inside."

The raid team waiting in front of the Gate began moving once more with that order. Hunters entered the dungeon one by one.

"...."

Jin-Woo stopped staring at the Gate and followed them in.

[You have entered a dungeon.]

The interior of the dungeon was rather plain.

Jin-Woo had been tense after picking up on that odd feeling, but he let off a sigh of relief after seeing the passage that was noticeably smaller than yesterday's dungeon.

'Whew.'

Thankfully, he wasn't forcibly transported to another world.

The thing was, though, the members of this team were plenty good enough to clear a Red Gate, were they to step into one.

11 rank As, and 6 rank Bs.

If it weren't the Hunters Guild but somebody else, these guys wouldn't have been assigned to a B team at all.

Jin-Woo smirked softly.

'I'm not here as a part of the raid team anyway. Let's not sweat over stuff like this.'

Yesterday and today....

If he were being honest, he only came here to have fun. And as coincidence would have it, he was now blessed with more things to spectate on today.

There was no need to stay sharp and alert all the time.

When he thought like that, he felt as if weight was lifted off his shoulders.

"You don't have to be that nervous, you know."

A female Hunter, a Healer, engaged him in conversation from his side.

Was her age around the late twenties or so?

Because his expression was stiff, it seemed that she just wanted to help alleviate some of his tension.

“You see, every single member present here, not just Ki-Hoon oppa, oops, I mean, the leader of the team, is a distinguished Hunter. Except me, that is.”

The healer lady smiled refreshingly.

From the word go, Jin-Woo wasn't scared, but after seeing the female Hunter's utterly relaxed face, he felt like a deflated balloon.

Jin-Woo grinned too, and nodded his head.

“Ah. Okay.”

The Healer formed a content expression, evidently satisfied by her efforts.

At the same time, the leader confirmed that there were no monsters near the entrance and gave the signal to advance.

“Let's move.”

Both Jin-Woo and the Healer matched the walking pace of the raid team and slowly advanced forward. They had to watch the surroundings while moving, so naturally, their rate of progress was rather slow.

“Should I help you carry some, if it's too heavy?”

The Healer glanced at Jin-Woo's luggage and asked him. Jin-Woo wordlessly pushed forward a huge bottle of water in his left hand to her.

“Kyachk?!”

The Healer tottered dangerously on her feet trying to lift that, so he quickly took the bottle back. The raid team came to an abrupt stop and glared at the Healer.

“I'm so sorry. Sorry.”

The Healer continued to bow her head here and there, offering an embarrassed apology. After that, he didn't get to hear her asking him if he needed help again. Her sharp glares were just an added bonus, really.

Jin-Woo had to swallow his cackles as he continued to walk forward, pretending to be oblivious.

It sure felt like it'd been a long time since he could laugh like this inside a dungeon.

‘Well, getting distracted even only for a second would potentially get me in a lot of trouble, after all.’

Especially recently.....

Just remembering back to the difficulty of the ‘Demon’s Castle’ and its upper floors made him shudder in his boots.

However, today was different. Participating in a raid as an outsider like this every now and then didn’t sound like such a bad idea to him.

It was then.

Jin-Woo’s steps came to a halt.

A beat later, the Hunters of the raid team also sensed the change in the surroundings.

“They are coming!”

Even before Sohn Ki-Hoon finished giving his order, the Hunters of the raid team got into their battle formation. It happened literally in the blink of an eye. Jin-Woo was inwardly impressed by that.

‘So, this is how the high-ranked Hunters raid....’

They were definitely a world apart compared to the ragtag raid teams he was used to until now. Heck, pure and bright lights were already emanating from the hands of the naive-looking female Healer.

‘Looks like I won’t even get a chance to step up here.’

On one hand, Jin-Woo felt reassured, but at the same time, he did feel a bit rueful as well.

In any case, monsters finally showed themselves.

Beasts? Canines?

Sohn Ki-Hoon’s eyes narrowed to a slit.

Tadatadatadada....

A group of monsters resembling hyenas was rushing towards the raid team. They were as big as a medium-sized car, too.

Sohn Ki-Hoon tilted his head slightly.

‘Dungeon Jackals?’

He became sure of it once they got close enough. They were indeed ‘Dungeon Jackals.’

Sohn Ki-Hoon had been standing with his shield covering his front, but then, he relaxed a bit and didn't even bother to activate his aggro-attracting skill.

And then, he simply used his shield to batter down the Dungeon Jackal aiming for his neck.

Whimper!!

“What’s this?”

“Aren’t they Dungeon Jackals?”

Other team members, deeply tense until then, began tilting their heads and straightened their hunched stances. Soon, the short death throes of the Dungeon Jackals filled the cavern’s interior.

“Whimper?!”

“Kkheng!”

“Kkhekkheng!”

The Jackal monsters were quickly taken care of.

Over a dozen Dungeon Jackals were turned into corpses in the blink of an eye. Hunters dusted their hands, still confused by what happened.

“What’s this?”

“I didn’t even have enough time to cast a magic spell before it ended.”

“Why are we fighting Dungeon Jackals inside a rank A dungeon?”

“Yeah, right. What’s happening here?”

“Wait, did the Association idiots screw up again?!”

Their voices were getting louder.

Now originally, one of the basic rules in raiding was to never make loud noises inside a dungeon. However, the appearance of the Dungeon Jackals was an event shocking enough to make them forget all about even a simple rule like that.

“Hmm....”

Sohn Ki-Hoon stared at the corpses of the Jackals and scratched the back of his head.

‘But, why are the monsters from rank C dungeons appearing here?’

Sohn Ki-Hoon scanned his surroundings, looking somewhat dumbfounded. Everyone else was forming similar facial expressions.

With the exception of one person.

Only Jin-Woo was staring at the dead Jackals with a grave expression on his face.

‘They are no normal Jackals.’

Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed. He could definitely see that the fur around the Jackal’s neck had been flattened down by something until recently. It was clear evidence of them being tied to something, somewhere.

‘Meaning, the ones that reared these monsters are somewhere else inside this dungeon....’

Monsters with intellect, in other words.

Jin-Woo recalled the White Phantoms he met back inside the Red Gate.

It was now a well-established fact that, regardless of what species it was, intelligent monsters were quite difficult to deal with.

‘Somehow... my premonition might be right after all.’

It was not a good omen, by any stretch of the imagination.

“What are you thinking about so seriously like that?”

The female Hunter peered at Jin-Woo as if to bore a hole in him, just like how he had been staring at the Jackals.

“Shh!”

Jin-Woo raised his index finger and covered his lips.

Step, step.

Step, step.

From the deeper parts of the cave, he could hear the matched footsteps getting closer.

‘The real enemies are coming.’

Jin-Woo stood back up. Other Hunters also belatedly realised something was wrong.

“Oh my god...”

“Get..... Get ready for battle!”

Sohn Ki-Hoon forcibly squeezed his voice out.

Finally, the real enemies revealed themselves from the darkness of the cave on the far side. The eyes of the Hunters grew wide from shock.

“High Orcs?!”

“What the hell? Why High Orcs?”

Many well-trained High Orc warriors now stood in rows before the Hunters’ eyes. Their number was twenty-two.

Not just any High Orcs, but they were twenty-two High Orc warriors, which meant they would be very difficult opponents to fight.

“Something... Something’s wrong.”

Someone muttered softly under his breath.

To think, right after the attack of the low-ranked monsters, they now had to battle these high-ranked monsters famed to be the toughest even among the high ranks.

The High Orcs pointed their lengthy spears at the Hunters.

‘Looks like the momentum of the Hunters and the High Orcs are about even.’

Jin-Woo quickly retreated to a corner, so he could quietly observe the unfolding situation and find the right time to step forward.

However, the female Hunter obviously didn’t share his thought process.

“You gotta keep hiding there, okay! You won’t get hurt that way.”

That kind of infuriated Jin-Woo just a wee bit. He closed his eyes shut and took several deep breaths while working hard to calm his boiling head.

Soon, the battle began.

“Kroooaar!!”

Towards the attacking High Orcs, Sohn Ki-Hoon activated his aggro skill. However, these Orcs didn’t really fall for his provocation. And soon, High Orcs and melee-type Hunters engaged in a bitter close-quarters battle.

Swiiiiish!!

Swish!

Crack!!

Blood splattered to everywhere and a scream reverberated out.

“Uwaaahk!!”

Not too long after that, magic spells fired from the mage-type Hunters slammed into the High Orcs.

Boom!! Kaboom!!

The heads of the High Orcs exploded after getting struck by the arrows of brilliant light. Unfortunately, there was no follow-up attack.

The effects of magic spells were good, but there was the distinct disadvantage of the lengthy casting time.

“Uwaaahk?!”

In a close-quarters battle, High Orcs definitely held the upper hand.

“Heal! Heal!!”

“H-hurry!”

The wounded appeared pretty quickly, and Healers were kept very busy.

“....H-Healer-nim!!”

The female Healer was also kept very busy, running here and there non-stop.

“I’m coming!! Coming!”

The female Healer knelt down next to a heavily-groaning Hunter with a missing arm. She then quickly began chanting.

Wuong....

And then, along with blinding light, the lost arm slowly grew back.

That was the light of regeneration only the Healers ranked A or above could perform.

Just as she concentrated on the injuries of her patient, a tall shadow suddenly loomed over her. The female Healer raised her head.

A High Orc, previously assumed dead, was holding an axe while breathing heavily right beside her.

“Ah....”

The female Healer’s face was drained of all colour, then. Unfortunately, there was no one who could save her nearby.

When the Orc raised its axe up high, the female Healer chose to hug her patient and shield him, instead.

“Noooo!!”

However, she couldn’t feel any pain, no matter how long she waited.

Each passing second felt like a minute or more.

The female Healer sheepishly raised her head up. And she got to witness a rather amazing sight.

“Keu.... Kuehhck....”

The Orc was actually floating in the air, its entire body trembling quite noticeably.

“But, what....?”

What was happening here?

The female Healer’s eyes opened even wider.

But then...

Snap!

The head of the High Orc was literally ripped off of its body, and then, even the part of its spine got dragged out, as well.

Now that was a display of terrifying power.

Plop.

‘.....??’

While staring at the headless body of the High Orc now on the ground, the female Hunter formed a totally confused expression.

“Uh....?!”

Because, the separated head of the High Orc was still floating in the air, that was why.

‘....Blood got splashed on my clothes.’

Jin-Woo frowned deeply and threw the head of the High Orc.

Pow!

Another High Orc was struck down rather unexpectedly by the head of its comrade and collapsed to the ground. Seeing that the victim’s neck was twisted around in a bizarre angle, it coming back to life didn’t seem very likely.

‘That makes it two.’

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze.

Currently, he was in ‘Stealth’. Both the High Orcs and the Hunters couldn’t sense his presence at all.

Jin-Woo had been sitting back quietly, waiting for a right chance to step forward, because he feared being accused of interfering in other people's raid. But then, he belatedly recalled that he had the 'Stealth' skill.

Wouldn't he be able to do whatever he wanted without running into problems with that skill?

The corners of Jin-Woo's lips arched up.

'Okay, so should I get started for real now?'

And then.

"Uwaaaah-!!"

Just in time, he spotted the leader of the raid team, Sohn Ki-Hoon, engaged in a life-or-death battle with three High Orcs.

Jin-Woo's legs moved swiftly.

Chapter 86 Fin.

REPORT

A distance not too far, but not too close, either.

Just a little push from his legs and he was instantly far above the ground; when he landed back on the solid earth, the wide back of a High Orc dominated Jin-Woo's view.

While landing on his feet, he began thinking.

'Dismantling these High Orcs would be too easy at this rate.'

But, if he did that, there was no meaning in hiding himself with Stealth. Hunters around him, including Sohn Ki-Hoon, were the elites of the Hunters Guild, often referred to as the best in South Korea.

If these High Orcs were ripped apart by some unseen force, then they would pretty soon figure out that 'Stealth' skill was involved here, as they weren't the same as the scatter-brained female Healer.

'Well, it's not like there'll be trouble from getting discovered, but....'

He was only a day away from the result of his reassignment test being made public, so he didn't want to raise any unnecessary fuss today if he could help it.

That was why he was waiting for the raid to fail completely, but.... But, the losses to the Hunters would be far too severe by then.

For example, that female Healer almost got killed just now.

That was why....

A certain light flickered in Jin-Woo's eyes.

'So, choose only those that won't get me noticed.'

He decided to go with this type of method. It took him the whole of one, maybe two seconds, to come to this decision.

Right away, both the 'Baruka's Dagger' and the 'Knight Killer' were already in his hands, summoned out of sheer reflex, even before he could consciously order them to do so.

'When did they come out?'

A smirk formed on his lips. With the sensation of gripping tight these two familiar dagger handles, his wildly-pounding heart slowly regained its calmness.

What a relief it was....

....That no one could see his expression right now, as he was still in the ‘Stealth’ state. Well, he didn’t want to be labelled as a lunatic for smiling all alone in the midst of a desperate battlefield where humans and High Orcs were performing a blood-soaked dance with each other.

Especially so with the leader of the raid team, too busy sweating buckets while being surrounded by three High orcs – he’d go mental if he saw Jin-Woo right now.

‘First of all, that one.’

Jin-Woo moved. He crouched, and the reverse-gripped dagger drew a line on the Achilles’ heel of a High Orc.

“Kuwahhack?!”

The High Orc Warrior roared out in pain as the back of its ankle was sliced open without a warning.

That was only the beginning.

As if he was dancing, his smooth, unbroken movements led him to stab the ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ into the side of his first victim; he then pulled the dagger out and proceeded to cut open the back of the knee of another High Orc.

“Keururuk!!”

“Keuhark?!”

Perhaps it was impossible to suppress the pain with the adrenaline of the battle, the High Orcs froze up when they were attacked in their weak points when least expected.

That was enough.

Just like how the opening of the sluice gate caused a flood, Sohn Ki-Hoon seized upon the opening created by the High Orcs’ fluster to start his counteroffensive.

Stab!!

“Keuru.... Kururuk....”

“Pant, pant.....”

Sohn Ki-Hoon raised his head. The long sword held out in his hands was piercing through the heart of the High Orc.

“Kuruk....”

The glaring High Orc and its trembling lips soon collapsed on its back, the whites of its eyes showing.

Thud.

Sohn Ki-Hoon clenched his fist.

‘Yes! I can do this!’

Just as Sohn Ki-Hoon was crying out inwardly in elation while still cutting down the surrounding High Orcs one by one, Jin-Woo was making himself busy by going here and there.

“Kuwahhaack?!”

“Keueueuk!”

Inside the slowed-down time, he moved about freely while avoiding being noticed, and he gradually tilted the balance towards the Hunters’ favour.

Slice!

Whenever Jin-Woo brushed past, wounds large and small appeared on the bodies of the High Orcs.

“Keuhruruk?!”

“Khuwack??”

The moment these High Orcs froze up from wounds being inflicted on them out of nowhere and lost their focus, that would be their end.

These highest-ranked Hunters didn’t fail to grasp the opportunity and continued to attack.

‘For some reason... It’s easier to fight now.’

‘What’s going on?’

‘Could we be winning against this many High Orcs without a casualty?’

Even though members of the raid team were growing rather suspicious, hope and excitement were filling up their hearts at the same time.

They were resolved to lose one or two of their own before they had entered the battle, but exceeding their own expectations, they were fighting quite well until now.

Pow!!

A mace swung by one of the Hunters cracked open the head of a High Orc Warrior. It was then, Jin-Woo got to hear a rather welcoming message.

[Level up!]

‘Oh.’

Indeed, there was a reward for him going around and spending his energy. His level had actually gone up.

It seemed that him not actually killing the enemy outright or wounding them critically still netted him some experience points.

‘And I did kill two of them with my own hands, too.’

He then ‘aided’ in killing more than 13.

Unless he was earning no experience points whatsoever, his level rising up did make sense. Even more excited than before, Jin-Woo’s movement became a lot faster than before.

Slice!

Stab!

“Kuwaaaahck?!”

Thanks to Jin-Woo’s timely and sneaky manoeuvres, this battle was rapidly coming to a close.

‘Fuu-!’

Jin-Woo took a step back and stored his two daggers in his Inventory, before having a quick look around himself.

‘Well, with this much....’

The current situation seemed to be more or less settled now. And as an added bonus, he even levelled up once, too.

Jin-Woo’s gaze drifted lower. Around twenty or so corpses of High Orcs were discarded haphazardly on the ground.

‘Well, if I hunted these down by myself, I’d have gone up more than a single level, though.’

Too bad, this here was a dungeon that the Hunters Guild paid a handsome sum for the exclusive right to hunt. This would have to be as far as he could go.

‘Good.’

With a satisfied expression on his face, Jin-Woo returned to the dark corner of the dungeon, a place where a porter such as himself should be hiding in the first place.

“Kroooooar!!”

Having their positions reversed, and now being surrounded by the Hunters instead, the last High Orc Warrior cried out at the top of its lungs. Its scream rang around the interior of the cave rather noisily.

While looking at the fall of that High Orc, Jin-Woo undid his Stealth.

Shururu.

Meanwhile, Hunters were panting heavily. They hurriedly scanned the vicinity, but no matter how hard they looked, there were no more High Orcs standing.

“Did we... did we win?!”

“We won?!”

“Hold on.”

Just before everyone could revel in the sensation of victory, their leader Sohn Ki-Hoon confirmed the status of the injured first.

“Anyone hurt? Does anyone need healing?”

The truth was, there wouldn't be that many injured in a raid team with a high-ranking Healer as one of the members. As long as that person was still breathing, any exterior wounds could be treated right away.

So, Sohn Ki-Hoon wasn't asking about the conditions of the potential injured. No, he was actually asking if anyone had died in a roundabout way.

When his gaze met the female Healer's, she shook her head. There were a few injured, but no deceased. And better yet, she had finished healing all of the injured just now.

“In that case.....”

With that, ecstasy filled the faces of the members of the raid team.

“We won!!”

“We did it!!”

“Waaaaah!!”

Hunters hugged each other and celebrated. Jin-Woo crossed his arms and with a gentle smile on his face, watched the jubilant Hunters.

‘Were these high Orcs supposed to be tough, though?’

From his perspective, well....

Since he didn't have any prior experience in raiding high-ranking dungeons, Jin-Woo couldn't really 'get' this loud celebration of the raid team.

Jin-Woo had no idea....

....That, when planning the raid of a dungeon ranked A or B, Hunters not only took into consideration of its ranking, but they even minutely calculated the emitted magic energy before attempting to clear it.

High Orcs were considered to be a higher tier monster within the rank A dungeons. Not only were they not 'normal' High Orcs but High Orc warriors instead, and there were 20 of them to boot....

The current result was far closer to being a miracle than anything else, really.

The main protagonist of that miracle, Jin-Woo, didn't even know the actual worth of his own actions and simply stood there, quietly congratulating the victory of the raid team.

'...Mm?'

In the midst of that, the female Healer approached Sohn Ki-Hoon with a determined face. That was a look of someone wishing to say something important. Jin-Woo focused his hearing in that direction.

"Excuse me, Ki-Hoon oppa?"

"Yeah?"

"When you were fighting against the High Orcs...."

The female Healer cautiously described what she saw in minute detail.

And that would be – the High Orc suddenly floated up in the air, and proceeded to rip its own head off before killing another Orc with its severed head.

She carried a dead-serious face, too.

"....."

Sohn Ki-Hoon was left utterly speechless.

"I'm telling you the truth!!"

As the female Healer and her reddened face protested the injustice of it all, Jin-Woo could barely suppress his giggles.

They basked in the aftermaths of victory for only a little bit longer. The Hunters soon gathered around their leader Sohn Ki-Hoon one by one.

“Captain, will we continue on?”

“Isn’t this going to be too dangerous? We aren’t even that far from the entrance, yet we ran into a whole bunch of High Orcs already.”

“How about a strategic retreat?”

Sohn Ki-Hoon cast his gaze over to the deeper part of the cave, his mouth closed tight.

‘It won’t be easy.’

Jin-Woo could sympathise with Sohn Ki-Hoon a little bit here.

While working for the Hunters Guild that boasted two rank S Hunters in its ranks, today’s raid might be the one and only time Sohn Ki-Hoon would get to lead a raid team.

And to think, he’d have to retreat so quickly in his very first hunt as a leader....

‘Anyone in his shoes would be tempted to push forward and clear this place.’

However, if you were a smart, wise leader, then....

As if he had made his mind up, Sohn Ki-Hoon’s lips quivered slightly. Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed to a slit.

Fortunately, as it turned out, Sohn Ki-Hoon wasn’t a fool.

“For the time being, let’s retreat.”

The leader’s choice was absolute inside the dungeon. The unspoken rule said that as long as one was a part of the raid team, one had to absolutely follow the commands of the leader.

One used to say that, before in war, insubordinate soldiers were executed right away, didn’t they?

In a certain way, dungeons were a far more dangerous place than any warzone out there. And so, the question of the team’s survival or annihilation depended on who the leader was. Thankfully, Sohn Ki-Hoon didn’t disappoint his team members.

After hearing his order to retreat, everyone lightly patted their chest.

“Whew-woo....”

“I was really worried that Sohn hyung would insist on going till the end, you know.”

Sohn Ki-Hoon grinned and slapped the person who said that on the shoulder.

“I’m not a blind idiot like that.”

“I know that. But, look here, hyung. Look at my shaking hands.”

Jin-Woo picked up the luggage and placed it on his back.

Along with Sohn Ki-Hoon’s orders, the raid team began moving again, although their direction had reversed.

Jin-Woo smiled wryly.

‘And here I am, hoping to go in a little bit deeper.’

Regardless of what happened, he was nothing more than a guest.

And as a guest, he had no right to run his mouth on this and that about the decision of the house owner, now did he?

It was indeed a bit regretful, but it’d have to end here today.

“Argh.....”

The female Healer must’ve found the leader not believing her word a bit cold-hearted, because she continued to grumble as she got right next to Jin-Woo.

“But, it really happened, though....”

With a big pout on her face, she then stared at Jin-Woo, a single strand of hope still persisting in her heart.

“Excuse me, by any chance, did you see that High....”

“I didn’t see anything.”

“Hiinnng.....”

Her hope had been cruelly shot down just then.

Jin-Woo had to work very hard to make sure that she didn’t notice him sniggering to himself.

However, not long after they began retreating...

The front of the group suddenly came to a halt.

Sohn Ki-Hoon raised his right hand.

“E-everyone, stop!”

There was confusion evident in his voice.

The fatigued Hunters walking cautiously forward came to a stop, and so did Jin-Woo as well; he had been keeping an eye towards the rear in case the monsters decided to chase after them.

Rustle, rustle....

The voices of the Hunters rose up higher.

“What the hell is the meaning of this?!”

“What is going on!”

“Why is the path blocked?! Wasn’t it fine when we entered earlier?”

Jin-Woo walked past the noisy Hunters and got to the front, before reaching out with his hand. And his eyes widened as well.

The path had been blocked off by an invisible barrier.

He immediately recalled the instant dungeons. More specifically, the wall that demarcated the border between the instant dungeon and reality. But, he soon shook his head.

‘No, this is different from that.’

He could detect a certain sense of ‘artificiality’ from this invisible wall. Seeing that there was a trace of magic energy mixed in, this barrier must’ve been the result of a magic spell cast by a monster with high intelligence.

‘But, why?’

Why block the path going out, and not going in?

It was then – Jin-Woo’s head swivelled to his rear.

‘.....?’

As if it was waiting for this moment, horrendously powerful magic energy waves crashed into the group like a tsunami from the far end of the cavern.

‘How could this be....?’

This was from the boss of this dungeon?

The scale of the magic energy emission inside the dungeon was on another realm altogether compared to the one felt outside the Gate.

Other Hunters also must’ve sensed that absurd amount of magic energy by now, because they began shivering as well.

“W-what the hell??”

“Why am I getting goosebumps, all of a sudden?!”

Watching the complexions of the Hunters get paler by the second, Jin-Woo came up with a theory.

‘If, let’s say that there is a boss that can hide its presence, then....’

The wall that wasn’t there when they entered. And the boss that bared its fangs only after the barrier had been erected.

‘No way.... Did it lay a trap and wait for Hunters to enter the dungeon?’

When thinking like that, a chill ran down Jin-Woo’s back.

And sure enough....

....From beyond the darkness of the dungeon’s interior, the countless sounds of footsteps, far greater than before, reverberated loudly.

REPORT

What happened next was a bit of a strange phenomenon.

As the footsteps from the other side of the cavern grew louder and closer, the Hunters were making less and less sound.

“Sohn hyung....”

“....”

Soon, choking silence enveloped the group.

Jin-Woo’s ears were perked up, though – seizing upon the opening created by his surroundings getting quieter, Jin-Woo began counting the numbers of the enemies via their footsteps.

Step, step.

Thud, thud.

Thanks to his already-enhanced hearing, as well as high Perception Stat, he could separate out each of the footsteps to their original owners.

‘...48, 49, 50, 51.’

There were a total of 51 different footsteps. The steps themselves sounded the same as those of the High Orc warriors.

Jin-Woo took a look around him.

‘.....’

The nervous tension was clearly writ large on the faces of the Hunters. It seemed to him that they also had more or less figured out the size of the enemy from the resounding footsteps.

This raid team managed to eke out a victory against 22 High Orc warriors. But now, 51 of them were coming. That was over twice as many.

‘...There is no hope of victory here.’

The raid team members were thinking of roughly the same opinion.

Jin-Woo suddenly cast his glance down at his shadow. He momentarily thought that it was wavering ever so slightly just then.

Wuuuuu....

He even thought that his shadow soldiers were howling out, their desire to see blood intensifying. Jin-Woo raised his head back up again.

Thump, thump, thump!

His calm heart that stayed still until now began pounding harder.

‘Wait for it...’

...Now wasn't the right time yet.

Consoling himself as thus, Jin-Woo silently observed the front.

Eventually, the monsters revealed themselves. The countless marching High Orcs came to a halt just a little bit of distance away from the Hunters.

“Kurururu.”

“Kuruk.”

High Orcs growled as if they'd pounce at any given moment. No words could adequately describe the bloodthirsty aura emitted from over 50 High Orc warriors. The result of a battle was pretty obvious even without actually fighting them.

“This is crazy.”

“How can this nonsensical crap be....”

“Euh....”

Hunters spat out long groans. They continued to retreat ever so slightly after feeling the enormous pressure, but too bad, their path was still blocked off.

So, what would they do now?

The Hunters were all ready for battle from a while ago, but no one stepped forward yet and simply waited for Sohn Ki-Hoon's instructions.

Sohn Ki-Hoon's lips were shut tight in a straight line.

‘God d*mn it...’

If only either Chairman Choi Jong-In or Hunter Cha Hae-In were here....

Sohn Ki-Hoon's expression crumpled unsightly.

Rank S Hunters all possessed incredible powers that could overturn any unfavourable situation. If either one of those two were here, these High Orcs would've been nothing at all.

‘Just why, in a situation like this....’

Why weren't they here?

Sohn Ki-Hoon had fought alongside them all the time, so he could acutely sense his powerlessness right about now. The absence of a single rank S was a bone-chillingly painful thing, indeed.

Unfortunately, he couldn't continue to lament his misfortune forever. No, he had to make a decision here.

‘Fighting here will definitely result in our death.’

However, with their path of retreat blocked off, he no longer had any choice in the matter.

The day he chose to become a Hunter, the day he stepped foot inside a dungeon for the first time ever, and the day he lost consciousness for the first time after getting heavily injured....

Didn't he already guess that a day like today would come sooner or later?

‘Right. That did happen, didn't it?’

Having resolved himself to meet his maker, Sohn Ki-Hoon unsheathed his longsword.

Shurururung....

Sohn Ki-Hoon took a look at his comrades, and the Hunters nodded their heads as if they had been waiting for the signal. Sohn Ki-Hoon's gaze shifted back to his front.

He then brought the shield right up till his chin and glared at the High Orcs, still not showing any signs of movements yet.

‘So, did he finally make his choice, then?’

Jin-Woo also got ready. He hid his right hand behind his back, and the 'Baruka's Dagger' appeared there. He then closed his eyes.

His wildly beating heart suddenly settled down completely as the battle drew near.

Thump, thump, thump....

Get rid of distracting thoughts, and control his breathing.

‘.....Okay.’

When Jin-Woo reopened his eyes, a sharp gleaming light was now burning fiercely within them.

Gulp.

Hunters forcibly swallowed down their dried saliva; cold sweat soaked their foreheads. On the other hand, Jin-Woo was busy smacking his lips.

‘How much experience points will these guys give me?’

A thin smile of anticipation spread on his lips.

However, before anything could happen....

...One of the High Orcs stepped forward.

It roughly shoved aside other Orcs and emerged from the group, its wild beast-like eyes looking in the direction of the Hunters.

“Growl....”

This one possessed a far bigger physique than the others, and its fangs were noticeably longer as well.

‘So, is that the leader?’

Jin-Woo narrowed his eyes.

If he got rid of that guy now, wouldn't the fight become so much easier?

What should he do here, then?

Jin-Woo fiddled with the grip of the 'Baruka's Dagger' and pondered; meanwhile, that High Orc opened its mouth.

“Kurerack tu sheena, wekudo araknaka.”

The creature's voice sure sounded loud. The glare of the High Orc was fixed to the leader of the raid team, Sohn Ki-Hoon.

“Kurerack tu sheena, wekudo araknaka!!”

Rustle, rustle....

Hunters' gazes busily darted about.

“What the hell?”

“Is that thing trying to talk to us?”

“What is it saying?”

It was then.

The facial muscles of the High Orc began trembling. When that strange tremor subsided, a completely different voice from before came out from the monster's mouth.

“Humans.....”

It was as if something else had borrowed the monster’s mouth to speak.

“Oh, humans....”

When looking at closer, that normal-looking Orc’s eyes were now unfocused and blurry like those of a dead fish that died a long time ago.

“Heok!”

Hunters began freaking out as if the back of their heads were smacked out of nowhere.

An Orc just spoke a language of humans!

‘How can an Orc speak Korean?!’

‘Is this magic? Could it be??’

Hunters couldn’t keep their mouths shut at this utterly unexpected situation. The ‘leader’ High Orc continued to speak.

“I am.... Karugalgan..... I.... want.... to.... meet.... humans.... Follow... this.... one.”

A monster wished to speak to humans?

There never had been any reports of such a case before.

Facing this unprecedented event, not only Sohn Ki-Hoon but everyone in the raid team fell into a state of pure confusion.

“Ki-Hoon hyung, I hope you ain’t listening to the words of a monster.”

“Please, you gotta ignore it.”

“Ki-Hoon-ah, it’s a trap. Regardless what happens, we gotta try to finish it here.”

“But, still. If it’s an Orc we can talk to, maybe we can....”

“Don’t be an idiot. You’ve been inside so many dungeons already, so don’t you know how they operate by now?”

In less than a second, their opinions had split up.

Sohn Ki-Hoon maintained his silence for a while, before answering the monster’s words.

“....Karugalgan. Did you block the cavern?”

“That’s right..... I am.... the proud.... High Shaman.... of the Orcs.... My spells.... can’t be.... broken.... by the strength of.... humans.”

“Is there anyone stronger than you inside this cave?”

“Who.... dares to.... oppose.... me!!”

An incredibly loud roar exploded out from the High Orc and slammed into the eardrums of the Hunters. Almost everyone frowned deeply and covered their ears, but Sohn Ki-Hoon was simply nodding his head, still looking rather calm.

His expectation was on the money.

The existence speaking through that High Orc’s mouth was, without a doubt, the boss of this dungeon. Since it couldn’t escape from the boss room until the time of the dungeon break, it was summoning the Hunters to enter its lair instead.

‘I don’t know why it wants us there, but....’

When Sohn Ki-Hoon’s answer didn’t come right away, the leader High Orc raised its large axe above its head.

“Now, choose.... Die here..... at the.... hands... of my soldiers.... Or.... follow... my... soldiers....”

“We’ll follow.”

Sohn Ki-Hoon’s immediate answer prompted the eyes of the Hunters to grow wider.

“Ki-Hoon hyung!!”

“Mister Ki-Hoon!”

Sohn Ki-Hoon interrupted his comrades trying to dissuade him and waited for the reaction of the High Orc.

“Then, come.... Human.”

With the end of those words, the blurred eyes of the leader High Orc regained its original clarity. And that would be wild beast-like glare of bloodlust. The creature spoke up again.

“Ashue tu reka.”

With that one sentence, the High Orc warriors burning with fierce hostility withdrew as if it was all a lie. The leader High Orc waited without withdrawing, and beckoned to Sohn Ki-Hoon, telling him to follow.

“Let’s get going as well.”

Sohn Ki-Hoon was the first to start walking, and the hesitant Hunters began to follow after him one after the other.

‘What is he thinking?’

Jin-Woo stared with a puzzled expression on his face.

There was little doubt that not only the boss but countless more High Orcs would be waiting for them inside the boss room. Meaning, their odds of victory would be even lower on that side.

So, it was hard to figure out what Sohn Ki-Hoon was thinking of when he chose to follow the monsters.

‘Is he trying to negotiate with the boss? In order to get out of here alive?’

Although the odds of that succeeding was extremely low....

No.

Maybe, this was for the better.

Jin-Woo originally believed that this raid would end with him hunting down a few mob creatures, but now, he got himself a chance to meet the boss, instead. He returned the dagger back to his Inventory and slowly followed after the group.

Just how long did they walk?

Sohn Ki-Hoon slowed down his walking speed gradually and had arrived at Jin-Woo’s side. And then, he called out with a hushed voice.

“Hunter-nim.”

Jin-Woo continued looking at the front while answering him. Sohn Ki-Hoon, too, continued to stare at the backs of the High Orcs walking further up ahead.

“We... as soon as we meet the boss, we’re going to attack right away. When that happens, regardless of whether our attack was successful or not, the b*stard should not be able to maintain the magic spell blocking the exit.”

That made a certain amount of sense.

Unless it was some kind of hex-type magic, one had to keep one’s focus in order to maintain a spell. Especially if one wanted to maintain high-class magic, an incredible mental focus was a necessity.

However, what about it?

Didn’t matter whether they succeed in killing the boss or managed to cancel the magic blocking the exit, they would still meet a dog’s death right away inside the boss room after getting surrounded by the countless High Orcs anyway.

The odds of this raid team returning alive were still pathetically low.

Perhaps to answer Jin-Woo's curiosity, Sohn Ki-Hoon spoke with a grave expression on his face.

“While their attention is on us, Hunter-nim, please escape from the boss room. Once you get out of the dungeon, you must alert the main assault force.”

By the time the assault team consisting of rank S Hunters arrive here, everything would be over for them. Sohn Ki-Hoon was getting ready to die.

“Are you thinking of dying alongside the boss?”

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance at Sohn Ki-Hoon's expression. His face remained hardened, but there was no wavering in his eyes.

“Our job isn't to get out of this dungeon alive, but to close the Gates. Many people outside are paying us a great deal of money for that purpose.”

Sohn Ki-Hoon's voice gained more conviction as he spoke.

“We will do our job according to what we've been training for. However, you're different. There's no reason for you to die here. I hope you can get out of this place alive.”

One could now hear the unwavering belief in his voice. His words contained his determination.

Jin-Woo realised that nothing he could say right now would be of any help to Sohn Ki-Hoon.

So, he simply nodded his head as his reply.

Cha Hae-In finally arrived at the location of the second rank A Gate.

She had her baseball cap pushed down low, and as a result, only a few passersby recognised her.

The first thing she did was to seek out the mining team.

A few Hunters walked past her and sneaked a couple of glances, but they were all working for the Guild anyway and none of them paid her any great attention after that.

Eventually, she could see Foreman Bae in the distance – as well as the mining team around him.

Thump, thump!

Her heart began beating faster.

Standing a little bit of distance away from them, she scanned the faces of each miner present.

‘Where is he...?’

She couldn’t see Jin-Woo among them.

How should she say this? It felt like all of her energy was abandoning her at once.

‘Did he give up on being a miner?’

Why don’t I wait for another minute? He could have left the spot for only a moment and is coming back soon.

Three minutes more.

No, maybe five.

....And so, she waited for another 15 minutes, but Jin-Woo didn’t show up in the end.

“Fuu....”

After spitting out a long sigh, Cha Hae-In turned around to leave. But, only after taking a couple of steps, she turned around again and returned to her original spot.

She yanked her cap off and took in several deep breaths, before walking towards Foreman Bae. The gazes of the mining team members were directed to her now.

Thankfully, the stink wasn’t so bad, perhaps due to the ranks of Hunters in the mining team being low.

“Uh? Uhhh?”

Recognising Cha Hae-In, Foreman Bae quickly ran over to her.

“Cha Hunter-nim? I thought you were taking a break today?”

“Hello there.”

Cha Hae-In shared a simple greeting with Foreman Bae and after making sure that no one was eavesdropping on her, she cautiously asked him a question.

“By any chance... Is there a Hunter named Seong Jin-Woo working for you?”

“Mister Seong?”

Hearing an unexpected name being mentioned out of the blue, Foreman Bae formed a surprised expression.

“If you’re looking for Mister Seong, he subbed for a porter’s job...”

“A porter?!”

Cha Hae-In gasped out in shock.

“Are you saying he actually went inside the Gate?!”

Foreman Bae nodded his head vigorously as if to show that he, too, couldn’t believe it.

“Yes, miss. That’s what happened.”

A rank E Hunter volunteered as a porter and entered a rank A dungeon? And he didn’t even have dozens of lives or anything, too.

‘What was he thinking?’

But, when Cha Hae-In thought about it, didn’t she find that man loitering around the boss room yesterday with weapons in his hands? Indeed, she did not see wrong back then.

One more thing to be suspicious of, then.

Even though she ended up letting go of yesterday’s event as a coincidence, when she really thought about it in detail, it was a rather strange thing for a Hunter with four years of experience getting lost inside a dungeon like that.

‘I need to find out.’

She began thinking that she simply had to confirm what this Hunter named Seong Jin-Woo wanted from her Hunters Guild. And in order to do so, she had to enter the dungeon.

Not only was she the Vice Chairman of the Hunters Guild, but she was also a rank S Hunter as well. No one would try to stop her if she wanted to enter a dungeon where the Hunters Guild was performing a raid.

Cha Hae-In lightly bit into her thumb while pondering her choices, before swiftly making her decision.

“I’ll have to enter the Gate myself.”

REPORT

Foreman Bae's eyes went extra-round.

“Heok....? Was there some kind of an accident? Should we ask the Guild for additional personnel?”

“No, no need. It's a personal matter. I just wanted to talk to him about something private, so you don't have to worry.”

“Oh... I see.”

Cha Hae-In spun towards the Gate.

However, her side felt rather empty, then.

‘Ah. My weapon.....’

She felt around her waist, only to belatedly remember that she had left her sword back home. Since she never imagined that she'd be entering a dungeon on her off day like this, well.....

Cha Hae-In's forehead beautifully creased up.

‘As a leader, Mister Ki-Hoon is someone totally trustworthy, and the rest of the team are made up of capable Hunters. But....’

But, it was still unimaginable to enter a dungeon without a weapon in hand. A short deliberation later, she turned around to face Foreman Bae once more.

“Is there something else, Miss....?”

Foreman Bae looked at her with confused eyes.

“Mister Foreman, can I borrow a weapon from you?”

“Pardon me?”

Foreman Bae hesitated somewhat, before calling out to a Hunter passing by.

“Hey, over here, Mister Seok. Please bring me one of our equipments.”

“Yes, boss.”

The 'equipment' Mister Seok rapidly brought over was a pickaxe, as used by the mining team.

“.....”

Cha Hae-In’s expression stiffened.

“Excuse me.... Don’t you have anything else?”

“Uhm, such as....?”

“For instance, swords or spears.”

“But, if you ask us for such things, well.....”

“..”

Cha Hae-In sighed out under her breath.

“I understand.”

She then carefully rejected the pickaxe Foreman Bae tried to hand over and quickly walked towards the Gate. He anxiously asked her as he watched her distancing back.

“Cha Hunter-nim, will it be fine for you to be empty-handed in there?”

Cha Hae-In came to an abrupt halt and stood there for a moment, before hurriedly walking back to take the pickaxe from Foreman Bae. He guffawed out in a genial manner.

“I think that’s for the best, miss. I mean, it’ll be dangerous to be weaponless inside a dungeon, regardless of what.”

“Well, then....”

As she turned around to hurriedly leave, Foreman Bae unluckily didn’t get to see her ears dyed in deep shades of crimson.

The looks of determination were clearly visible on the faces of the raid team members. They kept their mouths resolutely shut as if to imply that they knew their fate already. Meanwhile, the female Healer approached Jin-Woo and began rummaging through the luggage.

Jin-Woo turned his head towards her and asked.

“What are you doing?”

“Hold on.”

What she took out was a small ladies handbag.

“I kinda feel a bit uncomfortable if I’m too far away from my bag, you see.”

He didn’t even ask her, yet she provided him with an explanation oh-so-kindly. She took out a memo pad and a pen from the bag and then began jotting something down on said memo pad.

Because she wasn't looking in front of her, she kept bumping into Jin-Woo's shoulder with her head.

Eventually, though – she closed the memo pad.

Her bag, which she slung around her shoulder while writing on the memo, was pushed back inside the luggage again, but that memo remained in her hands.

Jin-Woo observed her with a bit of interest, wondering what she'd do with that, but she simply pushed the memo towards him, instead.

“.....?”

After taking it, Jin-Woo tilted his head, prompting the female Healer to tearfully spoke up.

“I wrote down what I wanted to say to my family. When you get outside, please make sure that they get it. Please.”

If he burst out in laughter, she'd probably get hurt, no? Jin-Woo suppressed his rising laughter and pocketed the memo.

“I'll hold onto this for the time being, but I'm pretty sure I won't get to deliver this.”

“It's going to be fine.”

The female Healer nodded her head.

‘With High Orc warriors zealously keeping tabs on us like this, it won't be easy for him to get out of here unscathed.’

After all, Mister Porter was only a rank E. She hadn't figured out yet what Jin-Woo meant, though.

Soon, their eyes caught the sight of the boss room. The anxiety felt by the Hunters came over the air and could be felt on his skin.

They were greeted by a huge open space.

‘.....’

Jin-Woo scanned the boss room. It was smaller than yesterday's boss room with the giant in it.

However, quite unlike yesterday, he didn't get the impression that the boss room was huge at all. And that would be all thanks to countless High Orcs completely filling up the chamber.

As a matter of fact, there were over twice as many Orcs here as those that ‘escorted’ the raid team.

‘At least a hundred... no, maybe it’s a bit more than that?’

While there were no monsters inside the rest of the dungeon, they had been gathered inside the boss room, instead.

Seeing the masses of High Orcs waiting inside, Sohn Ki-Hoon’s complexion paled in an instant.

‘If this many High Orcs manage to escape from the Gate, then....’

This was a large enough horde to utterly destroy a small city, even before the top Hunters had the chance to do something about them.

Cold sweat trickled down his backside.

‘At the very least, we gotta eliminate the boss.’

Just like how he resolutely swallowed the dry saliva, he did his best to keep his determination burning in his heart.

The High Orcs of the boss room parted to make way.

“Ah sharkh.”

The leader High Orc beckoned again. The raid team and the escorting High Orcs walked over to an altar located in the corner of the boss room.

“Over there!”

One of the Hunters pointed towards the top of the altar.

And that’s where the High Orc Shaman stood, dressed in all manner of accessories adorning its entire body, including a mask, bone necklace, and earrings.

‘So, that’s the boss....’

Sohn Ki-Hoon’s expression hardened.

He immediately realised that the terrifying magic energy filling up the interior of this dungeon was being emitted from that creature. And then, surrounding that b*stard was....

From the four ‘guards’ possessing an air of alertness standing around the boss, he also sensed a rather ominous aura as well.

‘This isn’t good.’

Could the raid team get past those guards and kill the Shaman in one fell swoop? The Hunters were all thinking roughly the same thing.

The Hunters stopped in front of the Shaman.

A certain intangible tension flowed in between the High Orcs surrounding the human Hunters as they kept a certain distance away.

“Kekeke.”

However, the Shaman didn't seem to care about the mood of the place; it simply opened its rather malformed jaw, visible below the mask, and cackled out.

“Oh humans, welcome.”

The Hunters of the raid team exchanged glances.

‘As soon as Sohn hyung gives us the signal....’

‘We attack together.’

‘Aim for the Shaman, no matter what.’

It was for the purpose of coordinating their attacks.

However....

Suddenly, the air around them began freezing up.

Hunters of this raid team were some of the very best out there. They all shifted their gazes at the same time at this sudden outpouring of chilling aura. The source was the Shaman.

The creature finally took the mask off. When it did, the magic energy it had been hiding until then exploded forth, unchecked and unhindered.

Rumble-!!

The freakish magic power spread out in circular waves with the boss as the centre.

As if they were normal, powerless civilians that ran into a lion or a tiger, the Hunters froze up on the spot like a bunch of statues.

“O-oh my god....”

“How can a magic power of such magnitude be....?”

“We, we gotta fight against something like this?!”

Despair, lamentation, resentment, even regret. The Shaman formed an ominous grin when facing these varying forms of hopelessness.

“Are you scared of me, humans?”

Sohn Ki-Hoon bit down on his lower lip, hard, and took a difficult step forward before asking a question.

“Why did you summon us here? Your warriors would’ve been enough to kill us back there.”

The Shaman grinned again. Simply looking at the grin chilled the backs of the Hunters.

“What?”

Sohn Ki-Hoon was left utterly speechless.

Were they brought here just for that purpose?

The Shaman continued on.

“While we wait out the remaining time, I will kill you one by one and entertain the soldiers!”

Waaaaaah-!!

High Orc warriors all roared out in frenzy and excitement.

Hunters were ruthlessly forced down by the enormous pressure emitted from the Orcs and couldn’t even breathe properly. One of them even began crying, no less.

“However....”

The Shaman briefly stopped talking, then.

The boss’s gaze shifted and stopped at the rear of the human’s group – where Jin-Woo was.

“....I see that a strange being is mixed among you, humans.”

It was then, Sohn Ki-Hoon’s eyes gleamed dangerously.

‘With the Shaman looking elsewhere, this is my chance!’

Veins bulged in his neck.

“Now!!”

Sohn Ki-Hoon roared out at the top of his lungs, unsheathed his sword, and rushed out. However, it was eerily quiet behind him.

‘How come....?’

He glanced behind him while running, and discovered his comrades rooted to their spots, not daring to move an inch. They had lost their fighting spirit a long time ago from the display of the boss’s overwhelming might.

Sohn Ki-Hoon's heart fell to the pit of his stomach.

'Ah....'

Still, someone had to do this. He couldn't stop now.

His gaze shifted back to the front.

Perhaps his attack wasn't expected, the Shaman was still smiling, and its guards weren't showing any urgent reactions, either.

This could be his one and only chance.

Didn't matter if it was pure luck. He'd accept fluke, too. As long as his sword could reach....

Sohn Ki-Hoon fiercely rushed forward and cocked his sword behind him.

"Euhwaaaaah-!!"

But, even before he could swing the sword with all his might, he collided with something invisible and was flung away.

Boom!!

At first, it was shield magic.

"Keok!"

Flung away from the rebound, Sohn Ki-Hoon landed on the ground and rolled backwards. But, that lasted only for a short while.

"Looks like we have our first volunteer."

Along with the Shaman's mocking words, Sohn Ki-Hoon's body was lifted up into the air.

Wuuuooooo...

And now, it was the anti-gravity magic.

"...."

The lips of the Shaman were moving up and down non-stop. When Sohn Ki-Hoon was lifted up as high as a two-story building, the Shaman began chanting a different spell.

"....."

to come was gravity acceleration.

Kaboom!!!!

Sohn Ki-Hoon was slammed into the ground.

“Keo-heok!”

He didn't even have the time to writhe in pain as he was lifted up in the air again.

“Anti-gravity.”

Kekeke....

Not only the Shaman, but the rest of the High Orcs were cackling in derision as well, their fangs fully bared now.

Kaboom!!

“Keo-heok!!”

Wuuooong....

Boom!!

“Keok!”

The Shaman continued to toy with Sohn Ki-Hoon by lifting him up and slamming him down.

When he landed on the ground for the fourth time, Sohn Ki-Hoon vomited out a mouthful of blood. Seeing that scene, the complexions of the Hunters got paler and paler. However, none of them dared to step forward to stop this.

“Ki-Ki-Hoon hyung....”

They simply stood there trembling while witnessing Sohn Ki-Hoon being broken into pieces.

Plop.

The female Healer collapsed on the floor as if she no longer had any strength left in her legs.

Eventually....

The Shaman raised Sohn Ki-Hoon in the air for the fifth time.

“You sure are a tenacious b*stard, aren't you?”

“Euh, euh.....”

A pained moan leaked out of Sohn Ki-Hoon's mouth. However, he still didn't let go of the sword as if he hadn't given up yet.

Wuuooong!

Slam!

Wuuuonng!

Slam!!

Wuuuonng!

As he was thrown up and down between the air and ground several times more, Sohn Ki-Hoon finally lost his grip on the sword.

Clang....

It happened then.

Just as Sohn Ki-Hoon was thrown down to the ground once more, he vanished from the view.

“Ng??”

The Shaman’s eyes opened wider.

Where did the human disappear to, when all of his bones should be broken by now? The Shaman searched for the whereabouts of Sohn Ki-Hoon.

‘There....?’

In a corner not too far, it discovered Sohn Ki-Hoon, unmoving on the ground. And at the same time, found a certain man crouching nearby.

Of course, it was Jin-Woo.

Jin-Woo carefully laid Sohn Ki-Hoon down and glared at the Shaman.

“Hey, mister leader. I want to ask you something.”

“.....?”

Until now, Sohn Ki-Hoon hadn’t figured out what happened to him.

“Will it be okay if I kill all of the monsters in here?”

“You... What are you....?”

The Shaman frowned and gestured with its chin, and one of the guards swung about its scimitar and ran to where Jin-Woo was.

As Jin-Woo glared at the monster rushing towards him, a light of fury lit up in his eyes. He reached out with his hands.

‘Ruler’s Reach.’

When he did, it was as if a giant, invisible hand grabbed the Orc guard, and the monster was cleanly picked up from the ground.

“Ku, kurua?!”

The monster kicked and struggled in the air.

‘What....?!’

The eyes of the Shaman opened wider.

Jin-Woo pointed down towards the ground.

Slam!!

The guard crashed down to the ground. The impact force was so great that deep cracks spread out on the ground. However, Jin-Woo didn't stop there; just like how the Shaman manipulated Sohn Ki-Hoon's body, he lifted the guard up in the air again.

Slam!!

Boom!!

Kaboom!!

Like a basketball bouncing between the ground and one's hand, the Orc guard continuously slammed into the ceiling and the ground non-stop, a helpless cry coming out from its mouth. Eventually, its head pierced into the ceiling.

Kaboom!!

Scatter....

With that, debris from the ceiling fell down.

While staring at the dangling Orc guard with its head buried deep into the ceiling, both groups of the High Orcs and the Hunters couldn't hide their astonishment.

Sohn Ki-Hoon trembled and questioned Jin-Woo.

“You... Just what is your....?”

“I'll ask you again.”

This here was a hunting ground the Hunters Guild paid for. And there was only one person present that could speak for the Guild at the moment.

Jin-Woo asked for the last time.

“Monsters in this place.... Can I have them all?”

What was this?

Sohn Ki-Hoon realised now that the identity of the porter or whatever didn't matter anymore. No, he was just p*ssed off. He was angry at himself for being toyed around with by the monsters like that. Tears rolled down Sohn Ki-Hoon's face.

“Please.... I beg of you, do something....”

With that, it was done.

When Jin-Woo stood back up, High Orcs approached him. The Shaman was behind them. The boss began smirking in derision.

“For a measly human, you know some interesting skills, don’t you?”

The boss gestured, and the High Orcs quickly surrounded Jin-Woo.

“However, just how far do you think your tricks will get you?”

Jin-Woo’s glare became so much colder. He never really cared for any of the monsters he killed so far, but this would be his first time wanting to slice one up this badly.

“I’ll take care of you last.”

If the boss knew the meaning of enjoyment, surely it’d know what fear tasted like.

Jin-Woo slowly murmured out.

“My shadows....”

Two daggers appeared in Jin-Woo’s hands.

“....Come out and play.”

REPORT

Screech.

A black sedan stopped by the side of the road.

The man climbing out of the driver's seat, kitted out in a pair of sunglasses and a black business suit, was none other than Woo Jin-Cheol, the section chief of the Monitoring Division, the Hunters Association.

Soon after his exit, three more men climbed out of the car from the passenger and rear seats. All of them were from the Monitoring Division as well.

“Chief, weren't we on our way back to the Association?”

“I just wanted to confirm something, first.”

Woo Jin-Cheol shifted his gaze over the Gate, some distance away.

‘A rank A Gate still gives me the creeps every time I look at it.’

Woo Jin-Cheol frowned deeply. If that giant hole opened up like a door and monsters trapped inside emerged outside.....

Just imagining that made him shudder.

‘However, why did that man apply to become a miner in such a horrifying place?’

Not only that, for two days in a row, too.

Even if Association President Goh Gun-Hui hadn't asked him, Woo Jin-Cheol would have personally come here to find out, anyway.

‘Investigating behind his back is.... impossible.’

The man in question was a rank S Awakened. A measly rank A like him going undiscovered while secretly investigating a rank S was, realistically speaking, an impossible dream.

That was why he decided to show up in the open like this.

Since he had a matter to attend to nearby anyway, he was thinking of greeting the youth while saying he was in the neighbourhood, and then ask a couple of simple questions.

‘I hope he won’t find me strange or anything.’

Anyone would get curious of the circumstances if a Hunter, already pretty much confirmed to be a rank S, chose to shovel the ground for some reason.

On top of this, wasn’t Seong Jin-Woo someone the Association President was paying close attention to? The Association President must’ve found this young man very much to his liking, because he even focused all of his attention on everything Jin-Woo did.

‘No, I’m not the strange one here.’

It was obvious that you’d get curious, and it was only natural to ask.

While telling himself that, Woo Jin-Cheol walked over to where the representative of the Hunters Guild was.

“I’m looking for your mining team.”

“Who.... are you?”

“I’m from the Association.”

The Guild employee confirmed Woo Jin-Cheol’s identity and pointed in the direction of the waiting mining team.

“Please head over that way.”

“Thank you.”

Four Hunters from the Monitoring Division were now paying a visit to the mining team. As if he had received a heads-up already, Foreman Bae Yun-Seok hurriedly ran to meet them halfway.

“Aigoo, what brings the Hunters from the Monitoring Division to this place?”

The members of the mining team had been relaxing until then overheard those words, and tension briefly flashed by in their eyes.

The oppressive pressure Hunters felt from the words ‘Monitoring Division’ was rather huge.

The people whose job was to arrest the Awakened that the normal laws couldn’t do anything about, they then either reformed the troublemakers or simply eliminated them. The ‘Monitoring Division’ was where those kinds of people worked for.

“What’s going on?”

“Hunters from the Monitoring Division are here.”

“Monitoring Division?”

“Something must’ve happened.”

Feeling curious now, the mining team members began flocking around Foreman Bae.

Woo Jin-Cheol took his sunglasses off.

‘.....’

He swept his gaze around the miners to locate Seong Jin-Woo, but in the end, he had to ask for that man’s whereabouts from Foreman Bae.

“Do you know by any chance where Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim is?”

“I bloody knew it!”

Suddenly, a man jumped out from among the miners. It was Lee Seong-Gu, who had run into Jin-Woo’s shoulder yesterday.

Lee Seong-Gu passionately spat out his complaints, flying spittle accompanying his rapidly firing words.

“When that bstard looked at me and began grinning, I was terrified that he might eat me alive or something, you know! Uh-whew, it’s still so dmn scary even when I think about it now....”

Woo Jin-Cheol’s brows furrowed slightly.

‘Terrifying enough to eat a person....?’

Just what on earth was this man talking about?

Murmur, murmur...

The voices of the Hunters rose up higher and higher. Woo Jin-Cheol ignored the background noise and asked Lee Seong-Gu.

“Did something happen?”

“Ah, well, that is....”

Lee Seong-Gu was about to answer him, but then, he rapidly realised that he was also at fault and quickly waved his hands around.

“Well, that isn’t really important, but the main thing is, his eyes were really scary, man.”

“...”

Woo Jin-Cheol’s gaze shifted back to Foreman Bae.

“Where can I find Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim?”

“Mister Seong is... He’s inside the Gate right now.”

Seong Jin-Woo was inside the rank A dungeon, where a raid was ongoing? Woo Jin-Cheol’s eyes opened wider.

“Why did he enter the dungeon?”

“Well, the raid team’s porter hasn’t shown up today, you see. Nobody wanted to go in there, so Mister Seong volunteered as the porter.”

“...”

“But, it’s a wee bit weird, you know?”

“What do you mean?”

“Well, it’s nothing particular, but... Cha Hunter-nim... no, I mean, Cha Hae-In Hunter-nim was also looking for Mister Seong, so she entered the Gate just now, you know? Isn’t it just too weird...?”

Foreman Bae spoke up to there and tilted his head.

Meanwhile, the mind of Woo Jin-Cheol became a bit of mess after hearing that.

‘The Vice Chairman of the Hunters Guild Cha Hae-In was looking for Seong Jin-Woo? Not only that, she even went after him into the dungeon, too?’

Just what was happening here?

He only stopped by to say hello to Seong Jin-Woo, but now, it felt like something big was afoot here.

‘For the time being, I should head over to the Gate.’

That seemed to be the best choice he could make for the time being.

“We’ll stop by at the Gate, and leave afterwards.”

“Oh, sure thing.”

Foreman Bae chuckled genially and nodded his head. Just as Woo Jin-Cheol and his subordinates turned around to leave, Lee Seong-Gu quickly grabbed his arm.

“Excuse me, Mister Hunter?”

Lee Seong-Gu had this expectant face for some reason as he hurriedly asked Woo Jin-Cheol.

“That b*stard, Seong Jin-Woo, did he do something bad? Maybe, he’s killed someone? I mean, he looked like someone fully capable of that.”

Woo Jin-Cheol frowned slightly again. He sort of could understand why Seong Jin-Woo glared scarily at this moron.

‘A fool who’d get blown away into the weeds if Seong Jin-Woo snorts in front of him.....’

Still, there were too many eyes watching. As a Hunter working for the Association, he couldn’t carelessly display his irritation at a stranger.

This was why working for a public organisation sometimes could get rather annoying. Woo Jin-Cheol spat out a long sigh and did his best to sound as diplomatic as possible.

“You’ll find out when you take a look at tomorrow evening’s news broadcast.”

Perhaps that answered most of his own suspicions, Lee Seong-Gu raised his voice high as if he had correctly predicted this.

“I told you, didn’t I? I told you that man is too suspicious!”

“But, he didn’t look that way....”

“Right. And he worked so diligently, too.”

Not minding the lukewarm responses of his colleagues, Lee Seong-Gu went on about how great his discerning eyes were.

‘Tsk.’

Woo Jin-Cheol stared at that man making a fool of himself, before taking his subordinates towards the Gate.

However....

Woo Jin-Cheol instinctively stopped a few steps away from the Gate.

“Chief?”

The subordinates began staring in confusion at Woo Jin-Cheol’s stiff face.

‘This... This can’t be. It makes no sense.’

Woo Jin-Cheol quickly yanked his phone out. He then accessed the Association’s information hub and checked out the available info on the rank A Gate the Hunters Guild was supposed to conquer today.

Woo Jin-Cheol’s eyes widened in shock.

‘Why is the measured value of the magic energy so low?!’

His head began rocking side to side automatically.

‘The measurement results are wrong.’

Not all rank A Hunters were equal. For instance, Hunter Woo Jin-Cheol was right near the top within the rank A. And his instincts were telling him this: The measurement value was all wrong.

Woo Jin-Cheol quickly issued an order to his subordinate next to him.

“Go get the magic energy measuring device.”

The subordinate immediately realised that Woo Jin-Cheol’s expression was grave, and hurriedly ran to where their car was parked.

The miniature measuring device used by the Monitoring Division was a world apart in quality from the devices used by the regular Association employees. As befitting a device created from a top-grade magic crystal that cost over a billion Won, this piece of equipment very rarely threw up errors or mistakes in its results.

Bleep.

The measurement result quickly came out.

‘I knew it....’

The displayed result showed a clear discrepancy to the previously measured value. If the Guild formed their raid team according to the measured value presented by the Association, then it’d definitely become a serious situation.

‘Well, with two rank S Hunters inside, I’m sure nothing untoward would happen, but...’

But, when Woo Jin-Cheol placed the measuring device on the ground and tried to stand back up...

Wuuuuooooonng!!

The Gate suddenly began vibrating.

The powerful gushing magic energy wave caused Woo Jin-Cheol and his three subordinates, with far worse perceptions than him, to flinch grandly on the spot. They began trembling like leaves right away.

“S-Section Chief?!”

“What, what was that, sir??”

Woo Jin-Cheol shifted his gaze to the youngest of the agents present, the kid’s complexion looking awfully pale now.

“You okay?”

“Y-yes, sir. I’m okay.”

The youngest agent cautiously stared at the back of his hand after making his reply. He could see goosebumps covering up his skin.

Woo Jin-Cheol stood upright.

“We’re going inside.”

“Pardon me?”

“You want to go in there, sir?”

Woo Jin-Cheol’s determination didn’t waver, even for a second.

“If you’re scared, it’s okay for you to back out.”

Only he knew that the measurement value was incorrect at this stage. It was his duty to inform the Hunters trapped inside. It was the duty of the Association’s agents to manage other Hunters, and to keep a close watch on them, but also to aid them in time of their needs.

“N-no, sir.”

“We’ll go with you.”

Woo Jin-Cheol nodded his head in satisfaction.

“Junior. Stay behind and report the new measurement result back to the Association.”

“Yes. No, wait. Sir?”

“Can you do it?”

Woo Jin-Cheol lightly tapped the youngest agent here on the shoulder, and the latter nodded his head with some difficulty.

“...Yes, sir. I understand.”

Woo Jin-Cheol turned to look back at the Gate.

On top of its already nonsensically-high magic energy emission, an even greater storm of magic power rushed out from the Gate just now.

‘What the hell is going on inside this Gate?’

With Woo Jin-Cheol as the lead, the two agents of the Monitoring Division also threw themselves beyond the Gate’s surface.

Around the same time....

Cha Hae-In was following after the traces left behind the raid team.

‘This is so weird. Why can’t I find the traces of monsters?’

In a regular dungeon, it was normal to find the corpses of monsters strewn about here and there, starting from somewhere near the entrance and all the way till the boss room.

But, no matter how hard she looked, she couldn't see any dead monsters. Did the monsters gather in one place or something?

She thought like this and continued to walk forward, until....

'...Huh?'

She finally located corpses in the distance.

As befitting a rank S melee-type Hunter, Cha Hae-In arrived at the location of the battle in the blink of an eye.

'How can this be?!'

Her eyes opened up super-wide. All the corpses belonged to the High Orcs. It was easy to identify them, because they featured red skin and their fangs were noticeably longer, too.

'How did Mister Sohn Ki-Hoon's team manage to defeat this many High Orcs?!'

And, was that all? There was seemingly not one casualty, too. Of course, if there was a casualty, they would've retreated on their own accord, saving her the trouble of having to step foot inside here.

'...Did I underestimate the rank A and B Hunters by too much?'

That could certainly be the case.

Surveying the location, she thought that the battle had to be a bit one-sided, as well.

However....

'Wait, isn't that....?'

Cha Hae-In discovered something odd and crouched down to take a closer look at one of the corpses. And her eyes grew even wider than before. She stood back up and quickly began checking out each of the High Orc corpses.

'This one, and this one, too....'

Her suspicion gradually morphed into certainty.

'But, how....??'

How could something like this happen?

Almost all the High Orcs were left with injuries inflicted by short but incredibly sharp weapons.

‘They weren’t blows fatal enough to kill, but....’

But, she thought that these were definitely enough to hinder the movements of the High Orcs. Which meant that other Hunters were simply dining on the table full of tasty dishes prepared by someone else.

It also meant that one Hunter managed to almost single-handedly massacre all 20 High Orcs.

Only two High Orcs were killed off in a different fashion to everyone else. One had its head ripped off by an incredible force, while the other one had died after something blunt hit it in the head.

‘Excluding those two, one person managed to drive all the other Orcs to the brink of death?!’

Could such a thing even be possible??

She was deeply confident of her own speed, but even then, she couldn’t be sure of achieving the same feat under the same given situation. And also, from what she knew, there was no Assassin-type Hunter wielding daggers or shortwords within Sohn Ki-Hoon’s team.

‘...Shortwords?’

It was then, a certain scene flashed past her brain.

The man who stood near the boss room yesterday.

Seong Jin-Woo was definitely holding short weapons in both of his hands.

‘Could it be that man?’

When her thoughts arrived at this point, Cha Hae-In’s head snapped towards the deeper parts of the dungeon. And her expression rapidly hardened. She could sense this incredibly powerful magic energy wave, no, magic energy tremors, the kind she’d never experienced before, coming from there.

The air itself was trembling, hard.

‘No!!’

Cha Hae-In bit her lower lips.

If that magical energy belonged to the boss monster, then no one from Sohn Ki-Hoon’s team would be able to survive.

She began running towards the boss room with all her might.

REPORT

“Come out and play.”

Everything began with those words.

Whooooosh-!!

A ripple incomparably greater than that of the magic energy wave from the High Orc Shaman spread out everywhere. That wasn't the only change to take place, however.

Along with him unshackling his magic power, the shadow beneath Jin-Woo's feet spread out, too. And it covered the entirety of the chamber's surface at a frightening pace, as if someone had poured a bucket of pitch-black ink onto the floor.

“Heok?!”

“W-what's this??”

The Hunters of Sohn Ki-Hoon's raid team saw the 'shadow' spread beneath their feet and freaked out. How should they even go about describing this situation? Even the most experienced, grizzled Hunters among the group hadn't heard of anything like this, never mind seeing one.

Tremble...

An unknown fear crept up over them.

Sohn Ki-Hoon, lying on the ground, powerlessly began trembling violently while staring up at Jin-Woo.

‘What.... Just what are you planning to do?’

As if to answer his silent question – when the spreading shadow completely covered the floor of the boss room....

Shururuk...

The surface of the shadow wavered, and soldiers wearing jet-black armour rose up one by one.

[You have activated ‘Skill: Sovereign’s Territory’.]

[All Stats of the Shadow Soldiers fighting over the Summoner’s shadow will rise up by 50%.]

A thin smile spread on Jin-Woo's lips.

'Good.'

This was the new Class-specific Skill he learnt when he broke past level 70 back in the Demon's Castle.

He sensed the fighting spirit of his enhanced soldiers soaring higher. Quite obviously, a satisfied grin formed on his face. 50 summoned Shadow Soldiers stood around Jin-Woo in a circle as if to protect him.

"Ku-kururuk??"

"Kuruk!!"

The High Orc Warriors, famed for their bravery, began retreating one step at a time after getting their wits scared off by the dangerous pressure emitted by Jin-Woo and his soldiers.

"O-Orcs are retreating?!"

"Just what is the meaning of this..."

Even though they were trembling like a leaf from this unbelievable situation, the Hunters also began clutching onto a slender thread of renewed hope now.

"D-did you feel that?"

"Yeah."

"Can... can that even make any sense?"

The mage-type Hunters were sensitive towards the magic energy, to begin with. And they couldn't control their furiously quickening heartbeat no matter what. Because, an insane amount of magic energy was gushing out from the man who subbed in for their luggage carrier. Someone whom they thought of as a simple rank E, no less.

'No, hang on. Is this even magic energy?'

'To think, this magical energy is even more ominous than what the High Orc Shaman is emitting...!!'

The sheer pressure from the magic energy thickly filling up the boss room made it difficult to even breathe properly. The fact that this incredible power didn't belong to an enemy relieved them to no end.

On the other hand, indescribably heavy and taut tension was flowing among the ranks of High Orcs.

With the appearance of the Shadow Soldiers, the difference of 1 to 150 suddenly got reduced to 50 to 150.

More importantly, though, those 50 were no ordinary 50 at all. No, that was the power that already transcended common sense, the one that couldn't be quantified with mere numbers!

As if to prove that reality, Jin-Woo was the very first one to dash forward.

The Shaman hurriedly shouted out, then.

“What are you doing!! Kill that human right now!!”

With their backs pushed forward by the voice carrying a thick amount of the Shaman's magical energy, the High Orc warriors all roared out and raised their weapons.

“Kuwaaaaarr!!”

Step, step, step – slice!!

The skill, 'Sovereign's Territory' was designed solely for his Shadow Soldiers. However, even without a Status boosting buff, Jin-Woo's displayed strength was already out of this world.

“Kuwaahk!!”

“Kuaahh, kuaah!!”

High Orcs screamed out. Limbs, bits of body parts sliced off by Jin-Woo's two daggers, and the ensuing trails of blood scattered in all directions. He was so fast that even the elite Hunters could only catch the glimpses of his afterimage.

“That....”

“Right. That's like seeing our Vice Chairman.”

Cha Hae-In's nickname was the 'Dancer'.

Normally, she remained a calm, composed figure, but when she jumped into a battle, she swiftly cut down monsters as if she was performing a fast-tempo dance routine. Hence, that nickname was given to her.

The woman in question forbade the use of that nickname because of how embarrassing it sounded, so it wasn't widely known, but some people still resorted to calling her that every now and then.

And now, their supposed porter was displaying a movement that equalled Cha Hae-In – no, even exceeding her speed.

If Cha Hae-In danced, then Mister Porter was a typhoon. He had become the centre of the storm to obliterate the surrounding monsters.

Kuooooaaahhh!!

The Shadow Soldiers didn't lose out, either; the former leader of the Ice Bears, Tank, took a step forward and that signalled the attack of the Shadow Soldiers.

Iron took to the front. Just as he had done previously, Iron yelled out at the top of his lungs before he could enter the fray properly.

Wuooooaaahhhh!!!

[Iron has used 'Skill: Shout of Provocation'.]

[The targets' resistance is too high and the intended effect didn't activate.]

When his skill failed to work, Iron got angry and began roaring out like a beast. And then, he began destroying the hapless High Orcs with his massive hammer.

Swoosh-!!

Kwajeeck!!

Crack!!

"Kuhhhaarck!!"

"Kiiehck!"

He was so destructive that one even felt a smidgeon of pity for the High Orcs.

On the other hand, Igrit was elegantly and efficiently cutting down the necks of his enemies in complete contrast to Iron's brutality. High Orcs running into Igrit didn't even have a chance to scream before their breaths were cut short.

Slice!

When Igrit's sword drew an arc in the air, another High Orc lost its head.

Regular Shadow Soldiers found it hard to fight against individual High Orcs, but they possessed stamina that didn't know the meaning of fatigue, and the capability to regenerate almost endlessly.

And by buying time in this fashion, the sea of fire shooting out from the Magic Soldiers would rain down on top of the enemies with no exceptions.

Kaaabbbooom!!

Rumble-!!

The number of High Orcs decreased substantially in no time at all. The Shaman's swine-like cheek meat quivered in rage.

'How an insolent human being dares to...!'

The boss's glare was now firmly fixed on Jin-Woo. The boss quickly decided to kill that human first.

The black-armoured soldiers were summons called forth by that human! If that human died, then these soldiers would disappear, too.

In order to kill Jin-Woo, the Shaman began chanting a spell.

"..."

The lips of the Shaman quickly moved up and down.

The song of slowness, the song of blindness, the song of crippling fever, the song of intolerable pain, and the song of demonic slumber; five different types of hexes were completed in an instant and flew towards their intended victim.

"It's done!"

The corners of the Shaman's lips arched up.

The moment all those hexes were completed, Jin-Woo also sensed the unnatural movement of magic energy.

'...Magic, is it?'

Jin-Woo's eyes met those of the Shaman's.

The Orc Shaman smirked derisively.

'It's already too late, human.'

Hexes were different from normal magic spells and couldn't be evaded. The moment it was cast, that would be the end.

With that human b*stard turning into a walking corpse wrecked by all sorts of afflictions, his fate was sealed – to be ripped to shreds by the High Orc Warriors and their weapons. That was the end truly befitting a measly human who didn't know his place and dared to show off.

Unfortunately for the monster, however....

A familiar mechanical beep rang in Jin-Woo's ears.

Tti-ring.

[Abnormal status has occurred.]

[All abnormal status will be removed with the effects of ‘Buff: Immunity’.]

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring.

Mechanical beeps fired out one after the other.

[‘Hex: Slow’ has been dispelled.]

[‘Hex: Blindness’ has been dispelled.]

....

.....

All five hexes were dispelled even before they had the chance to activate.

Grin.

Jin-Woo smirked at the results. There was this ‘Buff’ he received when he changed into the ‘Player’.

[The blessings from the Grand Sorcerer, Kandiaru]

Thanks to that, he didn’t have to worry about status-altering magic, such as hexes.

“W-what?!”

The Shaman shuddered in shock. Fitting for a boss of the rank A dungeon, the High Orc Shaman had immediately realised that its curses were rendered ineffective by an even greater power than it.

‘But, those were hexes I cast!’

This made no sense!

In order to dispel hexes, one required the purification magic, or the blessings of a being possessing greater power than that of the hex itself.

‘There is an even more excellent Shaman than this great me among humans?’

Even before the monster could think about it some more, the Shaman cried out from the pain shooting up from the back of its foot.

“Kuuuwaahk!!”

When it looked down, it found a dagger deeply lodged in its foot.

“Keuh....”

It was Jin-Woo’s ‘Knight Killer’.

The Shaman raised its head and its bloodshot glare landed on Jin-Woo.

“How dare a mere human.....!”

Jin-Woo casually cut apart a High Orc trying to pounce on him, and silently mouthed some words to the Orc Shaman.

...Don't do anything useless, in other words.

Immediately, the Shaman's face reddened up like a beautifully ripe persimmon.

“How dare a measly human!!”

‘...So, it still has some mental capacity left to get angry, huh?’

Jin-Woo's expression turned icy in the blink of an eye.

In all honesty, he could've eliminated the Shaman right at the beginning of the battle if he wanted to. However, he chose not to.

Because, he wanted to instil the sense of fear into the heart of that Shaman, the way it managed to do to the Hunters present.

However, it seemed not quite enough to make that arrogant monster taste the true meaning of fear. The b*stard's eyes were still 'alive'.

In that case....

‘Let me show you an interesting spectacle, then.’

From now on, he'd show the true sphere of influence of a necromancer.

In the eyes of this Shadow Sovereign, his surroundings now resembled a location of celebration, filled with all sorts of delicacies. From the corpses of the High Orcs sprawled on the ground, black smokes eerily rose up as if they were waiting for Jin-Woo's call.

So, Jin-Woo called out to them.

“Rise up.”

[Shadow Extraction has commenced.]

Accompanying the System's message alerting him to the activation of his skill, horrifying screams that resembled death throes resounded out from somewhere unknown.

Wuuuaaaaahhhh—

The Shaman's eyes widened in shock.

“W-what is....?!”

The Shaman didn't get to finish its sentence. Even before it could, black hands began rising up from the shadows beneath the corpses of the High

Orcs, that was why.

[Shadow Extraction is a success.]

Jin-Woo began smiling deeply while gazing contently at the newbies joining his Shadow army.

‘My warriors have become undead...!!’

The Shaman began shuddering uncontrollably. About 50 warriors had lost their lives so far. And about the same number had changed into those black-armoured soldiers.

‘Which means, those soldiers that b*stard had summoned are...?!’

The Shaman finally realised that the unidentifiable human was not wielding regular summons at all. And at the same time, it also realised how disadvantageous they were against the enemy’s powers.

The fight between 50 and 150 had morphed to 100 versus 100.

High Orc Warriors would bravely jump into a fight against enemies stronger than themselves without fear, but they rapidly lost all their fighting spirit the moment they saw their former comrades being ‘revived’ as Shadow Soldiers.

“Ku.... Kururuk.”

“Kuruk.”

“Kuwak.”

High Orcs, renowned for never backing down from a chance to shed some blood, were now openly retreating out of terror.

The fact that they wouldn’t be able to ascend to the warrior’s heaven after their death and instead become the puppets of the enemy was the worst possible nightmare for these High Orcs.

For sure, the impact of him showing off the Shadow Extraction skill was quite huge.

‘It worked against the warriors, so what about the Shaman, then?’

Jin-Woo scanned the complexion of the Shaman next.

‘Hoh.’

Jin-Woo’s expression brightened.

Finally, there were signs of fear in that b*stard’s eyes.

While shaking like a leaf, the Shaman recalled the existence that could revive the dead into ‘shadows’. There could not possibly be two people possessing the exact same power. So, that human had to be ‘him’.

‘If that person is him, then..... Then, why are we here....?!’

However, the moment the Shaman thought about ‘itself’ and ‘we’, the inside of its brain blanked out and the relevant memories contained within were wiped out in an instant. The only emotion remaining there was fear.

Not knowing what happened, Jin-Woo formed a satisfied expression.

‘That’s right. Stay exactly like that.’

His plan of making the Shaman shudder in fear until the end was a resounding success. He turned his head while smiling like that, and then, spotted a certain familiar female standing by the entrance of the boss room.

Jin-Woo tilted his head.

‘Who was that?’

She seemed a bit too ‘distant’ to be totally familiar to him, however.

That was why he needed a bit of a moment to recall what her name was.

And she was none other than the rank S Hunter currently affiliated to the Hunters Guild, Cha Hae-In.

‘But, what is that woman doing here?’

Jin-Woo might have been somewhat surprised by her presence here, but then, Cha Hae-In’s own shock was far greater than his. Her wide-open eyes stared at Jin-Woo and his Shadow Soldiers.

REPORT

‘Summons??’

The first thing Cha Hae-In thought of was summoning when she saw the Shadow Soldiers. However, there were simply too many of them to say that this was the result of summoning magic.

The thing was, the mage-type Hunters specialising in summoning magic could only control one, or two at a push. If one could control two, then the treatment one received improved greatly, and she hadn’t yet heard of anyone capable of controlling three or more summon creatures.

However....

Just how many of them were here?!

‘This makes no sense!’

One man summoned over 100 in one go. And, he didn’t even need a lot of time to summon them, too. No, he only needed a moment to summon dozens and dozens in one go.

‘I wouldn’t have believed it if I didn’t see it with my own two eyes.’

She might be one of the top-ten ranked Hunters in South Korea, but another Hunter’s ability had managed to leave her totally speechless now.

However....

‘This isn’t the time for me to stand around like this.’

Her gaze immediately shifted past the Shadow Soldiers and locked onto the raid team. Their complexions were not good at all. Some of them were squatting on the ground as if they no longer had any energy left.

Didn’t matter what the identity of the man named Seong Jin-Woo was, didn’t matter what kind of ability he possessed – her priority lay with lending him aid by taking care of these High Orcs right away.

The results of her thought process might be simple, but she was incredibly quick to put them into action. Cha Hae-In tightened her grip on the ‘weapon’ in her hands and took a step towards the High Orcs.

However, it happened then.

Her eyes met Jin-Woo's. And his eyes were telling her in no uncertain terms.

...That it was not necessary; that she shouldn't interfere.

That she should just observe from the sidelines.

Cha Hae-In couldn't understand why.

'But, how come....?'

She could easily tell that Seong Jin-Woo was capable of controlling countless summons. However, there were just as many High Orcs standing, and there was also the boss possessing greater power, too.

Because he had to summon that many creatures, and he had to maintain them constantly too, his magic energy reserve should be running empty by now. Yet....

'What is he trying to do on his own?'

She was puzzled, sure, but in the end, Cha Hae-In lowered her weapon. It wasn't because the so-called weapon just so happened to be a pickaxe she borrowed from the mining team. No, she became curious with what the Hunter named Seong Jin-Woo would do against the army of High Orcs, instead.

Expectations.

Her cool-headed reasoning and her expectation had a fight in her mind, and the latter achieved a resounding victory. For some reason, her heart began palpitating faster now.

'Whew, that's a relief.'

Jin-Woo inwardly breathed a sigh of relief after seeing Cha Hae-In's response. Seriously, the real thing was about to begin, so it wouldn't do for some interference to suddenly pop out, now would it?

Heck, he even had to let the poor Sohn Ki-Hoon go through that crap until the very last moment humanly possible, just for a chance to monopolise all the monsters in here.

'Well, he's the kind of a guy who'd try to fight alongside if he has some energy left still.'

That was why he only acted the moment Sohn Ki-Hoon let go of his sword. Even though he had to suppress his urge to rush forward and kick the head of that d*mn Shaman.

It was all for this moment.

‘As expected of a quick-witted woman.’

What a relief it was that Cha Hae-In turned out to be a smart girl. She backed off without him needing to raise his voice, after all. Jin-Woo turned his attention back to his front while a deep smile formed on his face.

“Shadows!”

Jin-Woo loud yell reverberating within the boss room prompted the shadows to take the battle stance all at once, not one of them deviating from the formation ever so slightly.

Clack!!

Only a moment later, an eerie silence filled up the chamber.

The thing that broke this silence was the single word Jin-Woo threw out while pointing at the High Orc Shaman.

“Go.”

With that, over a hundred Shadow Soldiers rushed towards the cowering group of High Orc warriors.

RUMBLE-!!!

The black soldiers and their controlled march shook the ground, the cavern, and even the eyes of all those witnessing this scene.

Woo Jin-Cheol was running breathlessly.

“Pant, pant, pant...”

He ran so hard that he now tasted sweetness in his mouth.

He bent over and tried to catch his breaths, before raising his torso up – only to spot a woman with a short hairstyle standing near the entrance of the boss room. He immediately recognised who she was.

‘Cha Hae-in....’

Where would you find a female Hunter possessing an aura like hers?

‘...However, why is she standing still like that?’

Woo Jin-Cheol found it strange that she didn’t try to participate in the battle and simply stood by, so he quickly walked up next to her.

And it was at that point he got to see clearly the situation inside the boss room.

“This.... What is this?”

Soldiers wearing jet-black armour were one-sidedly massacring the supposedly-powerful monsters, also known as High Orc warriors.

“K-kuwaaahk!!”

“Kiihkh!”

“Kueehhk!!”

The pitiful screams of the High Orcs even managed to deafen Woo Jin-Cheol’s hearing.

Also, he might have been less shocked if there were only human-shaped soldiers present. But then again, just what were those nonsensically huge black bears with smoke coming out of them, as well as High Orcs kitted out in various black-coloured armours?

“Ah, yes, miss. It’s been a while... but, what are they? They don’t seem to be simple monsters....”

“They are summons that man called out.”

Cha Hae-In greeted Woo Jin-Cheol first before pointing at Jin-Woo in the distance.

Woo Jin-Cheol quickly took his sunglasses off and stared at Jin-Woo, now standing in the middle of the battlefield. While wielding two shortswords that looked like daggers, he was busy destroying the formation of the High Orcs.

‘No matter how I see it, doesn’t he look like a top-ranked melee-type Hunter?’

However, he could even use summoning magic, too?

And, sure enough...

When Jin-Woo’s lips moved a little, dozens more summons rose up from the ground.

“Oh, my god!”

Woo Jin-Cheol’s jaw fell to the floor.

Just how many summons could that man control?!

‘This... this is the true ability of Hunter Seong Jin-Woo....’

He couldn’t close shut his slack jaw at all.

Could the Association President Goh Gun-Hui have recognised the skill set of Hunter Seong Jin-Woo already? If so, then his sky-high interest in Hunter Seong Jin-Woo made plenty of sense.

Cha Hae-In couldn't rip her eyes away from Jin-Woo for a long time, but she belatedly did manage that and asked Woo Jin-Cheol.

“By the way, why are you here, Chief Woo? Was the call made to the Monitoring Division already?”

When Cha Hae-In asked him that question, Woo Jin-Cheol somehow managed to regain control over his emotions and replied.

“No, that's not it. We were in the neighbourhood, just passing by. But, it was a coincidence that we discovered the Gate's abnormal condition, and we came here to help facilitate the evacuation of the raid team, but well....”

Woo Jin-Cheol stopped talking there and stared at Jin-Woo again.

“However, looks like that won't be necessary.”

This would be his first time witnessing Hunter Seong Jin-Woo's true skill. And that just so happened to be the spectacle of him clearing a rank A dungeon with his own power.

It didn't look like other's help was necessary.

“Yes. I think standing still is the right call to make here.”

Cha Hae-In too agreed with that assessment.

That man's battle didn't leave any gaps for a rank S like her to butt in at all.

“Do you know who that man is?”

Cha Hae-In asked.

Woo Jin-Cheol was clearly admiring Seong Jin-Woo's skills, and obviously not worried about his identity, at least not outwardly. Also, he was an agent of the Association which did block Jin-Woo's information from leaking out, too.

‘So maybe, Woo Jin-Cheol might know who that man is.’

Her expectation was on the money.

“Yes, a little bit.”

“That man... just who is he?”

Woo Jin-Cheol put his sunglasses back on and replied.

“I can't reveal that information.”

The Shaman was furious.

When it first opened its eyes in this place, only one order was filling up its mind.

However, what was the meaning of this pathetic display?

Wasn't a lone human easily hunting down every single member of its tribe? This wasn't supposed to happen. No, such a thing must not happen at all.

The Shaman's eyes reddened even further as it witnessed the massacre of its subordinates.

'You insect-like b*stard! I'll step on you!!'

If hexes didn't work against the enemy, then all it had to do was to bless itself and fight!

"The song of rage! The song of strengthening! The song of the giants! The song of the fire dragon!"

With the completion of the various spells, the Shaman's body suddenly ballooned up to nearly ten metres tall. Its strength, agility, stamina, and even its confidence increased greatly as well, power filling up every square inch of its frame.

Right away, the Shaman used its gigantic arm to swat away the Shadow Soldiers, and then took a deep breath.

And then...

"Fuuuu-hook!!"

When the Shaman spat out its breath, reddish black flames erupted out of its mouth.

Rumble!!

The soldiers immediately dissipated and scattered away when they were struck dead-on by the flames. Even those grazed by it were no exception. Parts of their bodies were blown away and they were rendered unable to carry on fighting.

The flames didn't end with one attack; the second wave of flames spat out of the Shaman's mouth in a row.

The Shaman was able to greatly reduce the number of the Shadow Soldiers with its continuous attacks. Having received a boost to its confidence, it roared out at the top of its lungs.

"Do you still find this great Karugalgan funny now?!"

The reply came from above its head.

"Yup."

The Shaman flinched and raised its head, all the while hurriedly trying to chant a defensive spell, but...

But, Jin-Woo was one step quicker.

POW!!

CRACK!!

The Shaman's head smashed down into the ground. The floor shattered and spiderweb-like cracks rapidly spread out.

Jin-Woo had already experienced blowing away Vulcan with his bare fist. And that demon was much, much larger than this arrogant Shaman, too.

[You have killed the owner of the dungeon.]

Tab.

When he lightly landed on the ground, feel-good messages began popping up in his view one after the other.

Tt-ring.

[Level up!]

“There you go!”

Jin-Woo pumped his fist.

Back when he was fighting using 'Stealth', he levelled up once. When he was killing these Orcs, another level up. And, after killing the boss just now, another level up. Clearing this rank A dungeon netted him three level ups, in other words. This was a result well above his expectation. He even felt very grateful towards Foreman Bae for suggesting yesterday that they should work together again.

‘This is very good.’

With an elated mind, Jin-Woo walked closer to the boss. The once-buffed up Shaman's body had reverted back to its original size already.

He saw an egg-sized magic crystal embedded in the dead boss's necklace, but he decided to not to get too greedy.

‘Earning experience points is good enough.’

This was the Hunters Guild's dungeon, at the end of the day.

If he wanted to get his hands on a magic crystal from a rank A dungeon, he didn't need to enter someone else's dungeon – he'd just buy himself a permit for a dungeon of his own, instead.

No, what Jin-Woo was aiming for was something else. And that would be the black smoke beginning to rise up from the boss's corpse.

Gulp.

Jin-Woo licked his lips in anticipation.

He couldn't help but remember the corpse of Baruka, the one that slipped through his fingers back in the Red Gate.

'But, my situation is a lot different compared to then.'

Compared to now, his Stats weren't that high back then.

Also, killing that b*stard took a lot out of him. Only after receiving the aid of two knight-grade soldiers, Igrit and Iron, did he manage to beat that boss down.

However, he was able to kill this Shaman comparatively easily today.

A week spent inside the Demon's Castle – this was the definite proof that the events of those short seven days weren't in vain.

Jin-Woo issued a new order at the rising, wavering black steam-like smoke.

"Rise up."

At the same time, an ominous wind brushed past his two cheeks. He instinctively realised it right away.

'It worked!'

A radiant smile bloomed on Jin-Woo's face.

Kuwaaaahhh!!

As the soul-tearing scream resounded out, a mage covered in black robe rose up from the shadow of the dead Shaman.

'...Huh?'

Jin-Woo sensed something was different about this guy, and so he checked the information window.

[?? Lv.1]

Elite Knight grade

'An Elite Knight?'

ly, Jin-Woo was able to confirm that there were three grades to the Shadow Soldiers.

Regular grade.

Elite grade.

And then, the Knight grade.

But now, for the first time ever, the ‘Elite Knight’ grade appeared.

He began to think that, seeing the word ‘elite’ tacked on to the already-existing grade ‘Knight’, this new guy had to be a realm higher than either Igrit or Iron in terms of combat prowess.

‘For sure, I can sense that its magic energy is far greater than that of my two knights.’

As expected of turning the boss of a rank A dungeon into his Shadow Soldier.

Tti-ring.

[Please set the soldier’s name.]

And also as expected, he got another System message telling to name the new guy, now that another Knight-grade Shadow Soldier had appeared.

‘A name, is it...’

Well, its face was hidden under the hood of the robe now, but still, High Orcs and lengthy fangs went hand in hand, no?

‘Right, let’s name it Fangs.’ (TL note at the end)

He didn’t need to issue a separate order; just thinking about it meant the new guy’s name would be set.

[Fangs Lv.1]

Elite Knight grade.

Instead of question marks, the new name appeared in the information window.

If the Shaman who remained utterly arrogant right till the moment it died heard this name, the poor guy might have fainted on the spot. But well, who cares? It was already dead, anyway.

With a satisfied grin on his face, Jin-Woo recalled his Shadow Soldiers.

He could now store almost 130 of them. Although it was a bit regrettable, he had to return the rest back to the void.

‘This much is more than enough, though.’

He stepped off from the altar with a big smile on his face, but then, several people rushed over to him. They were – Hunters from the raid team, Cha Hae-In, and finally, a group of men wearing matching black business suits.

Jin-Woo recognised one of the faces among the black suits.

‘Since when did Chief Woo Jin-Cheol show up?’

Seeing the expression on Woo Jin-Cheol, he probably had witnessed the Shadow Soldiers in action in full.

“Mister Seong Jin-Woo.”

“Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

“Mister Porter?!”

Everyone called out to him at the same time, then they took glances at each other.

Well, it was all fine and dandy that he got to fight to his heart’s content since he no longer had any reason to hide his powers, but.....

‘...How am I supposed to get out of this now?’

Jin-Woo looked at all these people surrounding him and scratched the back of his head.

(TL: Right, for some reason, this author keep using the Korean word for molars when describing the characteristics of the High Orc. So, he named the new Shadow Soldier “Molar” but I just couldn’t use that in my good conscience and swapped it out to “Fangs” which, to me personally, make more physiological sense. I mean, lengthy molars wouldn’t be practical at all, right? And I’m pretty sure Orcs have long fangs, not long molars....)

REPORT

Woo Jin-Cheol was the first to react.

While everyone else was busy eyeing others around them, he quickly walked right up to Jin-Woo's side, pulled out his identification card and displayed it proudly for all to see.

“We’re from the Association’s Monitoring Division.”

Didn't matter whether you were a high ranked Hunter or a low ranked one, you'd inevitably tense up after hearing the name of the Monitoring Division. And this tactic was the right one.

It was only for a brief moment, but a hint of nervousness flashed past the expressions of the Hunters Guild members, with the sole exception of Cha Hae-In.

Woo Jin-Cheol seized upon this chance and carried on with what he wanted to say.

“The identity of Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim is being strictly guarded by the Association. It is highly classified information that cannot be revealed publicly.”

Jin-Woo could only stand back in dumbfounded admiration at Woo Jin-Cheol's skilful bullsh*tting.

Heck, his expression and words looked and sounded so natural that one couldn't help but wonder if he practised it every morning while looking in the mirror or some such.

Whatever the case may be, his intentions definitely got through to the other party. At the same time, Woo Jin-Cheol sent the slightest hint of a signal to Jin-Woo with his eyes.

‘We will assist you with avoiding unnecessary fuss when exiting from this place.’

Jin-Woo had no idea why the Monitoring Division were helping him, but since they were volunteering to take care of the aftermath, was there a reason for him to refuse now?

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

That's what he wanted, anyway.

The quick-witted subordinates of Woo Jin-Cheol quickly surrounded Jin-Woo like bodyguards.

“If you have any questions, please send them to the Association. We shall escort Seong Jin-Woo Hunter now.”

Not-so-subtle implication of ‘We won’t hear any of your objections’ was apparent in his voice.

All thanks to Woo Jin-Cheol’s hardened attitude, hard enough to shatter a rock even, the members of the Hunters Guild had no choice but to rein in their questions and stay silent.

“Shall we go?”

While being escorted by the agents of the Monitoring Division, Jin-Woo walked past the Hunters.

‘Well, I am grateful, but...’

Something felt a bit odd, just then. Why did Chief Woo Jin-Cheol do something no one asked him to do in the first place? Once they got to a sufficient distance away from the members of the Hunters Guild, Jin-Woo quietly asked.

“Why are you doing this all of a sudden?”

“By any chance, are you thinking of signing up with the Hunters Guild?”

Jin-Woo shook his head. As if he knew that such an answer was coming already, Woo Jin-Cheol quickly made his reply.

“What you did just now was to display the kind of power that exceeds rank S classification in front of the employees working for the largest, wealthiest Guild in South Korea. If you wish to avoid annoying matters in the near future, this method is the best one.”

Indeed, he was right.

No one could tell just what lengths the wealthy Hunters Guild might go to secure another rank S Hunter. Other Hunters would raise their hands and welcome that, but Jin-Woo was different.

It was the same story for the Hunter’s Association, too.

And so, the interests of both the Association, trying to prevent the concentration of too much power to one specific Guild, and Jin-Woo’s, who found the hindrance (?) of the Guilds annoying, lined up rather nicely.

Since this wasn't one-sided goodwill coming from the other party but something that would help both sides, Jin-Woo didn't feel uncomfortable by the current situation at all.

'Well, things have become more convenient thanks to the Association.'

Because this matter had been resolved quite nicely in an unexpected manner, Jin-Woo could afford to float a thin, nearly-imperceptible smile on his lips.

But, as they were about to exit from the boss room for good....

"H-hold on!!"

An urgent call came from behind the group.

Unintentionally looking back, Jin-Woo spotted Sohn Ki-Hoon approaching them while being supported by his big-framed colleague. All of his external wounds had been healed perfectly, but his complexion remained pale as he had lost a lot of blood.

'It'd be better for him to not move yet, though.'

Despite Jin-Woo's worries, Sohn Ki-Hoon managed to stand before him. He then bowed deeply.

"Thank you."

And he began speaking up his mind without holding anything back.

"Thanks to you, we are all still alive. On behalf of the raid team, I'd like to thank you."

If one believed the words of the Monitoring Division's Hunters, then this young man seemed to be burdened by some kind of circumstances preventing him from revealing himself.

'With that kind of power, it'd not be too strange if he does have some kind of an unspeakable circumstance.'

However....

He risked his identity being revealed to aid Sohn Ki-Hoon and the rest of the raid team. But, was that all? He didn't even ask for any compensation, either.

He could've easily requested the Hunters Guild for the corpses of the monsters or for the cost of saving the lives of the raid team, but he backed off without saying a thing.

So, how could he not bow down to this young man?

“....Thank you very much!”

His emotions now getting raw, Sohn Ki-Hoon bent his back forward 90 degrees once more. That sudden movement caused his aching body to scream out in pain, but he actually found that rather welcoming.

His heart had welled up with emotions when he saw Jin-Woo kill the monster in the exact same fashion as how he had been toyed around with before. Thinking back to that moment was enough for him to thank this young man a countless number of times.

The Hunters of the raid team saw their leader bow down to express his gratitude and finally snapped out of their stupor.

‘If it wasn’t for that man....’

‘He’s our saviour, isn’t he?’

‘In that case, I shouldn’t be standing around like this in a daze.’

They scrambled to get closer and bowed their heads as well.

“Thank you, Mister Port.... No, I mean, Hunter-nim.”

“If it wasn’t for you, we.....”

“Thanks to you, my wife won’t become a widow now.”

A young male Hunter who showed off his shaking hands back when Sohn Ki-Hoon decided to give up on raiding this dungeon, approached Jin-Woo with a tearful face.

“Excuse me, Hunter-nim.... It’s because I’m really grateful so, like, can I hug you just this once?”

“Eiii, that’s too much, dude.”

“He’s starting again. Someone stop him.”

“Well, why don’t you hug me instead, then??”

Hug.

“Euh-heok?! You’re giving me the creeps, so let go of me!!”

Wahahahahaha.....

For the first time ever since entering this particular rank A dungeon, the members of the raid team got to laugh to their heart’s content.

Jin-Woo stared at these Hunters, feeling content inside. He didn’t help them out for their flattery or for their praises, but their genuine thanks did automatically bring about a warm smile to his lips.

“....Ah.”

Jin-Woo walked over to the female Hunter jumping up and down by the corner.

‘Because she’s so small, I nearly failed to spot her.’

When he pushed forward the memo she gave to him earlier, the female Healer blushed and received it with both of her hands.

“T-thank you....”

Inwardly, though, she was admonishing herself.

‘Ah-whew. Why did I even say those embarrassing things to him back then?’

She now had one more reason to kick her sheets before going to bed if and when she ended up remembering today’s event in the future.

From the perspective of Mister Porter who could easily punch the dungeon boss to death, she must’ve looked really funny when she handed over a memo while saying it contained her final will.

She slightly raised her head and found that, thankfully enough, he wasn’t sneering at her. No, actually – he began speaking to her in a bit of strict voice.

“Miss Healer.”

“Y-yes?”

The female Healer straightened her posture right away like a student being reprimanded for her sloppy behaviour.

“From today onwards, please refrain from placing your personal articles inside the raid team’s luggage. It only serves to increase the volume.”

The female Healer became utterly speechless, her eyes opening up to form round buttons. Jin-Woo grinned in satisfaction.

He said all he wanted to say. And it seemed that the other party had pretty much said everything in her mind, too. So, putting the dazed female Healer behind him, he coolly turned around to leave.

“Let’s go.”

As soon as Jin-Woo began walking, the agents of the Monitoring Division moved together in one unit as if they had been rehearsing it.

There was one exception, though.

‘Ah...’

Only Cha Hae-In had failed to say something to Jin-Woo and she tried to reach out to him, but gave up in the end.

‘I wanted to ask him for his contact numbers....’

All she wanted was to ask him if he could find some time to talk to her. However, she might be misunderstood if she asked him that now, what with the current situation not being settled yet.

It was then.

A female Hunter walked over to Cha Hae-In.

“Excuse me.... Vice Chair?”

“Yes?”

When Cha Hae-In turned around to look, the female Hunter pointed to her hand.

“Why are you carrying a pickaxe?”

Cha Hae-In’s gaze drifted towards the head of the pickaxe and her face began blushing rather quickly. She hurriedly lowered the pickaxe and cautiously asked.

“You think he found me weird?”

The female Hunter, a mage, tilted her head and asked back.

“Who did?”

And that caused not just Cha Hae-In’s face, but even her neck to blush in the deep shade of crimson.

When they came out of the Gate...

Woo Jin-Cheol took a look at his wristwatch and asked Jin-Woo.

“We’re planning to return to the Association but, well.... If it’s okay with you, why don’t you ride along with us and join the Association President for dinner?”

“What time is it now?”

“It’s quarter past five. PM.”

‘Mm...’

Although he was cutting it close, he should be able to arrive at the promised location in time.

Jin-Woo politely rejected Woo Jin-Cheol's invitation.

"I'm sorry. I've already made a prior engagement."

Shu, shu, fuu, fuu....

Yu Jin-Ho did his very best to maintain his calm by breathing in deeply several times, just like how he saw it in one of the movies.

'My fated hour is approaching.'

Indeed, hyung-nim's choice would decide Yu Jin-Ho's fate.

His heart was palpitating faster, and he felt even more nervous compared to a few days ago when he was negotiating with his father for the right to become the Yujin Guild Master.

'Let's go back to my original purpose. My original purpose....'

It was no coincidence that he chose the exact same cafe as the first time he met hyung-nim back when to propose his plan.

'Without hyung-nim's help, I wouldn't even be here right now.'

He began looking around the interior of the cafe while thinking as such, and he was able to see this place in a new light. Quite coincidentally, the table he chose was the exact same one as the last time, too.

Ringgg....

Along with the doorbell, Jin-Woo entered the cafe.

"Hyung-nim!"

Yu Jin-Ho discovered Jin-Woo and shot up from his seat with a welcoming smile on his face. He bowed down as his greeting. Jin-Woo performed a simple little greeting with a nod and settled down on the opposite side of Yu Jin-Ho. The latter sat down after that.

"So, what did you call me here for?"

Yu Jin-Ho raised his head, only for his eyes to widen.

"H-hyung-nim, your clothes.....?"

"Oh, this?"

Jin-Woo came running here right after killing the High Orcs so his clothing was understandably dirty. His shirt even sported bloodstains from the dying High Orcs, too. He spoke as if there was nothing to worry about.

"I was coming straight from a dungeon, that's why."

'Heok!'

Yu Jin-Ho was taken by surprise once more.

He was nothing compared to someone like hyung-nim; after getting his Guild Master licence, all Yu Jin-Ho did was to waste time by drinking and partying. But, what did hyung-nim do in the meantime? He possessed incredible power, yet he still found time to enter dungeons to further hone his crafts.

Suddenly, Yu Jin-Ho felt ashamed of himself.

And at the same time, he held hyung-nim in an even higher reverence now.

The reason why hyung-nim didn't bother to wipe away the blood on his clothes was probably because he was confident and forthright enough not to feel the need to hide his training process.

‘Well, the evidence of battle would be more like a medal of honour that he earned through his own two hands, after all.’

Yu Jin-Ho's expression hardened. He was ready to follow hyung-nim's decision, regardless of which direction he'd take.

So, he should come clean and don't hold anything back.

“Hyung-nim, actually....”

Yu Jin-Ho didn't leave anything out and reported everything that happened during the negotiation with his father to Jin-Woo – even the event of Goh Myoung-Hwan's testimony revealing the truth of who saved the Hunters of the White Tiger Guild from the Red Gate incident, too.

‘That uncle, doing something unnecessary....’

Still, that man did that for Jin-Woo's benefit, so he couldn't get angry at that.

Perhaps that was the reason for Yu Jin-Ho's expression to be a bit more glowing than usual when he was talking about the Red Gate incident.

In any case....

Jin-Woo knew what Yu Jin-Ho was trying to say here.

“So, in order for you to become the Yujin Guild's new Master, you need my help, is that about right?”

Finishing all he had to say, Yu Jin-Ho calmly waited for Jin-Woo's reply. He didn't grow restless or try to sweet talk like how he would do normally.

‘Well, I'm talking to hyung-nim here, after all.’

Yu Jin-Ho was definitely thinking of leaving everything to hyung-nim's decision.

Remaining silent as long as Yu Jin-Ho's worries were deep, Jin-Woo finally raised his gaze.

“Hey, Jin-Ho. I am....”

Gulp.

Yu Jin-Ho swallowed his drying saliva.

The Chairman of the Hunters Guild Choi Jong-In received a certain call. After answering that, he abandoned what he was doing, entered his private chamber, and began shouting out loudly at the phone.

“What was that?! Seong Jin-Woo was present during our raids yesterday and today?!”

The newly-appeared rank S Hunter, Seong Jin-Woo.

Such a man decided to present himself right before Choi Jong-In's own Guild, yet why did he fail to even notice that?! It was the same thing as kicking away the golden goose willing to enter his house.

It was enough to make him tear his hair out, but...

“Whaaat?! He was working for the mining team yesterday, and today, he was carrying luggage?!”

....After hearing that revelation, it did make sense for him to not know.

‘Okay, for the time being, let's not worry about why he did what he did....’

He got this feeling that sweating over that mystery would only give him a case of a migraine and no tangible answer to chew on. Besides, that wasn't important at all.

‘After White Tiger, us Hunters also owe that man now.’

Indeed, they were indebted to Seong Jin-Woo.

Choi Jong-In wished to talk to that man as equals as much as he could before attempting to scout him, but now, his position was no different than that of the White Tiger.

‘Even still, I learned of the tenth rank S's existence before anyone else, so that's something.’

That's right.

The more pressing issue here was not the fact that his Guild received that man's aid, but rather, knowing of what his abilities were.

“Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, what type of Hunter was he?”

As he listened to the explanation coming from the other side of the phone line, Choi Jong-In began talking progressively less and less.

The person he was talking to right now – the Hunter who took on the role of the raid team's captain, Sohn Ki-Hoon, wasn't a fellow who'd lie about something that didn't happen, or embellish something minor as if it was a big deal. Even then, Choi Jong-In asked reflexively.

“Are you telling me the truth??”

‘That's all he saw....?! Does that mean there could be more?!’

If Seong Jin-Woo was that powerful, then....

“If you compare him to me, then how about it?”

Although he may have sounded a bit childish just then, there was no better way to ascertain someone's strength than this question.

Sohn Ki-Hoon took a little time before continuing on.

“.....No, it's impossible.”

‘Cha Hae-In was there, too?’

Something felt a bit off, but her being there was not a big problem to worry about.

“Is there a chance that the dungeon was not an upper grade rank A?”

“....”

Choi Jong-In was often referred to as the ‘Ultimate Weapon’.

From a certain perspective, one could argue that he was being roundly disregarded in this situation, but rather than feeling sour, his heart was pounding harder instead.

‘Me, Cha Hae-In, and then, Seong Jin-Woo.’

This was the golden chance that his Guild could become renowned in South Korea, no, Asia, no, the whole world, on the back of Seong Jin-Woo's abilities alone.

Sohn Ki-Hoon was definitely not someone who'd go beyond his stations and run his mouth off about the Guild. So, Choi Jong-In became even more curious about what he might say next.

“No, it’s fine. Please speak.”

Ba-dump.

Choi Jong-In’s heart began beating faster.

He tried very hard to disguise his trembling voice as he spoke.

“I’ll do my best.”

In front of the Korean Hunters Association main building.

The sea of reporters showing up to cover Rhee Min-Seong’s rank assignment test had set up a camp in front of the Association building.

South Korea’s own Rhee Min-Seong, often referred as Asia’s top superstar, becoming a Hunter!

It wouldn’t be an exaggeration to say that the cameras from the entire world were being focused here today.

What with space being such a premium, the reporters began a war of nerves with each other.

“Excuse me! We already reserved this spot!”

“Hey man! Are you blind? Can’t you see how many people showed up today? Who cares about your spot or mine?! Your spot is where you’re standing.”

“Dang it....”

Meanwhile, a full-blown smile was forming on Rhee Min-Seong’s face as he stared through the window at the sea of reporters extending as far as the access road while standing inside the Association building.

“Indeed, this many people showing up sounds about right.”

Deliberately wasting time and attracting the attention of the public definitely paid off today.

“Excuse me, Mister Min-Seong? This will be tomorrow’s headline, but what do you think about it?”

South Korea’s top newspaper reporter showed Rhee Min-Seong the manuscript for tomorrow’s front page and asked.

“Don’t you think using that as the headline is a bit dull?”

“You think so?”

“Hmm.... How about this one? ‘The man who has everything, Rhee Min-Seong. He now grasps power transcending humanity!’. Well?”

“But, if we use a strong lead-in like that, don’t you think a portion of the readers will feel uncomfortable?”

“Well, I’m not exaggerating here, and besides, no one in their right minds would talk rubbish about me in South Korea, anyway. I mean, both the media and my fans are watching closely with their eyes wide open, after all.”

“Okay. Got it. We’ll go with that one.”

“I’ll be in your care.”

Rhee Min-Seong bowed his head good-naturedly, but when he raised it again, a deep frown was etched on his face.

‘He’s going to do what I told him in the end, so why does he have to yap on about so much crap?’

It was then, two imported luxury sedans arrived at the parking lot of the Association. Two men climbed out of their respective cars almost at the same time – they were none other than Baek Yun-Ho from the White Tiger Guild, and Choi Jong-In from the Hunters Guild.

“Uh? Look at that!”

“It’s Baek Yun-Ho!”

“Choi Jong-In’s here too!”

The reporters blocking the front entrance of the Association building all rushed towards the side of these two men. Baek Yun-Ho and Choi Jong-In both frowned unhappily.

‘What is up with these reporters?’

‘Why is it so chaotic today?’

The noises of camera flashes going off were ringing out loudly. Countless reporters surrounded these two men and began their barrage of questions.

“Are you two visiting the Association to scout Mister Rhee Min-Seong?”

“As the Hunters representing South Korea, what do you think about Mister Rhee Min-Seong potentially retiring from the entertainment industry?”

“What do you think will be Mister Rhee Min-Seong’s rank?”

“Please share your thoughts on Mister Rhee Min-Seong.”

The famously short-tempered Baek Yun-Ho waved his hands around as if he found all this annoying.

“I’m not here because of that man. I’ve nothing else to say.”

...While Choi Jong-In emotionlessly stated the facts.

“Anyone related to this matter would know by now that Mister Rhee Min-Seong has already signed up with the Reapers Guild. I’m visiting the Association today on an unrelated matter.”

After hearing answers that didn’t meet their expectations, the reporters inwardly grumbled and turned around.

‘Eii, what the hell.’

‘And I thought I might have a juicy new story.’

‘I got excited for no dang reason.’

Still, none of them dared to express their dissatisfaction in front of a pair of rank S Hunters. Reporters returned to their spots and began their waiting for Rhee Min-Seong’s emergence once more.

Once the reporters left them alone, Baek Yun-Ho and Choi Jong-In met each other’s glare. Baek Yun-Ho greeted his counterpart first.

“I heard the story. Hunters Guild almost got into a big tangle yesterday, too. Or so I hear.”

He even deliberately emphasized the word ‘too’ as well.

“Well, it wasn’t much of a big ‘tangle’, compared to how the White Tiger had to lose their newbie rank A.”

The two men’s war of nerves was just as fierce as the one taking place among the reporters. Baek Yun-Ho was incensed for a little bit there, but eventually, he sighed out softly and spoke up.

“In any case, both the Hunters and us are in that man’s debt.”

“We really were kissed by Lady Luck yesterday. If he wasn’t there, my second elite team would’ve been wiped out.”

Even though both men knew that person’s name, not mentioning it could be considered the final act to their war of nerves. Choi Jong-In took a step closer.

“That is why, out of principal, I’d like to ‘definitely’ bring that man over to our Guild.”

Baek Yun-Ho didn’t back down. He and Choi Jong-In got close enough for their foreheads to nearly butt against each other.

“We even had suffered casualties. Looking at the need to replenish our combat force, wouldn’t you agree that person joining us makes more sense?”

“Just what are you planning to do by recruiting a rank S to shore up your combat force? Are you thinking of invading North Korea or something?”

“What about you? Since when did you worry about principals and the like to talk about your principals here?”

Flames erupted out from the eyes of the two men.

‘...Huh?’

Master of the Reapers Guild, Im Tae-Gyu, was arriving at the Association building just now to match the timing of the press conference. When he saw those two growling at one another, a mocking smirk formed on his face.

Wasn't there an old saying for that?

Didn't it go, counting chickens before hatching or something like that?

For Im Tae-Gyu, this sure was an exciting development, since he always lost out to their two Guilds when trying to secure resources until now. He did his best to not to let the corners of his lips arch up and approached the two men.

“Oiii, two Guild chairmen over there. I hope you aren't acting like that over my Min-Seong, no?”

And then, both Baek Yun-Ho and Choi Jong-In's heads spun at the same time towards Im Tae-Gyu. It was hard to tell who was first, really.

‘What the hell is up with this moron?’

*‘I don't give a rat's a*s about this Rhee Min-Seong or Rhee Min-Gun or whatever.’*

Im Tae-Gyu flinched in surprise and took a step back when two rather terrifying glares landed squarely on him.

*‘What is up with these two b*stards all of a sudden?!’*

‘What's this? Choi Jong-In, and Baek Yun-Ho, too?’

Rhee Min-Seong grinned deeply.

He already familiar with Chairman Im Tae-Gyu when they met during the signing of the contract.

Rhee Min-Seong signing up with the Reapers Guild, which had been criticised for being a shell of its former glory, while disregarding the country's top two Guilds, was a calculated move on his part.

‘I mean, with this, I’ll enjoy the image of someone willing to stand up for the underdogs.’

Crudely speaking, celebrities survived on their public image. And Rhee Min-Seong was really meticulous about maintaining his.

‘The best Guilds in Korea are fighting over me....’

He wasn’t thinking of carrying on this Hunter lifestyle for long, but still, that sight naturally made him feel even better about himself. Soon afterwards, his manager entered the reception area.

“Min-Seong-ah, they say they are ready now. Let’s go and do the press conference.”

“Alright.”

The manager took the lead. He opened the glass front entrance and allowed Rhee Min-Seong to emerge from the Association building; camera flashes exploded in a scary cacophony of endless shutter clicks.

Click, click, click, click, click.....

As he would do every day, Rhee Min-Seong formed a fake smile towards hundreds of lenses surrounding him.

It was then.

Jin-Woo had finally arrived at the front of the Association.

‘.....??’

Just like he’d been told, he was stopping by the Association three days later.

‘Why is it so noisy here?’

However, it didn’t look like he’d be able to enter the Association at all under the current circumstances. Of course, there were plenty of ways to go around these people, such as using ‘Stealth’, or jumping over the reporters, or even by finding a back entrance.

But then again, his re-evaluation test had been reserved in advance three days ago, so he didn’t feel like going through the back entrance just to avoid this wall of reporters.

He had no reason not to use the front door at all. Jin-Woo then proceeded to push away the tightly-packed throngs of reporters and made a path for himself.

“I’m coming through.”

“Oii, what are you doing??”

“What the hell?”

“What’s wrong with you?!”

This was the physical strength of a rank S Hunter. Reporters were all helplessly pushed away, deep frowns etched on their faces. The path forward was opened up in the blink of an eye, and Jin-Woo could walk up the steps leading to the front entrance of the Association.

However, even before he could take another step, a large, muscular dude suddenly blocked Jin-Woo’s path.

“Oii!!”

He was Rhee Min-Seong’s manager. His eyebrows rose up as he growled menacingly.

“Who the hell are you? You work for the Association or something?”

Jin-Woo didn’t bother to avert his gaze and met this manager’s glare squarely, before shaking his head.

‘Huh? Would you look at this b*stard?’

The manager’s thick eyebrows quivered.

“Can’t you see all those reporters behind you?!”

Jin-Woo took a short glance at the reporters. They were all shooting him with unhappy glares. Even Jin-Woo could understand that they were trying to do a press conference here. However, it wasn’t as if they had rented out the whole entrance, now had they?

A private individual had no right to chase away the reporters, and conversely, they had no right to chase him away, either. That was common knowledge.

There were plenty of eyes watching and Jin-Woo didn’t particularly want to raise his voice here, so he was going to ignore this idiot and walk right by, but at that moment....

“Go back to where you came from. You can’t go through here. Get lost, punk.”

The manager blocked the path again and tried to shove Jin-Woo’s chest away. The light in Jin-Woo’s eyes changed immediately.

‘...What was that?!’

The manager was taken by a huge surprise.

He was a melee-type rank D Awakened, and pushed this young punk away with the full intention of embarrassing him, but the guy didn't even budge from the spot as if his legs were nailed to the ground.

The manager had used enough force that would've injured a regular person greatly. Jin-Woo also knew that fact very well.

“.....”

That was why he wordlessly glared, and that alone was enough to gradually drain the manager's face of all colour.

“What the heck? What's the matter with that guy?”

“What happened? Are they going to fight?”

Bustle, bustle...

The reporters present all sensed the atmosphere becoming rather strange, and they became noisy quite quickly.

Cold sweat was pouring out of the manager.

If there was no one watching, he'd have conceded already and stepped aside. However, never mind the reporters, his employer Rhee Min-Seong was watching him from behind at the moment.

Rhee Min-Seong walked closer to the manager and whispered with a deep frown.

“Argh, hyung, what are you doing? Hurry up and get rid of this loser already.”

“Uh, uh..... S-sure thing.”

If he showed a shameful sight here, then he'd lose his job without a doubt. The manager's expression crumpled unsightly and he raised his voice up high.

“You can't pass by here, so get lost already!”

“And just who said you can block the entrance like this?”

‘Uh?’

The reply didn't come from the manager's front but from his back. The manager quickly spun his head around.

The Hunter's Association President Goh Gun-Hui stood tall in front of the glass doors. The eyes of the reporters grew extra round. They were so shocked that they even forgot to operate their cameras.

“G-Goh Gun-Hui?!”

“President Goh Gun-Hui’s here?”

The once-chaotic bustling atmosphere immediately cooled down with the entrance of someone completely unexpected. Goh Gun-Hui walked right up to the steps and spoke up.

“This gentleman is my guest.”

And then, Goh Gun-Hui stared at Rhee Min-Seong.

“I hope you haven’t forgotten who gave you the permission to hold a press conference in this place, Mister Rhee Min-Seong.”

Rhee Min-Seong recovered his wits right away.

“O-of course, sir.”

The first day as a Hunter, he falls out of favour with the Association President and loses the location of the press conference – Rhee Min-Seong couldn’t afford to suffer such a humiliation when there were so many eyes watching him right now.

Rhee Min-Seong frowned and quickly signalled his manager; the burly guy bowed slightly to both Goh Gun-Hui and Jin-Woo and voluntarily stepped aside.

“Please, follow me, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

Even until Jin-Woo disappeared into the Association building under the guidance of Goh Gun-Hui, the gathered reporters couldn’t hide their confusion at all.

Noisy, noisy....

“What was that all about?”

“Who was that man, and why is the Association President personally coming out to greet him?”

“Does anyone know who that man is?”

Reporters felt frustrated and raised their voices, but there was no one answering them.

Chapter 93 Fin.

REPORT

Rhee Min-Seong's expression stiffened right away.

A mysterious man who cut through the throng of reporters, and then, the Association President Goh Gun-Hui who came out to personally escort that man into the building.

“How does President Goh Gun-Hui’s schedule look like for the rest of today?”

“I hear he cancelled everything for the morning.”

“Are you telling me that the Association President cancelled the whole morning’s worth of appointments for that man?”

Noisy, noisy.....

This place had become too restless after those two men’s sudden entrance, and the current situation was no longer suitable for holding a press conference.

But, just how much effort did Rhee Min-Seong pour in for today’s event? He shot a glare at his manager with an expression of a man chewing on insects.

‘D*mn idiot of a manager who can’t even take care of something so simple...’

The manager couldn’t meet that glare and powerlessly lowered his head; now that Rhee Min-Seong had become a rank A Awakened, the manager couldn’t even win against him in physical strength anymore. He had no choice but to cower accordingly.

‘.....’

Rhee Min-Seong glared at his manager for a long time, before his head naturally spun towards his side.

“Cue!”

‘D*mn it!’

Like throwing salt on the wound, the camera crew from the news stations were getting ready to leave. They were supposed to broadcast everything live.

If this ‘distracted’ spectacle got on the airwaves and was broadcast to the rest of the country, then there was a good chance that all of Rhee Min-Seong’s hard work to increase his brand’s value by becoming a rank A Hunter would go down the drain for good.

However, the Association President Goh Gun-Hui’s entrance caused too much of a ripple to calm the mood down and restart the press conference. Just why did someone so big have to appear at such an important time??

‘Isn’t there a way to reverse this situation?’

The quick-witted Rhee Min-Seong began kicking his brain into gear.

‘Right. Only a big something can reverse a situation like this one.’

These reporters didn’t come here because they wanted to find out about his feelings regarding the rank assignment test or some such. No, they came here to find out what the top star Rhee Min-Seong’s Hunter ranking would be, as well as what his future plan was after he got his licence.

If he gave them what they wanted, then everything would return to order.

‘I should start the assignment test ahead of schedule.’

A sly smile formed on Rhee Min-Seong’s face.

Indeed, his ability to come up with schemes on the fly, something others around him had already acknowledged him for, remained rather exceptional.

“Excuse me, everyone. Allow me to go have a quick chat regarding my schedule today with the Association’s representatives.”

Blurting that nonsense to the reporters, Rhee Min-Seong then headed to the main Association building. It was to not to ‘discuss’ the change of schedule but to ‘declare’ his intentions.

‘I mean, you have any idea how much my dad donates to the Association? The Association or not, they should grovel accordingly before me.’

Unfortunately...

‘Huh??’

Just before he could push open the glass front door, Hunters from the Monitoring Division rushed out first and he was pushed back, instead. They stood in a line to block off the front entrance.

‘What the hell is this now?!’

Rhee Min-Seong’s forehead creased up. He quickly checked the name tag attached to one of the men's chest.

'Section Chief Woo Jin-Cheol, Hunter's Association Monitoring Division?'

Rhee Min-Seong questioned Woo Jin-Cheol right away.

"What's the meaning of this? Why are you blocking the entrance?"

Woo Jin-Cheol's sunglasses-covered eyes stared down at Rhee Min-Seong.

"Currently, another Awakened is going through the process of the rank re-assignment test. No one will be allowed to enter the building until 11 o'clock, when the test is scheduled to end."

"What did you just say?!"

By 'another Awakened', was this man referring to that young man who followed the Association President into the building not too long ago?

Rhee Min-Seong took a look at his watch. The time now was half past ten in the morning. Eleven o'clock was the originally scheduled time for his rank assignment test. No one was allowed to enter before that?

Rhee Min-Seong's scheme to take the test ahead of schedule to reverse the situation was about to blow up in his face.

At first, he spoke in a polite tone of voice.

"Please, don't be like this and let me in. I have something to discuss with the related department of the Association."

"I'm sorry."

Woo Jin-Cheol shut his mouth up with that single short sentence.

With his frustration boiling over, Rhee Min-Seong couldn't hold back any longer and his true colours slowly surfaced to the fore.

"Look here, mister. Don't you know who I am? I'm Rhee Min-Seong, man. Rhee Min-Seong!"

Rhee Min-Seong's tone of voice became sharp and abrasive as if he could no longer take this crap, but still, Woo Jin-Cheol showed no sign of budging.

"Hah...."

Rhee Min-Seong spat out a dumbfounded groan.

"Oii. You know that Yujin Construction is the biggest sponsor of the Hunter's Association, right?"

The corners of Rhee Min-Seong's lips arched up.

“Vice Chairman of the Yujin Construction, Rhee Won-Gyu is my father, okay? And do you see all these people behind me?”

Rhee Min-Seong pointed towards the sea of reporters below the entrance steps.

“You think you can treat the son of Yujin Construction’s Vice Chairman this badly in front of these many reporters? You think you can handle the fallout?”

Woo Jin-Cheol’s reply was pretty simple.

“Yes, we can.”

“What?!”

Rhee Min-Seong was even more dumbfounded now.

Just who the hell was that young man for the Association President to personally escort him inside, and block off the entire building for a measly rank assignment test?

And, letting a Section Chief gopher, someone not even that high up in the food chain like a head of the department, to do whatever the hell he pleased??

Rhee Min-Seong’s hands were placed on his waist as he began questioning in anger.

“Just who the hell is this ‘another Awakened’ supposed to be that the Association is willing to bend over backwards like this?”

Only then did Woo Jin-Cheol remove his sunglasses.

“If I were to tell you that....”

Flinch.

When Woo Jin-Cheol’s sharp, scary eyes resembling a bird of prey were finally revealed, Rhee Min-Seong unwittingly took a step back.

Woo Jin-Cheol continued to glare at Rhee Min-Seong and quietly spoke.

“.....Do you think you can handle the fallout instead, Mister Rhee Min-Seong?”

The inside of the main building was rather empty.

There was no one waiting to take their rank assignment test inside the hallway, with only a smattering of Association employees going about their usual business.

This unusual situation was probably related to the reason why all those reporters were camping outside.

“Please, come this way.”

“Alright.”

Jin-Woo was about to follow after Goh Gun-Hui’s guidance and enter the measurement room, but then, spotted two somewhat familiar-looking faces.

‘Eh?’

Baek Yun-Ho and Choi Jong-In were sitting on the waiting room chairs facing the measurement room. That was where smartly-dressed headhunters of various smaller Guilds could be found three days ago.

When their gazes met, both men stood up from their seats and bowed lightly. Jin-Woo reciprocated the greeting and walked past the hallway. As they walked down on the passageway, a soft smile formed on Goh Gun-Hui’s lips.

“Those two men, they have been waiting for you for about an hour.”

The leaders of two Guilds that represented South Korea in the world stage had shown up one hour early to wait for the re-evaluation result?

Perhaps he had read Jin-Woo’s expression, because Goh Gun-Hui continued to explain in a calm voice.

“A new rank S Hunter has appeared after two long years. And besides, Choi Jong-In has heard of your powers so he should be even more anxious at the moment.”

Jin-Woo slowly nodded his head.

“Oh, my!”

“Association President!”

The Association employees they met on the way all politely greeted Goh Gun-Hui, and stared at Jin-Woo with mystified eyes.

‘Who is that man that necessitates our Association President to personally guide him?’

‘Could he be someone really important?’

‘How can someone that young know our President?’

Goh Gun-Hui had never shown up to personally receive guests even when a government minister came to visit, so the fact that he was doing precisely that had shocked the Association employees to no end.

Goh Gun-Hui spoke while keeping his eyes fixed to the front.

“I heard about what happened yesterday.”

Goh Gun-Hui’s expression was one of enjoyment for some reason.

As a matter of fact, he was indeed feeling really excited. Because his expectation of Seong Jin-Woo being a different type of Hunter from the rest proved to be right on the money, that was why.

When he heard about Seong Jin-Woo’s actions from Woo Jin-Cheol, sweat formed in Goh Gun-Hui’s hands as if he was personally there, witnessing everything.

‘Yes, he does have incredible powers, but also....’

But also, he found Seong Jin-Woo’s actions afterwards even more to his liking.

Including the boss, he had almost single-handedly cleared the dungeon all by himself, yet the young man had shown not one trace of greed over the loot found within.

If Seong Jin-Woo’s real aim was to fight monsters and protect other people rather than become famous and make lots of money, then the Association was fully prepared to support him in every conceivable manner. Because, that goal lined up perfectly with the purpose of the Association’s existence.

‘If it’s possible, I wish I could bring him into the Association with whatever means necessary, but...’

But, he couldn’t do that, now could he?

Just like what the young man told him before, entering the Association would mean he’d have nearly zero opportunity to fight against the monsters.

And from what Goh Gun-Hui had heard about Seong Jin-Woo’s powers, it was way too good to be wasted outside dungeons.

Soon, they arrived at the examination area, located deeper within the building.

“Before the re-evaluation can take place, we must confirm your abilities first and set the new classification for you.”

Jin-Woo already knew that.

Hunters were classified as a melee, mage, healing, or even support-type according to their abilities, and performed their roles where they were needed the most.

The Association employee waiting at the examination area bent his back forward 90 degrees to greet Goh Gun-Hui, and took over guiding Jin-Woo from him.

Jin-Woo stepped up to the middle of the examination area. Its interior layout much resembled an indoor gymnasium commonly found everywhere.

If there was one thing different from those gymnasiums, then it'd be the fact that one could sense powerful fluctuations of magic energy coming from the walls as well as from the floor. Magic had been utilised to reinforce the structure in case something went wrong.

The examiner asked Jin-Woo.

“What kind of ability can you use?”

The Association President Goh Gun-Hui didn't return to his office immediately and, while standing in the far corner, stared at the examination process with a great deal of interest.

This was the reason why he came to guide Jin-Woo personally. He wanted to confirm Jin-Woo's powers with his own eyes as quickly as possible.

“Well, I can do this.”

Jin-Woo called out a single Shadow Soldier.

“Heok?!”

The examiner was greatly taken by surprise.

Seriously speaking, how could anyone stay composed when a soldier decked out in jet-black armour suddenly rose up from the ground?

Jin-Woo deliberately chose the lowest levelled one out of his regular Soldiers, but still, the dude emitted intense pressure that most normal people found hard to endure.

“This.... Is this your summoned creature? You can control a summon?”

The examiner's voice was trembling noticeably.

Jin-Woo had half a mind to helpfully explain that his Soldier was definitely not dangerous, but....

He formed a pitying expression while making his reply.

“....Well, something like that.”

“I-in that case, h-how many summoned creatures can you control?”

‘Well, it will be useless to lie, so....’

Indeed, the number of eyewitnesses who saw his Shadow Soldiers yesterday was nearly twenty.

Jin-Woo spoke up a slightly reduced number of Soldiers sealed inside his shadow through his skill.

The examiner’s eyes went extra round at the number 100.

“A h-hundred?!”

“Yes.”

On the other hand, Jin-Woo remained nonplussed.

At the same time...

As he stared at the Shadow Soldier, Goh Gun-Hui’s eyes were glittering brightly.

‘A hundred of those....’

At a glance, that ‘soldier’ possessed around the same amount of magic energy as a rank B Hunter. If that young man could summon a hundred of those soldiers, then one simply had to concede that his powers had already exceeded a regular large Guild’s combat force.

Truthfully, that was an incredible ability.

Jin-Woo could feel Goh Gun-Hui’s passionate gaze burning up on his skin.

He breathed a sigh of relief after confirming the reactions of the surroundings.

‘Well, if one regular Soldier can elicit this sort of reaction, then....’

He should thank his lucky stars that he didn’t choose to call out the highest levelled soldier among his flock, ‘Igrit’, or the boss-level creature he managed to poach yesterday, ‘Fangs’.

Whatever the case may be, this was enough to prove the type of ability he had possessed.

“In that case.... Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim, you’re a mage type.”

The examiner studiously jotted down something on the recording document and raised his head up, while looking rather satisfied.

“We can now head to the measurement room.”

Jin-Woo held the newly-issued Hunter licence in his hand.

It said, ‘Seong Jin-Woo, rank S, Mage-type’.

Even though his face was plastered on the photo box, he still found it hard to believe.

‘Very good. It’s been smooth sailing until now.’

Jin-Woo quickly shoved his new Hunter licence inside his wallet. When he got to the end of the corridor, the waiting duo of Baek Yun-Ho and Choi Jong-In approached him.

“Mister Seong Jin-Woo, can we have a chat?”

“Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim, I....”

“I’m sorry. I’m pressed for time at the moment.”

Jin-Woo ignored them both and quickly walked towards the glass door.

“Uh? Uh?!”

Baek Yun-Ho raised his worried voice.

“If it was me, I wouldn’t use that exit.”

‘Is he trying to imply that the sweet deals he prepared for this occasion will make me regret walking out of this door or something?’

Jin-Woo wasn’t interested regardless of what was being offered, so he continued to ignore Baek Yun-Ho’s dissuasion and pushed the glass door wide open.

When that happened....

Click, click, click, click, click, click....!!

The reporters that had managed to climb up the steps to push and shove against the Monitoring Division’s agents, began clicking their cameras non-stop, with flashes exploding brightly all around him.

‘What the heck is this?’

Jin-Woo became utterly speechless at this blinding explosion of lights.

As usual, Seong Jin-Ah stopped by the school tuck shop after the third period ended, and bought herself a pack of banana milk.

There was still around one hour to go to lunch. If she didn’t fill herself up temporarily with something like milk, for instance, she’d be unable to concentrate during the class.

And sure enough....

Rumble...

Already, her remorseless stomach was noisily demanding for more fuel to be put in there. Jin-Ah rubbed her hungry tummy and was about to enter her classroom, but then, one of her friends grabbed her wrist, a shocked expression clearly visible on that girl's face.

“J-Jin-Ah!!”

“Wha-what?!”

With her friend shocked like this, even Jin-Ah got shocked alongside her for no reason.

“It's your oppa! He's on TV right now!!”

“What?? Why is my oppa...??”

Jin-Woo felt her heart tumble to the pit of her stomach.

Did he get injured again? If not, could it be even worse....??

The friend dragged Jin-Ah by her wrist inside the classroom as if she didn't want to waste time explaining anymore.

Jin-Ah's eyes immediately shifted over to the large TV located next to the blackboard.

And there was....

“O.... oppa?!”

The moment Jin-Ah saw the TV screen, the banana milk in her hand fell to the floor.

REPORT

Ten minutes prior, in front of the Hunters Association building.

When it clearly became impossible to take his rank evaluation test ahead of schedule, Rhee Min-Seong sensed the looming crisis, and in the end, decided to drop a bombshell.

“Excuse me, I, Rhee Min-Seong, will retire from the entertainment industry regardless of the test result, and I shall pledge my service as a Hunter for the betterment of the public!!”

This was his last hurrah at reviving the atmosphere of the press conference that had cooled off from the sudden entrance of Goh Gun-Hui. Its effect was immediately noticeable.

“What?!”

“Rhee Min-Seong is going to retire?”

“Regardless of what his rank is?”

Right away, the atmosphere became frenzied.

Click, click, click!!

Countless cameras were now pointing at Rhee Min-Seong, and questions from excited reporters poured down on him non-stop.

“Mister Rhee Min-Seong!! Please look this way!”

“Are you telling us that you’ll abandon the title of Asia’s top movie star and choose the life of a low-ranked Hunter if need be?”

“Are you willing to give up on everything you built up as a successful actor?”

‘Yes! Very good!’

Rhee Min-Seong was pleased as punch at all the attention being focused on him again.

“Even if the result is bad and I end up with a low rank, I wish to repay all the love everyone has shown me by fighting the monster threats.”

Of course, he was lying through his teeth.

Just two years. He was thinking of helping out with the Reapers Guild's public image as its most famous rank A Hunter for only two years, while enjoying the sky-high annual pay package.

This was the best method to silence those voices raising issues with him avoiding the draft with his father's help, as well as a few distracting noises rising up here and there recently, all in one fell swoop.

Climbing down from the summit to protect the ordinary citizens while risking his own life!

This was the greatest opportunity for him yet, to achieve that often-talked about 'lifetime guarantee against criticism' status.

Enjoying the taste of everything finally going according to his plan, Rhee Min-Seong continued on with the press conference.

“And, with the Master of Reapers Guild, Chairman Im Tae-Gyu, who shares my wish, I...”

And so, as the gathered reporters were listening to Rhee Min-Seong's future aspirations....

Ringggg....

Someone's phone suddenly went off. The surrounding reporters glared at the phone's owner, and he quickly killed the phone before lowering his head in apology several times.

Thanks to that, the press conference was slightly interrupted, but fortunately enough, it was not a permanent interruption in the end. Rhee Min-Seong also pretended to not hear it and continued on.

However....

This time, someone else's phone went off.

“Argh, what the hell?”

“Whose phone was that?!”

“Isn't it a common sense to switch it off before a conference?”

“Turn it off, now.”

Thinking that this might be a good chance to earn himself some extra brownie points, Rhee Min-Seong beamed brightly and spoke up.

“I'm fine with it, so why don't we continue after you answer your urgent call?”

Hahahaha....

Rhee Min-Seong's spontaneous response elicited jovial laughter from here and there. But, who knew that was merely the beginning?

Buzzzz....

Vrrrr....

Seemingly from everywhere, mobile phones were singing out in a messy chorus of noises.

“What’s this?”

“What the hell? Even me?”

The first reporter who switched his phone off first realised that something was very wrong. Meanwhile, the eyes of the reporters were growing extra wide after confirming the contents of the calls.

“You got a call from the Association??”

“Why are you only telling me this now?!”

Reporters present hurriedly accessed the Association's website. It was then, they discovered the new rank S Hunter's photo and his name being uploaded there as if everything had been prepared beforehand.

The announcement date for that person's evaluation result just so happened to be today.

‘Wait, but didn’t they say something about the measurement room not being available in the morning?’

‘It wasn’t because of Rhee Min-Seong?’

‘In that case, the reason for the measurement room being emptied out wasn’t because of Rhee Min-Seong’s rank evaluation, but this new rank S Hunter?’

And then, the face of a certain man flashed by in the heads of all the reporters present.

Could he have been?

That young man who followed Association President Goh Gun-Hui into the building! He was the only one to have accessed the measurement room today.

If they all go inside now, wouldn't they be able to take that man's pictures?

“E-everyone?!”

With their eyes now resembling those of a starving predator, reporters ignored Rhee Min-Seong and rushed towards the Association building.

Rumble....

When Woo Jin-Cheol signalled with his eyes, Hunters from the Monitoring Division spread out their arms and formed a human barricade.

“Let us in!!”

“A rank S has emerged, right? Aren’t you supposed to announce this ahead of time?”

“Just get out of the way, will you?!”

Reporters violently pounced forward, but they couldn’t overcome the wall created by the agents of the Monitoring Division, where every single member was a Hunter.

“W-what the hell is this??”

Having been forgotten by everyone in an instant, Rhee Min-Seong and his flustered face ran over to his burly manager. Mister manager pushed forward the screen of his phone with what he discovered only a second ago.

“....A rank S?!”

Rhee Min-Seong became completely dazed.

“A rank S showed up today, of all days?!”

He wanted to receive the attention and adulations of the world by becoming a rank A Hunter. But, to think that a rank S Hunter would pop up out of nowhere and ruin everything....

Rhee Min-Seong shook his head, hard.

‘No, wait. Something doesn’t feel right here.’

Seriously now, a rank S wasn’t a cup of instant coffee one could buy in a vending machine with a couple of change, now was it? Maybe, these reporters knew something about what was happening right now?

It was at that point that Rhee Min-Seong spotted a reporter still talking to someone on the phone while belatedly climbing up the steps. He was none other than the exact same reporter who sought out Rhee Min-Seong’s opinion regarding tomorrow’s headline earlier.

“Excuse me, Reporter Im?”

Even though Rhee Min-Seong’s voice sounded urgent, Reporter Im simply walked past while responding in haste.

“Ah, Mister Rhee Min-Seong. I’ll get in touch a little bit later, okay?”

“Excuse me? Reporter Im!! Wait!”

Rhee Min-Seong got to eavesdrop on the contents of the call as the Reporter Im’s back gradually distanced itself away from him.

“...That’s right. I’m telling you to go with the headline of ‘Tears of rank E, now joys of rank S’ for tomorrow.”

Rhee Min-Seong scanned his vicinity with energyless eyes. There was no one around him now. He fell down on his knees.

“What.... what is this....”

While he remained on the ground muttering to himself in dejection, the front entrance to the Association was abruptly pushed open wide, and South Korea’s tenth rank S Hunter revealed himself.

Click, click, click, click, click, click, click....

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened up super-wide.

‘What the heck is this?’

The camera lenses captured in full Jin-Woo standing in front of the entrance, and behind him, Baek Yun-Ho with a rueful expression and Choi Jong-In and his bitter smile.

It was now lunch time.

The Hunters of the mining team had ended the morning’s operation and were sitting around to enjoy their lunch.

Mining might have been their main role, but, since there was no threat of rockfall or cave-in, the mood of the team was rather carefree.

Some Hunters were lying on the floor resting, having gobbled up their meals in the blink; some Hunters were busy giggling to themselves while checking out their phones; a few Hunters were even enjoying cold alcoholic beverages while sharing snacks among themselves.

“Huh??”

One of the Hunters playing with his phone cried out in surprise and hurriedly raised his upper body up.

“Hey, isn’t this Mister Seong??”

Lee Seong-Gu’s ears perked up.

“Hey, it is him!”

“Mister Seong’s on the news.”

Indeed, Lee Seong-Gu hadn't heard wrong.

"I knew it."

With his face considerably flushed red after ingesting three cups of alcohol, Lee Seong-Gu ran to where his colleagues were as if he had been waiting for this. Even while he was doing that, his mouth continued to operate without rest.

"I knew it from the moment that bastard glared at me! Let me see for myself what horrible things that insolent bastard committed now!"

Perhaps Lee Seong-Gu's voice was too loud?

"Mister Seong did what?"

"Did Mister Seong commit a crime or something?"

Including Foreman Bae, all of the mining team's Hunters in the near vicinity gathered in one spot.

Jin-Woo's face filled up the palm-sized screen of the mobile phone, and just below that, large subtitles flashed by.

[...Following after Hwang Dong-Seok and Cha Hae-In, South Korea's tenth rank S Hunter, Mister Seong Jin-Woo, has just now...]

"Heok?!"

Having 'discovered' Jin-Woo, Lee Seong-Gu's eyes began trembling.

In front of the private office of Yujin Construction's chairman.

Standing in front of the door, Yu Jin-Ho let out a short sigh.

"Fuu...."

He opened the door, and as it smoothly glided inward, he also raised his head to spot his father busy going through several documents, not bothering to even turn his head this way.

"Come inside."

Even though he made his 'reply', Yu Myung-Hwan continued to scribble his signatures on the documents.

Yu Jin-Ho stood next to Yu Myung-Hwan. The father briefly raised his head to confirm the son's visage, before continuing on with his work.

'Dad's still the same, I see.'

In the past, Yu Jin-Ho would've been suppressed by his father being like this and run off, utterly unable to say what he wanted to say. However, it was different now.

“I’d like to speak to you about something, Father.”

“Is it regarding Hunter Seong Jin-Woo?”

“Yes.”

Yu Myung-Hwan finally raised his head up.

“Alright. So, what happe....”

It was then.

Yu Myung-Hwan’s phone suddenly went off.

Vrrrr...

“Hold on.”

Yu Myung-Hwan raised his hand and stopped Yu Jin-Ho’s words. Checking the message on the phone’s screen, Yu Myung-Hwan’s eyes grew wide just a little.

‘My dad can get surprised too?’

Yu Jin-Ho tilted his head slightly.

“...There’s something you should see.”

“Pardon?”

Rather than providing an answer, Yu Myung-Hwan operated the remote and switched the giant TV mounted on one of the walls, instead.

A breaking news piece immediately came up on the screen.

[Yes, it has been confirmed just now. The Hunter who was evaluated as rank S earlier today is a Re-Awakened, someone who has gone through the secondary Awakening process after his initial one. His name is Mister Seong Jin-Woo, who used to work for the Association as a rank E previously.]

The reporter’s excited voice easily conveyed the current atmosphere of the location. Yu Jin-Ho had been listening disinterestedly, but when he heard the name ‘Seong Jin-Woo’, he was taken greatly by surprise.

‘Heok!’

The screen changed after that. It was now showing the emotionless face of someone he was quite familiar with, busy surveying the immediate surroundings.

It was none other than his hyung-nim.

'I'm sure of it. Hyung-nim is feeling irritated right now.'

Thanks to Yu Jin-Ho sticking around hyung-nim for a while, it became pretty easy to tell what he was thinking about simply through his expressions. But, besides all that – he was a rank S?

Yu Jin-Ho was well aware of his hyung-nim being great, but that greatness had far exceeded his own imagination.

At the same time....

'Even though he possesses such incredible power, he enters dungeons every day to train himself even further?'

A sense of awe rushed in, fast. As a person who used to guard his side, Yu Jin-Ho's heart swelled with pride as Jin-Woo's name got continuously mentioned on the TV.

Beep....

The TV was switched off and hyung-nim's face also disappeared from the view. Yu Jin-Ho formed a wistful expression.

"Okay, continue."

Father was telling Yu Jin-Ho to continue with what he wanted to say.

As he had practised beforehand, Yu Jin-Ho bowed down hard and spoke.

"My apologies, father. I couldn't change hyung-nim's mind."

Yu Myung-Hwan's expression hardened.

".....Okay, what did Hunter Seong Jin-Woo say while rejecting your offer?"

"Well, hyung-nim said....."

Yu Jin-Ho hesitated slightly, but he slightly raised his head and spoke.

"He wants to make his own Guild, so if I was interested in the Vice Master spot, I should come over, instead....."

Yu Jin-Ho thought that father would get angry or ignore that suggestion altogether, but instead, his expression was solidly frozen up.

And then....

Grin.

Yu Myung-Hwan chuckled without making a sound.

Someone widely known for his poker face, Chairman Yu Myung-Hwan had actually revealed a change of expression in front of his own son.

‘What is my dad doing?’

Yu Jin-Ho couldn't dare to ask what was happening, so all he could do was to avert his gaze this way and that.

Yu Myung-Hwan spoke, that smile now erased from his lips.

“Do you know why I’m trying to establish the Yujin Guild?”

“Isn’t it because.... there’s money to be made in the Hunter business?”

“No, it’s not.”

Yu Myung-Hwan’s tone of voice was resolute, unwavering.

“We have more than enough money right now. You think I’ll try something that could put us at odds with other large Guilds just for the sake of chasing after a couple more bucks?”

Was he trying to imply that money wasn't the reason?

Yu Jin-Ho’s eyes widened.

“But, if not that, then....?”

Yu Myung-Hwan carefully put the pen down.

“It’s in order to protect ourselves.”

Yu Myung-Hwan’s serious, dignified eyes caused Yu Jin-Ho to swallow his dry saliva in nervousness.

“Hunters are growing in power every day. And it’s not uncommon to see a single person possessing enough power to rival a country’s military might.”

For instance, the world’s most powerful Hunters, seen as already on the level of exercising power equal to that of a country’s government.

Yu Myung-Hwan was talking about those people.

“I hear that some Hunters already rule smaller nations like kings. How long do you think that the rule of law and governmental authority will keep us safe under the current situation?”

Yu Myung-Hwan’s voice was getting heavier.

However, as Yu Jin-Ho was listening to this explanation, it suddenly dawned on him that he was actually feeling happy at the moment.

Why was that?

‘....Ah.’

That was because, his father included him too and said ‘We’, instead.

Indeed, Yu Jin-Ho felt happy because he thought he got to glimpse for the first time another side of his father.

Yu Myung-Hwan’s explanation continued on.

“I wished to establish a Guild and gather trustworthy Hunters to our side. Not because I needed more money or that I am searching for talented individuals, but it’s all to find those Hunters who we can trust as fellow human beings, as well as for us to rely on their strength.”

And then, a nearly imperceptible smile formed on Yu Myung-Hwan’s face again.

“Looks like you already found someone like that, haven’t you?”

“Yes, Father.”

Yu Jin-Ho replied right away. It was a bit hard to tell where his father was going with this, but well, it was true regardless that Yu Jin-Ho could trust and rely on his hyung-nim.

Yu Myung-Hwan nodded his head.

“Very good.”

“Yes?”

“You pass.”

What did he pass just now? Yu Jin-Ho belatedly raised his bowed head.

“I shall entrust the Yujin Guild to you.”

“Pardon me?”

“Do your best to develop the Yujin Guild. Make those trustworthy and reliable Hunters ‘your’ people. In the future, they will no doubt become even more valuable assets than any form of wealth.”

Yu Myung-Hwan spoke with abundant certainty in his voice. And, just as his certainty was great, so was Yu Jin-Ho’s delight.

Would this be the first time since his birth that Yu Jin-Ho was acknowledged by his father?

“Thank you very much, Father!”

With an ample smile blooming on his face, Yu Jin-Ho bent his back forward 90 degrees. Yu Myung-Hwan looked on at that sight with a content expression.

Unfortunately, what Yu Jin-Ho said next went completely against Yu Myung-Hwan's expectations.

"However, Father, I don't think I can accept your offer."

"Mm?"

Yu Myung-Hwan's brows quivered slightly.

The financial wherewithal of the Yujin Construction was more than enough to put the soon-to-be-established Yujin Guild on the fast track.

Already, talks with a few rank S Hunters had advanced into a more concrete stage, as well.

The Yujin Guild becoming South Korea's best, biggest Guild was already a foregone conclusion.

Yu Jin-Ho must've known this, too.

"That's why my son wanted to become the Master, wasn't it?"

However, now that he was about to hand the Guild over, why was his boy declining it? Did he get scared in the meantime?

Yu Myung-Hwan did his best to suppress his disappointment and rage towards Yu Jin-Ho, and managed to say something.

"....What is your reason?"

Yu Jin-Ho raised his head at that prompt, and while still carrying a happy-looking face, he spoke without holding anything back.

"I've decided to work for hyung-nim's Guild."

REPORT

Finding himself surrounded by a wall of reporters, Jin-Woo became quite flustered.

‘Why aren’t these people taking pictures of Rhee Min-Seong like they were supposed to, instead of blocking my way??’

Wondering if Rhee Min-Seong was standing behind him, he took a quick glance, but he could only see Baek Yun-Ho and Choi Jong-In there.

It was then, his thigh began vibrating.

Vrrrr.... Vrrrr....

It was his mobile phone inside the pocket.

‘Why would Jin-Ah call me at this time of the day?’

As soon as he tapped on the ‘Answer’ icon, his little sister’s urgent voice exploded out from the speaker.

But, that was obvious. Just how many TV cameras were present here? You would still get roughly the same picture regardless of which TV station you tuned into.

He got momentarily tense after his sister, who was supposed to be still in school, suddenly called him up but was able to breathe a sigh in relief.

“Mm.... So, nothing in particular happened, right?”

From her voice, it was quite obvious that the girl was feeling really shocked at the moment. Unfortunately, his current circumstances meant that he couldn’t explain everything to her in detail.

“Right now, I’m a bit occupied so.... Okay, I’ll tell you everything once you get back home.”

Despite his sister’s anxious voice calling out to him, Jin-Woo ended the call.

Click.

And at the same time, he got to figure out how the current situation came to be.

‘...There was a message, huh.’

The Hunters Association used a dedicated app to deliver important information in real time. Most of the time, the app alerted the users to the locations of rank A or higher dungeons, or where dungeon breaks were about to occur, but it was a different story today.

‘...Huh.’

After confirming the contents of the message, Jin-Woo quickly accessed the Association’s website. And sure enough....

The ink on his rank S Hunter licence wasn’t even dry yet, but the list of the highest ranking Hunters in South Korea had been updated already.

[Seong Jin-Woo, rank S, Mage-type]

It was as it was written on his licence.

‘...They are unnecessarily fast on things like this.’

Shoving the phone back in his pocket, Jin-Woo redirected his gaze back to the front.

“Mister Seong Jin-Woo! Are you really the rank E Hunter once affiliated with the Association?”

“You are now a very rare Re-Awakened!! How are you feeling right now?”

Reporters writhed and struggled desperately in order to capture a bit more of Jin-Woo’s face or his voice with their cameras. However, Jin-Woo found their explosive attention towards him simply annoying.

‘I gotta get out of this place first.’

Asking them politely to make way wouldn’t going to work.

Jin-Woo’s brows quivered. Should he just summon his Shadow Soldiers to carve out a path and leave?

“Over here! Mister Seong Jin-Woo, please look over this way!”

“Mister Seong Jin-Woo! The whole country is watching, so how about a smile for the viewers?”

While the camera lenses and mics were gradually inching closer, Jin-Woo spent the next two seconds earnestly pondering whether he should summon Shadow Soldiers like ‘Tank’ or ‘Fangs’ or not.

Meanwhile, behind Jin-Woo...

Choi Jong-In looked at Jin-Woo's back as the youth stood there, unable to go anywhere thanks to the cordon of reporters blocking his way.

He approached Baek Yun-Ho and spoke.

“Looks like my new recruit Hunter-nim is feeling a bit troubled from the excessive attention, no?”

“And just who gave you the permission to call Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim ‘your’ new recruit now?”

“Can’t I even make a joke? It’s just a joke.”

Two men began their war of nerves once more. In the end, though, Choi Jong-In took a step back first. He sighed before speaking up again.

“In any case, it’d be the same thing as giving other Guilds a chance if we waste any more time here.”

Baek Yun-Ho agreed with that assessment. Not just the Reapers Guild's Master Im Tae-Gyu, who just so coincidentally was present here today because of Rhee Min-Seong, but the other remaining super-large Guilds would be desperately trying to get in touch with Hunter Seong Jin-Woo right about now.

Baek Yun-Ho scanned the crowd of reporters.

“So, Chairman Choi, what you’re suggesting is...”

“Before flies come rushing in from the smell, let us escort Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim to his residence. While we have a chat with him regarding this and that.”

Meaning, the two of them should pool their resources first, and prevent more potential rivals from appearing.

Didn't matter what kind of abilities Hunter Seong Jin-Woo possessed, he'd still need a Guild's aid if he were to attack high-ranking dungeons. So, if they played their cards right, then either the White Tiger or the Hunters Guild could find themselves with another rank S in the roster.

Choi Jong-In was utterly confident of the Guild he led, the Hunters, and....

“Alright.”

...Baek Yun-Ho too didn't feel that this was a bad suggestion, either.

The White Tiger might not have been as big as the Hunters, but it still was a Guild with great future prospects.

‘Besides, our Section Chief Ahn and Deputy Hyun are familiar with

Mister Seong Jin-Woo from a while ago, too.'

At a bare minimum, he knew for sure that they had a closer relationship than the Hunters Guild.

And so, the interests of these two men lined up rather nicely. They exchanged a few suspicious gazes at each other, before turning around to approach Jin-Woo.

The first one to engage the young man in conversation was Baek Yun-Ho.

"Hunter-nim."

Jin-Woo looked behind him.

"Yes?"

Choi Jong-In inwardly clicked his tongue after losing the initiative, but since they made a tacit agreement to cooperate, he didn't interfere. Baek Yun-Ho formed the brightest smile he could manage and continued on.

"Are you feeling lost with all these reporters around? We can safely escort you back to your house, so how about going with us? We are pretty good at dealing with these sorts of situations, you see."

Although a bit of exaggeration was mixed in there, what he said wasn't an empty promise at all.

This event was something any rank S Hunter would experience at least once. Not only that, these two men also learned how to deal with people's attention while managing their respective large Guilds, too.

Choi Jong-In provided support fire from the side.

"Let's head out together. Also, there is something we'd like to discuss with you, as well."

Too bad for them, Jin-Woo simply formed a polite-enough smile to reject them.

"I'll be alright."

He then pulled the hood attached to his top and hid his face.

"I actually do have a place I need to stop by first."

"Excuse me? But, how will you get out of here, what with all these repor....."

Choi Jong-In couldn't get to continue with the rest of his sentence.

Swish-!!

Because, Jin-Woo turned to face the reporters and then, jumped up tens of metres in the air before landing on the other side of the crowd, that's why.

“Uh, uh???”

Even before the flustered reporters could respond, Jin-Woo blended into the crowd and disappeared from the view.

Choi Jong-In was left speechless. Now that was a movement he couldn't even react to in time, even though he was a rank S. It was quite obvious that the reporters, who were all regular people, wouldn't be able to follow that with their naked eyes.

Choi Jong-In let out a wry chuckle.

‘As soon as registering as a rank S, he's already playing the part of Superman?’

How was he supposed to be a Mage-type with that sort of physical ability? As a fellow Mage-type, it sure riled him up a bit.

But, in that case, how would a rank S melee-type Hunter think of that?

“Just now, he....”

Choi Jong-In turned towards Baek Yun-Ho in order to ask a question, but he flinched and reflexively took a step back.

“Chairman Baek, your eyes??”

He was so surprised that he even forgot to add the honorific title.

“Ah....! M-my apologies.”

Baek Yun-Ho hurriedly covered his eyes with his hand and turned around. When he opened his eyes again a short while later, they had reverted back from the monster-like irises to those of a normal human being. However, just because his eyes changed back to normal, that didn't mean his shock had worn off.

‘How can this be.....??’

Baek Yun-Ho trembled on the spot.

Just now, when Jin-Woo gathered strength on his legs to prepare for that jump, he very briefly released his magic energy he'd been concealing until then.

No matter how skilful a Hunter was, it was nearly impossible to detect anything in such a short period of time. However, that incredible magic energy still caused Baek Yun-Ho to instinctively activate one of his abilities, the Eyes of the Beast, and those eyes successfully detected Jin-Woo's hidden power.

'He's strong.'

Baek Yun-Ho already knew how strong the youth was. However....

'No, that's not important.'

Back when they had gotten into a bit of confrontation in front of the Red Gate, Baek Yun-Ho also activated the Eyes of the Beast inadvertently. Jin-Woo's strength was clearly imprinted in Baek Yun-Ho's mind back then.

Back then, the youth was very strong. Even if it was Baek Yun-Ho himself, he would not have been able to win without sacrificing an arm.

However, that was all.

If he was willing to sacrifice that much, then he'd be able to win at any time.

But now....

What was the meaning of this difference in strength? He detected magic energy incomparably greater than before. That youth was so much stronger now.

So, so much stronger than back then.

His Re-Awakening process should've been over a long time ago. So, how could this be?

In that instant, an implausible theory popped up in Baek Yun-Ho's head.

'Could he... be able to grow stronger?'

Possibly, not through Re-Awakening process, but through growing stronger that he.....

Just as his thoughts arrived at this point,

"Excuse me, Chairman Baek? Are you alright? Your complexion is...."

....Choi Jong-In worriedly asked him.

Baek Yun-Ho rubbed his face and shook his head, hard.

"I was suddenly feeling a bit dizzy just now. I'm okay."

"You're still young.... You should be more careful."

While conversing with Choi Jong-In, Baek Yun-Ho continued to stare in the direction that Jin-Woo had disappeared to.

‘He’s already transcended the regular rank S, but if he could continue increasing his strength, then...’

Shudder.

Baek Yun-Ho’s entire body shuddered from goosebumps.

“Taxi!”

After successfully shaking off the reporters, Jin-Woo caught a taxi on a deserted road.

He now possessed the rank S licence that he so wanted. Him levelling up and clearing dungeons were all good and nice, but right now, the most important thing was curing his mother.

‘The Divine Water of Life....’

He didn’t know if this item called ‘Divine Water of Life’ could really heal his mother.

‘However, if there is a one in a thousand, no, even if it’s one in a ten thousand chance, then I....’

He wanted to clear the Demon’s Castle as quickly as humanly possible and collect all the ingredients so he could craft this ‘Divine Water of Life’. And in order to do that, he needed to find an artefact that could protect him from the overwhelming heat of the Demon’s Castle.

Jin-Woo settled down in the backseat of the taxi and told the driver his destination.

“To the Korean Hunter Auction, please.”

The taxi driver took a glance through the rear-view mirror and grinned brightly.

“Well, you must be going there to sell something good, am I right? I hear that the minimum trading price starts at around tens of millions of Won.”

Instead of a reply, Jin-Woo simply formed a thin smile.

Gulp.

The driver swallowed his saliva.

By saying that he wanted to go to the Hunter Auction to sell something, that youth was declaring that he was a Hunter; and the driver needed to be extra careful when dealing with Hunters.

There were more than a few among the Hunters possessing somewhat of ‘particular’ personalities that were just as strange as their powers. If the driver made a mistake and got on the bad side of this youth, a big incident might break out.

‘Well, this young man doesn’t look like one of those people, but still, it’s better to be on the cautious side, no?’

The driver remained mindful of Jin-Woo’s moods and kept his mouth shut, and thanks to that, the interior of the taxi was left largely quiet during the drive. Jin-Woo used this part of the trip to search the internet.

Various articles, social media sites, as well as portal communities etc., were all filled with the discussion regarding the new rank S Hunter. Rhee Min-Seong used to be the number one most-searched-for topic until this morning, yet his name could no longer be seen in the top 10 now.

‘Tsk.’

Jin-Woo clicked his tongue.

‘I didn’t expect it to be this crazy, though.’

Sure, he did expect some amount of attention, but he definitely didn’t believe that it’d become such a hot trending topic at all.

Then again...

There were only ten in South Korea.

If one were to exclude two who died or had emigrated to elsewhere, then there were only eight rank S Hunters in the country, so how could the response of its citizens not be feverish?

‘Wait, why was it quiet back when Cha Hae-In became a rank S?’

Because the ninth rank S Cha Hae-In was almost never exposed to the media, Jin-Woo thought his case would be similar to that. But when he searched this and that, he eventually discovered that, once Cha Hae-In had become a rank S, she requested the Association to keep most of her details confidential.

‘Just by requesting the Association, both the media and Guilds can’t even rely on laws to approach you.’

If there was such a convenient method available, why didn’t the Association President tell him about this?

‘...Ah.’

Jin-Woo recalled the question he got just as he was about to enter the examination area. Back then, the Association President asked him this:

“Have you thought of a Guild to join?”

“No, not yet.”

Did he ask because of that?

If he were to request confidentiality, then Guilds wouldn't have been able to approach him, so it was likely that the Association President deliberately hadn't said anything.

‘Well, that’s that, I guess.’

Jin-Woo requested confidentiality from the Association while online, and rang up the Korean Hunter Auction.

Click.

“I’d like to get an artefact appraised. I’m on my way there, but will it be okay?”

“Indeed I have, but they weren’t really all that trustworthy so I wanted to get the Hunter Auction’s opinion.”

The conversation was halted for a moment as if the other party was jotting something down, but it soon resumed.

“It was 100%.”

“It was a one hundred percent amplification effect.”

The voice over the phone came out after a short pause.

“Yes, I am.”

The corners of Jin-Woo's lips arched up.

‘I knew this would happen.’

Would the Hunter Auction even talk to him if he wanted to sell this nonsensical artefact when he was still a rank E Hunter? It wouldn't be an exaggeration to say that he got re-evaluated precisely for this moment.

Jin-Woo confidently declared.

“It’s rank S. Name’s Seong Jin-Woo.”

REPORT

Jin-Woo soon arrived at the Hunter Auction.

The main building was not tall but was rather wide, leading to an initial impression that, instead of an office building, it was more like a museum or an art gallery. The massive car park seemed to scream out loud ‘We’ll accommodate everyone regardless of whether the participants are in the hundreds or in the thousands!’

The impressive building was standing in the middle of that parking lot.

One could easily guess just how much money the Hunter Auction was making through commissions from the artefact trade.

Jin-Woo exited from the taxi and made his way towards the building, but even before he could take a couple more steps, a formally-dressed man suddenly ran outside first.

“You must be Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

“Yes, I am.”

The man checked Jin-Woo’s face and formed a surprised expression. But, he quickly remembered his role and greeted the youth with a welcoming tone of voice.

“My name is Kim Jeong-Ki from the Hunter Auction Appraisal Department. We talked on the phone. Please, follow me.”

Jin-Woo lightly nodded his head.

While leading Jin-Woo towards the appraisal room, Kim Jeong-Ki’s mind was racing.

‘The new rank S that disappeared from the reporters only a short while ago is standing right behind me.’

When he first received the call, he thought it had to be some kind of a prank.

First of all, the supposed effect of the artefact sounded nonsensical, and more importantly, it was because the guy on the phone said that he was the rank S Hunter announced earlier in the day.

‘I almost ended up insulting a rank S Hunter, didn’t I?’

Just how frightened was he after the Hunters Association confirmed that the phone number did indeed belong to Hunter Seong Jin-Woo?

He should thank the lucky stars that he followed the book and didn’t rudely dismiss the call outright.

[...Now officially registered in his new rank, Hunter Seong Jin-Woo has jumped up over five levels in rank, from E to S, through his Re-Awakening process, and it’s revealed that he possesses Mage-type abilities....]

Even now, this young man’s face could be seen plastered on the TV screens mounted on various parts of the Auction house. Perhaps he himself found it a bit too much, since the youth pulled his hood low to hide his face.

They weren’t even talking about Kim Jeong-Ki, but for some reason, he felt a bit flattered as the news broadcast continued to mention Jin-Woo’s name.

‘Should I ask him if we can take a selfie together?’

He shook his head, though. If he wasn’t currently at work, he’d have ‘requested’ for a selfie as well as some autographs. However, he couldn’t do something that rude to a client coming in for an important trade. He had to persevere and hold tight for the time being.

‘Was the corridor from the entrance to here this short?’

They arrived at the appraisal room while several thoughts fled in and out of his head. Kim Jeong-Ki spoke with a wistful expression.

The head of the Appraisal Department, as well as the company’s best appraiser, were anxiously waiting inside this wide room. They even gave up on lunch just to be here.

Seeing Jin-Woo’s face, the department head’s eyes opened wider.

‘It’s really the same guy from the news!’

Meanwhile, the appraiser nervously swallowed his dry saliva.

‘In that case, the magic amplification tool is really....??’

No, nothing was certain, yet. Just because the guy was real, that didn’t mean the stuff would be real, too. The appraiser repeated this in his head as if to calm himself down.

Even the best magic amplification artefact created with top materials by the world's greatest artefact maker pouring out his soul would not exceed 50% in effect.

And then, gathering of the right materials itself would not be easy, not to mention that the manpower necessary and time required to make one should be ridiculous as well. One might consider himself lucky if he got to see one of those artefacts popping up in the market once every few years.

There were willing Mage-type Hunters from around the world lining up in a long-a*s queue to buy such items, but there was literally nothing to sell to them.

Well, there was no need to go as far as the 'world' here.

Even locally, the Mage-type Hunter, and often referred to as the Ultimate Weapon, Choi Jong-In was seriously determined to purchase an amplification artefact with '50% or more' effect.

But then, a Hunter who might be a rank S but not widely known, came to visit the Auction while carrying an artefact with 100% amplification effect?

'That must be nonsense....'

The story was so inconceivable that, if only the guy wasn't the top-ranked Hunter, they would've kicked him in the a*s and thrown him out of the premises already.

However....

They couldn't refuse admittance to a rank S Hunter. Even if today's matter ended as a whole heap of nothing, this man would no doubt become an important client in the future.

'Well, there's nothing to lose here.'

The appraiser spoke to Jin-Woo, his face a mixture of a slight expectation and several times greater misgiving.

"May.... May I take a look at that artefact?"

Both Kim Jeong-Ki and the department head also stared at Jin-Woo with tense expressions.

"Alright."

While pretending to take it out from his pocket, Jin-Woo summoned the Bead of Avarice from his Inventory.

"So, this is...."

The appraiser adjusted his glasses and stared at the beautiful round blood-coloured bead. It was an item possessing a certain magnetic charm that made the onlookers gasp out in astonishment involuntarily.

The two men from the Appraisal Department expressed their admiration under their breaths.

“H-mm....”

However, the appraiser was tilting his head while adjusting his glasses again.

“This doesn’t look like an artefact made from a magic crystal or a Mana Stone. Am I correct?”

“Yes, you’re right.”

The appraiser nodded his head.

‘As I thought.’

He had been an appraiser for seven years already. He was able to observe countless artefacts until now, but he hadn’t seen a single crystal emitting a crimson hue like this one.

Most regular crystals emitted a clean bluish tinge, and the higher the grade, the darker they got.

However, this one was a red colour?

The appraiser continued to tilt his head this way and that, before receiving the bead.

When he did....

‘W-what is this?’

Suddenly, he felt a chill run down his spine. It was because of the unidentifiable power he sensed from the crystal bead.

‘C-could it be....??’

He was frightened out of his wits as he stared at the magic bead. The appraiser was actually a rank B Mage-type Awakened. And thus, he could immediately sense what kind of an item he was holding in his hand.

Cold sweat broke out all over him.

‘Oh my god!’

Goosebumps formed on his skin because of the sheer power emanating from this magic bead, and he hurriedly raised his head to find Jin-Woo wordlessly staring back at him.

‘If the person who brought this here was a low-rank Hunter, then I...’

This was his first time feeling like this.

He lost count how many priceless artefacts he had handled over the years, but this was the first and the only time he felt the strong desire to beat up the person bringing this item for appraisal and steal it.

Unfortunately, his opponent was a rank S.

‘.....?’

Jin-Woo continued to silently stare. The appraiser managed to pull himself together and rein his desire in after receiving that stare.

‘I wanted to rob a rank S?’

Never mind trying, he wouldn’t even dare to imagine doing something like that to a Hunter with such a huge gap in power from him.

Just like how the appraiser did when he was looking at the bead, Jin-Woo was tilting his head at the appraiser now.

‘What’s the matter with him?’

Was he feeling unwell, somehow?

Nonetheless, the appraiser wiped the cold sweat off his forehead and spoke to the department head.

“Excuse me, director. Please turn the camera on.”

“Ah! Yes, hold on.”

The meaning behind that request was that the item in the appraiser’s hand was not a fake. The department head’s heartbeat increased rapidly.

The person to answer Jin-Woo’s call first, Kim Jeong-Ki, also displayed a similar expression.

“Filming will commence now.”

The department head shifted the camera lens over to the appraiser.

The appraiser walked over to the dish-shaped magic energy measuring device. First, he put the bead down and got himself measured.

Bleep-

Numerical values showed up.

up, he got measured again, but this time with the magic bead in his hand. The measured magic energy leaking out of the appraiser instantly doubled in value.

Bleep-

After confirming the results, Kim Jeong-Ki's complexion paled.

“How could this be.....?”

The department head also hurriedly approached closer and confirmed the results, too.

‘100 percent?! It's really a magic tool possessing 100% amplification effect???’

His heart began pounding harder.

The average commission the Hunter Auction earned from assisting with the artefact trade was around five percent. If an item sold for around 100 billion Won, then they would earn about 5 billion from the deal.

However, even with his vast experience, he could not estimate just how much this crimson magic bead could be sold for.

‘This is a huge jackpot! A jackpot!!’

If there were no one looking, he'd have cried out “Hooray!!” and hug the subordinate employee next to him. Just how much sales incentive would he receive if the deal goes through successfully?

The overwhelming excitement left him utterly breathless.

Kim Jeong-Ki's reactions were not too different from his superior. He clenched his fists tightly with an ecstatic expression on his face.

‘Yes!!’

If he could get recognised for today's work, then it'd be only a matter of time before he got a promotion.

“I... will move on to demonstration next.”

The appraiser spoke with great difficulty, his voice trembling non-stop. The two men from the Appraisal Department quickly distanced themselves.

Jin-Woo also took a few steps back.

The camera was filming everything quite well. If one were to appeal to the potential buyers, actual footage was far more effective than simple numerical values.

The appraiser's eyes were directed towards the camera.

“Let's get started.”

The blizzard the size of a truck's wheel began raging on the appraiser's right hand. He continued on.

“While maintaining this magic energy, I shall touch the magic bead.”

The moment his left hand touched the ‘Bead of Avarice’....

Wheeeeeeiing-!!!

The blizzard dancing on his hand rocked the entire appraisal room.

“Heok!!”

If the stunned appraiser hadn’t cancelled his magic quickly, the entire room might have frozen solid in an instant.

“Turn the camera off, please.”

“Ah, yes.”

The department head nodded and ran to the camera to turn it off. With that, the artefact appraisal process had been concluded.

‘Fuu....’

Jin-Woo was worried after sensing the magic energy exploding out of the appraiser’s hand, but in the end, he got to breathe a sigh of relief. It wasn’t just him, though, as everyone present in the room also spat out long sighs to calm their trembling hearts.

Almost instantly, silence descended in the room.

Jin-Woo quietly asked.

“How much do you think it’ll go for?”

Could he be able to buy the artefact he wanted after selling this guy off?

Well, besides that, he was also genuinely curious about how much a magic tool capable of amplifying one’s magic by 100% would go for.

The appraiser stared at the ‘Bead of Avarice’ with a look of incredulity.

“This.... How can I even think about putting a price tag on this....”

His gaze shifted over to Jin-Woo.

Gulp.

He swallowed down his dry saliva.

Just where did this man acquire an artefact like this? This wasn’t a problem the appraiser should worry about. He knew that, but still, he couldn’t hold back and asked anyway.

“Where did you find this?”

Jin-Woo looked at Kim Jeong-Ki, not the appraiser, and asked instead.

“Is that question also necessary for a smooth transaction?”

Kim Jeong-Ki avoided meeting his gaze as if he was feeling sheepish, and scratched the back of his neck. The appraiser quickly shook his head.

“No, not at all. It’s just that, I... I was just too surprised, that’s all. However, when the existence of this magic tool is revealed to the public, everyone would no doubt grow curious about its origins.”

Indeed, the other two men present seemed to be dying of curiosity as well.

‘Well, I guess it doesn’t really matter.’

There was no reason not to answer if they asked him. It wasn’t as if he acquired this bead through less-than-honest means, and also, even if others know, none of them would be able to find another one for themselves, anyway.

Jin-Woo’s lips parted.

Three other people in the room held their breaths and focused on Jin-Woo’s answer, wondering just what might come out of his mouth.

Jin-Woo simply grinned and replied.

“I picked it up in a dungeon.”

Baek Yun-Ho returned to his private office.

“I wish to be left alone for a while, so don’t let anyone in.”

Maybe he found ordering his secretary wasn’t enough, he even locked the door, too. Only after that, he switched on his computer. And then, using the authority afforded to a rank S Hunter, as well as a Master of a Guild, he began perusing every information he could get his hands on.

‘Can it really happen?’

Baek Yun-Ho couldn’t stop thinking about Jin-Woo.

A Hunter that could grow stronger?

But, if not that, then how could anyone explain that man’s strength that had increased to an unrecognisable degree in only a few days?

Baek Yun-Ho’s fingers moved quite quickly.

He logged in to the special Hunter website that only the top-ranked Hunters around the world could access, and searched for any information related to this matter. Unfortunately, it was a waste of time.

There was not one Hunter who could improve their stats all by themselves. No, they could only grow stronger through pure luck, also known as Awakening, or Re-Awakening process.

So, should he call that man not as a Hunter, but someone chosen by the gods?

Countless windows repeatedly popped up, only to disappear, and countless texts filled the computer screen without a moment’s rest. Three hours passed by like that.

Getting fatigued from the long hours spent on searching, Baek Yun-Ho leaned against the back of his chair.

‘Maybe, I overreacted?’

That could’ve been a possibility.

Because he was too shocked by the incredible strength Hunter Seong Jin-Woo displayed, he could’ve thought up a crazy theory as a way to explain that.

“...Hahaha.”

What was he doing when things remained so hectic?

Rather than wasting time like this, he should be sending another offer to Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, instead. Who knows, that quick-witted Chairman Choi could already be visiting Hunter Seong Jin-Woo with a contract in his hand by now.

Baek Yun-Ho chuckled wryly and began closing all the windows one by one. But, when only a single window was left open....

‘Wait a minute....’

Just for fun, he typed ‘Hunter level up ability’ in the search engine. Of course, there was no result to speak of. Baek Yun-Ho wasn’t expecting anything tangible, to begin with, when he typed that, anyway. It was just that, he was unconsciously repeating the actions he’d perform when searching for something online.

‘Now that I think about it.... I haven’t had lunch today.’

He slowly rubbed his tummy as he belatedly sensed his hunger. Baek Yun-Ho was about to log off the search engine altogether, but then, his eyes gleamed brightly.

‘.....?’

He spotted a certain link with some words below it, found on the fifth page of the search results.

If the linked address wasn't the forum only Hunters could sign up with, he'd have ignored those words and move on.

Baek Yun-Ho quickly moved the mouse.

[Title: Something weird has happened to me.]

[Description: I can suddenly see my Stats in numbers like in a video game, and I can even increase their values, too. Is there anyone who has experienced something similar to me?]

An 'anonymous' had opened a thread with those words.

However, how should Baek Yun-Ho describe this? When he read that, he could feel his breaths quickening, as well as his heartbeat, pounding faster and faster.

'Surely, others will think that I've lost my mind.'

Still, there was nothing to lose by confirming it. Baek Yun-Ho picked his phone up.

Soon, the Section Chief of the Second Division, Ahn Sahng-Min, answered the call.

"I'd like you to find something out for me, please."

Baek Yun-Ho wanted to find out what Hunter Seong Jin-Woo was doing on the day this anonymous wrote those words.

With a short but simple answer, the call ended.

Section Chief Ahn was a talented employee. If Baek Yun-Ho waited for a little while, then that man would find what he needed through any means necessary. However, the result arrived sooner than he expected.

'Already?'

Baek Yun-Ho quickly picked up the ringing phone.

"Oh, really?"

Baek Yun-Ho smiled brightly.

Now that he thought about it, there once was a time when the entirety of the Second Division was focused on gathering intel on Hunter Seong Jin-Woo after Chief Ahn ordered them. Thanks to that, he didn't have to wait for long.

"Yes, I remember."

“Oh.... Is that so.”

Baek Yun-Ho formed a disappointed expression.

An unconscious man wouldn't be able to upload anything on the internet, after all.

‘Increasing your Stat values.... There's no way such a thing is even possible.’

It all really was an unfunny waste of time in the end. He was getting somewhat tired now. He decided that he'd go home a bit early today and sleep, but then....

From the phone's speaker, Ahn Sahng-Min's mystified voice came out.

REPORT

As soon as he heard that, Baek Yun-Ho quickly fixed his previously-slouched sitting posture.

‘He woke up on that day?’

Ahn Sahng-Min amended his answer almost right away. But, Baek Yun-Ho thought that the time difference of one day wasn't important here. No, the truly important bit was the fact that the possibility of Hunter Seong Jin-Woo posting those words had not dissipated at all.

“...I see. That should be enough. Thank you for your help.”

Baek Yun-Ho ended the call there, and after finding the folder containing a certain file on his computer, he opened it. It was the report compiled on Seong Jin-Woo by the Second Division.

Click, click....

Baek Yun-Ho paid greater attention to Jin-Woo's recent activities as he browsed through the information. He hadn't displayed anything particularly interesting before that incident. He lived a typical life of rank E Hunter – got injured often, didn't make a lot of money, etc.

However....

‘After the dual dungeon incident....’

Baek Yun-Ho was present that day as well.

The Association urgently sought after the aid of the nearest large Guild, which was the White Tiger, and Baek Yun-Ho gladly led the elite assault team and went over there.

That's when he saw the sight of an unconscious young man being taken to the hospital in an ambulance.

‘Well, I didn't know that was Seong Jin-Woo back then....’

Just what went down inside that dungeon?

In any case, Seong Jin-Woo had changed completely from that point onwards.

He used to quietly help out with the work of Association until then; but, not only he chose to join up with a freelancer raid team, he even cleared several rank C Gates in a single day, as well.

Without a doubt, something in him changed inside that dual dungeon.

‘This is definitely not your typical Re-Awakening.’

Section Chief Ahn theorised that Yujin Construction was testing out Hunter Seong Jin-Woo’s powers after he went through the Re-Awakening process, but....

‘No, it’s not.’

But, that wouldn’t be able to explain the continued and rather speedy increase in that man’s powers even though his Re-Awakening process should have ended by now.

So, what if....

‘...What if, there is a Hunter who can continuously grow stronger?’

Not only that, his rate of growth was so fast that, within a span of a few months, his powers rose up from the rank E all the way up to rank S?

“...”

Baek Yun-Ho inadvertently let a gasp escape from his mouth.

It was a goosebumps-inducing idea, indeed. Of course, there was no evidence that the anonymous poster and Hunter Seong Jin-Woo were the same person.

However, if Hunter Seong Jin-Woo could increase his strength exactly like how it was written in that post, then just imagining how much further he could grow made Baek Yun-Ho dizzy.

And at the same time....

‘I was being foolish.’

He finally understood why Hunter Seong Jin-Woo was so disinterested in signing up with a Guild.

‘Thinking about it from his perspective....’

If he was given an ability where he could theoretically grow stronger infinitely, would he want to enter someone else’s Guild?

Baek Yun-Ho shook his head.

‘Nope, I’d rather make a Guild of my own.’

Who cared about the number one or two Guilds in the country? After all, his own would soon become the best, anyway.

‘This.... Both Choi Jong-In and I have been wasting time chasing after a pipe dream, huh.’

Thinking about Chairman Choi who should be sweating profusely right about now while trying to woo Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, a wry chuckle automatically broke out of his mouth.

However....

‘If my theory is correct, then this matter isn’t something to laugh about.’

In the not too distant future, that man would surely become an existence that would get to control the community of Hunters in South Korea. No, Hunters of the entire world might focus all their attention on him, at this rate.

He needed to completely rethink the plan regarding Hunter Seong Jin-Woo now.

But before all that...

‘I need to meet him face to face and confirm it first.’

Baek Yun-Ho nodded his head. No matter how hard he thought about it, meeting Hunter Seong Jin-Woo was the number one priority.

Unfortunately....

‘...How am I supposed to ask him for a meeting??’

Baek Yun-Ho held his head tightly.

“...”

When he realised that he just made his mind up to meet with a man who didn’t even reply once to the countless requests for a sit-down until now, his head already began throbbing from a migraine.

The appraiser spoke in a shocked tone of voice.

“You... ‘picked’ it up in a dungeon?!”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

Technically speaking, he did ‘pick’ it up after defeating Vulcan in the Demon’s Castle ‘dungeon’.

So, he wasn’t lying here, was he?

‘You can find something like this inside a dungeon??’

‘Well, it’s not something the current level of craftsmanship can create....’

The appraiser who asked the question, as well as the two members of the Appraisal Department who heard the answer, all carried unconvinced expressions, but since the person himself said so, there was no other choice but to accept it.

And truth be told, it wasn't really important where this crimson magic tool came from.

'No, the important thing would be what this Hunter-nim wants to do with it.'

The department head took a step forward.

"It has been confirmed to be a real deal."

His gaze was fixed on the bead lying in Jin-Woo's palm.

"Will you commence with the auction with us? We will ensure that you get the maximum amount for this article."

So, what should Jin-Woo do now?

Before he could decide on what to do with the 'Bead of Avarice', he asked for something else, first.

"By any chance, can I purchase a flame resistant defensive artefact here?"

The department head and Kim Jeong-Ki looked at each other. And then, they looked back at Jin-Woo with somewhat awkward expressions.

Jin-Woo was confused by that.

"Did I ask for something I shouldn't have?"

"No, not at all."

"Or is it really difficult to find a flame resistance armour, then?"

"Actually...."

The department head smiled and spoke.

"It's the exact opposite. It's really easy to acquire one."

"But, I couldn't find one online, though?"

"Weapons and defensive equipment with innate attributes cost a lot of money, so they don't normally appear online all that often. Even still, if you are looking for it, you should be able to find one very quickly. Well, fire-type magic is the most common attack magic spells there are, after all."

But, of course.

Most of the Mage-type Hunters Jin-Woo met so far either wielded flames or rays of light. He heard that even the rank S Hunter Choi Jong-In specialised in flame attribute magic, too. Not only that, the Shadow Magic Soldiers he controlled also used flames, and even Fangs could breathe fire.

In other words, 'fire' type attacks were a pretty common sight.

'What a relief to hear that it's easy to find one.'

He did kinda feel a bit pressured after hearing that it would cost a lot, but his mother's treatment depended on him getting one. As long as he could find one quickly enough, he was willing to pay regardless of what the asking price was.

If the push came to shove, he could sell the 'Bead of Avarice', too.

"Can you find one for me?"

"Yes, of course."

The department head about to exit the appraisal room, but stopped and looked at Kim Jeong-Ki.

"Mister Jeong-Ki? Rather than having our guest wait here doing nothing at all, how about showing him around the items that will go up in auction soon?"

"Ah, of course. I will."

Kim Jeong-Ki stepped forward.

"Please, come with me."

So, two men headed off to the display hall exclusively reserved for the VIP clients that exhibited only those ultra-expensive artefacts about to be auctioned off, or still waiting for their willing buyers.

Weapons, armours, Rune Stones, etc., were displayed inside clear glass cases. Jin-Woo stopped in front of a glass display case that contained a longsword. Kim Jeong-Ki approached him.

"Do you see something you're interested in?"

"No, it's not that, but...."

Jin-Woo lightly knocked on the glass case.

"Can you really protect these artefacts with such a thin glass? I don't see any particular security system in here, either."

Kim Jeong-Ki formed a proud expression.

“They may look that way, but these glasses are reinforced with powerful magical energy by the very best craftsmen. Nothing would happen even if a melee-type rank A Hunter hits them with everything he has.”

“Even when a rank A hits it....?”

Seeing that Jin-Woo seemed rather unconvinced, Kim Jeong-Ki smirked and carried on.

“If you don’t believe me, how about hitting the glass once? If you manage to break it, then I might give you the artefact found inside, Hunter-nim.”

“Hmm....”

Was this reinforced glass really that strong?

‘I can sense some magic energy in it, but...’

Now feeling genuinely curious, Jin-Woo began gathering strength in his right arm to test it out.

Fuu-wook!

In an instant, his shoulder and forearm expanded, and the surrounding air sank under the heavy pressure.

“H-hold on!!”

Kim Jeong-Ki hurriedly blocked Jin-Woo’s way.

“I was only just joking! I wasn’t really asking you to hit it, you know.”

“...Oh. I see.”

“If the case really breaks, then the elites of the Hunters Guild will rush over here. Our Auction house and the Hunters have signed a security contract, you see.”

“Aha.”

....This man, telling joking as if he’s being earnest.

Jin-Woo withdrew his strength. As soon as the heavy pressure emanating from him was lifted, Kim Jeong-Ki quickly breathed a sigh of relief.

‘By the way, this guy... Wasn’t he supposed to be a Mage-type Hunter??’

He was supposed to be a Mage-type Hunter, yet why was his aura so outrageous?

Kim Jeong-Ki wasn’t joking when he told Jin-Woo to hit the glass.

He was thinking that, even though this youth was a rank S, he was a Magetype, so his physical strength couldn't actually be that high. But then, when Jin-Woo began concentrating, all the hair on Kim Jeong-Ki's body stood up and instinctively, he knew that he had to stop the youth.

What a relief it was that Jin-Woo backed off without raising a fuss.

'Well, Hunter-nim's hand might get hurt if something went wrong, so this is fine.'

Kim Jeong-Ki consoled himself like that and guided Jin-Woo to other artefacts on display.

After taking a look around once, Jin-Woo asked.

"Isn't there anything that I can actually touch? Daggers, if possible."

Since he wasn't really the type who depended on weapons, he hadn't paid much attention to the matter until now, but after taking a look at the various equipment on display, he suddenly became curious.

Kim Jeong-Ki's expression brightened.

The reason for showing off these artefacts to Hunters was exactly for moments like this. Hunters may be sellers, but they were also valuable clients as well.

"Of course, we have them."

After replying, Kim Jeong-Ki used the mic attached to the collar of his suit just below his neck to summon the staff member in charge of the weapons.

Fearing that Jin-Woo might change his mind, the staff member quickly arrived.

"And this gentleman is?"

The staff signalled with his eyes, and Kim Jeong-Ki nodded his head.

"Ah, it's a pleasure to meet you. I'm in charge of the weapons section. Please come with me."

The staff member guided Jin-Woo and they exited from the VIP display hall.

After seeing those two off, Kim Jeong-Ki spat out another sigh.

'This Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim seems to possess a talent for surprising people, doesn't he?'

After regaining some of his calm, Kim Jeong-Ki disinterestedly took a look around him, before he walked over to the glass case with the longsword Jin-Woo seemed to be interested in earlier.

He checked the glass case to see if there was a fingerprint or something since Jin-Woo had been standing pretty close to it, but then, he tilted his head slightly.

“Ng?”

Something was on the upper side of the case.

“What the heck?”

He spotted a crack in the corner of the glass case that was so small, it was easy to miss with naked eyes.

“Since when did this happen?”

He pulled out a handkerchief and rubbed it, but sure enough, it didn't get wiped away. It wasn't some dirt, but an actual crack.

“Well, I'll be.”

Kim Jeong-Ki frowned deeply.

How disappointed Hunter Seong Jin-Woo would've been, someone who could be one of their most important clients, if he saw that?

It was a small relief that the crack was near the corner of the case in a hard-to-spot location.

“Tsk, tsk.”

Kim Jeong-Ki tutted audibly and summoned the maintenance team, before exiting from the VIP display hall, like Jin-Woo had done.

Jin-Woo picked up the dagger that the staff member in charge gave to him. If he were being honest, it was rather lousy in quality.

‘It's far worse than the Knight Killer, which is ranked at rarity B.’

The attack power was not even half of the Knight Killer, too. With a disappointed expression on his face, Jin-Woo returned the dagger.

“How much is this guy?”

“It's 30 million Won.” (TL: Around $26,830)

Jin-Woo's eyes widened.

How much did he say for this measly little dagger??

“How much??”

“30 million Won, Hunter-nim.”

“H-hold on.”

Jin-Woo turned around, and while pretending to rummage around, he summoned the Knight Killer and showed it to the staff member.

“Okay, how much would this guy go for, then?”

It was now the turn of staff to widen his eyes.

“Is this your current weapon? Wowsers. I can definitely sense the touch of a great artisan from this dagger!”

‘No, well, I bought it off the Store, though....’

The staff member hesitated slightly, before raising his voice with a grin.

“It won’t be accurate since I’m not a dedicated appraiser, but at the bare minimum, I think it should cost well over 100 million Won.”

Jin-Woo’s expression hardened.

‘But, uh, I paid 3 million Gold for it in the Store?’

Or was it more like 2.8 million?

Seeing Jin-Woo’s expression, the staff member embarrassedly scratched the back of his head.

“Was I wrong? Since I’m a specialist when it comes to weapons, I thought I could give it a shot, even though it’s not really my place.”

“No, it’s nothing like that.”

Indeed, Jin-Woo was simply shocked by the sky-high price tag, that was all.

But, well....

The first real weapon he held, Kim Sahng-Sik’s steel sword and its attack damage of 10, was supposedly over three million Won in price, while Yu Jin-Ho’s equipment, which the kid didn’t really get to use all that much, also commanded price tags of over 100 million each.

So, he shouldn’t have been surprised by the fact that items with high Stats sold in the System’s Store could potentially fetch high asking price in real life, too.

‘It’s just that I didn’t pay attention to that side of things until now.’

Because he wasn’t too interested in making a quick buck.

‘Wait a minute....’

Currently, he had so much Gold stored in his Inventory that it was practically bursting at the seams. However, if he could buy items from the Store with that accumulated Gold, and then sell them off at a really high price?

Jin-Woo's head spun pretty quickly then.

'Doesn't this mean I won't have to sell the Bead of Avarice?'

Just as his thoughts arrived at this point....

Waaaaahhh-!!

Were his emotions to blame?

He thought he could hear the loud cheers of the Magic Soldiers hidden inside his shadow.

REPORT

“Holy cow! Oppa, those reporters are still outside the building!”

Jin-Ah spoke while looking out of the window.

It was already late in the evening. Reporters who hadn't given up yet were still gathered around in front of the apartment's entrance like a storm cloud.

“Look!! Up there!”

After discovering the silhouette of a person by the window, they hurriedly operated their cameras, thinking that it was Jin-Woo.

Click, click, click!!

Seeing all those camera flashes suddenly exploding from here and there, Jin-Ah jumped up in fright and quickly shuttered the curtains. She turned around and sighed softly like a timid little animal.

“Whew....”

Having returned from the Hunter Auction, Jin-Woo was thinking of taking a bit of a well-deserved rest, but he was carrying a rather stiff expression at the moment.

“Should I go downstairs and say something?”

It was fine for those folks to disrupt his rest. However, he was more worried about them disrupting his sister's studies. Jin-Ah was a high school senior, about to take the most important test of her life.

Wasn't this the time when some overly-sensitive kids would throw a tantrum just because of the faint footsteps outside their doors disrupting their studies?

‘Well, Jin-Ah isn't the type to raise a fuss over stuff like this, but...’

But, still – could she even be able to concentrate with all these distracting noises coming from the outside?

Just as Jin-Woo was getting prepared to step forward....

“Nonono, don't do it.”

...Jin-Ah quickly waved her hands about.

“Oppa, you’re already being slagged off in the internet, you know? So, can you imagine what they’ll say if you chase away the reporters?”

“Slagged off?”

‘Since when did I do something worthy of that treatment??’

As Jin-Woo tilted his head this way and that, Jin-Ah accessed one of the news articles online with her phone and pushed it forward. So, he took it from her.

‘.....’

On the screen, he could see the photo of him standing in front of the Association’s entrance, relaxedly answering his phone while being surrounded by a sea of reporters.

Maybe because a professional snapped that shot, even a plain guy like him came out looking pretty good, so he was happy about that. However, when he took a look a bit lower down....

‘His attitude sucks.’

‘He already doesn’t care about the reporters.’

‘He’s way too cool for himself.’

Countless comments with similar nature were posted below the article, and the highest upvoted comment was ‘Mom, I’ve become a rank S!!’

Because the photo and the comment went so well along with each other, Jin-Woo ended up breaking out in a grin.

Jin-Ah in turn became flabbergasted from his reaction.

“How can you smile from that?!”

“But, it is funny.”

“....”

When Jin-Woo showed her the top upvoted comment, Jin-Ah too nearly broke out in laughter, but somehow managed to suppress it. And, perhaps as a rebound....

“No, wait a minute! That’s not important, is it?!”

With a slightly flushed face, Jin-Ah raised her voice.

“Why did you have to answer your phone there?? I mean, there were so many reporters present, you know! Thanks to you, everyone now knows my name!”

Jin-Woo replied confidently as if he couldn't be fazed by anything.

“Do I really need to observe reporters and their moods when answering my little sister’s call?”

“Euk!!”

Jin-Ah became speechless. No matter how hard she thought about it, he wasn't wrong, so she couldn't readily come up with a suitable rebuttal.

‘...I simply can’t win against him in an argument.’

Jin-Woo handed the phone back to her.

“Here.”

Jin-Ah took the phone back with a slightly testy face, and opened her mouth.

“In any case, I’ll be fine, so oppa, don’t mind the reporters, okay?”

“Okay. Got it.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

If the current situation persisted, then he might have done something, but then again, the Association did call him earlier to say that these reporters should all receive orders to stay far away from him in a day or two.

‘Well, I can endure that.’

And there was also Jin-Ah not wanting to inflate the situation any further, too.

“By the way, just what on earth happened here?”

Jin-Ah looked at her brother with a pair of mystified eyes.

“My own oppa became a rank S Hunter, and reporters are camping outside our house, too....”

Some said that it'd be difficult to run into a rank S Hunter even once in your entire life, yet there was one standing right in front of her. Not only that, he was her older brother, no less.

Pretty much anyone would react the same way if they were in her shoes. Jin-Ah sounded as if she couldn't quite believe it.

Too bad, she had no choice but to adjust to the new reality sooner rather than later.

‘Just like how I had to.’

Jin-Woo smirked softly.

And, in order to soothe his sister and her still-stunned heart, he lightly pinched Jin-Ah's cheeks. Of course, she reacted in the same manner as in the past by kicking him, but....

“Ouch!!”

She instead grabbed her foot and jumped up and down in pain.

“Heeiing~.”

Jin-Ah glared at him from the corners of her eyes as if this was just too much, while Jin-Woo could only shrug his shoulders. It seemed that she'd need quite a lot of time to get used to the fact that her oppa was now a rank S Awakened.

“Oppa, I guess you'll become a lot busier now, right?”

Jin-Ah cautiously asked him.

“Mm.”

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

There were lots of things he wanted to do, and plenty of work to get through, too – but for now, clearing the Demon's Castle took priority. He even resorted to buying a flame-resistance defensive artefact for the sole purpose of conquering the upper floors, after all.

His own funds came up ridiculously short so his heart nearly fell to the pit of his stomach, but thankfully, he was able to use one of the Store's rarity 'A' items as collateral and got a loan from the Hunter Auction.

‘I'm in debt as soon as becoming a rank S....’

For some reason, a wry chuckle escaped from his lips.

Well, as long as the items from the Store could be sold off at high prices in auctions, that debt would be wiped clean in an instant, though.

“In that case, it'd get harder to see you, right?”

Hearing that he might get a lot busier in the future, Jin-Ah formed a slightly rueful expression. Indeed, being alone would be a lonesome task.

Without saying anything, Jin-Woo placed his hand on Jin-Ah's head.

A few days from now....

Once he cleared the Demon's Castle dungeon, there would never be another day when his sister would have to house-sit all alone.

‘I'll make sure that happens for real.’

It was then.

Jin-Woo's eyes narrowed to a slit. His gaze shifted toward the front door.

'Someone's coming this way.'

Jin-Ah also noticed her brother's tense aura. She asked, sounding a little anxious.

"Oppa?"

"Stay in your room for a bit, okay?"

"What's the matter?"

A presence climbing out of the elevator was walking straight to here now.

'It's a Hunter....?'

The suspicious presence emitted a thin and weak magic energy. Jin-Woo couldn't sense any hostile intentions from this presence, but still, he didn't feel like humouring an uninvited guest.

Did a Guild send someone over? Or, was it a foolhardy reporter placing too much faith in his own Awakened powers?

Didn't matter which was which – Jin-Woo wasn't a gracious enough person to accept with a smile an uninvited guest trying to invade the privacy of his home, when the hour was already well past ten in the evening.

Jin-Woo stood before the door.

'With that kind of power...'

He didn't need to summon his weapons. Jin-Woo lightly loosened his muscles. He tilted his head left and right, and his neck issued cracking noise.

And, as he expected....

Thud, thud.

Someone 'knocked' on the door, causing Jin-Ah to run into her room in a bit of surprise. Jin-Woo quietly opened the door.

Clang.

And from the slowly-widening gap of the door, a familiar face of a man could be seen. The man spoke.

"Hyunnng-nim...."

He was even sniffing, too.

Yu Jin-Ho and his reddened nose were standing in front of the door, sniffing like a little kid.

“.....”

Jin-Woo was so dumbstruck that he stood there in a total daze, prompting Yu Jin-Ho to tearfully speak up.

“Hyung-nim. I got kicked out of the house. Dad kicked me out.”

“...”

Now that Jin-Woo took another look, there was a backpack as big as Yu Jin-Ho slung on his back. He was even carrying quite a lot of luggage in both of his hands, too.

“.....Wait, didn’t you live alone already?”

“Well, that....”

Sniff.

“The villa I was living in was under father’s name, and he took it away. He even blocked all my bank accounts.”

A father blocking his son’s bank accounts. All of them. What a movie-like situation that was, but well, this being the top businessman in South Korea, Chairman Yu Myung-Hwan, it sounded rather plausible.

Besides all that, though – what did this kid do to get on his father’s bad side like this?

When Jin-Woo stared with a pair of questioning gaze, Yu Jin-Ho spoke up, his voice trembling.

“So, like, I was wondering, hyung-nim. Can I impose on you for the time being?”

Creaaak....

Clank.

Jin-Woo quietly closed the door, and even proceeded to lock it.

Click.

Worried Jin-Ah had been observing the situation from her room, and once Jin-Woo turned away from the door, she quickly jogged next to him and asked.

“Oppa, who was that? Do you know him?”

Jin-Woo shook his head.

“Nope. Never met him before.”

“You really don’t know him? But, why did he come to our place, then?”

“Don’t worry about it. I’m sure he got the wrong address.”

“.....Really?”

But, it sure didn’t look like that, though.

As Jin-Woo gently but firmly pushed his still-suspicious little sister back into her room, Yu Jin-Ho’s sorrowful voice continued to ring out behind him.

Thud, thud!!

“Hyuuung-niiim!! Hyung-niiiiim!!”

“Dear, don’t you think you were being too harsh on Jin-Ho earlier today?”

“Hmph.”

Yu Myung-Hwan roughly yanked at his tie.

What an insolent little child.

He was about to be gifted with the Yujin Guild, which would no doubt become the Yujin Construction’s core business in the future, yet he dared to answer like that?

[“I’ve decided to work for hyung-nim’s Guild.”]

What?

Follow ‘hyung-nim’, was it?

“That fool deserved it.”

Yu Myung-Han snorted derisively.

If the boy wished to stand on his two feet, then he should do so on his own power, too.

The father thought that he’d teach his son about every choice being accompanied by responsibilities and consequences.

Was it because he was far too agitated? For some reason, it felt like his d*mn tie just didn’t want to come undone. His clumsy and hasty hands caused the tie to be tangled up even more instead, prompting the lady of the Yu family to reach out with her hands.

“Let me do it for you.”

Soon enough, the tie was easily loosened. Yu Myung-Han entrusted himself to his wife’s skilful hands.

However....

The wife began giggling while holding his tie.

“What’s the matter, dear?”

Yu Myung-Han was confused. She had been doing his ties for as long as they were together. So, she shouldn’t have found his tangled up tie all that funny by now.

“My dear. Are you sure you’re really angry?”

“Mm....??”

Did she eat something wrong? Why was she saying something so nonsensical?

Yu Myung-Han tilted his head slightly and took a look at his own reflection in the mirror.

‘What the....’

He was surprised by what he saw.

Why did he look so pleased in the reflection, even though his mouth was busy spewing out complaints only until a second ago?

Feeling embarrassed now, Yu Myung-Han began rubbing his cheeks and chin.

“Today was the first time, wasn’t it, dear?”

“What do you mean?”

“Jin-Ho rebelling against you.”

“....”

That was why he was angry.

Just like how water flowed from the top to bottom, a large corporation would not be able to sustain its massive self if the orders from the top didn’t get delivered to the rest. He believed it was the same story for running a family, as well.

That was why he maintained the exact same type of attitude he’d have when at work while he was home with his family, and he did not accept anyone going against his decisions.

However....

Even though he was feeling angry today, why didn’t he feel bad about it, either?

‘I’m angry, but not unhappy at the same time?’

This situation made no sense when he thought about it.

The madam spoke gently like a mother pacifying a child, as if she had already read everything in her husband’s mind.

“Jin-Ho is trying to do something he feels passionate about for the first time in his life. So, how about cooling your anger a little and cheering him on from the side?”

“.....”

Yu Myung-Han shut his mouth tight.

He found it a bit hard to decipher his own head at the moment.

“For the time being... I shall keep an eye on him.”

“Of course.”

The madam formed a sweet smile and received his jacket as he took it off. However, something happened then.

Yu Myung-Han stared at his wife’s face.

“But, this is quite strange.”

“What is strange, dear?”

“I can see two of your faces.”

“Pardon?”

Just as the madam’s eyes widened, Yu Myung-Han lost his balance and staggered unsteadily.

“Dear?!”

The frightened madam hurriedly tried to support Yu Myung-Han. He shook his head continuously, heavily gasps escaping from his mouth.

“Pant, pant.....”

The madam’s eyes opened wider.

‘Why is there so much cold sweat?!’

Yu Myung-Han tried to keep his eyes wide open to forcefully beat back the sudden feeling of sleepiness, but in the end, lost his consciousness.

Yu Myung-Han reopened his eyes inside the VIP room located in the country’s top university hospital.

One of the doctors in charge approached him to check up on Yu Myung-

Han's complexion. They had been working in a 24-hour rotation schedule to keep an eye on his condition.

"Can you hear me, Chairman?"

"...."

Yu Myung-Han took a quick look around him, and immediately figured out where he was.

"How long have I been here?"

"You've been sleeping for the last two days."

Two days?

The person most likely to be picked as the role model for "hard working" would be Yu Myung-Han. He had never slept for more than five hours in a day in his entire life, no matter how tired he was.

"....."

Yu Myung-Han resolutely kept his mouth shut, before speaking up as if it was nothing.

"I guess I was quite tired, then."

He was indeed swarmed with various matters that kept him insanely busy recently. The sudden bout of vertigo and that unshakeable sleepiness were probably the side effects.

However, the doctor couldn't hide the seriousness from his expression.

Yu Myung-Han was the owner of the country's top company that employed tens of thousands of people. So, he was already a master at reading people's expressions.

Seeing the stiffening face of the doctor, Yu Myung-Han asked him.

"By any chance.... Have you discovered something wrong with my body?"

REPORT

“Mister Chairman, by any chance, do you have anyone near you who is a Hunter, or someone who’s not a Hunter yet but has been evaluated as an Awakened?”

The doctor suddenly asked about something rather strange.

Yu Myung-Han asked if there was something wrong with his body, yet why was he talking about Hunters now?

Yu Myung-Han asked back feeling puzzled now.

“What are you talking about? Why Hunters, all of a sudden?”

“Have you heard of Eternal Sleep?”

Hearing the term “Eternal Sleep”, Yu Myung-Han finally lost his cool, and his eyes trembled.

The Eternal Sleep Disorder. An endless slumber that no one could wake up from.

Not only was it impossible to wake up from its death-like slumber, but the lifeforce of the sufferer would also decline quite sharply, so it was a necessity to use life support machines that utilised magic energy.

Appearing for the first time after the advent of the Gates, it was a terrifying illness that managed to kill scores of people who lacked the wherewithal to borrow one of those life support machines.

“It’s an illness where you’d be assaulted often by drowsiness, and eventually, you’d be unable to wake up at all.”

The doctor carried a complicated expression. There had not been a single case of the sufferer of the ‘Eternal Sleep’ waking up, so far.

Even if one’s life was extended via machines, you’d still be unable to open your eyes. It was no different from a death sentence for the victims.

“...”

Yu Myung-Han waited for the doctor to finish explaining before asking his question.

“How does that relate to Hunters?”

“The ‘Eternal Sleep’ is widely believed to be deeply related to magic energy.”

There were those people who, by nature, couldn't endure magic energy all that well. One of the abnormalities displayed by these people after being exposed to surrounding magic energy for a long time was this Eternal Sleep Disorder.

“Wait, isn't magic energy used to power the life support machines that supply lifeforce to the patients?”

“That is true, but...”

Just like how one could safely use the electricity generated by the dangerous material fuelling the nuclear reaction, the doctor explained, magical devices and magics utilising magic energy did not harm people.

“What you need to be careful with are the Magic Crystals, Mana Stones, as well as people possessing magic energy.”

‘People possessing magic energy.....’

Yu Myung-Han immediately recalled the sole Awakened in his family, Yu Jin-Ho. Meanwhile, the doctor cautiously carried on.

“I've heard that your second son is a Hunter, sir.”

When Yu Jin-Ho was mentioned, Yu Myung-Han's face visibly hardened.

“So, the gist of it is... you want me to never meet my own son? Is that it?”

“If it's at all possible, that is indeed my recomm.....”

“Don't make me laugh!!”

Yu Myung-Han abruptly cut the doctor off and empathised his point.

“Don't speak of nonsense.”

And then, as if he was annoyed, he gestured the doctor to leave.

“Chairman....”

The doctor hesitated, not knowing what to do, but he soon left the room as if he was being chased away after being glared at by Yu Myung-Han's furious eyes.

He continued to glare at the door the doctor used to escape with barely concealed fury in his eyes.

‘Distance oneself from one's son, just because one fears the illness getting worse? Is that something a father should even say??

Sure, let's say that did happen.

What if Jin-Ho heard that news? What would that boy think of, then?

As a father, he could not bear to burden his son with something that heavy. At least, that's what Yu Myung-Han believed.

'Not only that...'

With each passing day, people found more and more practical applications for magic energy, and the number of people innately possessing magic energy was steadily increasing, as well.

So, if you couldn't withstand magic energy when living in a world like this, didn't that already mean you had been eliminated from the natural selection?

Yu Myung-Han harrumphed unhappily.

'I, Yu Myung-Han, have failed to make the cut?'

Such a thing could never happen.

'I will not submit.'

Even when everyone else ridiculed him and predicted his failure, he always managed to succeed so his detractors could take a good look at him.

He was the very person who, after inheriting the Yujin Construction that barely cracked the top 30 in the country, turned it into the number one corporation in South Korea.

'So, you think I'll kneel in defeat over a stupid illness like this?'

He wouldn't give up.

Yu Myung-Han inwardly told himself this over and over again.

Before leaving, Jin-Woo carefully opened the door to his sister's room.

As it was still in the early hours, Jin-Ah remained blissfully stuck in a slumber so deep that she'd not be any wiser if someone kidnapped her right now.

Suddenly, he felt worried.

'There might be a jacka*s or two who'll try to get closer to her while I'm away.'

Of course, there should be no one stupid enough to harm the little sister of a rank S Hunter, but well, it was hard to tell what was in a human's heart sometimes.

At least, he needed some sort of a contingency plan.

'Wait a minute. I can hide my soldiers inside shadows, right?'

Jin-Woo recalled the time when he sent out his Shadow Soldiers on the patrol of the district, in case that serial killer decided to show up again.

Back then, soldiers moved by hiding in the various shades found in the surroundings. By utilising that, he might be able to protect his sister without anyone even noticing it.

Which was good, because he just so happened to possess the perfect candidates for this role.

'Come out.'

Jin-Woo called out those monster soldiers that had been guarding 'Fangs' when they were still alive.

Shururu....

Three of the biggest, burliest High Orcs appeared simultaneously and ended up making the already-tiny room of his sister feel even more claustrophobic.

However....

'Huh? Why are there only three?'

There definitely had been four guards, though?

Jin-Woo combed through his memories, only to spit out a soundless groan.

'Ah.'

Only now did he remember that he 'planted' one of the guards in the ceiling of the boss room. And naturally, he forgot to extract that guy's shadow.

'I guess I should pay closer attention next time.'

Jin-Woo smirked softly, before shifting his gaze over to the three monster soldiers, who used to be High Orc guards while still alive. All of them were elite grade.

They were on another scale altogether when compared to the shadows extracted from the 'regular' High Orcs. With these three, they would still be fine even if their opponent was a rank A Hunter.

He wasn't exaggerating here – the leader of the Hunters' raid team, the rank A Sohn Ki-Hoon, was pushed to a corner while fighting off three regular High Orcs, after all.

So, there was no reason to worry about these guys.

Jin-Woo pointed with his chin towards the sleeping Jin-Ah. And when that happened...

Shururu....

The guards returned to 'shadow' forms and moved along the floor, and they assimilated into her shadow.

'Very good.'

Hide in there quietly, and when Jin-Ah finds herself in danger, get rid of the opponent, regardless of who it is.

Jin-Woo gave that order to the guards and carefully closed shut the door to her room.

'I can relax a little now.'

Indeed, he felt less worried.

He made sure to lock the front door properly and exited from the apartment, and found Yu Jin-Ho waiting for him there, just as promised.

"Hyung-nim!"

Yu Jin-Ho greeted Jin-Woo with a bright face.

"Was it okay sleeping in that place?"

"Yes, it was fine, hyung-nim. I had no idea, but motels nowadays seem to feature pretty good amenities."

Since his little sister was staying at home, Jin-Woo had Yu Jin-Ho stay in a local motel nearby. Thankfully, it must not have been too bad there.

"Until we can find some office space for my Guild, stay there for the time being."

"Got it, hyung-nim."

He must've been enjoying himself, since Yu Jin-Ho continued to giggle.

Jin-Woo already heard the most of what happened from the kid last night. While listening to the tale, he was hoping against hoping, but to think, this kid would show up here after really rejecting the golden chance to become a Guild Master.....

When he heard that, Jin-Woo was so dumbfounded that he just had to ask, and that prompted Yu Jin-Ho to reply while sounding like a victim.

["You really came over just because I made an offer?!"]

[“But, hyung-nim, you said I should come!!”]

Even then, Jin-Woo couldn't really kick to the curve a kid who gave up on a job equivalent to being a chairman of a company just to be next to him.

“Okay, well, let's go.”

“Yes, hyung-nim.”

Yu Jin-Ho climbed into the driver's seat of the van, and Jin-Woo settled down on the passenger's. And the van containing two people drove towards the Daesung Tower.

Yu Jin-Ho sneaked a glance at Jin-Woo.

‘What business does he have in the Daesung Tower so early in the morning?’

He was curious, but he also thought that asking hyung-nim this and that would be quite insolent of him, so his lips didn't want to part that easily.

Screech.

By the time their van came to a stop in front of the Daesung Tower, though, he managed to work up some courage.

“By the way, hyung-nim. What about this Daesung Towe....”

“I'm off.”

“Eh?”

Yu Jin-Ho hurriedly turned his head to the passenger side. However, the door was already wide open, and hyung-nim was nowhere to be seen.

Didn't something similar to this happen before?

Yu Jin-Ho scratched the side of his head.

‘Hyung-nim can be so elusive sometimes, you know.’

[You have entered Demon's Castle dungeon.]

Jin-Woo cancelled his 'Stealth' skill.

‘I've finally returned.’

Thinking that he had returned to the place where he could cut loose without worry, his heart began pounding harder.

As soon as he walked past the castle's gates, the mechanical bleep went off as if it was waiting for his arrival.

Tti-ring.

[A new quest is available.]

Unlike the first time he got here, Jin-Woo wasn't surprised.

Well, the quest he got the first time was called 'Collect the Souls of Demons! (1)', after all. He expected the next part of the quest to show up sooner or later.

Jin-Woo opened the message window.

Tti-ring.

[Normal Quest: Collect the Souls of Demons! (2)]

The sovereign of the demons, 'Baran', can be found residing on the top floor of the Demon's Castle. Defeat Baran and collect his soul.

If you succeed in sealing the soul of the Demon King, you will be rewarded handsomely.

'The goal of this quest is to kill the Demon King?'

Jin-Woo's expression brightened. He no longer needed to go all over the place now. Instead, he just needed to climb up to the top floor of the Demon's Castle as soon as possible.

And the rewards on offer were excellent as well.

'30 bonus Stat points!'

The previous quest was pretty much slave labour, asking him to collect ten thousand demon souls. And after all that hard work, he 'only' received 20 bonus Stat points.

However, he could earn 30 points this time by killing one Demon King. He'd need ten days of Daily Quests, or six level-ups, to match that amount of Stat points. A smile instinctively broke out of his lips at this unexpectedly rich reward.

'Ok so, what is this highest grade Rune Stone all about?'

Jin-Woo confirmed the details of the first reward next.

Tti-ring.

[Highest grade Rune Stone: Shadow Exchange]

By breaking this highest grade Rune Stone, you can learn a Class-specific Skill.

‘I can learn a Class-specific skill?’

Jin-Woo’s brows shot up.

So far, he had ‘earned’ three Class-specific skills.

The ‘Shadow Extraction’.

The ‘Shadow Storage’.

And finally, ‘Sovereign’s Territory’.

Every single one of them was an indispensable skill. And, just from the mere idea of adding one more skill to his roster, his heart palpitated even harder.

‘What kind of skill is this?’

He wanted to confirm the information on the skill, but the only thing that popped up was its name, and no in-depth explanation was offered.

‘Tsk.’

Jin-Woo could only smack his lips wryly.

‘Well, I’ll find out eventually after completing the quest.’

A Class-specific skill, and 30 bonus Stat points, too. Even when excluding the unknown reward, it was already a remarkable amount of loot on offer. He was really tempted to simply rush up to the top floor in one go, but...

‘Before I start anything, though...’

Jin-Woo summoned his Status Window for the first time in a while.

Tti-ring.

His level was already 80. And thanks to him investing every single bonus Stat point on Intelligence, he could see that it exceeded his Strength Stat now.

‘My Intelligence Stat is nearing the 200 mark already.’

The result of that was his total MP now went past 5000.

His MP, or Mana, was a must for one thing. It was like a cheat device that allowed him to infinitely revive his soldiers. But, when he thought about the number of his soldiers increasing in the future, that 5000 MP seemed rather inadequate to his eyes.

‘Fine. Let’s get started.’

Even a second couldn’t be wasted here.

Jin-Woo closed his Status Windows.

Currently, he was standing on the ground floor of the Demon’s Castle. Getting back to the 76th floor, where he temporarily had to stop his conquest, wouldn’t take long at all.

So, he immediately made his way over to the floor-transfer magic circle.

[Floors 1 to 76 have been opened.]

[Which floor would you like to go to?]

Jin-Woo spoke without hesitation.

“76.”

The light gleamed brightly. In the moment it took to blink an eye, his surroundings had changed completely. He was now faced with a vigorously-burning city.

When inside the floor-transfer magic circle, he wasn't supposed to be affected by the environments outside, but it still felt like his skin was burning up already.

Jin-Woo put the luggage down and pulled two artefacts out. First one was a black robe named the 'Wind Robe' by its maker, and the other one was a nameless ring with water-type magic imbued within.

Jin-Woo put on both the robe and the ring.

After putting on the robe and pulling on the hood, Jin-Woo finally felt like he was a true Mage-type Hunter now.

'...I can feel my body cooling down.'

Just by wearing them, it felt like he was standing inside a refreshingly cool cavern or some such.

'I wonder, will this work against the flames of the Demon's Castle?'

Jin-Woo slowly stepped outside of the magic circle. And thankfully, these artefacts proved their expensive worth. The debilitating heat couldn't affect him at all now, quite unlike the last time he was here.

'Wait, won't it be uncomfortable to move around because it's a robe?'

He couldn't be sure, so he moved this way and that, but it proved to be surprisingly comfortable. As befitting its name, 'Wind Robe', the whole thing felt as light as air.

'Nice.'

With that, his preparations were complete.

However, it seemed that he wasn't the only one who had finished his preparations, because demons had picked up on his scent, and had formed a large group to rush towards his position.

If it was in the past, he'd probably fight them off in order to loosen his muscles or search through every nook and cranny of each floor to increase his level.

'However, right now....'

Now that his mother's treatment depended on this dungeon being cleared, he couldn't afford to waste a single second here. Rather than summoning out his daggers like the usual, he instead called out his soldiers first.

Shururu....

His trusty Shadow Soldiers revealed themselves.

'Where is Fangs?'

Jin-Woo looked for Fangs amidst his soldiers. It seemed that the higher the soldier's grade, the closer he'd appear, because Fangs had been summoned right behind Jin-Woo.

He took out the 'Bead of Avarice' from his Inventory and placed it on top of Fangs' palm.

"You use this from now on."

Even though Jin-Woo was supposed to be a Mage-type as well, the amplification effect of the 'Bead of Avarice' didn't work on him. But, he thought it'd prove to be quite helpful to a sorcerer like Fangs.

'.....'

As if to express his gratitude, Fangs deeply bowed his head.

Thump, thump, thump!!!

Finally, Jin-Woo could see the huge bodies of the demons getting closer.

'Okay, time to get started.'

After ordering his soldiers to get ready for battle, Jin-Woo grasped both 'Baruka's Dagger' and 'Knight Killer' in his hands.

Soon, demons rushed forward like a horde of insects in front of his nose. However, his own numbers weren't that lacking, either.

With a more relaxed expression on his face compared to his previous sojourn in this place, Jin-Woo bid his time and then, loudly shouted out.

"Go....!"

No, actually, he was planning to shout, 'Go, now!'

But, even before he could finish his words....

Kuuuuuuooooooooohhh-!!

From somewhere high up above his head, a stupendously thick frightening pillar of flames fell in a diagonal line and swept every single enemy away.

"W-what the f*ck?!"

Kuuuuuooooohh!!

The moment that scary pillar of flames swept by, everything had melted down, whether that be demons or the ground itself.

“Kiiiiieehhckk!!”

“Kiieeck!!”

Demons were incinerated in an instant, and familiar mechanical beeps rang one after the other in his ears.

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

‘No way.....’

Jin-Woo tried to calm his trembling heart and took a look behind him. And he spotted Fangs standing there, now twice the size of what his living counterpart grew to back in the dungeon, busy breathing out grey smoke from his mouth.

Gulp.

Jin-Woo swallowed down dry saliva.

‘Is this the true might of the ‘Bead of Avarice’??’

Since these monsters lived inside the Demon’s Castle, they all must’ve had some amount of innate resistance towards flame-based attacks, but they were all burned away into oblivion, just like that.

“Huh, huhuhuh....”

Once he figured out what was going on, a chuckle broke out of his lips all by itself.

‘Wait, maybe I’ll get to clear this place a lot quicker than I thought?’

Jin-Woo stared at the still-burning remains of the demons as well as at the scorched-black earth and screamed out in joy inwardly.

REPORT

Fangs' power, having been buffed up by the item 'Bead of Avarice', was gobsmackingly incredible.

Fuu-woop.

Fangs sucked in so much air that the temperature of the surroundings momentarily dropped to a bone-chilling level. And then...

Kuuuuuuuuuu....

He spat out a massive pillar of flames from left to right and literally vaporised all enemies before him.

[You killed a High-Ranked Demon.]

[You killed a Superior Demon.]

[You have earned 2,200 experience points.]

....

.....

[You killed a High-Ranked Demon.]

The messages telling him that he killed a demon and earned some experience points endlessly popped up in his view. And the tti-ring, tti-rings of the mechanical beeps didn't want to end for a while, too.

Jin-Woo was all smiles, though.

'I've hit the jackpot!!'

His Mana must've run dry, because Fangs stopped attacking.

A single shot from Fangs managed to vaporise the majority of the attacking demons' group, but there were a few lucky ones who managed to somehow survive the fiery massacre. Jin-Woo simply ordered his Shadow Soldiers to go and get rid of them.

Quietly watching over one hundred of his Shadow Soldiers marching forward in perfect order, Jin-Woo finally felt like the 'Shadow Sovereign'.

[You killed a High-Ranked Demon.]

[You killed a High-Ranked Demon.]

The feel-good messages continued on. Jin-Woo didn't even lift a finger and used only his Shadow Soldiers to annihilate the monsters. The biggest contributor among them was, of course, Fangs.

'Fangs, you beauty....'

Jin-Woo looked behind him – or, more specifically, way up behind him.

He then saw the gigantified Shadow Magic Soldier, previously a High Orc Sorcerer, and the 'Bead of Avarice' that had also been enlarged to match his size.

That bead was an item capable of doubling the power of its holder's magic attack. From Jin-Woo's perspective, it looked like that bead shored up Fangs' powers quite nicely, which would've been nerfed somewhat after becoming a Shadow Soldier. And it looked like there was some room to spare too.

'Looks like I'll have to entrust the 'Bead of Avarice' to Fangs for a while.'

Even though he was also a mage-type, he possessed not one skill that might enjoy the amplification effect, so he didn't have much of a choice here.

Jin-Woo opened his own Skill Window.

[Number of shadows that can be extracted: 127/820]

[Number of shadows that can be stored: 127/155]

'Shadow Extraction, Shadow Storage, and Sovereign's Territory.' All three skills were unaffected by the 'Bead of Avarice' whatsoever.

If he wanted to increase the number of slots for either the extraction or storage for his shadows, the sole method available currently was to increase his Intelligence Stat.

Jin-Woo closed the Skill Window.

Meanwhile, the soldiers gathered one by one in front of Jin-Woo after mopping up their quarries.

Seeing the mountains of demon corpses piled up like that, the corners of Jin-Woo's lips arched up considerably.

'With this many demons, I get plenty of loot as a result.'

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring....

This time, an endless stream of item acquisition messages popped up in his view.

‘Well, I got everything I can from here....’

Jin-Woo smiled deeply as he went about acquiring all the loot, and after finishing that up, he climbed up on the back of ‘Tank’, his trusty Ice Bear Shadow Beast Soldier.

The so-called ‘Entry Permit’ allowing him to move to the next floor hadn’t come out yet. Which meant, he had to kill more monsters on this floor.

Jin-Woo ordered his troops to move out.

“Giddy up!”

Tank slowly began trotting forward, and the Shadow Soldiers all followed after Jin-Woo in an orderly fashion.

‘The whole army moving around together is inefficient.’

Jin-Woo thought that all 120 Shadow Soldiers acting as one unit was not quite efficient enough. If the individual soldier was weak, fine, this tactic made sense. But, even the regular soldiers had gone up several levels now and they could more or less hold their own against the demons and still achieve some success.

Not only that, he even had assimilated monsters from a rank A dungeon into his Shadow Soldier army, too. Quite obviously, the overall quality of the soldiers had risen up by a lot.

“Kiiiiehhk!!”

“Kiiaahk!”

[You killed a High-Ranked....]

[You killed a.....]

What with his soldiers boasting such a mighty combat prowess, the time taken to move around and search for monsters turned out to be longer than it took to actually kill them.

The thing was, each floor of this Demon’s Castle was as wide as an average city.

‘This will take forever at this rate.’

Jin-Woo divided his soldiers into six groups of twenty. And then, had them scatter around to hunt down monsters.

He gave them two orders.

‘One, kill every enemy you can find.’

‘Two, if the entry permit for the next floor is found, let me know straight away.’

It may not be possible to hold a conversation with his soldiers, but he could still communicate by using simple hand gestures.

Since the soldiers couldn’t pick up any loot, he had to go there personally if he were to acquire the entry permit. Sure, he’d have to give up on other loot beside the ‘floor entry permit’, but his current priority was to get to the top floor as soon as possible.

“Begin.”

With his command, all six groups went their separate ways.

And, a short while later....

[You have earned 1,500 experience points.]

[You have earned 1,500 experience points.]

[You have earned 900 experience points.]

[You have earned 1,100 experience points.]

Experience points began raining down on him from literally everywhere.

‘Looks like my shadows have begun hunting, huh.’

Jin-Woo watched his experience points climb up and formed a pleased expression. However, he soon discovered that something was off.

‘The amount of experience points I get has decreased?’

After arriving on the upper floors, he never once ran into the commonly-found low or mid-ranked demons from the lower floors.

High-Ranked Demons appeared most of the time now, and every now and then, he would find a couple of Superior Demons mixed in among them.

The amount of experience points earned after killing a High-Ranked Demon was 1,700. And from the Superior Demon, a creature one rank higher than High-Ranked Demons, he received the fixed amount of 2,200 points.

However, the amount he was getting at the moment fell far, far short of those numbers.

‘Could it be that the further away they are from me, the less experience points I earn?’

Jin-Woo quietly observed the experience points messages popping up non-stop for a while. The amount earned had definitely decreased, albeit by a small margin. It seemed that he was right about the distance affecting the amount of experience points he could earn.

‘I got to learn about something useful.’

He wouldn't have found out about this fact without the unique set-up of the Demon's Castle, which let him know of the information regarding experience points.

He also thought that, he did the right thing by not letting his soldiers go out in groups to hunt on the lower floors. Back then, he wanted to refine his combat style even further by personally fighting the monsters, as well as not wanting to miss out on a single 'Demon's Soul', the so-called quest completion 'items'.

Still, he didn't think the reduced experience points weren't much of a loss.

‘Sure, I'm getting less experience points, but...’

Now that much more efficient hunting was taking place over a greater expanse of the hunting area, the overall rate of the experience points earned was actually a lot faster than before. Even now, the experience points messages were raining down on him.

With the situation being like this, his level that had stayed still since the first battle of this floor suddenly gained a lot of momentum.

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

Jin-Woo clenched his fists tightly.

‘Nice!’

Sure, he felt a bit sore about giving up on loot, but...

‘Levelling up and fast clearing speed, I shall catch these two birds in one go.’

Jin-Woo smiled in satisfaction as he confirmed his level jumping up by two.

His plan was on the money. He got to climb up to the 80th floor much faster than anticipated.

As soon as arriving there, he summoned his soldiers once more.

Shururuk.

119 Shadow Soldiers were summoned simultaneously.

The soldiers and their levels had all climbed up pretty nicely after going on their own groups to hunt monsters and earn a ton of experience points for themselves.

‘Oh? Since when did Tank gain over ten levels?’

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened wider.

Maybe it felt happy after his owner’s interested gaze fell on it, Tank, who had reached level 28 only yesterday, stood on his hind legs and let out a roar of ‘Wuuong’. Jin-Woo wasn’t the only one to enjoy the fruits of the efficient hunting, as it turned out.

He grinned brightly.

“Alright, then. Let’s go!”

Just like before, he divided his army into six groups and had them set off. He then took off alone, as well. He was familiar with acting alone anyway, and he also didn’t really need the soldiers’ help, either.

Excluding Fangs buffed up by the ‘Bead of Avarice’, he was pretty confident of fighting the whole Shadow Soldier army and winning.

However....

‘If Fangs is included?’

In that case, who knows?

If Fangs was indeed included, then things could get really interesting, that’s for sure. In the end, though, it was just him imagining something improbable, anyway.

‘Was it a week or so ago?’

Out of sheer curiosity, and also a bit as an experiment, he ordered Shadow Soldiers to attack him. For the first time ever, the soldiers disobeyed him.

‘I couldn’t tell whether that was from their loyalty to me, or because of another power restricting them....’

They didn’t budge an inch, in the end. Well, as the guy using them as his subordinates, that result wasn’t such a bad one.

Regardless of all that....

‘How come I can’t see any demons?’

After summoning ‘Baruka’s Dagger’, Jin-Woo lightly tossed it over his head and caught it a few times while searching for the presence of monsters.

‘I can tell that they are nearby, but....’

Jin-Woo took a quick look around. He could definitely sense their presence nearby, but he couldn’t spot a single monster.

When was it again?

Didn’t he experience something similar to this before?

It was then, the ground seemed to undulate violently a couple of times, before the earth suddenly shot up.

“Kek, kek.”

“Keeheehee....”

At the same time, three Superior Demons emerged from the ground and surrounded Jin-Woo while letting off rather unpleasant cackles.

Jin-Woo frowned deeply. Demons took that as the sign of their prey being scared, and they scrambled among themselves to throw their wide open maws first at the head of the prey.

It was to call dibs on the tastiest part of a human, the head.

However, when that prey jumped up and spun around once in the air...

Swiiiiish!!

Even before Jin-Woo’s feet landed back on the ground, heads of the demons fell with soft thud, thud!! first.

[You killed a Superior Demon.]

[You killed a.....]

“Ah!”

Jin-Woo lightly clapped his hands.

He finally recalled when it happened – it was the last rank C dungeon he cleared with Yu Jin-Ho.

‘Right, those Stonemen back then were hiding underground before bursting out like this, weren’t they?’

Jin-Woo’s expression that had darkened from failing to remember brightened up immediately. It sure felt like he had gotten a load off his chest.

Jin-Woo took care of the loot from the monster corpses, his face still bright, and began walking away again.

But, only after taking a handful of steps, he stopped again.

“....”

Jin-Woo’s eyes were now nailed to the ground.

While glaring at the ground beneath his feet, he spoke up.

“By the way, why aren’t you guys coming out already?”

No one could tell whether the thing that trembled just then happened to be the ground or the demons’ eyes.

Jin-Woo wasn’t able to easily leave the 80th floor.

‘Is there a group of really strong monsters somewhere on this floor?’

Yet another of Jin-Woo’s group returned back to him as shadows. He had no choice but to call them back because his Mana couldn’t sustain the rate of the soldiers’ destruction and revival anymore.

This would be the first time this happened.

From the 76th to 80th floor...

The method of hunting in dispersed groups during the past four floors had yielded the highest efficiency.

‘Is it because fighting against Superior Demons is still too much to ask for?’

For sure, it were the Superior Demons and not High-Ranked Demons that appeared on the 80th floor most of the time. Heck, these Superior Demons even employed petty tricks like hiding under the ground, too.

Even then, he didn’t think these Superior Demons possessed such powers, to be able to push back his soldiers to this degree.

‘Not only that...’

There was something weird here as well. And that would be the groups of soldiers getting attacked all happened to lack a ‘captain-class’ among them.

The groups with Fangs, Igrit, Iron, and Tank were all perfectly fine, but the other two with no captain-class got annihilated.

‘Wait, could it be that the enemy is deliberately attacking the weakest groups first?’

If so, this could only mean that a monster possessing high-enough intelligence to detect the opponent’s weakness existed on this floor. Not only strong, but it even possessed intelligence.

He obviously didn’t know who it, or they, were, but without a doubt, they were proving to be a bit of a pain in the neck.

There were four groups remaining. If he were to include himself, then five.

‘If the enemy has figured out the soldiers’ movement pattern, then their next target is pretty obvious.’

The moment he thought that, Jin-Woo disappeared from the spot.

Chapter 101 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

Jin-Woo quickly arrived near where Tank's group was.

In the not too far distance, he spotted the Shadow Beast Soldier squad half made up of black bears with black steam rising up from their bodies, and High Orcs covered in armour from head to toe.

Right in front of the pack, Tank was walking slowly but steadily forward.

'I'm pretty sure the next target will be this group.'

Tank was originally the pack leader of the Ice Bears. When it was still alive, he was strong enough to easily overwhelm the Shadow Soldiers. Even as a shadow, not many soldiers could defeat him in terms of sheer physical strength.

Unfortunately, the comparison didn't favour him this time.

First of all, the captains of the other groups, Iron, Igrit, and Fangs were different 'grades' to begin with. Even though Tank's level was high, at the end of the day, he was still an elite soldier grade.

But, both Igrit and Iron were knight grades, while Fangs enjoyed the prefix of 'elite' tacked onto his knight grade, too. Meaning, there was no comparison here.

Since the enemy seemed to possess enough intelligence to detect weaker opponents, as well as to identify the movements of the soldiers, their next target had to be here.

'Let's observe for a little while.'

Jin-Woo hid his presence to the best of his abilities and, while maintaining a fixed distance, he followed after his Shadow Beast Soldiers. His own soldiers didn't even realise that he was following them.

And so, just how much time passed them by?

Even after a long period of waiting, no enemies showed themselves, and Jin-Woo began tilting his head.

'Was I wrong about this whole thing?'

He began suspecting that, rather than powerful enemies, there just so happened to be a big concentration of enemies in the location of his soldiers getting annihilated – but, then....

Jin-Woo's eyes narrowed to a slit.

'....Here they come.'

Maybe the enemies were also concealing their presence until the soldiers got closer to them, Jin-Woo had discovered them a bit later than usual. He closed his eyes and focused his Perception.

His shockingly enhanced Perception began sweeping over all the presences found within the vicinity like a radar.

'Four presences approaching. My soldiers, 20. Demons hiding underground, five.'

Jin-Woo opened his eyes. He decided to get rid of the five demons playing possum underground a bit later, and then....

'Stealth.'

Shururuk....

Jin-Woo activated the Stealth skill to become invisible and approached his soldiers. And soon enough, he got to confirm the enemies' appearance with his own eyes.

'....They are riding on horseback??'

Rumble, rumble....

'Not only that, they are armed, too?'

Not just the riders, but even the horses they were riding on were armoured.

When the enemies came close enough, their names became visible.

He was thinking that these guys were way too different from the regular demons that walked around 'naked', whether they be low or high demons, and now he could even see that their names were different from the rest, as well.

'....A Demon Aristocrat, and three Demon Knights?'

The names he saw for the first time were written in black and very clear to see. He sensed strong hostility from all four of them.

'It must be those four that attacked my boys.'

They all possessed powerful auras and strong hostility. Jin-Woo decided to maintain 'Stealth' and observe the situation for a little while longer.

‘Let’s see what happens next.’

Since these monsters were new, he wanted to check out their skills and battle styles with his own eyes first.

‘Monsters capable of massacring Shadow Soldiers, is it...’

He was also feeling a bit expectant, too.

Jin-Woo stopped at a suitable position where he wouldn’t get in the way of the battle between the Shadow Beast Soldiers and the new types of demons that was about to get underway.

Growl?

Tank finally discovered the demons.

Once the demons got close enough, they dismounted from the horses.

‘Huh. So, those rides were simply a means of transportation.’

Jin-Woo continued to stare at the demons with a great deal of interest.

Soon afterwards, the Beast Soldiers became excited by the entrance of enemies, roared out, and attacked first, signalling the beginning of the bitter, violent battle between these two groups.

Rooooaaaar!!

Tank took to the front.

He shot forward with every ounce of power provided with his four limbs, and when he arrived in front of the enemies, he reared up on his hind legs.

A regular person would’ve fainted from the enormous pressure alone. However, the four demons remained steadfast. Even when Tank swung his massive front leg like a baseball bat, they didn’t even blink.

Whooooosh!

Tank’s front paw scythed the air. It was an agile attack that belied his massive frame.

However....

Tank’s target, the Demon Aristocrat, easily jumped over the swung front paw with a light but quick movement.

‘.....!!’

Jin-Woo’s brows shot up.

That wasn’t the end of the surprising spectacle, either. The Demon Aristocrat then spun in the air and thrust forward the spear held in its hand at Tank's chest.

Kaboom-!!

The fierce attack containing magic energy put a watermelon-sized hole in Tank's torso.

From that small-ish frame, an explosive aura could be felt rather clearly. And on top of that, it also possessed beautifully simple and clean movements, too. Jin-Woo grew even more interested by then.

'Yup, not a regular monster, alright.'

It wasn't just the Demon Aristocrat either, but the three Demon Knights were also eye-wideningly strong, as well.

The battle was one-sided. In short, the Beast Soldiers were no match for the demons.

Quite unlike the Superior Demons, which were only big in size but rather easy to hunt, these so-called Demon 'Aristocrats' or whatever and their humanoid appearances simply toyed around with the Beast Soldiers.

'This was why the rate of regeneration couldn't keep up.'

Jin-Woo's expression gradually hardened.

"Roar!!"

"Keuahahk!"

Even before the Beast Soldiers could regenerate, they were cut and sliced apart and stabbed through by spears and swords.

By then, Jin-Woo was carrying a crumpled expression. He knew very well that, as long as his MP supply held up, his Beast Soldiers were practically immortals. Even if his MP did run out, they would simply return to him as shadows.

"Kuwaak!!"

However, he sure as hell didn't feel pleased watching his own boys getting pummelled like that. Was this how an older brother would feel when his younger sibling came home all beaten up black and blue?

'That is enough.'

Jin-Woo couldn't stand it anymore and recalled his Beast Soldiers. They reverted back to their shadow forms and quickly moved below his feet, and absorbed back into his own shadow.

As soon as the Beast Soldiers disappeared after seemingly failing to endure the attacks, the demons gazed at each other and nodded their heads.

It was as if they were celebrating their third victory on the trot.

However, it happened then.

Shururuk.

Jin-Woo undid his Stealth in the midst of the demons.

Flinch!!

The demons were greatly taken by surprise, but as expected of ‘pros’, they immediately sensed Jin-Woo’s hostility and attacked him right away.

Slam!! Kwang!!

Jin-Woo punched down bare-fisted on the two knights beside him, and then, grabbed the last one rushing at him and slammed the sucker down hard on the ground.

CRACK!

The spiderweb-like cracks formed on the ground and a message popped up in his view.

[You killed a Demon Knight.]

[You have earned 3,000 experience points.]

The exact same messages repeated three times.

Each of his attacks killed one of his enemies. In less than one second, he cut short the lives of three monsters.

‘These guys were side distractions, anyway. The real deal is that guy.’

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to the Demon Aristocrat. After their eyes met, the Aristocrat flinched rather grandly and pointed at him with its spear.

‘I always wondered whether monsters could feel fear or not...’

But now, he was pretty certain of it.

Different from back when the Demon Aristocrat was pointing the spear at the Beast Soldier group, the tip of the weapon was trembling ever so slightly. Well, being able to sense the opponent’s strength was also a part of one’s skills, after all.

‘I ain’t going to go easy on you because of that, though.’

Jin-Woo dashed forward. At the same time, the Demon Aristocrat thrust the spear forward.

Jin-Woo evaded the attack by tilting his head out of the way.

Surprisingly, though – the spear changed directions multiple times and continued to harass him slightly.

First, it was his face, , his neck. And right after that, his heart. As if this wasn't something learned overnight, the demon's movement was smooth like flowing water.

However, the spear was constantly blocked by Jin-Woo's weapon, 'Baruka's Dagger'.

And when the final attack aiming for his heart was parried off, 'Baruka's Dagger' sliced the spear's shaft in two.

“...!!”

The Demon Aristocrat froze up after seeing its broken spear.

With that, this battle was over.

‘Well, not even three, or four, rank A Hunters would be able to win against you, but....’

Jin-Woo rated the demon's abilities pretty highly. Too bad, today's match-up was all wrong for the monster.

Jin-Woo reached out and grabbed the enemy's helmet with his left hand.

“Keuk!”

The shocked enemy immediately went into panic mode. It tried to pull its head back, but couldn't do anything from Jin-Woo's powerful grip. He was thinking of yanking the helmet loose and cut the head off, so he strengthened his left hand some more.

As expected, the helmet came off rather easily. And, Jin-Woo raised the 'Baruka's Dagger' high up.

“I surrender!! I will surrender!!”

Jin-Woo frowned and stopped moving.

“...A female?”

The face underneath the helmet definitely belonged to a female.

Actually, Jin-Woo didn't really care whether a monster was a male or female. But the thing was, the monster quickly lifted its hands high up in the air and declared its intentions to surrender, making him realise that he could initiate conversation with it. And right after that, 'she' even fell to the ground in a kowtow, too.

‘.....’

So, naturally, he felt a bit put off by the idea of stabbing ‘her’ with his dagger for the time being.

“P-p-please accept my apologies! We were in the wrong! P-p-please spare my life!”

Not only had she changed her stance in the blink of an eye, but she was also now even begging for her life?

A monster was doing what now???

“Hah.....??”

With a disbelieving expression etched on his face, Jin-Woo stared at the petite back of the ‘monster’ still prostrating before his feet.

Since intelligent monsters could be found in regular dungeons, it wasn’t so strange for intelligent monsters to appear in these instant dungeons, as well.

Even then, this creature... was a strange one.

‘.....’

Left feeling a bit speechless, Jin-Woo pondered what he should say here for a while, and eventually, he opened his mouth with some difficulty.

“You attacked my soldiers, yet you want my forgiveness?”

“W-we have committed a grave sin.”

The Demon Aristocrat planted her forehead on the ground and continued on.

“However, as our clan is tasked with protecting this place, we couldn’t simply let some basta.... Heok! I, I mean, we couldn’t let any great beings go on a demon hunting spree without doing anything. I’d be eternally grateful if you forgive us.”

Oh, well.

From the demons’ perspective, it was reasonable for them to think of this whole thing as a bit unfair. After all, it was he who just barged in here totally unannounced to hunt and massacre demons one-sidedly, right?

So, Jin-Woo changed his question slightly.

“Is it alright for you to beg for your life from someone who killed your own soldiers?”

“The main role of the knights are to protect their lord. As long as I’m safe, they should be happy with the results.”

Jin-Woo scratched his temple for a little. He was even more speechless now.

‘I can’t tell whether she’s thick-skinned, or just way too optimistic.’

The Demon Aristocrat slightly raised her head and tried to read Jin-Woo’s reactions.

‘Heok!!’

She couldn’t help but feel that the situation was getting gradually worse for her. She kowtowed even harder than before and spoke in an urgent voice.

“If you spare my measly life, I shall give you anything you want.”

Jin-Woo placed his hands on his waist.

This Demon Aristocrat was a powerful monster, yes, but what with her armament now stripped from her, killing her was now easier than drinking cold soup for Jin-Woo.

‘So, what should I do with this one, then?’

Jin-Woo was in a dilemma.

And that wasn’t to do with letting her go or not – no, he was simply trying to think of something more valuable than the experience points and possible loot he could get his hands on after killing her.

‘...Ah.’

There indeed was one such item.

“I want the Entry Permit.”

“Excuse me??”

Swish.

The Demon Aristocrat raised her head and stared at him with a surprised expression. Her face was shaped completely like a human’s, excluding a pair of sharp incisors he saw when she opened her mouth just now, of course.

Jin-Woo disinterestedly asked her.

“Can you get it for me?”

“...”

When her gaze met Jin-Woo’s, her complexion paled even more and she planted her forehead back on the ground.

‘Oh well. I should’ve known that monsters weren’t aware of what items are.’

The negotiation was over with that.

Jin-Woo recalled ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ back from his Inventory.

He didn’t know why monsters possessed intelligence, and were able to use that intelligence to beg for her life like this, but he had not one thought of giving up on the potential experience points.

‘A Demon Knight gave three thousand points, so how much will she give me?’

Who knows, the Entry Permit might appear after killing her, too.

However....

“I, I shall give it to you.”

“Give me what, exactly?”

“The... the Entry Permit.”

The ‘monster’ raised her head and immediately began shedding cold sweat drops after spotting the deadly-looking dagger in Jin-Woo’s hand.

“You can give me the Entry Permit? Really?”

The Demon Aristocrat hurriedly nodded her head.

“It’s in safekeeping by our clan. If you allow me to safely return, I shall hand over the permit.”

Demons were guarding the entry permit?

Jin-Woo slowly scratched his chin.

For sure, it had been a long time since he arrived on the 80th floor. And not to forget, lots of demons were hunted down so far, too. Yet, there hadn’t been a peep about the news of the entry permit.

‘I thought the drop rate had worsened because I’m in the upper floors, or that a mid-boss was carrying it around, but now....’

If she was telling the truth about monsters hiding the permit, then, well, the current situation made a bit more sense.

Seeing that Jin-Woo was silently pondering his options, the Demon Aristocrat felt even more desperate than ever before and quickly added some more ‘encouragement’.

“I also know where you can locate the Entry Permits on the upper floors as well. If you guarantee my, and my clan's, safety, then I shall safely escort you to where they are."

The light shining in Jin-Woo's eyes changed a little bit. Now that offer was a bit more enticing.

To Jin-Woo's ears, who wanted to get to the top floor as soon as possible, her suggestion of guiding him to where each floor's Entry Permit sounded rather attractive.

However....

'The question is, can I really trust her?'

Jin-Woo reached down and lifted the demon's chin. She was clearly panicking, but he didn't lessen his strength. He then looked straight into her eyes.

'Intimidation.'

[You have activated 'Skill: Intimidation'.]

Swwwoooosh....

A chill-inducing aura emanated from Jin-Woo's eyes. The Demon Aristocrat was so terrified that her lips were trembling involuntarily.

"Can I trust you?"

"I, I, I am not l-l-lying."

He made a pledge to himself back when he received the power of the System.

'Give and take.'

Even if his opponent was a monster, his principals wouldn't change. If a monster kept her side of the bargain, so would he.

"Alright."

Jin-Woo withdrew the 'Intimidation'.

"You hand over the Entry Permit, and I'll quietly leave."

"T-truthfully?"

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

It was a bit of a waste to give up on the potential experience points gained from this demon, as well as those monsters supposedly guarding the Entry Permit. But then again, he found it even more of a waste to spend time searching for the permit himself.

He had been delayed for much longer than expected on this 80th floor already.

Besides, if this female demon was thinking of tricking him, well, he wouldn't be too unhappy about that, either. Because, if she did, then he'd get to go all out in the monsters' main camp, now wouldn't he?

“Thank you very much!!”

The complexion of the Demon Aristocrat brightened so much that he couldn't help but notice it.

Was she just honest with her emotions, or was she just a simpleton?

Jin-Woo inwardly clicked his tongue, but still, didn't forget to ask her something he was curious about for a while.

“Before all that, though.... Just what are you?”

REPORT

“I am Esil, the first-born daughter of House Radiru. And my clan is...”

“No, not that.”

Jin-Woo cut Esil off.

He didn't really care about the finer details of a monster family's history. What he wanted to know was the reason why monsters and instant dungeons existed.

How should he go about asking this question, so he'd get himself a satisfying enough answer?

No, he would still be okay if there was no concrete answer. He'd be happy enough to get a single clue, a lead of some kind.

He tried asking the same thing to monsters in the regular dungeons, but the only thing he got to learn was that they could only hear the order of 'Kill the humans' inside their heads.

‘In that case, do these guys receive the exact same order, too?’

In order to help him compare the current situation with the monsters of the regular dungeons, he simplified the question a bit.

“Hey, do you also hear a voice telling you to kill humans?”

“Pardon me?”

Esil looked at him with a pair of confused eyes.

Because she was still kowtowing on the ground, he had to continue staring down at her if he wanted to talk to her face to face, and he kinda felt a bit uncomfortable about this arrangement.

‘Tsk.’

Jin-Woo lightly clicked his tongue, and as if Esil was a little kid, picked her up and made her stand straight. And then, he stared at her face again.

Maybe she got scared of the unannounced physical contact, he heard her heart rate quicken noticeably. Not minding that, Jin-Woo asked her again.

“I'm asking you if you hear a whisper of someone busy telling you to kill humans.”

“Oh....”

Esil hesitated and pondered for a moment, before opening her mouth.

“No. But, we do hear a different voice all the time.”

“Okay. What does it say?”

“It tells us to... protect the space we’re residing in.”

Esil spoke cautiously while being extra mindful of Jin-Woo’s reactions.

‘The purpose of the instant dungeon’s monsters is different from monsters of the regular dungeons?’

The sole purpose of the monsters from the regular dungeons was to kill humans, while the monsters of the instant dungeons were to guard where they were. The nature of the two camps’ aim was quite different from each other.

‘Wait a minute....’

Now that he thought about it, wasn’t Jin-Woo a monster-like existence to these monsters of the instant dungeons??

Esil’s complexion was still quite pale after bearing the full brunt of his skill, ‘Intimidation’, and he couldn’t help but feel a wee bit of pity for her.

Just a tiny bit, though.

“How long have you been hearing that voice?”

“It’s right after we opened our eyes in this place.”

‘After opening their eyes in this place, is it?’

Didn’t that imply that she and others were living in another location before this? Whether that was a genuine or a fake memory, that’s what was left imprinted in her brain.

Jin-Woo continued on with his questioning.

“Okay. Then, where have you been before waking up in this place?”

“We were in the Demon World. We just woke up one day and found ourselves stuck here.”

“And what were you doing back in the Demon World before that?”

“We were.... getting ready for war.”

“War, you say?”

“Yes.”

Did she recall the memories of back then? Esil's expression no longer had any traces of fear when she was begging for her life, now only filled with grave determination.

“We were in the situation of preparing for war against a horrifyingly powerful foe that necessitated every demon scattered around in the Demon World to unite....”

....And that's where Esil's words were cut off.

“...”

No, accurately speaking, Esil was still talking. Her lips were clearly moving up and down even now. However, Jin-Woo couldn't hear her voice at all. Instead, he was blessed with the monotone mechanical voice spat out by the System.

[You have exceeded the allowed information threshold, therefore this conversation has been blocked.]

[You have exceeded the allowed information threshold, therefore this conversation has been blocked.]

[You have exceeded the allowed information threshold....]

Right until Esil's explanations came to an end, that exact same message played over and over again.

Jin-Woo's eyes gleamed suspiciously.

‘Had you left it alone, I wouldn't have suspected anything, actually.’

Indeed, he might have thought Esil's explanations as a backstory for the monsters of this place cooked up by the System or some such. Levelling up, instant dungeons, quests, quest rewards, penalties, and even the process of getting his Class.....

He was faced with one situation after another that resembled video games, so if monsters had a game-like backstory as well, it'd not come across as strange at all.

However, the moment the System forcibly intervened, Jin-Woo became sure of one thing.

‘Talking to her might give me a clue to solving everything, in other words.’

The System made a clear and definite mistake here, just now.

“Did.... Did I make a mistake somewhere?”

When Jin-Woo's expression became graver, even Esil's own expression darkened.

'What does the System want to hide? This unknown foe the demons were supposed to fight? Or the reason for the war? Maybe the end result?'

In order to figure this out, he narrowed down the scope of his next question.

"What was the identity of those horrifyingly powerful foes?"

However, at that moment....

Like a toy with a dead battery, Esil froze up on the spot. But, that lasted only for a little while. She suddenly lost consciousness and powerlessly collapsed to the floor.

Jin-Woo quickly snatched her, and carefully laid her down on the ground. Seeing that her breathing was steady, it didn't look like she was in any danger.

However, there was a frown on her face; perhaps she felt a bit uncomfortable somewhere. She seemed to be having a bit of trouble breathing properly, too.

In order to help her rest more easily, Jin-Woo began ripping her armours off.

Riiiiip.

Her armours came off rather easily. He also tore the mantle on the back of the armour, rolled it up and placed it under her head like a pillow. It sure was a lot of work for a monster, but he didn't think this was him being too nice at all.

Because she ended up in this state, he got himself yet another clue, that's why.

'The foes demons fought....'

The System reacted way too sensitively towards the identity of this unknown foe, or foes.

'Could those beings be related?'

What if those beings possessed some kind of incredible transcendental powers, and for some reason, exerted their influence on Earth and more specifically, him....?

Jin-Woo summoned the Store interface.

He tried to wake Esil up with a potion, but it didn't seem to work.

'I guess I don't have a choice but to wait it out.'

Plop.

Jin-Woo sat down next to Esil.

And until she woke up, he systematically pieced together each tidbit of info she supplied him with.

"...Uh?"

Esil quickly raised her upper body.

Sensing another presence nearby, she looked to her side and found the totally-wordless Jin-Woo sitting there. Her shoulders flinched a little, just then.

'S-so, I wasn't dreaming....'

Slowly getting to terms with her new reality, Esil took a look around her. And there were huge piles of dead Superior Demons found nearly everywhere. Her brows shot up immediately.

Demons with little intelligence didn't treat other demons with intelligence as their kin. So, an unconscious demon like her would've been seen as a tasty meal.

However.....

The only reason why she was unscathed like this, was....

"Were you protecting me all this time?"

Rather than answering her, Jin-Woo raised his body up and then, extended his hand out to Esil.

Esil looked as if she was profoundly moved and, after holding onto his hand, cautiously stood up from the spot.

"Thank you."

"How long will we take to get to where the Entry Permit is?"

"It's not too far from here. I'll take you there."

Esil then presented Jin-Woo with both of her wrists.

".....?"

"...??"

Jin-Woo and Esil stared at each other in confusion. Feeling a bit frustrated, Esil opened her mouth first.

“I’m your hostage, so aren’t you supposed to bind my hands first before moving out?”

“Don’t wanna.”

He was confident of stopping her from resisting or escaping even without the aid of restraints. Besides, way too much time had been wasted already for him to waste even more on something useless like that.

Jin-Woo spun Esil around and pushed her slightly on her back.

Maybe she was still scared of him, he sensed her heartbeat getting faster, but Jin-Woo didn’t mention it. Instead, his gaze shifted over to the horses the demons rode on.

“What about them?”

“I’ll take them along.”

With a slightly flushed face, Esil took the reins of the horses and took the lead. Jin-Woo quietly followed her from behind.

Just as Esil said, they didn’t have to travel far before arriving at a location where the Entry Permit was likely to be present. And it just so happened to be a large castle.

‘A demon’s castle inside the Demon’s Castle, is it....?’

The Demon’s Castle was only a ‘castle’ in name and was actually a tower, but the one in front of his eyes seemed to have taken quite a lot of inspirations from the ancient castles of the medieval times.

The soldiers guarding the castle gates became tense instantly after seeing Jin-Woo, but....

“He’s a guest.”

Esil spoke disinterestedly and pointed with her chin, causing the guards to quickly open the castle gates. Soon, a group of knights came out from the inside of the castle to greet her.

“Lady Esil. We were waiting for your return.”

“Where is my father?”

“The lord is waiting in the audience chamber.”

“Understood.”

One of the knights glanced at Jin-Woo and asked.

“Lady Esil.... This gentleman is...?”

“He’s an important guest, so do not forget to mind your manners.”

After hearing Esil’s solemn tone of voice, knights quickly parted ways and lowered their heads.

Jin-Woo wordlessly followed after her and entered the deeper part of the castle. After a long walk down a wide corridor, he found himself entering a very large chamber that looked like a boss room in a dungeon.

‘So, this is the audience chamber?’

Jin-Woo scanned his surroundings.

Other than tall stone pillars reaching up to the ceiling situated at a regular interval to either sides of the chamber, it was pretty much wide open and empty. It was as if this whole place had been prepared for potential battles that could break out.

‘If I were to fight my way here, then I guess I was supposed to face the boss in this chamber, huh.’

Which meant, the male Demon Aristocrat sitting on a huge throne atop a rostrum located on the other side of the audience chamber was the boss of this place.

Esil and Jin-Woo stopped before the ‘boss’.

The boss was the first to break the ice.

“Esil.”

“Father, this person is....”

Even before listening to Esil’s explanation, the boss met the gaze of Jin-Woo, and its brows shot up high. The irises of the boss were quaking visibly now.

“Y-you!! Just who did you bring before me?!”

“F-Father, this man is a guest....”

Esil desperately tried to explain, but the boss’s agitation didn’t want to lessen at all.

“A guest?! Just what kind of a guest invades the home of the inviter with an army?!”

“Pardon me?!”

Esil quickly shifted her gaze over to Jin-Woo. Just where was this army her father was speaking of here?

The boss, meanwhile, kept his eyes firmly fixed on Jin-Woo and spoke with a trembling voice.

“Esil, do you not see it with your own eyes? Can you not see the countless soldiers hidden in that man’s darkness?” (TL note at the end)

Jin-Woo’s glare sharpened up a notch.

Flinching from the sudden change in the atmosphere, Esil quickly took a step back. Meanwhile, Jin-Woo was somewhat surprised by this development.

‘I guess he’s got pretty good senses.’

It seemed that the boss was able to ‘see’ the soldiers hidden inside Jin-Woo’s shadow.

‘Not sure whether I can call this a good thing or not, though.’

He had recalled all of his Shadow Soldiers and stored them back in his shadow to prepare for battles, just in case, before arriving here.

“How dare you bring soldiers into my house?!”

As soon as the boss roared out, many knights rushed inside the audience chamber.

“Father!”

Esil cried out to her father in a loud voice of her own.

The boss was now standing up from his throne, glaring down with anger-filled eyes. Staring silently at the developing situation until then, Jin-Woo finally opened his mouth.

“We made a promise.”

Failing to sense any form of tension whatsoever from Jin-Woo, the boss’s brows quivered greatly.

“What kind of a promise did you make?”

“The Entry Permit.”

Jin-Woo took a step forward.

“As long as you hand over the floor entry permit, I’ll quietly leave this floor.”

The boss swallowed his saliva nervously.

‘The man who hunted down demons at a frightening pace while climbing up the floors must be him.’

The boss recalled how despondent he felt when the news of the much-trusted Vulcan and Metus falling reached his ears.

Even though the Radiru clan was nominally aristocrats, they were actually ranked 20th, the very last spot on the list of the demon's hierarchy. Meaning, they were the weakest among the aristocratic clans.

If they were to face off against an enemy that took care of Vulcan and Metus quite easily, the boss knew that he'd have to sacrifice quite a lot of their own. However, such a terrifying enemy was saying that he'd leave on his own volition.

'Should I believe him....?'

The boss asked, feeling not entirely convinced.

"Is that the only thing you want from us?"

As if he was waiting for that, Jin-Woo spoke up.

"And also...."

'But, of course....'

The boss's forehead creased up in a frown as the situation unfolded as he expected. The demands of the strong were always unfair and constant.

Even before hearing the ridiculousness of the demands that would insult the clan's honour, and ridicule his proud soldiers, the boss could feel his chest tighten in frustration already.

Sure enough....

The man placed his hand on the shoulder of the boss's daughter and spoke.

"I wish to borrow this kid from you, too."

"....What did you say??"

The boss and the knights all cried out in astonishment simultaneously. Jin-Woo scanned his vicinity, feeling genuinely puzzled now.

'Mm?'

Esil told him that she knew where the Entry Permits were at in the higher floors. He only asked to 'borrow' her for a little bit so she could guide him to where the permits were, but this was....

'Did I say something wrong?'

Jin-Woo could only tilt his head this way and that as he alternated his gaze between the heavily-trembling boss, the knights who couldn't hide their astonishment, as well as Esil and her deeply-blushing face.

REPORT

“My daughter, as a guide??”

Esil’s explanation and Jin-Woo saying the exact same thing finally managed to calm down the boss’s agitation. He settled back down on his throne to think.

‘The floor entry permit, and a guide? Are they truly everything he wants from us?’

From the moment the demons found themselves locked up in here, they had to constantly hear the order to protect this land in their heads.

The order itself was not what one would call forceful. However, just like one would follow their instincts to eat when they were hungry and sleep when they were tired, the demons all thought that they had to carry this order out.

That was why the boss felt his heart fall to the pit of his stomach when he heard the news of black-armoured soldiers suddenly invading this land and hunting down lesser demons. He knew that the thing they were supposed to protect this place from had finally arrived.

The boss gave it a lot of thought, before ordering the subjugation force to move out. And surprisingly, the platoons made up of black soldiers proved easier than expected to defeat.

However, according to the reports made by the advanced scouts, there were enemies on a completely different scale compared to those easy-to-defeat black soldiers present as well.

They said that against platoons led by the robe-wearing giant ‘knight’ that could spit out flames, or a knight with something lengthy attached to its helm, there was no guarantee of victory at all.

And that was why the entirety of the Radiru Clan was getting ready to sortie in order to subjugate those two forces.

Unfortunately, those reports failed to mention the man in front of the boss’s eyes. Not even once. Meaning, the enemies’ true combat force was someone else entirely different.

‘If I knew this monster-like human was the leader of those soldiers, I wouldn't even have started fighting in the first place.'

The boss could see it.

He rejoiced after hearing the news of those black soldiers suddenly vanishing. But, they were now gathered right in front of his eyes. They were hiding within the man's darkness, waiting for an order to attack.

Even now, the boss felt a chill from the countless soldiers inside the shadow shooting him cold glares filled with thick, bone-chilling murderous intent.

'Negotiating with a mere human hurts my pride, but...'

A certain scroll named 'Entry Permit' could also be found in the list of things the demons were supposed to protect. However, wasn't the cost of protecting that single scroll far too high?

No, even if the boss was prepared to sacrifice every single one of his clansmen, he couldn't be sure of winning against this human and his soldiers.

Not only that, this man....

'...Is hiding his true abilities.'

It was uncertain what he was aiming for, but there was little doubt that he was hiding almost all of his powers like an iceberg floating on the quiet water's surface. Fighting against an enemy no one could truly comprehend was a terrifying prospect, indeed.

The boss asked again with a nervous expression.

"Truly... is that all you want?"

If the boss could protect everyone simply by handing out that Entry permit, then there was no reason not to. Also, since he'd be doing that in order to protect this land, he wasn't exactly going against that order from the unknown source, either.

Jin-Woo nodded his head.

"You will not bring harm upon my daughter?"

Suddenly, Jin-Woo felt Esil's glance.

'A monster worrying about his daughter, is it.....'

Jin-Woo was inwardly surprised but didn't forget to nod his head regardless.

The boss pondered for a short while, before a smile formed on his face.

“We’ll do that, then.”

The moment he agreed to hand it over, the boss felt as if a persistently-annoying aching tooth had finally come loose or some such.

If the event of stopping the prophetised advent of calamity by handing over a scrap of paper didn’t qualify as a matter to rejoice, then what else would?

“No, if you could do that, we’d be very grateful.”

Jin-Woo had been getting ready for the eventuality where things go the other way, but after seeing the boss’s bright smile, he too smirked and let go of all the built-up tension in his body.

‘I guess Esil got her personality from her old man.’

Was this how the System’s setting was like for this place, or what she said was really.....

Jin-Woo quickly shook off the distracting thoughts and gave his assurance to the eagerly-waiting boss.

“I keep my promises.”

“Very good.”

The boss snapped his fingers, and a soldier hurriedly brought a large scroll from somewhere to present it before Jin-Woo. He then unfurled the scroll.

‘It is really the Entry permit.’

Confirming the contents of the scroll, a thick smile formed on Jin-Woo’s lips.

[Item: Entry Permit]

Rarity: ??

Type: ??

A permit allowing you to enter the 81st floor of the Demon’s Castle. Can only be used on the 80th floor’s floor-transfer magic circle.

He was suspicious of whether he could get an item from monsters through nothing more than just dialogue, but this was really the Entry Permit he was looking for.

If there was one difference from the permits found on the lower floors, then it’d be the red emblem of the Radiru Clan stamped on the bottom of the permit itself.

‘So, does this mean I’m supposed to take the permits away from different clans from this floor onwards?’

The corners of Jin-Woo’s lips arched up.

He preferred this arrangement a lot more than hunting monsters endlessly and waiting forever for the permit to randomly drop without notice.

Jin-Woo rolled the scroll back up and sent it to his Inventory.

“Hey, is it fine if we get going now?”

Jin-Woo urged Esil and turned towards the exit, but then, the waiting knights suddenly blocked the doorway.

‘.....?’

Jin-Woo looked back feeling puzzled, only to find Esil grinning brightly back at him.

So, what was going on now?

The boss quickly walked over and stood before Jin-Woo.

“We’d never let an important guest of the Radiru Clan go like this.”

A certain overbearing aura came off from the boss’s large frame. However, seeing that there was a smile of a friendly neighbourhood uncle etched on his face, it didn’t look like he was trying to intimidate the other party.

The boss spoke with a pleading tone of voice.

“As a celebration of the successful negotiation, would you mind having a feast with us? We also need to prepare my daughter for the long voyage ahead.”

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to Esil.

She was cautiously waiting for his answer, although he could easily see that she also wanted this.

Well, she did keep her side of the bargain. So, wouldn’t it be only right that he too behave in a gentlemanly manner, too?

Besides, he also needed to eat anyway, and he had grown sick and tired of the stale bread and jerky strip combo being sold in the Store by now.

“...Okay, I will.”

Jin-Woo finally consented after a short bout of hesitation, prompting the boss to break out in a big grin.

“Thank you!”

The complexions of Esil and the knights also brightened considerably.

Soon, the boss was yelling at his subordinates.

“What are you all doing? Prepared for a grand feast!”

Since he had spent way too much time on the 80th floor, he wasn't planning on wasting any more on other floors.

He was worried about whether Esil, coming with him as a guide, could use the floor-transfer magic circles or not, but that worry was put to rest pretty quickly.

[A Demon Aristocrat has requested to accompany you.]

[Will you allow it?]

[Once allowed, the companion will be able to use the magic circles, and depending on the rate of contribution, experience points earned will be shared as well.]

‘...Wait, I'll be sharing my experience points with my companion??’

The thing about sharing experience points got on his nerves slightly, but thankfully, there was the clause about ‘rate of contribution’. Which meant that, as long as he didn't give his companion a chance to fight, the experience points wouldn't be divided at all.

So, Jin-Woo made sure to drill this point into Esil.

“Even if battles break out, you must not interfere. I shall take care of everything. Understood?”

“.....Y-yes.”

Esil replied rather shyly.

‘....??’

In any case, Jin-Woo agreed to her accompanying him and hurried with his steps. A few steps behind him, Esil did her best to chase after Jin-Woo while carrying luggage several times the size of her actual body.

The luggage itself wasn't heavy, but keeping up with Jin-Woo's walking speed was proving to be somewhat challenging to her. Jin-Woo had no choice but to stop and wait now and then so she could catch up to him.

“We can see it now over there.”

After arriving on the 81st floor, Esil began checking out the map of this very floor, and then, pointed at the faint outline of a castle far away from them. Jin-Woo nodded his head, having already thought as much.

“Please wait.”

Esil put down the large luggage, and began rummaging through it. Soon, a ceramic liquor bottle rested in her hands. Jin-Woo had to ask her about that.

“What are you planning to do with that now?”

“This is a bottle of the finest liquor that the Clan Head of the Garuche Clan enjoys. If we go and speak to him with it, the negotiation will be....”

“Negotiation?”

Jin-Woo smirked and summoned his Shadow Soldiers out.

‘Come out.’

As soon as he called, the soldiers instantly revealed themselves.

Shururu....

‘How can this be....?!’

Esil doubted her own sight, then.

There were three ‘soldiers’ with similar levels to that of an upper Demon Aristocrat. And then, two deadly-looking daggers suddenly appeared out of nowhere to rest in the hands of the very person who summoned these soldiers.

After being subjected to an aura that was sharp enough to almost slice her flesh simply by standing near him, Esil had to do a double take to make sure that the man in front of her eyes was the same person she had been conversing with until just now.

“Y-you’re not going to negotiate with them??”

Rather than an answer, Jin-Woo asked back, instead.

“By any chance, is your clan friendly with this Garuche or whatever clan?”

“N-no, not at all. We the aristocrats always competed bitterly against each other for a place in the Demon World’s nobility ranking, so.... Still, they are a group we can hold civilised meetings with.”

Hearing that, Jin-Woo simply grinned.

“In that case, it’s fine.”

Making one exception was enough. Just as important as finding the Entry Permit, he needed to raise his level, too.

“You, wait here.”

Jin-Woo told her as so, and while leading his soldiers forward, headed towards the distant castle.

“P-please, wait!!”

Esil stood there in stunned silence for a moment, before she belatedly stared in the direction of Jin-Woo’s travel.

“Heok!!”

In that short amount of time, the castle belonging to the Garuche Clan was burning in flames.

Rumble.....

A monster as tall as a giant spat out a pillar of flames, and the castle’s gate and walls melted down without offering any resistance whatsoever. Garuche knights rushing out in confusion were cut down by the black soldiers one by one.

“Oh, my dear lord....’

Esil was so shocked that she spat out something that could either be a gasp or a moan.

“Kuwaahhk!!”

“Uwaaah!!”

The castle of Garuche that looked several times more impregnable than Radiru Clan’s own castle, was powerlessly crumbling down. Esil could only swallow down her nervous saliva.

‘If father didn’t hand over the permit willingly, then.....’

The Radiru castle might have been burning down to cinders just like the Garuche castle right about now.

Just imagining it made her dizzy. At the same time, she thought that her clan got a really lucky break after their negotiation went down so well.

Kaboom!!!

Another tower beyond the castle walls crumbled back down to earth with a loud explosion.

‘How can anyone fight against a monster like him....?’

Esil wiped the sweat drops trickling down to her chin, and breathed a sigh of relief, knowing that her clan had managed to skirt past a calamity.

The higher-ups of the Japanese Hunter Association and the ministerial members of the Japanese government had gathered today for an urgent meeting.

As the heavy, gloomy atmosphere descended on the conference chamber, the Association President quietly opened his mouth.

“I hear that recently, the mood in South Korea is boisterous due to the entrance of their tenth rank S Hunter.”

The high ranking officials present smirked slightly.

There were already more than twenty rank S Hunters in Japan. Yet, the Koreans were celebrating their tenth rank S?

Well, that did make some sense considering that, after excluding the two they lost to an accident as well as to emigration, there were only eight rank S Hunters found in Korea, to begin with.

Whatever the case may be, today’s meeting wasn’t held to ridicule South Korea. If that were the case, then the atmosphere of this place wouldn’t be this grave.

Sitting in his chair with a deep frown on his face, the ‘Boei Daijin’ of Japan – the Minister of Defense – testily opened his mouth.

“What does that have to do with today’s meeting?”

His voice accurately conveyed how deeply troubled he was.

The island at the southern end of the Korean peninsula, Jeju Island, had been completely overrun by monsters after the Koreans failed to clear a dungeon there.

On top of that, these weren’t any other regular monsters, but ant-types that boasted a rigid hierarchy system as well as an incredibly rapid reproduction rate.

If that was all, the Japanese government would simply ridicule their Korean counterpart and laugh at their misfortune, but now, the Japanese mainland was bearing the cost of that mishap as well.

Only yesterday, an ant they suspected to have flown in from the Jeju Island completely wiped a small village off the Japanese map.

They could no longer ignore the fallout from that event anymore. Most of all, their urgent priority had to be with calming down the irate Prime Minister and his orders of finding a speedy resolution to this crisis.

Which meant, the job security of several important people gathered here was hanging in the balance, yet to start such an important meeting off with some useless banter?

It was only natural that the Defense Minister would frown unhappily.

However, the Association President carried on regardless.

“People are more prone to making mistakes when they are in an agitated state.”

The snow-white hair and wrinkles filling up the entirety of his face spoke of how old he was already.

“And I believe this is the best chance for us.”

His declaration managed to gather the eyes of everyone present within this noisy conference chamber. Unlike just now, when he raised his voice in unhappiness, the Minister of Defense was speaking with a lot more nervousness.

“Do.... you have a good plan in mind?”

“Rather than calling it ‘good’, I’d say ‘appropriate’ is a more suitable description, instead.”

Everyone present, including the Minister of Defense, as well as various ministers and Association’s own upper management, all focused their attention on the Association President’s words.

As if he was taking his time for precisely this moment, the President opened his mouth.

“If you insist that a piece of land is yours when you don’t even have enough strength to defend it, will anyone acknowledge you as the owner?”

“.....”

A bout of silence fell on the conference room.

Just what was the Association President trying to say here?

Considering the relationship between South Korea and Japan, that declaration would never be glossed over as a senile old man’s ramblings if the general public got wind of that.

Not to forget, this old man was none other than the current President of the Japanese Hunter’s Association.

“...So, what is it that you wish to say?”

Minister of State cautiously asked.

The Association President scanned the men sitting to his left and right side, before confidently declaring out loudly.

“We shall get rid of the monsters in the Jeju island.”

Noisy, noisy....

“And then....”

The chamber had gotten noisy for a brief moment, but it was silenced immediately by the Association President’s voice.

He carried on.

“...We will take Jeju island from them.”

REPORT

Taking Jeju Island away?

The higher-ups of the Japanese Hunter's Association remained calm as if they had heard the story from the Association President prior to the meeting. However, the same couldn't be said about the government officials.

“What on earth are you even talking about?!”

“Are you suggesting that we should wage a war with the Koreans?”

“They have been getting ready for war for the last 60 years!”

“Say something that makes sense, will you?!”

The voices of the government representatives quickly got heated up.

Right now, the proverbial flames from the ant monster incident that fell on their feet were in the process of spreading to their ankles. If they failed to present an acceptable solution to the Prime Minister and to the mass media, just who knows how many sitting here today would lose their posts?

That was why they had summoned the Association President for this meeting, so he could suggest a tangible solution, yet what was he saying now?

The Jeju Island this and that?!

How could they not be incensed when the Association President was yapping on about sheer nonsense in front of these busy people?

If it weren't for the Hunters guarding the sides of the Association President Matsumoto Shigeo, the government officials would've already started their expletive-laden tirades.

‘How can my expectation be on the money this wonderfully?’

Matsumoto Shigeo looked at the barrage of ugly criticism flying in his way and smirked inwardly. Their furious reactions were well within his calculations.

‘Tsk, tsk.’

Matsumoto tutted lightly in his mind, before opening his mouth he'd been keeping close until then.

“Obviously, I’m not suggesting that we should wage war with the Koreans. And I’m also not suggesting that we take the land away by force, either.”

“What was that?”

“Then, just what is it that you’re trying to say?”

“Can’t you stop beating around the bush?”

A corner of Matsumoto Shigeo’s lips arched up.

“We simply make the Korean give us the land on their own volition.”

The riled up mood of the conference chamber rapidly cooled down from the cold attitude of Matsumoto Shigeo. Judging from the strength of the tone of his voice, or from his attitude when saying these words, anyone hearing him could tell that the Association President was being dead serious.

‘.....’

The Vice Prime Minister was famed for his ice-cold demeanour, yet he chose to break his silence precisely at that moment.

“Association President Matsumoto.”

He was the closest aide to the current Prime Minister, not to mention his spokesperson on this occasion.

He was attending this meeting as the proxy of Japan’s current leader, so what he said in this place carried as much weight as the Prime Minister’s own words.

“What you said just now.... How will you achieve that?”

A man who could realistically be called the second most powerful figure in the Japanese government was showing his interest in the Association President Matsumoto Shigeo’s plan.

Was it because someone had finally paid attention?

Matsumoto Shigeo became sombre as he proceeded with his explanations.

“The Koreans currently lack the strength to deal with a rank S Gate. That was the situation four years ago when the ants first appeared, and it’s still the same story even now.”

The Vice Prime Minister nodded his head.

Jeju Island was a large island that equalled around 2% of South Korea’s total land mass. They had lost that much land to the monsters, yet were utterly unable to do anything about it, so was there any further explanation necessary?

After the third subjugation effort ended in failure, the Korean government unofficially gave up on Jeju Island.

That was the unofficial story everyone accepted as of now.

“Under the current circumstances, how would they react when we make a suggestion of the Japanese rank S Hunters aiding with the subjugation of the ants?”

The news of the portion of the mutated ants capable of flight should have reached Korea by now. Meaning, they should’ve also realised that it was only a matter of time before the Korean mainland would be attacked.

Unless the decision makers of the Korean government were mad, there was no way they would reject external help if provided.

However....

“Even if we do lend some aid, do you believe the Koreans would hand over Jeju Island like that?”

Just as the Vice Minister alluded to just now, there were certainly a few holes in the Association President’s words. From here and there, several officials began smirking openly as well. Unlike them, though, the Vice Prime Minister carried on in a calm voice, sounding neither ridiculing nor angry.

“Just as you said, Mister Association President, the ants might be taken care of if we lend aid to the Koreans.”

Out of everyone present today, the person most knowledgeable regarding the combined strengths of the Korean and Japanese Hunters was the Association President Matsumoto Shigeo. And he was certain of the total defeat of the ants.

There was no disagreement over that.

“However, even if that happened, what is there for us to gain?”

Even though the Japanese citizens had suffered somewhat, ultimately, the ants of Jeju Island were the Koreans’ problem to solve. There was no way they would sacrifice their own Hunters to help out the Koreans.

‘What a nonsensical notion that is.’

The Vice Prime Minister had always been wise to the potential benefits to be gained. And he was inwardly snorting in derision right now. If you concede on something, you were supposed to gain something back in return. That was one of the basics in politics.

If they were to lend out their Hunters, then they had to get something suitable back as compensation.

‘Receiving Jeju Island would be barely on the acceptable level of compensation.’

The Vice Prime Minister showed some interest because his thoughts had aligned with that of the Association President. However, the reply he got instead sounded like an attempt at catching the floating clouds.

Naturally, the interest of the Vice Prime Minister had cooled down faster than anyone else’s.

It was then, the Association President formed a mysterious smile.

“When did I say we’d be helping the Koreans?”

The Vice Prime Minister frowned deeply.

‘Is he trying sophistry with me?’

Just as he was about to reprimand the Association President in a dignified way with the words of “Stop wasting our time”....

‘Wait....’

The eyes of the Vice Minister widened.

The Association President said he’d ‘suggest’ lending an aid, but not about actually lending it.

“You, perhaps.....?”

“It is as you suspect.”

The Association President willingly acknowledged it. As soon as he discovered the utterly shocked expression of the Vice Prime Minister, the Association President knew that man had arrived at the same conclusion as well.

“You’re planning to..... shove the Korean Hunters inside that ant hole, aren’t you?”

As expected of a seasoned politician.

‘So, there was a reason why he’s rumoured to be a rather ‘smart’ man.’

The Association President sent a satisfied smile to the Vice Prime Minister and his rather quick-witted way of thinking.

“When Korea’s top Hunters enter the ant tunnel to kill the ant queen while placing their faith in our supposed ‘aid’, we’ll simply withdraw our Hunters.”

The Koreans had suffered three failures already. If that losing streak extended to fourth, who'd suspect the betrayal of the Japanese Hunters had anything to do with it? No, it was fine to be suspect. By then, everything would be finished already, anyway.

The voice of the Vice Prime Minister quaked noticeably.

“Are you... Are you planning to annihilate the top Hunters of South Korea?”

“The moment a Gate they couldn't handle opened up in Jeju Island, their fate has been sealed already.”

The Association President once more voiced his own fatalistic world view.

“No, they only managed to sustain their pathetic lives somehow, until now.”

“But, that is...”

“Once their top Hunters disappear in that manner, the Koreans will definitely not feel secure anymore.”

What would happen when mutated ants capable of flight begin appearing in South Korea one by one, with all of their rank S Hunters dead?

Would the Koreans continue playing dumb when that happens?

If it were one or two ants, their Guilds might be able to kill the invading monsters somehow. However, just as the statistics showed, the number of mutated ants would only increase exponentially, and eventually, the entirety of South Korea would be shaken up sooner or later.

‘When that happens, surely they would request aid from other country's Hunters.’

However, who would be willing to help the Koreans out by then?

China or Russia, with their great number of Hunters, but also with massive land mass they needed to cover, too?

Or, the Americans, who refused to help when the rank S Gate opened up back then?

Or, the North Koreans, who might invade Seoul by bringing over their own rank S Hunters, instead?

‘No, it'd be only us, the Japanese.’

Because, Japan would also be in trouble when the number of mutated ants increases. The Koreans would have no choice but to cling onto Japan, and when that happened, Japan would be able to demand anything from them in return.

‘Koreans might really be willing to hand over Jeju Island by then....’

It’d be as exactly as the Association President had said.

Suddenly, the Vice Minister felt a chill run down his spine. To think, that man was willing to drive another country’s top Hunters to death just to make his ambition into reality....

Wouldn’t a country fall to ruin because of this man if others weren’t being careful?

‘He’s a truly terrifying man, this Association President Matsumoto Shigeo.’

The Vice Minister shuddered from the horrifying scheme of the Association President. However, that wasn’t the end.

The Association President carried on.

“Jeju Island will just be the beginning.”

One by one....

Whenever the Koreans needed the power of rank S Hunters, they would have no choice but to slowly come under Japan’s influence. It was truly possible to swallow up South Korea without firing a single shot.

“....And those are my thoughts.”

Only after the Association President ended his lengthy explanation did the various cabinet members take their deeply held-up breaths. Those who previously dismissed the Association President as a crazy fool were now listening closely, strands of cold sweat trickling down their faces.

The Association President quietly inquired.

“What is your decision, Mister Vice Prime Minister?”

The gazes of everyone present focused on the Vice Prime Minister.

“.....”

The Vice Prime Minister swallowed his saliva.

Currently, he was speaking for the Prime Minister here. Of course, as long as the Prime Minister trusted him, the decision made in this chamber would not be overturned at a later date.

So, carefully, and even more cautiously than before....

‘.....’

After lengthy deliberation, the Vice Prime Minister raised his head.

“How should the government aid you in this venture?”

[You killed a Demon Knight.]

[You have earned 3,000 experience points.]

[You killed a Demon Knight.]

[You have earned 3,000 experience points.]

[You killed a Demon Aristocrat.]

[You have earned 4,500 experience points.]

Each time the Shadow Soldiers killed a demon found inside the castle, Jin-Woo was inundated with the experience points messages without rest.

Preparing for the final showdown on the top floor, Jin-Woo continued to raise his levels diligently.

When there were good rewards on offer, the accompanying risk would also be high, as well.

‘The Divine Water of Life, bonus Stat points, top-ranked Rune Stones, etc....’

When he thought about the rewards he would get after defeating the king of demons, there was just no way he’d slack off on levelling up himself.

[Level up!]

As it so happened, almost all the demons in the vicinity had been taken care of, so Jin-Woo summoned his Status Window to confirm his current level.

[Level: 87]

Before he entered the Demon’s Castle for the second time, his level was 80, but it had already reached 87. Seeing the increased Stats, a smile automatically formed on his face.

‘Nice.’

Jin-Woo tightly clenched his fist.

[You killed a Demon Aristocrat.]

[You killed a Demon Aristocrat.]

In the meantime, his Shadow Soldiers killed off the remaining demons. It was a complete victory.

With the battle now over, the soldiers gathered before Jin-Woo as usual. Among them, Iron was the fastest to arrive at his side. As if he was expecting to be praised, Iron puffed out his chest and stood at attention.

Jin-Woo chuckled slightly while looking at the mountainous physique blocking his view.

“You finish with everything?”

Iron nodded his head.

“Are you sure?”

Iron nodded his head even more energetically than before. Jin-Woo smirked and extended out his senses. And then, as he spun around, he also threw the ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ behind him.

‘Dagger Throw!’

His dagger flew towards a certain empty wall in the blink of an eye. But, then....

“Keo-heok!!”

The dagger didn’t hit the wall, but instead stabbed deeply into the chest of a demon hiding there quietly while using invisibility. It had been quietly waiting for Jin-Woo to be separated from his soldiers to mount a sneak attack.

“Euh-euhk....”

The demon could only freak out inwardly at the dagger piercing its left chest.

‘How did he find out?!’

If the demon was a human, that’s where the heart would have been. Meaning, that human male had completely seen through the invisibility magic from a high-ranked demon aristocrat.

‘How could a measly human....?’

When the demon raised its shocked gaze away from his wound, Jin-Woo was already standing beside his target. The demon’s eyes quaked violently.

“But, how....?”

Jin-Woo pulled out the ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ and activated his only close-quarter combat skill.

‘Vital Point Targeting!’

Stab!

The demon that barely managed to hold on from the damage inflicted by the Dagger Throw, ended up dying in one hit from the maxed-out ‘Vital Point Targetting’ skill.

[You killed a Demon Aristocrat.]

Jin-Woo returned the ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ back to his Inventory, and stood before Iron again.

“So, how will you explain this?”

‘.....’

As if he was feeling sheepish, Iron lowered his gaze and scratched the back of his head. Well, rather than the head, it was the back of his helmet, though. Soon, Igrit also made his return, having killed all the demons hiding in the deeper parts of the castle.

Ng?’

However, Jin-Woo sensed something was different about Igrit.

‘What’s this?’

Jin-Woo observed the approaching Igrit and tilted his head.

Igrit quickly approached Jin-Woo and knelt down, before lowering his head. Up until here, it wasn’t such a strange scene. But, quite unlike from before, Jin-Woo heard the mechanical beep of ‘tti-ring’ going off suddenly in his head.

‘There’s a System message?’

Jin-Woo swallowed his saliva.

Chapter 105 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

[Knight 'Igrit' is requesting your permission to advance his grade.]

[Will you permit the advancement?]

'Permission to advance?'

Surprised by the never-before-seen System message, Jin-Woo quickly confirmed Igrit's information to make sure.

[Igrit Lv. Max]

Knight grade.

It's now possible to advance the grade after the level requirement has been met. Will advance to the next grade when the Sovereign gives his permission.

'Igrit's level.....??'

The level that previously hovered around the 30 mark had changed to 'Max' before he had noticed it. It must've been the case that, once the Shadow Soldier's level cap had been met, he'd be given an opportunity to advance to the next grade.

'Is the requirement level for advancement somewhere between the late thirties and early forties?'

When taking into account the potential level-ups happening during a single battle, he suspected that the required level had to be around there somewhere.

Considering that the average level of the Shadow Soldiers was still around the early twenties, it sure as heck felt like a cumbersome requirement.

'Besides all that, it also needs my consent, too.'

That must've been the reason why Jin-Woo thought there were hints of unknown but earnest yearning in Igrit's eyes as he ran over here.

'.....'

Igrit didn't raise his lowered head at all.

Jin-Woo could even sense a nervous determination emanating from Igrit as he waited for his lord's decision without budging an inch from his kneeling position.

Jin-Woo was even tempted to pat the dude on the shoulder and praise him for the job well done.

‘This guy....’

Jin-Woo’s gaze shifted back to the System message.

[Will you permit the advancement?]

The message was blinking slowly as if to urge him for an answer.

Igrit was one of the very first to become his Shadow Soldiers, not to mention one who fought the hardest until now, as well. Was there a reason not to allow the grade advancement here?

Without a shred of hesitation, Jin-Woo replied to the System’s message.

“I allow it.”

[Please designate the command phrase.]

‘I need a command phrase for something like this, too?’

Jin-Woo frowned briefly, but changed his mind just as quick.

‘Oh, well.’

Quite a few became Shadow Soldiers at the same time. For today, it was only Igrit, but if more than a few soldiers requested him for the advancement permission at the same time in the near future, then it might become rather tedious and time consuming to answer their call one by one. Especially so, if it happened during the middle of a fight.

The command phrase would prove to be useful on those occasions, that’s for sure. After a short deliberation, Jin-Woo spoke up.

“Permitted.”

He went with the ‘Simple is best’ mantra.

As soon as the command phrase was set, changes rapidly took place. It began from beneath Igrit’s feet.

Wuuuaaahhh-!!

Accompanied by screams coming from a distant place, countless black hands emerged from Igrit’s shadow and they grabbed onto every part of him.

‘What’s this?’

Jin-Woo observed in great interest the unfolding process of the advancement. At first, he thought that those black hands would drag Igrit back into the shadow, but in reality, the opposite happened, instead.

The hands holding onto Igrit turned into black smoke and spun around him quite ferociously, before getting absorbed by him. It was as if Igrit was absorbing the black smoke voluntarily.

Psuuuuuaaahhk!

Igrit emerged from the dissipating black smoke while emitting a far greater aura than ever before.

Tti-ring.

The System message informed Jin-Woo of the results.

[The current grade of Knight 'Igrit' has advanced from 'Knight grade' to 'Elite Knight grade'.]

'Niiice!'

Jin-Woo did his best to calm his trembling heart and rechecked Igrit's information window.

[Igrit Lv.1]

Elite Knight grade

'His level has been reset, but his current grade is the same as Fangs now.'

Before joining Jin-Woo's army of the Shadow Soldiers recently, Fangs used to be the boss monster of a rank A dungeon. Now that Igrit was on the same grade as a creature that powerful, it could only mean that his abilities had grown by that great a deal now.

Ba-dump...

Jin-Woo's heart beat faster. The theory he came up with back when he became the Shadow Sovereign turned out to be correct.

'It wasn't just me who can get stronger.'

Jin-Woo's gaze swept over each of his Shadow Soldiers.

'All these guys are growing stronger alongside me, too.'

After Igrit changed so noticeably through the grade advancement, he was reminded once more of his soldiers' capability for growth. He was now beset with the desire to urgently raise the levels of other soldiers and have them advance to the next grade as soon as possible.

'Looks like one more thing has been added to my to-do list, huh?'

And so, as he stood there checking out his soldiers while feeling rather satisfied with himself....

From afar, he spotted Tank quickly approaching closer with a dead body of a demon that escaped a little while ago in his jaw.

‘Uh?’

However, the light shining in Tank’s eyes as he hurriedly ran closer also seemed rather suspicious, too. Those eyes, that aura....

Jin-Woo quietly stared, before asking aloud with a disbelieving expression on his face.

“Even you?!”

Tank finally stopped right in front of Jin-Woo’s nose and quickly discarded the corpse he worked so hard to bring here. He then began prostrating as well, with his front legs gathered together before his head.

“Wuuong.”

And sure enough, another message popped up in Jin-Woo’s view.

Tti-ring.

[Elite ‘Shadow Beast Soldier’ is requesting for permission to advance his grade.]

[Will you permit the advancement?]

‘...Holy cow.’

Jin-Woo facepalmed in surprise. A quick confirmation of Tank’s information revealed that his level had also reached the cap as well.

[Shadow Beast Soldier Lv. Max]

Elite grade

It’s now possible to advance the grade after the level requirement has been met. Will advance to the next grade when the Sovereign gives his permission.

‘Wait a minute....’

Jin-Woo found this rather odd.

Unlike the tireless battle machine named Igrit, who started off as a level 7 and maintained his sky-high level until now, Tank was still a far away from meeting the level cap that Jin-Woo suspected to be the advancement requirement.

Yet, both Igrit and Tank were about to advance around the same time?

The difference in these two guys’ levels wasn’t something that could be bridged by this one battle alone.

‘Could it be.... the required level is different for each grade?’

If so, then it made sense.

He thought that since Tank was an ‘Elite’ rank, his level cap would be lower which meant his advancement would be faster; on the other hand, Igrit and his ‘Knight’ grade needed more time to advance.

If that was the case, then indeed it was possible for the timing of their advancements to match so coincidentally like this.

When Jin-Woo’s thoughts reached this point, a certain possibility suddenly entered his mind.

‘Wait, if I reach the right level, could I advance in grade, too?’

It was just that the required level was so high that he hadn’t reached it yet.

‘...Eiii, there’s no way.’

Jin-Woo smirked to himself. At the same time, he allowed the advancement to commence.

“Permitted.”

As soon as his permission left his lips, the same type of process as Igrit took place with Tank as well. Hands emerged from the shadow, changed to smoke, and got absorbed into Tank.

Shuuuuhhak....

And just like Igrit, Tank also became a realm stronger than before.

[The current grade of Elite ‘Shadow Beast Soldier’ has advanced from ‘Elite grade’ to ‘Knight grade’.]

However, there were some differences, too.

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring.

The mechanical beep went off continuously and System messages popped up one after another.

[You can bestow a name to a soldier with Knight grade or above.]

[The bestowed name will be maintained until the Shadow Soldier is dismissed.]

[Please assign the soldier’s name.]

Tank was a temporary name Jin-Woo came up with on a whim.

Since a name couldn't be assigned unless a soldier was a Knight grade, Tank's official moniker had been stuck as a 'Shadow Beast Soldier'. If it weren't for his twice-as-huge frame compared to other bears, there was no way to differentiate Tank from the others.

But now, Jin-Woo could freely assign a name now.

A deep smile formed on his face.

"Tank."

[Will you assign it as 'Tank'?]

"I will."

When Jin-Woo confirmed it, the information on the 'Shadow Beast Soldier' changed.

[Tank Lv.1]

Knight grade.

Perhaps he knew that the advancement process had ended, Tank raised his body up. Standing on his hind legs, he was as tall as a regular two-story house now. Jin-Woo wholeheartedly praised him.

"You finally have a name now, Tank."

Feeling pleased, Tank raised its head up high and roared out loudly.

"You guys all did well."

So, time to take a well-deserved break until the next floor.

Jin-Woo recalled his soldiers back into his shadow, and while doing that, he couldn't help but spot Iron and his drooping shoulders. The poor guy was the only one out of the 'old' members to not get an advancement today.

Shururu....

After his soldiers disappeared as shadows, Jin-Woo left the castle. Esil was waiting for him outside with a rather haggard face.

"E-excuse me, Sir Jin-Woo?"

"I told you, stop calling me a Sir."

"Y-yes."

Esil hesitated somewhat after Jin-Woo curtly replied to her, but eventually, she spoke again.

"Excuse me.... Uhm, Jin-Woo... sir."

The demons were a lot more ‘sensitive’ towards one’s seniority than expected, it seemed.

“...Fine. What now?”

“Do you know.... how many clans have ceased to exist by your hands?”

Currently, they were on the 89th floor.

Esil’s clan was on the 80th, so that would make nine clans?

What with her witnessing a clan being killed off every time they climbed up a floor, Esil had finally grown too anxious to remain silent.

“Clans of superior aristocrats are managing the floors 90 and above. They are on another level compared to the upper aristocrats you’ve encountered so far.”

Jin-Woo didn’t slow down his steps, but still asked her anyway.

“Okay, so what?”

“How about resolving the matters with dialogue from now on? If you talk to them nicely, they might hand over the Entry Permit like my cla....”

Jin-Woo cut her off there.

“If I was weaker than your clan, you think your people would’ve tried talking to me at all?”

Esil quickly shut her mouth up. A measly little human dared to show up uninvited to a castle full of demons, and not only that, proceeded to demand something from said castle, too?

That human wouldn’t have been able to return home alive.

“That’s how it is.”

Jin-Woo smirked deeply.

Whether it was a monster from a regular dungeon, or a monster from instant dungeons, the relationship with humans would go only as far.

‘The strong will devour the weak.’

Jin-Woo agreed with that concept. Besides, he was urgently pressed for both the Entry Permits and the level-ups, so he wasn’t planning to give up on either of those.

‘.....’

Jin-Woo glanced at Esil to his side.

He found her continued silence and the expression of dejection strange and asked her about it.

“I thought it’d be a good thing for your people if other clans were destroyed?”

“Pardon?”

“Didn’t you say that demon clans are bitterly contesting with one another on the hierarchy or whatever?”

“Ah, that.... That is true. However....”

From here onwards, they were stepping into the territories of the superior aristocrats.

If Jin-Woo failed in his conquest for some reason, then the fury of those superior aristocrats would be directed in full towards her and her own clan. Esil was worried about that.

Regardless of her worries, Jin-Woo spoke up confidently.

“I’ll make your Radish Clan as the number one on the pecking order.”

‘...But, our clan is Radiru, you know.’

Esil could only complain meekly in her mind.

Soon, they would be stepping into the upper floor. Could a lone man manage to destroy the superior aristocrats and their clans with nothing but his own powers?

‘.....Eiii, I don’t care anymore.’

She had taken on the task of being his guide, so all she had to do was to do her job properly. Esil decided to give up on sweating over it.

‘Ah, I almost forgot....’

Still, there was this one thing she just had to ask.

“Excuse me, Jin-Woo.... sir”

“Yeah?”

Jin-Woo looked back at her.

Having witnessed Jin-Woo continuously destroy other demon clans so easily, she found it pretty scary to meet his eyes anymore, so Esil quickly lowered her gaze to her feet and asked.

“Why did you spare my clan?”

Without a doubt, the Radiru Clan would never be able to oppose this man’s quest. She knew her clan’s military might the best, and now that she had witnessed Jin-Woo's true power, she was sure of this fact.

Even then, her Radiru clan emerged relatively unscathed from this merciless man's onslaught. Why was that? She was really curious.

Jin-Woo entered the floor-transfer magic circle and turned around to face Esil.

"Cuz I find you likeable."

Even though she was a monster, she knew when to surrender, she knew when to negotiate, and most importantly, offered up quite a bit of useful information, too.

"P-p-pardon me?!"

Esil flinched grandly in surprise, and her neck rapidly dyed in a crimson colour. She stood on the spot hesitating as she fidgeted with her fingers in a clear fluster. Their schedule had been affected by her being rooted to the spot like that, so Jin-Woo asked her to get a move on.

"Aren't you coming?"

Then, he glanced at the System message asking him which floor he'd like to go.

"If you don't get in now, we'll go back to the 80th floor, okay?"

"I-I'm sorry."

Her face still blushing deeply in red, Esil hurriedly entered the magic circle.

'.....'

However, she couldn't raise her head again even after arriving on the next floor.

The Incheon International Airport.

The representatives from the Japanese Hunter Association arrived in South Korea to discuss the matters of Jeju Island's ant problem. They already had set up a conference with the Korean counterparts.

Along with the Japanese Hunter Association's President Matsumoto Shigeo, Japan's number one Hunter, the rank S Goto Ryuji stepped into the airport. (TL note at the end)

The atmosphere within the airport seemed a bit chaotic, so Matsumoto Shigeo took a look around to see what was what.

"What's happening here?"

“.....There is a very powerful presence nearby.”

“Stronger than you?”

Goto Ryuji smirked derisively.

Seeing the fully-confident face of Goto Ryuji, Matsumoto Shigeo didn't bother to ask anymore.

‘There’s no way South Korea can produce someone like that.’

Not too long after that, an employee from the Korean Hunters Association hurriedly ran forward to greet and received them.

“I’m terribly sorry. I was delayed by all the chaos unfolding inside the airport at the moment.”

The employee hurriedly lowered his head in apology. Matsumoto Shigeo hid his dissatisfaction expertly and formed a magnanimous smile.

“Ah, that.... It’s nothing serious, sir. It’s just that a Hunter from the United States has arrived just now.”

“What brings an American Hunter to South Korea?”

“I hear that it’s a personal matter, sir. I’m sure that there’s nothing to worry about.”

The employee thought the Association President Matsumoto Shigeo was worried about a possible dungeon break and did his best to assuage the Japanese group's fears.

Unfortunately, Matsumoto Shigeo's expression remained dark.

‘A Hunter from America, is it.... I hope this person won't interfere with our business here.’

Goto Ryuji's gaze was fixed in the direction of the noisy crowd of people over yonder. Most likely, that's where the American Hunter was.

Meanwhile, Matsumoto Shigeo confirmed the time.

If he were to make it to the conference on time, he needed to get going now.

Matsumoto Shigeo spoke.

“Let's go.”

REPORT

Two Association Presidents, Goh Gun-Hui and Matsumoto Shigeo, sat down while facing each other.

On either side of the two men, representatives from the Japanese Hunter's Association and their Korean counterparts, as well as higher-ups from various government departments sat in a row.

With the subject matter being what it was, the conference was moving at a brisk pace.

“How do you feel about forming a united assault team comprising of top-ranked Japanese and Korean Hunters?”

This explosive suggestion from Matsumoto Shigeo caused the Koreans present to show much surprise on their faces.

They were all under the impression that today's conference would be to discuss the reparation Japanese would demand for the damage they had suffered.

But then, the Japanese were saying they would voluntarily help with taking care of this headache?

What kind of jackpot was this?

The surprised state of the Korean politicians didn't last long, though, as it was soon replaced by the brightened complexions, instead. With the sole exception of one man, that was.

Only Goh Gun-Hui maintained a sharp glare as he observed Matsumoto Shigeo.

“Are you saying that you wish to attack the nest of the ants by forming an alliance?”

“That is correct.”

“We're aware that Japan enjoys an abundance of top-ranked Hunters. However, it is still far too dangerous to invade Jeju Island.”

Goh Gun-Hui also added that there were several times more of the monsters to be found on the island compared to two years ago, when the last subjugation effort failed.

It was here that Matsumoto Shigeo formed a rather suspicious smile.

“It’d prove to be dangerous indeed if we rushed into the enemy’s main camp without a proper plan.”

One of the Korean politicians, utterly hooked by the suggestion from the Japanese that they would help, asked in an expectant manner.

“Do you have a good plan in mind?”

“Yes.”

Matsumoto Shigeo gathered everyone’s attention to himself with a quick answer, but then, continued on only after taking a bit of time for himself.

“Of course, we have one.”

With a single command from him, the prepared files matching the exact number of Korean representatives were placed in front of them.

“These are all the data compiled from our observation of the ants.”

While the Koreans attendees of the conference were perusing through the file, Matsumoto Shigeo began his in-depth explanation.

“Each ant may be strong enough to rival a high-rank Hunter, but it also possesses a fatal weakness. And that’s their short lifespan.”

Ants could only live for around one year at most.

“Which means, if the ant queen is removed from the equation, every ant found on Jeju Island will eventually die out in around one year.”

“Indeed....”

The Korean attendees nodded their heads as they read the well-researched data.

Only the queen needed to be eliminated.

That sounded a whole lot more achievable than killing thousands of unrankable monsters that came out of a rank S Gate. However, Goh Gun-Hui’s glare remained icy cold.

‘What a nonsensical notion that is....’

He knew the truth already.

He knew that the act of killing one queen was no different than actually trying to kill every single one of the thousands of those monsters.

“Are you making this suggestion because you don’t know of ants’ instincts to sacrifice themselves in order to protect their queen?”

When Goh Gun-Hui pointed this fact out, Matsumoto Shigeo simply smiled and lightly rebutted him.

“Of course I know. If we were to kill the queen, we’d most likely have to break through the defensive wall of thousands of ants.”

Goh Gun-Hui’s suspicions grew only larger and larger after he saw how relaxed Matsumoto Shigeo’s demeanour was.

‘Just what are they thinking?’

The corner of Matsumoto Shigeo’s lips arched up.

“However, what if all of the ants abandon the ant tunnel for some reason?”

The ant queen lived in the deepest part of the ant tunnel. Why would the ants leave the ant tunnel unguarded, when they were supposed to protect the queen as well as the eggs at all cost?

When questioning expressions formed on the faces of all the Korean representatives, Matsumoto Shigeo opened his mouth to answer their confusion.

“There have been. A total of three times.”

Three times?

There had been three times where such an event occurred?

But, besides all that – how did Japan know so intimately about such things in the first place?

The answer to this question arrived right away.

“The ants emptied out of their tunnel to fight, when the Korean Hunters landed on Jeju Island for the subjugation operations three times in the past.”

“Keu-euhk.”

Goh Gun-Hui tightly clenched his fists resting on his knees.

While the Hunters of South Korea risked their lives and fought, the Japanese were covertly spying on them. No one here criticised Japan for not helping South Korea out back then.

But regardless, how could they use the misfortune of the neighbouring nation as their research material, and then proudly reveal the results to said neighbour like this?

A rank S lost his life during the third failed attempt. And besides him, countless others also died. The Association President Goh Gun-Hui had to watch them die from a very close vantage point back then.

His clenched fists were trembling hard now.

‘Mm...?’

Sensing that the complexion of Goh Gun-Hui was getting rather suspicious, Japan’s best Hunter, Goto Ryuji unleashed his own magical energy.

It was a warning – if the other side tried to do something untoward, then this side would also make a move.

Attending the conference as Goh Gun-Hui’s bodyguard, Woo Jin-Cheol quickly approached the Association President’s side.

“...Sir?”

“...I’m okay now.”

Goh Gun-Hui dismissed Woo Jin-Cheol, and the latter quietly stepped back.

Regardless of what the Japanese’s attitude was like, this presented a golden opportunity to deal with the ants once and for all if their research data proved to be reliable.

‘I can’t afford to let slip such an opportunity because of my personal feelings.’

Goh Gun-Hui could only calm his boiling anger inwardly.

Once the threatening tension of the conference room dissipated, Matsumoto Shigeo finally got to the main point.

“The Japanese Hunters will take on that role.”

Japan’s rank S Hunters would split into several teams and attack Jeju Island from different directions. Ants would rush out to face the intruders, and just like before, the tunnel with ant queen hiding in it would be emptied out.

“We wish to ask Korea’s top Hunters with the killing of the queen.”

South Korea’s rank S Hunters would sneak into the island using a helicopter, and once they kill off the queen, they escape via a helicopter again.

Noisy, noisy.....

The plan put forward by the Japanese was rather detailed and sounded quite doable, so the Korean representatives began to get heated up from excitement.

“If we follow the Japanese plan, do we get to recover Jeju Island?”

“These Japanese b*stards, they have finally showed their hands now that they too have become victims.”

“Let’s seize this opportunity and use the Japanese Hunters to reclaim Jeju Island.”

Goh Gun-Hui didn’t participate in the heated discussion of the Korean representatives, choosing to quietly mull over Matsumoto Shigeo’s suggested plan, instead.

‘Without a doubt, there is a good chance.’

There were 21 rank S Hunters in Japan.

In comparison, there were only eight in South Korea.

But, by excluding himself who couldn’t move due to health reasons, or the other Hunter who had to retire early, then realistically speaking, there were only six that could participate.

‘It’ll be impossible to draw and scatter the attention of thousands of ants with that number.’

In order to do so, they needed Japan and her twenty or so top-ranked Hunters. Even if they were to be split into groups of five, you’d still get four groups, and that would be enough to buy the Koreans time to do their job.

But the real problem was, would South Korea’s top Hunters actually be able to kill the boss of a rank S dungeon, the ant queen?

‘Is it even possible?’

It was then, Goh Gun-Hui suddenly remembered the name of Seong Jin-Woo.

Seong Jin-Woo was strong enough to solo kill the boss of a rank A dungeon, so what if he worked together with other rank S Hunters?

Ba-dump, ba-dump....

Goh Gun-Hui’s heart began racing now.

‘We can’t delay this any longer.’

Currently, ant monsters were evolving at a rapid pace. No one could predict precisely when the entirety of the ant army would become flight-capable. It could be ten years, five, or even, right next year.

Before something like that happened, the Koreans had to kill off the dastardly ants, and if they had to resort to borrowing another country’s strength, then so be it.

But, before that....

“What does Japan want as compensation from this cooperation?”

The Association President Goh Gun-Hui didn't let this important matter slip through.

Matsumoto Shigeo did his best to form the most magnanimous smile he could physically perform.

“When the rest of ants die in a year, we evenly split the magic crystals left behind on the island.”

Only that much?

Goh Gun-Hui tilted his head, unconvinced.

“Will you really be happy with only that?”

Goh Gun-Hui's question caused the Korean government officials and politicians near him to frown rather deeply.

‘If they are willing to do it for a small asking price, he should just gladly accept it, so why is he questioning them like this?’

‘What will he do if the Japanese decide to change their mind all of a sudden...?’

‘Association President Goh Gun-Hui, you're still too distrusting, what with your background being a man who used to run a corporation.’

Their hot dagger-like glares stabbed deeply into Goh Gun-Hui. He had no choice but to shut his mouth.

A short discussion took place between the Korean attendees, but no one raised a voice of objection.

In the end, the Japanese's proposal was approved unanimously.

After the conference successfully came to an end, Matsumoto Shigeo approached Goh Gun-Hui with a beaming smile and offered his right hand.

“The future of our two nations depends on this cooperation. Let us combine our resources together and do our best.”

After returning to his hotel room, Matsumoto Shigeo placed a cigarette in between his lips. Goto Ryuji to his side lit it up for him.

“You worked hard today, sir.”

“Mister Goto, it's you who worked hard today.”

“You’re praising me too much, sir.”

“I’m not. Didn’t you see Goh Gun-Hui’s face back then?”

Matsumoto Shigeo smirked deeply.

The fleeting emotion that flickered in and out momentarily on Goh Gun-Hui’s face back then – it was definitely rage. The reason why Matsumoto Shigeo was able to display so much leisure in front of a rank S Hunter who reputedly possessed the greatest strength in South Korea, was simple – because, he had a powerful ally standing behind him.

And that was Goto Ryuji, Japan’s number one melee-type Hunter. And also, the trustworthy right-hand man of the President of the Japanese Hunter Association, Matsumoto Shigeo.

Recalling Goh Gun-Hui’s expression, Matsumoto formed a mocking smile.

“Borrowing the power of someone whom you don’t even want to talk to. Now that would be quite intolerable from the perspective of the weak.”

Goto Ryuji also smirked as well.

In the end, the Koreans agreed to work with the Japanese, just as Matsumoto Shigeo had predicted. Everything was moving according to plan.

“South Korea is merely the beginning.”

Matsumoto Shigeo spoke up.

“Hunters are the new power, the new political influence. With this power given to Japan, I shall create a new empire.”

His gaze then shifted over to Goto Ryuji.

“And you shall become its next emperor.”

If Matsumoto Shigeo was to be considered the first ruler of the empire founded on his crafty schemes, then Goto Ryuji would be the second by relying on his powers alone. And this was the reason why Goto Ryuji treated Matsumoto Shigeo as his superior all this time.

It was then.

“I almost forgot.”

Matsumoto Shigeo recalled something and asked Goto Ryuji while killing the cigarette.

“Do we still not have any information on South Korea’s newest rank S Hunter?”

“Even the South Koreans don’t seem to know much about that man, sir.”

“...Is that so.”

They already knew everything there was to know regarding all of South Korea’s top Hunters. Except for one person.

They didn’t have a single reliable piece of information on the Hunter who was registered as a rank S recently. The unknown factor could cause deviations to their plan. Now that his ambition had been revealed in full with the commencement of this operation, Matsumoto Shigeo couldn’t afford any form of deviation whatsoever to his plan.

‘Although it is questionable what a single person could achieve on his own, but, still...’

There were five such people in the entire world.

They were referred to as Hunters on the rank of ‘Special Authority’, which meant that each one of them possessed power equalling that of a country’s military.

They all shared one common point; each one of them had cleared at least one rank S Gate in the past. A Hunter with that kind of ability could easily disrupt his plan.

‘However, the odds of that are extremely low.’

Taking into account that there were seven billion people on Earth, the odds would be less than a billion to one. If someone of that calibre appeared, then there was no way the South Koreans would keep quiet about him. But judging from the current atmosphere, there didn’t seem to be any cause for concern on that front.

‘I can’t ruin everything by being too cautious here.’

Matsumoto Shigeo picked up his phone.

Then, he gave his command to the higher-ups of his own Association, who were all anxiously waiting for his call back home.

“The Koreans have agreed to work with us, so summon all the rank S Hunters as planned.”

Goh Gun-Hui was also calling the Korean Hunters at that moment.

The first priority was to explain the seriousness of the current situation. He was planning to fine-tune the Association’s schedule accordingly, but....

A completely unexpected piece of news flew out of nowhere and punched him in the face.

“You can’t get in touch with Hunter Seong Jin-Woo at all???”

For some reason, only Seong Jin-Woo was out of reach.

“His phone’s been switched off for several days as well, sir. We can’t even figure out where he could be.”

“...”

Goh Gun-Hui shut his mouth tightly then, before opening his mouth. He sounded exasperated at that moment.

“In that case, summon the other Hunters excluding him as soon as possible.”

“Understood, sir.”

The agent of the Association bowed and quickly ran out of the President’s office. Goh Gun-Hui’s expression hardened as he fell into deep contemplation.

‘Where could he possibly be?’

After hearing the report of Seong Jin-Woo going missing, Goh Gun-Hui suddenly had a foreboding premonition of the future.

Chapter 107 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

Just as Esil had alluded to earlier, the difficulty of the quest rose up steeply from the 90th floor upwards. The levels and the number of monsters guarding each floor's castle were so much incomparably higher compared to the lower floors.

It got so tough that he no longer could enjoy the fruit of his current sky-high Intelligence Stat – his MP used to hover near the max almost all the time, but now, it fluctuated greatly every time there was a battle.

That showed just how many of his Shadow Soldiers were destroyed and had to be revived over and over again.

It wasn't some fluke that Jin-Woo managed to clear the 90th floor, however.

Just like a hammer shaping the raw iron that had been heated for a long, long time, he had been constantly polishing his skills as he climbed up from the lowest floor to get to where he was now.

The clear evidence of that was his current level, which had reached 90 already.

The fiercer the resistance of the superior Demon Aristocrats became, the stronger the attacks of Jin-Woo and his Shadow Soldiers got in order to break past their defences.

[Level up!]

As Jin-Woo exited from the castle carrying the 97th floor's Entry Permit, haze-like gas was rising up from his body. That steam was from his sweat evaporating in the heat, caused by the friction of him moving beyond the physical limits.

That was a clear indication of how much of a life-or-death struggle this battle had been. And accordingly, Jin-Woo's face was filled with the satisfaction from the victory well earned.

Esil had been hiding until then, and when she saw him, quickly ran up to his side.

She could see a castle was roaring in flames behind Jin-Woo, and the Entry permit held firmly in his hand.

‘Fifth-ranked Ricardo Clan, and now, even the fourth-ranked Faetos Clan, too....’

Esil no longer had any reserve energy to be shocked anymore. If every other intruder boasted strength on this scale, then rather than protecting her land, it’d be difficult to even survive from the initial assault, instead.

“Are all the other Humans as powerful as you?”

Esil anxiously asked.

Jin-Woo combed through his memory for a bit, before making a suitable reply.

“Maybe, there are two more, I think.”

Goh Gun-Hui and Cha Hae-In were those two. Jin-Woo had no doubt that they were much stronger than other rank S Hunters he came in contact with so far.

As for the rest, which were Baek Yun-Ho, Choi Jong-In and Im Tae-Gyu, he didn’t feel that they were that particularly strong.

Especially for Choi Jong-In - he seemed to be highly rated by everyone, but to Jin-Woo’s eyes, that seemed to be the case solely due to him being in charge of South Korea’s top-ranked Guild, the ‘Hunters’, rather than because his own skills were impressive.

‘If I were to judge from their auras alone, Cha Hae-In is several times stronger than Choi Jong-In.’

Without a doubt, one could still find differences in power even among the ranks of ‘S’ Hunters.

No, maybe the differences found within this rank would be far greater than any other ranks precisely because those who couldn’t be measured by regular means were all lumped in together here.

Jin-Woo formed a subtle smirk.

‘How would I perceive others after I get out of here?’

Just like how the feelings he got from Baek Yun-Ho differed from their first meeting to the second, would there be a change in how he perceived the Association President Goh Gun-Hui?

Jin-Woo’s heart raced faster when he thought about checking out how much he had changed.

‘But, before I can do that....’

He had to clear this Demon’s Castle instant dungeon first. There were only four more floors remaining. He’d get to clear this dungeon soon enough. Jin-Woo turned to speak to Esil.

“You should go back to your people now.”

She had been utterly dejected after hearing that there were two more people like Jin-Woo out there, but then, she was jolted out of her morose state and raised her head.

“Excuse me?”

“I’ll find my own paths on the floors above this one.”

Thanks to Esil guiding the way, he got to quickly locate the Demon Aristocrats and their castles. However, he no longer needed her help from now on.

‘Well, my Perception Stat has risen up pretty high so that’s one of the reasons, but also....’

The auras emanating from the superior aristocrats were so strong that he could easily locate them from afar now. She didn’t do much besides showing him the way, so he didn’t want to walk around with one more luggage anymore if he could help it.

When he finished explaining himself like that....

“A-am I no longer useful to you?”

Esil’s complexion had paled completely.

‘She’s a funny one until the end, huh.’

Jin-Woo suppressed his laughter as he saw Esil’s reaction that always managed to exceed his expectations. He then walked right up to her nose.

‘Heok!’

Esil’s eyes opened wider as he got progressively closer and closer.

‘A-am I being eliminated, as well?’

Ba-dump, ba-dump....

Her pounding heartbeat sounded like thunderclaps to her ears.

She then spotted Jin-Woo raising his hand. Seeing the tip of his hand slowly approach her face, Esil could only squeeze her eyes shut in terror.

However....

‘...Uh?’

His hand lightly rested on her shoulder, instead. The warmth spreading from her shoulder prompted her to open her eyes just a little. Jin-Woo’s face was oh-so close to hers. As if he was waiting for her to open her eyes, he began smiling brightly right away.

“You really worked hard until now. Thank you.”

With that, it was done.

Jin-Woo thought that he made a good-enough goodbye just then, and he took large strides to enter the floor-transfer magic circle.

Tti-ring.

[Floors 1 to 96 have been opened.]

[Which floor would you like to transfer to?]

He turned around to look at Esil’s face, and he saw the emotions of surprise and wistful longing forming the perfect two halves of her expression.

Terror, anxiety, shock, wistfulness....

Those were the range of emotions the monsters with intelligence had shown him.

Were they truly residents of another world, just as Esil said, or were they simply figments of the System’s imagination, brought to reality for this dungeon?

‘I can’t tell that yet, but....’

If he continued to gather more clues in this manner, eventually he’d get to understand the true identity of the System as well as what it wanted from him.

Meanwhile, the hesitant Esil finally mustered up some courage to call out to Jin-Woo.

“Uhm, excuse me....”

But, almost at the same time, Jin-Woo raised his head and replied to the System message.

“97th floor.”

97, 98, 99....

Jin-Woo finally acquired the ‘key’ to enter the abode of the Demon King.

[Item: Entry Permit]

Rarity: ??

Type: ??

A permit allowing you to enter the 100th floor of the Demon's Castle. Can only be used on the 99th floor's floor-transfer magic circle.

Just how much hardship did he have to go through for this thing? Before entering the 100th floor where the Demon King was waiting for his arrival, Jin-Woo checked out his Status first.

[Level: 93]

His level was already knocking on 100's doorway. He could sense his increased Stats throughout his entire body. Strength flowed in every corner of his body, and his senses were so much sharper than before. His condition was at its peak.

'Very good.'

Jin-Woo summoned the Store. He topped up his HP and MP with potions bought from there. He even bought some bandages as well. Just like before, he wrapped it around the right hand holding the dagger. It had been a long time since he felt this nervous.

Once he was done, he slowly moved his body this way and that.

Swish....

Slice....

'Hmm, it's not too bad, I guess?'

His movement gradually picked up speed, his limbs moving accurately according to his commands.

Faster! Even faster!

Jin-Woo left behind countless after-images in the air but quite suddenly, he stopped moving altogether. Hot steam rose up like a fog from his shoulders.

Should he say this was sufficient for a warm-up?

Whatever the case might have been, he was finished with his preparations now.

"Fuu...."

Jin-Woo inhaled and exhaled a big chunk of air, before stepping onto the floor-transfer magic circle. Just like before, the magic circle asked for his destination, and Jin-Woo confidently replied.

"100th floor."

By the time he blinked, the surroundings had already changed. Jin-Woo surveyed his new surroundings.

'There are no flames here?'

The horrifying flames that seemingly burned for all eternity on the lower floors were all gone, and he could only see the burnt-out remains. He raised head and spotted snowflakes falling from the sky.

'....Snow?'

The colour seemed a little off for real snowflakes, so he extended his hand out. The flakes falling on his hand didn't melt down, weirdly enough. When he took a closer look, he realised that it was actually ash.

Ash was falling from the sky like snow.

It was then.

Tti-ring.

He heard the familiar mechanical beep. Jin-Woo's sharpened glare was directed to the distant skies above.

'So, it's above me....'

Soon, the System alerted him to the entrance of the enemy via its trusty messages.

[The Demon King Baran has discovered the intruder!]

A black dot that wandered in the sky....

That black dot gradually got closer to the ground, before settling down on a spot pretty far away. It was a winged lizard-like creature.

After successfully landing on the ground, the lizard flapped its large wings and screeched out aloud.

Kiiiiieeeehhk!!

Just above the head of the lizard, Jin-Woo saw a face of a demon, with a certain blue aura oozing out from it. A male creature kitted out in a flashy set of armour that only royalty might wear, while riding on the back of the large winged lizard....

The four words could clearly be seen above the male demon's head.

[The Demon King, Baran]

This boss was emitting an extraordinary aura.

Cold sweat formed on Jin-Woo's forehead. As befitting the boss protecting the top floor of a dungeon this massive, the creature was full of magnificent splendour.

Jin-Woo's gaze shifted to the side of the boss, however.

'Mm?'

The lizard this boss was riding on also possessed a name of its own.

[The Sky Dragon Kaisellin]

'...Sky Dragon?'

Judging from its name and its appearance, it didn't look like a demon at all.

'Wait a minute.... If it's not a demon, then could I....?'

Even if he worked his butt off to kill demons, he couldn't extract their shadows. So, he had already given up on acquiring a useful shadow in this place. But, what if it was a non-demon monster that could also fly?

'.....I want it.'

If he could extract its shadow, then definitely he would.

This would be the first time he ran into a shadow he so dearly wanted to extract since encountering the leader of the White Phantoms, Baruka. Jin-Woo swallowed his dry saliva.

It was then, Baran raised its hand towards the sky.

Tti-ring.

[The Demon King Baran has activated 'Skill: The Army of Hell'.]

'...The Army of Hell??'

Tti-ring, tti-ring, tti-ring.

Several warning bells rang one after the other in Jin-Woo's ears.

[Demon Soldiers have been summoned!]

[Demon Knights have been summoned!]

[Demon Generals have been summoned!]

Along with the messages filling up his view, an army entirely consisting of demons appeared around the Demon King. Even at a casual glance, there must've been over a thousand of them.

'So, this must be the beginning.'

Jin-Woo also released all of his hidden magic energy.

When Baran arrogantly lowered the hand pointing at the sky in the direction of Jin-Woo, the demonic army rushed at him like a black tide.

Rumble-!!

The ground vibrated from the forceful march of the demons.

Jin-Woo stared at the Demon King's army as the corner of his lips arched up.

'I also have soldiers too, you know.'

Jin-Woo opened his mouth.

"My shadows...."

In the blink of an eye, Jin-Woo's shadow spread out to all the surrounding areas. He had activated the skill, 'Sovereign's Territory'. When the Demon King's army set foot within the darkened land, Jin-Woo finally summoned his Shadow Soldiers.

"...Show yourselves."

His shadows stood up all at once to answer his call.

'...!!!'

Jin-Woo could acutely feel the confusion and panic among the enemies' ranks.

Wuuooooohhh!!

Kkkrrroar!!

Immediately seizing upon this opening, the two 'physical' type Knight grade soldiers, Iron and Tank, ran forward with everything they had and crashed into the enemy.

Kaboom!!

"Kuwaahk!!"

"Kehgehk!!"

Dozens of demons screamed and were flung away from the absurd strengths of the two Shadow Soldiers. Right behind them, over one hundred soldiers rushed forward like a black tidal wave.

And the highlight of this opening salvo obviously belonged to Igrit!

He jumped lightly over the head of Iron and landed gently on the ground, before using the swords he held in each hand to cut and slice apart every demon he could find.

“Kiieehhk!!”

“Keuhark!!”

It was a performance befitting the grade of ‘Elite Knight’.

‘By the way, Igrit isn’t the only Elite Knight in my army, you know.’

Jin-Woo’s gaze shifted over to his side.

Fangs had finished gigantifying himself by then, and walked forward with large, heavy thuds as if to emphasize that it was his turn to fight. Jin-Woo formed a content expression as he watched Fangs’ large back.

Fuu-wuu-wuheup.

Fangs took a deep, deep breath. His chest puffed up noticeably. Jin-Woo quickly recalled all the Shadow Soldiers found in front of Fangs, so his giant soldier could attack without holding anything back. The soldiers reverted to shadows, and shifted to the new location Jin-Woo pointed with his finger.

And then.....

Kuwuuuuuuu....

Massive, ferocious pillar of flames spewing out from Fangs’ mouth completely vaporised the demons on the ground. The flames didn’t stop there, though.

Kuwuuuuuuu.....

Fangs moved his head left to right, and utterly incinerated all demons trapped with the arc of the attack. All those poor demons swallowed up by the flames couldn’t even leak out a scream.

A few Shadow Soldiers were sucked into the attack in the process as well, but as long as they were under the influence of their Sovereign, it was possible to infinitely revive them.

‘Very good!’

Jin-Woo clenched his fists tightly.

One hundred-plus Shadow Soldiers were overwhelming the army over ten times their numbers. The demonic soldiers and their ranks crumbled in no time at all.

But, it was then.

Baran stopped standing back passively, and finally made his move. Countless arcs of blue sparks buzzed and crackled within the wide-open mouth of the boss creature.

Gahaaaaahark!

Along with that hair-raising yell, a chill-inducing beam of blue light enveloped the Shadow Soldiers.

Kwa-bzzzzzzzzzz!!

‘...Lightning?!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened from sheer surprise.

Soldiers getting swept up in the blue electrical storm disintegrated in an instant, while those that managed to avoid instant death stood still in their spots as if they were frozen solid.

‘...It’s not regular lightning.’

Lightning bolts containing horrifying destructive power, as well as side-effects of stunning their targets, fell all over the place. And of course, one of these blue-coloured electrical storms also headed for Jin-Woo as well.

Cra-ckle!!

Quite unlike his Shadow Soldiers, he didn’t receive a single lick of damage, however.

All burn-related damage was absorbed by the ‘Wind Robe’ he currently had on, and....

[You have resisted abnormal status with the effects of ‘Buff: Immunity’.]

[You have resisted abnormal status with the effects of ‘Buff: Immunity’.]

[You have resisted abnormal status with the effects of ‘Buff: Immunity’.]

....As for the lightning’s stun effect, his abnormal status immunity buff dealt with it.

Jin-Woo dashed towards Baran right away. If he didn’t stop the boss’s AOE magic right now, there was a good chance that the flow of battle would shift away from his favour.

Baran’s glare landed on Jin-Woo.

Gahaaaaahk!!

Another ear-screeching yell exploded out from the boss’s wide open mouth, and blue streaks of lightning rained all around Jin-Woo.

Crackle, crack, crackle!!

However, Baran flinched grandly upon realising that the concentrated lightning attacks had no effect on Jin-Woo.

‘.....!!’

He sensed the boss’s agitation quite clearly.

Utilising the skill ‘Dash’ that had reached the maximum achievable level, Jin-Woo closed the distance in the blink of an eye and jumped up high in the air. Baran also unsheathed its sword.

Jin-Woo’s reverse-gripped ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ and the Demon King’s blade, infused with bluish flames, clashed face to face.

BOOM!!

A huge explosion of noise spread out; Baran was shoved off the Sky Dragon, while Jin-Woo was flung away by the rebound as well.

Jin-Woo stopped rolling on the ground and got up at the same time as Baran. They glared at each other only for a brief moment.

Both of them dashed towards each other with everything they had almost out of pure instinct.

Gaaaaaahk!!

Baran spat out more blue sparks from his mouth.

Craaaack!! Crack!!

Countless blue-coloured rays of light crashed down on him. Jin-Woo continued to run forward while believing in the defensive properties of the robe, but then, he sensed something was off.

‘...It’s getting hotter?’

When he glanced back, he realised that the end of the robe was on fire. He quickly threw off the robe.

‘I guess that’s as far as the robe can protect me.’

In the end, it was an artefact crafted by humans. It had already performed its job quite admirably up to this point, so he felt no regret. From here onwards, Jin-Woo had to take care of things on his own.

He swallowed his saliva.

Gaaahhhak!!

As if it had sensed that an opportunity had arrived, the intensity of the blue sparks crackling within Baran’s mouth increased by a notch. Jin-Woo heightened his senses as much as he could to get ready.

‘I can do this.’

No, he simply had to do this.

With time slowing down substantially in his perspective, Jin-Woo calmly evaded each and every single one of the blue arcs of lightning flying right at him.

‘...Why is this happening?’

Craaackle!

As Baran’s figure got closer and closer, Jin-Woo began recalling his memories of the Demon’s Castle one by one. Even during that, he still managed to evade the blue lightnings.

Craaaaackle!!

His heart was beating quite gently right now.

Ba-dump, ba-dump, ba-dump....

Jin-Woo dodged all of Baran’s attacks by a truly paper-thin margin, and eventually, stood before the Demon King.

‘...Ah.’

Only then did he finally realise why he was reminiscing about the events of the Demon’s Castle like this. Because, he was feeling grateful.

‘Thanks.’

To grant him this great power to fight evenly against an absurdly strong monster like this....

As he climbed up each floor, he was moulded and refined further and further. It was as if he was being trained precisely for this moment.

So, how could he not feel grateful right now?

Swish-!

Baran slashed down diagonally with his sword, and Jin-Woo raised ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ in his right hand to block it, before using the ‘Knight Killer’ to stab the Demon King’s shoulder.

Crack!!

The weapon designed specifically to tear through the enemy’s armour dug deeply into Baran’s shoulder.

‘.....!!’

Jin-Woo momentarily thought that he could hear Baran’s soundless scream just then. He yanked the ‘Knight Killer’ out. Flames of rage erupted within Baran's eyes. The Demon King began panting out rather laboriously.

Finally, the boss made his move.

Jin-Woo's two daggers and Baran's sword swished and swung and clashed against each other countless times, leaving behind several wounds on their bodies.

Clang!! Claaaank!! Clang, clunk!!

Every time their blades collided, the ground around the two caved in by the shock waves emanating from the collision of the magic energy.

A deep frown formed on Jin-Woo's forehead.

'Even with such a deep wound on his shoulder....'

As befitting the title of the Demon King, Baran's powers were nothing to scoff at. Jin-Woo felt aching coming from his wrists. He realised that he'd be in a disadvantageous position if things continued on in this fashion.

'I need to break this deadlock.'

Jin-Woo and Baran both had two hands. However, Jin-Woo also possessed a hidden third hand.

'Ruler's Reach!'

Out of the blue, a powerful impact force pushed Baran down on one knee.

Thud!

'....??'

Even before Baran could recover from his confusion, Jin-Woo's fist slammed hard into the Demon King's face.

Ka-boom!!

Baran's uncontrollable tumbling only came to an end after it rolled on the ground for dozens of metres. However, it couldn't get up. Because, Jin-Woo was already straddling the torso of the Demon King by then.

Baran quickly opened its mouth wide towards him.

Gah-ark!

Too bad, Baran couldn't fire off another lightning. Jin-Woo's left fist shoved deep into the Demon King's mouth ensured that the 'spell' would remain sealed.

'.....!!'

Baran's eyes shook hard.

Meanwhile, Jin-Woo raised his fist up high, choosing not to use the dagger wrapped around his hand.

Slam!!

Boom!!

Slam!!

Kaboom!!

The terrifying physical power from the Strength Stat that had exceeded 200 rapidly shaved away the boss monster's HP.

And finally....

Jin-Woo placed almost all of his strength into the raised right fist.

Fuu-huup!

In an instant, his shoulder and arm muscles expanded greatly, and the air around him became so heavy that it actually sank lower. An enormous amount of magic energy pooling around his right arm forced all sounds away, and instantly, the surroundings became eerily quiet.

‘.....’

Within this brief respite of silence, Jin-Woo looked down at the boss below him and murmured.

“Thanks for everything.”

Of course, there was no reply. The Demon King only glared at Jin-Woo with hatred deeply burning in its eyes.

‘I’m sure you’ll never understand what I’m trying to say here.’

Even then, he wanted to convey this emotion welling up inside his chest.

After he gave his honest thanks...

Jin-Woo landed the final hit against the ‘owner’ of this Demon’s Castle.

KABOOM!!

And then, he was greeted by the sound of ‘Tti-ring!’ as well as several messages that made him feel even better.

REPORT

“Fuu...”

Jin-Woo spat out a short sigh of relief.

This was the moment his long march that started from the very first floor of the Demon’s Castle dungeon was drawing to a close here on this 100th floor.

He closed his eyes for a moment in order to get a grip on his turbulent emotions, only for the image of his mom’s face to pop up.

‘...’

When he reopened his eyes, the System messages that hadn’t gone away yet entered his view again. Four alerts of him levelling up floated up there.

‘I rose up four levels in one go?’

Jin-Woo’s expression brightened up considerably. Thinking back to how his levelling speed had slowed down to a crawl after he broke past level 90, he couldn’t help but revel in happiness.

He quickly checked his Status Window.

[Level: 97]

Indeed, his level had jumped up by four.

‘Niiice!!’

Jin-Woo fist-pumped.

A dizzying sense of achievement was quickly added on top of the relief he felt from finally clearing this dungeon. However, he quickly put aside this joy to the back of his mind.

He still had something far more important than levelling up right now.

‘The Purified Blood of the Demon King.’

That was the final puzzle piece to craft the item, ‘Divine Water of Life’. Jin-Woo quickly unwrapped the bandage off his hand and reached out towards the blinking lights on the corpse of the Demon King, Baran.

[You have discovered ‘Item: Demon Sovereign’s Ring’. Will you take it?]

[You have discovered 'Item: Demon King's Longsword'. Will you take it?]

[You have discovered 'Item: Demon King's Shortsword'. Will you take it?]

[You have discovered 'Item: Demon King's Shortsword'. Will you take it?]

[You have discovered 'Item: Baran's Two Horns'. Will you take it?]

[You have discovered 'Ingredient Item: Purified Blood of the Demon King'. Will you take it?]

Rather than feeling elated, Jin-Woo felt anxious instead from the list of 'item discovered' messages that continued to pop up. Because, he couldn't spot the item he was looking for. However, he cried out in excitement as soon as he spotted the very last item, 'Purified Blood of the Demon King'.

'It's here!'

Jin-Woo quickly acquired all the items and lifted up the item that must've been the Purified Blood of the Demon King.

[Ingredient Item: Purified Blood of the Demon King]

Rarity: ??

Type: Ingredient

This is the liquid created from purifying the blood of Baran, the Sovereign of the demons.

Possesses immense magical energy, but even after going through the purifying process, the blood still retains strong toxins. In order to use the blood as a medical ingredient, both the 'Fragment of the World Tree' and 'Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes' are needed to neutralize the toxin.

The red liquid sloshed inside a clear glass bottle according to the angle it was held.

'This is the blood of the Demon King...'

He already possessed the other two ingredients, 'Fragment of the World Tree' and the 'Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes'. So, what was there to hesitate about?

Jin-Woo promptly summoned the Crafting Skill Window.

[Crafting Skills]

Consumable: Divine Water of Life (3/3)

Different from the past, the words ‘Divine Water of Life’ was now blinking constantly. When he checked the details, the words ‘Crafting possible’ immediately caught his attention.

[Divine Water of Life]

[Will you start crafting ‘Item: Divine Water of Life’?]

Jin-Woo was in a hurry to see the finished article, so he didn’t waste any more time and chose to start the crafting process.

“Start.”

[Crafting process for ‘Item: Divine Water of Life’ has commenced.]

[10, 9, 8....]

Jin-Woo waited for the result with bated breath.

[7, 6, 5....]

[The ‘percentage of Crafting success’ and ‘number of finished items’ will depend on Crafter’s Intelligence Stat.]

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened.

‘Are you telling me only now that the odds of success, as well as the number of completed items, will depend on the Intelligence Stat?!’

If you were stupid, then you couldn’t even craft anything?

....It did sound somewhat logical, so Jin-Woo could only nod his head.

In the meantime, the countdown steadily ticked on.

[4, 3, 2....]

Why did the words ‘percentage of Crafting success’ get on his nerves so much? The only solace he could take away right now was the fact that he had at least woke up to the importance of the Intelligence Stat quickly enough to invest a lot of extra Stat points there.

[...1, 0.]

[Crating process has been completed!]

[Crafting is a success!]

[You have acquired ‘Item: Divine Water of Life x6’.]

“That’s what I’m talking about!!”

Jin-Woo had been waiting anxiously until then, but as soon as the ‘Success!’ message popped up, he raised his hands high up into the sky.

‘...Huh?’

However, he quickly discovered something a bit odd. The bottle containing the blood of the Demon King still remained in his right hand.

‘Well, uh, the amount of blood has decreased by a little, but...’

Jin-Woo tilted his head, before summoning the ‘Fragment of the World Tree’ and the ‘Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes’ from his Inventory.

The only thing that appeared on the ground was the slightly-shaved-on-the-edge Fragment of the World Tree, though. He accessed his Inventory and searched, but couldn’t find the Spring Water anywhere.

‘Could it be....?’

Feeling a bit suspicious, he confirmed the Crafting Skill Window, and his suspicion was soon answered in full.

-Ingredients:

Out of the three ingredients, only the Spring Water showed ‘0’.

‘So, it’s something like, not all the ingredients will be used up, but only the necessary amount – is that it?’

The Crafting process must’ve come to a stop because the Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes had run out, unlike with other two ingredients.

From the get-go, he got this feeling that the Crafting process wouldn’t have required a lot of the Demon King’s blood. As for the Fragment of the World Tree, it was a gigantic piece of lumber when he had initially acquired it, to begin with.

It was rather obvious that the Spring Water contained within a small bottle would be the first one to run out.

Jin-Woo grinned widely in satisfaction.

‘Well, it’s not a bad result for me regardless.’

Because, as long as he could find more of that ‘Spring Water from the Forest of Echoes’ in the future, he’d get to craft more of this Divine Water of Life.

‘Hold on, there’s another problem to consider, isn’t there?’

Jin-Woo was desperate for a bottle of this Divine Water, yet now, there were six wooden bottles waiting for him on the ground, so it was rather difficult for him to calm his wildly beating heart.

[Item: Divine Water of Life]

Rarity: S

Type: Consumable

A mysterious liquid medicine that cures any and all illnesses through powerful magic contained within. The effect will only manifest after one whole bottle has been consumed.

Would this item truly cure his mother's illness?

'...I guess I'll find out later today.'

His heart palpitated faster.

Jin-Woo carefully stored away all six bottles in his Inventory, as well as the remaining ingredients. Even then, he still had lots of other items to go through.

'One ring, one longsword, two shortswords and two japtems.'

Because Baran was the boss of a rank S dungeon, it sure coughed up a lot of loot. This proverbial pile of treasure was a sight for sore eyes, but there was no reason to go through all of them right now.

Indeed, his priority lay with getting out of here to see his mother.

Jin-Woo simply dumped all the items acquired from the corpse of the Demon King in his trusty Inventory. And then, while lightly dusting his hands, took a look around him.

'I've got a pressing matter to attend to, but...'

...But, he shouldn't miss out on other things because of that, no?

Wasn't there an old saying about 'the more of a hurry you are in, you should take the longer of the routes available' or some such?

Jin-Woo looked behind him, and found his Shadow Soldiers standing at attention in rows, having massacred an army ten times their number. Behind his boys, dead demons were strewn about everywhere.

'What about the Sky Dragon?'

Jin-Woo's wandering gaze hurriedly searched for the monster that the Demon King rode around in. Worryingly enough, all he could spot were the corpses of demons piled up on high, with not a hint of the Sky Dragon anywhere.

'Wait, it couldn't have flown away during the fight, right?'

Thankfully though, his worries didn't last for long. Iron was dragging a limp corpse behind him. It was none other than the Sky Dragon, Kaisellin.

“Iron, nicely done.”

Maybe Iron felt embarrassed by Jin-Woo’s praise, which was a first in a while, because he began scratching the back of his head. Of course, it was still the back of his helmet, though.

Jin-Woo lightly patted the shoulder of Iron and stood before the Sky Dragon’s body.

‘It’s as I thought.’

Just as he suspected it from the monster’s name and its appearance, he could see the black smoke slowly rising up from the corpse of the Sky Dragon. Which meant, it was possible to extract its shadow.

Jin-Woo extended his hand out.

“Rise up.”

The Shadow Extraction worked without any problems whatsoever, perhaps due to his much higher level.

Kiyaaaahhk-!

Accompanied by the death throes of a beast, a creature covered in some type of black gas crawled out of the Sky Dragon’s shadow. The dead Dragon’s shadow immediately recognised his new owner and lowered his head in front of Jin-Woo.

[Please assign the name of the Shadow Soldier.]

‘Oh.’

Jin-Woo formed a surprised expression.

Since he didn’t get to witness the creature fighting, he only assumed it to be a mount and not much else, but it must’ve been pretty handy in battles, because the Sky Dragon’s shadow started right away as a Knight grade.

If he considered the fact that the ace of the Shadow Army, Igrit, was also a Knight grade not too long ago, this was a surprising development. But, then again, it made some sense. There was no way a boss referred to as the ‘Demon King’ would ride on a weak, pathetic monster, now was there?

Jin-Woo was genuinely satisfied with the grade of his new soldier, and replied to the System message.

“Kaisellin.... No, wait.”

Inexplicably, he thought that name was a bit too long.

“...Kaisel.”

The Sky Dragon, now bestowed with a brand new name, raised his head up high into the sky and spat out a lengthy roar.

Kiiiiieehhk!!

“Everyone, you all worked hard.”

With those words, Jin-Woo stored all of his Shadow Soldiers, including the new addition of Kaisal, back into his shadow. It was almost time to make his exit from the Demon’s Castle. There was one more thing still remaining, however.

Jin-Woo opened the inbox, where the quest completion messages were still waiting for him.

[You have completed ‘Normal Quest: Collect the Souls of Demons! (2).]

[Completion rewards are now available.]

[Will you confirm the rewards?] (Y/N)

‘Yes, obviously.’

As soon as he answered, the list of rewards popped up in his view.

Tti-ring.

[Following rewards are made available.]

[Will you take them all?]

The so-called ‘Shadow Exchange’ skill. Just what could it be?

As he had been curious about this ‘highest-grade’ Rune Stone ever since the beginning of the quest, Jin-Woo chose to take that one first.

‘Okay, I choose the first reward for the time being.’

Tti-ring.

[‘Highest grade Rune Stone: Shadow Exchange’ has been delivered.]

After that message came and gone, he felt a small rock residing within his palm. When he brought the hand closer to his nose and opened it, he found a jet-black Rune Stone resting there. Its colour was completely different from the ‘regular’ Rune Stones.

Also, its hue came across as so much more mysterious compared to the average black colour.

Crumble.

Unlike in the past, when he physically had to break the Stone, the item crumbled all on its own the moment he thought about squeezing his hand.

The pitch-black aura rising up from the shattered Rune Stone slowly enveloped Jin-Woo, before getting absorbed into his body.

He hurriedly checked his Skill Window.

[Skill: Shadow Exchange Lv.1]

Class-specific skill.

Mana required to activate: None.

The summoner can switch locations with the designated Shadow Soldier.

Once activated, you must wait three hours of ‘cool down’ period before being able to use the skill again. The ‘cool down’ period will change according to the Skill’s level.]

‘Heok!!!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened as he read the skill’s description.

Sure, it might be handicapped by the limitation of the cool down period, but... No, instead, it was an incredible skill that perhaps necessitated that cool down period to make it fair.

‘Doesn’t this mean it’s possible to switch locations regardless of where my Shadow Soldier is?’

Depending on how he used it, this was almost on the level of teleportation.

Jin-Woo was about to summon a Shadow Soldier and test this new skill out right away, but quickly changed his mind.

‘If I’m to test it out, I might as well try it with a soldier that’s really far away.’

Thankfully, he did leave behind a handful of soldiers outside the Demon’s Castle. He hid three of them in his sister’s shadow, while five were patrolling the district as of this moment.

‘There’s nothing to think about, is it?’

He didn’t know what kind of an after-effect the skill might have, and also, he couldn’t just haphazardly pop out near his sister’s location, either. And that was after setting aside the possibility of his sister freaking out, too.

So, he sought out the ‘signal’ emitted from one of the five Shadow Soldiers patrolling around his district and zeroed in on it.

“....Shadow Exchange.”

As soon as Jin-Woo opened his mouth...

“...Uh? Eh?”

As if gravity was powerfully pulling him down, he was rapidly sucked into his own shadow.

Chapter 109 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

Just before Jin-Woo was completely swallowed up by his shadow, he heard another message issued by the System.

[The dungeon's interior will revert back to original appearance with the death of....]

The sensation of him falling didn't last long. Suddenly, the gravity's direction reversed, and he was now being lifted back up at the same speed as he was being sucked in.

His darkened vision reverted back to the original state in no time at all.

'Isn't this place....?'

Jin-Woo took a quick look around.

Tick, tick....

A street light that continued to flicker as if it was broken; a hand-pulled wooden cart leaning precariously against a wall; an electrical pole with a half-torn flier stiller stuck to it.

He found himself in a deserted alleyway he often had to walk past when heading back home.

'...Hey, this is the suburb I live in, isn't it?!'

Somewhat coincidentally, it was also the exact same spot where he issued the five shadows to start patrolling the district, as well.

'My location really changed.'

Jin-Woo did feel deeply stunned at the moment, but still, he somehow managed to remain calm as he checked the shadow beneath his feet. Just like when he summoned his Shadow Soldiers, he too rose up from the shadow. He cautiously poked his shadow with the tip of his foot.

'.....'

Back when he activated the skill, the shadow caved in as if he was stepping on the surface of water, but it was just a regular shadow now. Feeling genuinely impressed, Jin-Woo re-checked the Skill Window.

Just as the Skill description had stated, the 'cool down' period of three hours was in effect.

[Skill: Shadow Exchange Lv. 1]

Class-specific Skill...

....Can be used again in [02:59:57].

'...I've struck gold.'

Having witnessed the awesomeness of this skill, Jin-Woo's heart pounded faster and faster.

'And it was so fast, too....'

He had been maintaining the peak state of concentration the moment he was sucked into the shadow. Considering the fact that the perceived time would greatly slow down when he was concentrating fully, the transfer to this location did really happen in the blink of an eye.

His saliva nosily slid down his throat.

This skill called Shadow Exchange – it possessed limitless application, depending on how he used it.

'Ah, right. This isn't the right time.'

Jin-Woo calmed his excitement down and withdrew his magic energy. He had finally managed to get his hands on a medicine that could potentially cure his mother, so he shouldn't be wasting time here like this.

Feeling a lot more urgent now, Jin-Woo switched his Hunter-issue mobile phone and confirmed the current time.

'It's already this late....?'

Jin-Woo's forehead creased up big time.

The touchscreen display showed ten in the evening. Although the visitation hours had long passed now, Jin-Woo didn't hesitate once as he summoned the shadow of the Sky Dragon.

'Kaisel.'

Kiiieehhk-!

Answering the call of his owner, Kaisel yelled out in joy and pushed his head out of the ground. And soon, a huge lizard-like creature the size of a truck with no arms but huge wings revealed itself.

When Kaisel spread open its vast wings, the already-narrow alleyway seemed to get filled to the brim in an instant. It was a small mercy that there were no other people nearby, otherwise.....

Jin-Woo walked closer, and Kaisal lowered his body to allow ease of mounting. Jin-Woo duly did so.

Even though this was his first time, he already felt a sense of familiarity as if he had been riding on Kaisal for a long time. He figured that flying in the air wouldn't pose any problems since he felt this way.

'It doesn't matter if someone tries to stop me.'

He wasn't talking about the hospital staff – even if cops or the military tried to block him, he knew he had the power to break past them. And, at least for this moment, he didn't want anyone to obstruct his path.

'Let's go.'

Jin-Woo formed a serious expression and issued a command. Kaisal began beating his huge wings.

Kiieehhkk!!

Kaisal rose up in the air right away and quickly flew in the direction Jin-Woo pointed at.

A meeting was still taking place within the walls of the Hunters Association, even though the hours were getting late.

The Korea-Japan cooperative raid was already around the proverbial corner, and the Association was doing everything in their power to ensure the successful subjugation of Jeju Island's ant monsters.

"Here is the data sent by the Japanese."

The agent of the Association pressed a button on the remote. Soon, the giant screen was filled with the footage of the ant monsters, captured by the magic-power sensing camera attached to a Japanese satellite.

These were the records taken during the first, second and the third subjugation attempts. Goh Gun-Hui's eyes narrowed to a slit.

'Indeed, excluding the ant queen and its guards, every single ant did leave the ant tunnel.'

The ant monsters moved just as the Japanese said they would.

Although the existence of the guardian ants was a worrisome variable in the equation, it was also normal to find a few guardian-type monsters protecting their bosses within higher ranked dungeons, as well.

Still, it was hard to claim that there was no risk. The top man in the Korean side of the operation, Goh Gun-Hui, quickly thought of one of the worst case situations.

“What are the odds of the ants turning around quicker than anticipated after realising their queen is in danger?”

The Japanese had already thought about that too, however.

“They have said they would use ‘interference radio wave’ signal.”

“Radio wave signal?”

“According to their research, they discovered that the ant monsters use specific radio waves to communicate among themselves.”

Indeed, if one wanted to order an army of several thousands as one unit, then a method to send out commands should exist. Goh Gun-Hui nodded his head.

“And they can interrupt the communication of ants with radio waves?”

“That’s what they said, sir.”

“So, they want us to fully concentrate on killing the ant queen, is it....”

The subjugation plan itself was quite simple.

Even though it was simple, there was a higher chance of succeeding when compared to other plans, as well.

Yet, why did Goh Gun-Hui feel so anxious like this?

He rested his chin on his hands.

‘Could it be that I’m worried about...’

It was then.

Goh Gun-Hui spun his head towards the outside of the window, his brows shooting up high. Everyone inside the meeting room flinched at the sudden movement of the Association President.

Section Chief Woo Jin-Cheol, here to guard his boss from the side, rapidly walked in closer.

“Did something happen, sir?”

“Just now....”

Goh Gun-Hui shifted his gaze over to Woo Jin-Cheol. The latter’s expression remained the same as usual.

“Haven’t you felt that?”

“Sir? I don’t understand what you mean....”

“....”

Just now, an astonishing wave of magic power flooded in from a faraway place beyond the windows.

Although it only lasted for a brief moment and quickly disappeared from Goh Gun-Hui’s perception, he still had felt the full brunt of that.

‘.....’

As their Association President continued to stare into the distance outside the window, the agents had to stop the meeting and cautiously ask their boss.

“Sir....?”

Only then did Goh Gun-Hui shift his gaze away, his head still tilting side to side.

He wondered about the possible origin of that powerful burst of magic energy, but for the time being, he had to concentrate on the current meeting. Goh Gun-Hui fell into deep thought, before throwing a question at one of the agents in charge.

“Have you succeeded in getting in contact with Hunter Seong Jin-Woo?”

Baek Yun-Ho asked, his head still looking over his shoulder.

“Did you sense that?”

Min Byung-Gu replied testily.

“I may be retired now, but my rank hasn’t dropped, you know.”

These two men had been sharing a bottle of cheap liquor for the first time in a long while inside a certain ‘pojangmacha’ until then, but now, only the heavy silence flowed between them. (TL note at the end)

Baek Yun-Ho eventually shifted his gaze back to his front.

“What was that just now?”

“Maybe Choi Jong-In and Cha Hae-In started fighting over the shares of the Hunters Guild. Who knows.”

Min Byung-Gu had been frozen on the spot with a shot glass in his hand, but suddenly broke out in a fit of giggles before emptying the soju down his throat. Baek Yun-Ho formed a dumbfounded expression.

“Don’t tell me you were trying to make me laugh with that.”

“But, wasn’t it funny, hyung?”

“....Never mind. Forget it.”

But, then again - including his sense of humour, Min Byung-Gu could be considered a bit strange in the head. No doubt about that.

‘I mean, he’s supposed to be the first rank S Hunter in the world to retire when he’s still all healthy and the like, isn’t he?’

Not only the first in the world, but he was also the only one so far, too.

Just how many people out there would willingly give up on the ridiculous amount of wealth a rank S Hunter could earn, simply because he wasn’t interested anymore?

Min Byung-Gu wasn’t even from a wealthy stock, to begin with.

Sensing Baek Yun-Ho’s questioning gaze, Min Byung-Gu asked back.

“Hyung. Are you really going to participate?”

“....Yeah.”

“But, you saw how Eun-Seok hyung died.”

“That’s why I must go back.”

Min Byung-Gu looked at his drinking partner with a bit of confusion on his face. Baek Yun-Ho emptied his shot glass and continued on.

“If we leave the ants alone, the entirety of South Korea would end up like that place.”

“Since when did you become this patriotic....?”

“Well, we’re supposed to do it sooner rather than later, so might as well come up with a nice-sounding excuse while I’m at it. Don’t you agree?”

The Guilds could not decline the Association’s summons. The Association would accommodate the needs of the various Guilds, and the Guilds themselves simply had to answer the Association’s call in return.

If one didn’t want to, then there was the option of emigrating to somewhere else. How unfortunate, then, that there was no sane-minded nation willing to accept a Hunter running away from a high-difficulty raid.

Even if a country did accept such a person, could anyone actually be sure of that said Hunter not pulling the exact same stunt again in the future?

‘I don’t want to run away, anyways.’

Baek Yun-Ho smirked to himself. Meanwhile, Min Byung-Gu bluntly replied.

“I won’t be participating. I will never go back there. If you asked to see me, hoping to change my mind, you might as well give.....”

“That’s not it.”

Baek Yun-Ho put the cash down for the alcohol and stood up. The bottle was empty by then.

“I came to say goodbye, just in case. I don’t know if we’ll get to sit down for a drink again, after all.”

“Hyung.....”

Min Byung-Gu gave up on changing Baek Yun-Ho’s mind, as he watched the latter wave his hand while walking away.

Baek Yun-Ho already knew full well the dangers of the subjugation plan, perhaps better than anyone else.

‘Even then, he’s still going.....’

Baek Yun-Ho’s expression wasn’t of someone being dragged away despite feeling deeply scared. No, rather, he carried the face of someone getting ready to step on and kill as many ants as he could with this opportunity, instead. Indeed, he seemed to be eagerly waiting for the day of the subjugation.

Min Byung-Gu could only chew on the snacks with a helpless expression on his face, only for his chopsticks to stop moving shortly thereafter.

‘Wait a minute..... I can’t think of that many Hunters who don’t like fighting against monsters, now can I?’

There were a few like that among the Healers, but on the flip side, those folks simply loved to heal others, instead.

Min Byung-Gu dazedly stared at the bowl of oden soup, before roughly scratching the side of his head.

‘Could it be that only those who like fighting become Awakened?’

Eii, there was no way that could be true.

Min Byung-Gu found something to be rather funny, and laughed all by himself while finishing the oden.

Jin-Woo quickly arrived in the hospital.

‘Let’s see..... It was room number 305, right?’

He wasn’t planning to enter the hospital through the front door, to begin with. While still riding on Kaisel, he searched for the windows of his mother’s hospital room.

‘Ruler’s Reach.’

The curtains covering the windows silently parted sideways. He saw the quietly-sleeping sight of his mother on the bed. She looked exactly the same as the last time he came to visit.

Jin-Woo used ‘Ruler’s Reach’ one more time to open the window and silently stepped into the hospital room. Kaisal had disappeared into his shadow by then.

He soon stood by the side of the bed. His heart was pounding madly now that the time he had been waiting for so long was here.

‘If something goes wrong, I won’t be able to do anything.’

His mother had been unconscious for a very long time. There was a chance that she might not even be able to swallow the Divine Water of Life, and even if she did, there was no guarantee that she’d be okay afterwards.

‘However...’

Jin-Woo got to witness plenty of miracles the System caused so far.

If it happened to someone else, he’d never have believed a word of it. One didn’t even have to look far for tangible evidence, either. Wasn’t he the walking proof of those miracles?

‘I was a rank E, yet now look at me standing here.’

All of his achievements, they were due to the System’s powers. Jin-Woo wordlessly stared at his two hands, before raising his head.

His mother lay right in front of his eyes, looking as if she’d wake up at any moment if he called out to her. He summoned the ‘Divine Water of Life’ from the Inventory.

Shururu....

On top of his hand, a wooden bottle materialised out of the blue. He read the item information over and over again, just in case he might have missed something important.

And so, by the time he had thoroughly memorised every word in the item information by repeatedly reading it over and over again, he managed to build up enough courage to pull the cork off of the wooden bottle.

Pop.

His hands that stayed steady during the life-or-death battle against the Demon King were trembling greatly now. Jin-Woo took a deep, deep breath to calm his mind.

'If I make a mistake here, my mother will bear the cost, instead.'

The moment he told himself there could not be any mistake whatsoever, he was able to regain the usual calmness right away. Even his hands stopped shaking.

'...I'm fine now.'

Jin-Woo cautiously supported the back of his mother's, Park Gyung-Hye's, neck with his left hand. He then brought the mouth of the wooden bottle closer to her lips.

Soon, the 'Divine Water of Life' slowly trickled into her slightly parted lips. Jin-Woo didn't rush it and made sure to let only a tiny strand enter her mouth.

'This wound....'

He then noticed the burn marks on the side of his mom's neck. The burns continued down the back of her neck, too.

Although he couldn't see it from this angle, Jin-Woo knew only too well that the burn mark extended from the entirety of the back of her neck and her shoulders to some part of her head.

'She got that because of me, after all.'

Back then, he only wanted to wash his mother's hair, inside the public bathhouse. He wanted to emulate what his mother did, when she washed the hair of very young Jin-Ah.

However, the young Jin-Woo, who never had much of an opportunity to visit public bathhouses before, lacked the ability to tell apart the temperature of the water.

Splash, splash....

The very hot water, hot enough to bubble up, filled up the plastic wash basin. The young Jin-Woo did his very best not to spill any of the hot water and cautiously walked to the back of his mom.

And then....

Splash!

He poured the water out of the plastic basin.

Mom flinched a little, but didn't move from the spot even when her flesh was visibly cooked red. All because, she feared that the hot water might end up on Jin-Ah's face. She simply held her daughter tight in her embrace.

She didn't make any noise.

The belated screams came from not his mother, but from the mouths of the aunts nearby.

“Oh, my god!! Someone, help!”

“Jin-Woo's mom!”

Only then did Jin-Woo realise he did something bad. But, all he wanted to do was to help his mother.

Jin-Woo dropped the plastic basin and began crying, but his mom tightly grasped his shoulders. And then, asked him.

“Jin-Woo? Are you okay? Are you hurt anywhere?”

The young Jin-Woo thought that he'd be scolded for sure. He could never forget the events of that day and those words his mother said to him. Not even now.

‘And here I am, thinking that I don't owe anyone anything....’

After their father went missing, it was mom alone who raised the siblings Jin-Woo and Jin-Ah.

He hated owing someone, or someone owing him, so he made sure that such a thing never happened, but still....

He owed his mother a debt that he could never possibly repay.

It was then.

The very last drop entered his mother's mouth.

Jin-Woo put the bottle down and carefully laid her on the bed again. He stood quietly to the side as if he was praying to someone while waiting for the result.

Thump, thump, thump!!

His heart pounded so much that his chest actually ached. Nervous saliva travelled down his throat, too.

‘.....’

However, there was no visible change.

Just as a drop of blood from Jin-Woo's tightly clenched fist was about to fall....

“Heo-heok!!”

Her eyes still closed, mom sucked in a deep breath like a person getting rescued from drowning.

‘.....!!!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes widened.

A little bit of colour was returning to mom’s once-slightly pale face. Like colour spreading on the black and white TV screen, a healthy complexion was spreading over his mother’s skin.

Every passing second felt like an hour to him.

How much time did pass like that?

Jin-Woo’s mother slowly opened her eyes. Her gaze wandered around for a moment or two, before stopping at Jin-Woo.

“Who.... No, wait, could you be... Jin-Woo?”

Jin-Woo’s heart nearly fell just then, but he managed to nod his head a little.

It was obvious that she didn’t recognise him right away. Four years had passed by already, and he had grown by a lot since then, too.

Jin-Woo didn’t rush things and quietly waited.

Like water slowly filling up an empty bowl, blurry memories of the past filled up the empty hole of the last four years in Jin-Woo’s mother, Park Gyung-Hye’s mind bit by bit.

It didn’t take her a long time to realise why she was lying on the hospital bed like this.

“How long have I been lying here, son?”

He could’ve also added that it was four years and a few days, but he didn’t. His mother currently needed as much calmness, a sense of stability, so he did his best to sound and look normal.

But, mom was still taken back by the revelation of four years, and she hurriedly asked him.

“What about Jin-Ah?? Is your sister alright??”

It was then, Jin-Woo felt something powerful welling up from deep within his heart.

She had been teetering on the edge of life and death for the last four years, yet the first thing she asked after waking up was the well-being of her daughter.....

If he hadn't bitten down on his lower lip, he might have broken down right there and then.

'It's no time to worry about that girl, you know.'

He wanted to say that out loud. But, he suppressed his emotions and formed a thin smile, instead.

"Yes, mom. She's doing okay."

His mother sighed, her expression one of genuine relief.

Jin-Woo was inwardly concerned, hoping that his mother would start worrying about herself soon, but at the same time, he began to relax somewhat as his mother seemingly hadn't changed at all.

'Things will go back to how it's been, soon.'

Finally recognising that mom's illness had been cured, his heart palpitated again. But then, he was jolted out of his thoughts. Mom was holding his left hand even before he had noticed it.

"Mom?"

"Thank you, son. You kept your promise."

Promise?

'...Ah, I forgot.'

Then again, he had always thought it was the most obvious thing in the world, so it was possible that he didn't consciously see it as a promise.

The so-called 'Eternal Sleep' disorder, where you'd fall deeper and deeper into slumber, until you'd never wake up again....

It became harder for mom to carry on with her daily life as drowsiness frequently assaulted her without warning with every passing day. Out of the blue, though, she asked Jin-Woo for a favour.

She carried a smile of a mother asking her child for a simple errand back then.

That was why he had been enduring until now. He didn't resent her at all. Because all he did was to take over the burden his mother had been carrying until then.

However, mom tightly squeezed his hand as if she knew everything.

"My son.... It must've been hard for you."

Jin-Woo tried to smile like he had done before to assuage his mother's worries. As if nothing of note had happened until then.

Unfortunately, he couldn't do that.

All the tears he held back until then travelled down his face, and his lips parted all on their own.

“Yeah.”

REPORT

“What was that??”

The director of Seoul-Ilsin Hospital, Doctor Lee Seong-Chul got to hear a rather stunning piece of news. A patient suffering from ‘Eternal Sleep’ disorder had woken up from the terminal stage of the illness.

“Are you telling me the truth??”

“Yes, Director. I’ve confirmed it personally.”

As a doctor, his ears would perk up greatly if such an event occurred in someone else’s hospital, yet the patient in question was actually in his own??

“Who knew such a jackpot would come knocking at my door?”

The exceptional brain of Director Lee Seong-Chul began punching some numbers in his mental calculator.

“Isn’t this an unprecedented event in the whole world?”

“You’re correct, Director.”

The doctor in charge nodded his head.

Lee Seong-Chul’s smile was so wide that it actually broke past his ears and threatened to rip his face in half.

“Nicely done!! Doctor Choi!!”

“I beg your pardon? D-director, I haven’t done....”

“Ehheii, my man, don’t be like that now!”

Lee Seong-Chul sent a meaningful gaze at the doctor in charge.

“It doesn’t matter ‘how’ it happened, we can always cook something up later. But, it’s only right and proper that the doctor in charge is praised for the work well done when a patient gets better! Am I wrong?”

Not to mention, the hospital that the doctor was working in would be praised, too!

“Ah, y-yes.... T-thank you very much, director.”

The doctor in charge gave in and bowed his head slightly to the director.

Even though the doctor's response was rather lukewarm, the wide smile on Lee Seong-Chul's face didn't want to leave him, knowing that he had been blessed with an unexpected boon.

'If we play our cards right, the world's attention might gather on my Ilsin Hospital!!'

Being constantly talked about by other people because of a good piece of news was, in a word, free publicity. There was nothing to lose here, and everything to gain.

If this news got out, reporters from all over the world would descend upon this hospital and absolutely lose their minds trying to uncover any related info, however small or insignificant it was.

This was a great opportunity to advertise the hospital's name without spending a dime.

'What those reporters want to know would be the treatment method, but...'

Well, all he had to do was to keep the patient nearby and find out what happened a step at a time. Indeed, nothing could go wrong here. That's what Lee Seong-Chul thought.

The doctor in charge acted as if something was troubling him and cautiously spoke up.

"The patient's legal guardian requested for immediate discharge."

"What was that?!"

No, that definitely could not be allowed!

Reporters would only come to the hospital if the patient was still here! No, never mind the reporters, he needed to keep the patient here in order to figure out how the disorder had been cured, to begin with!

Lee Seong-Chul's brows quivered.

"What was the status of the patient?"

"Everything was normal, director."

"The patient's been asleep, completely immobile, for the past four years, yet you are telling me that her body was completely fine??"

"Couldn't it be because of the life support machines?"

"H-mm....."

Indeed, the performance of the machines being too good could also be a factor here.

“Delay the discharge for as long as possible with an excuse that... we need to observe the patient for a while longer to make sure she’s fine.”

“I said the exact same thing to the guardian, but it didn’t work, Director.”

‘We can’t keep a patient here without a valid reason if she wishes to leave, can we.....’

If that was the case, then he had only one option remaining – and that would be to let the world know before the patient left the hospital.

“Let’s alert the press while they are still in the premise.”

The doctor in charge shook his head.

“That will be.... difficult, Director.”

“How come?”

“We can’t expose the identity of the patient. If we handle this poorly, something really bad will happen, Director.”

Hearing those unexpected words, Lee Seong-Chul could only form a flustered expression. Seeing the doctor’s own troubled expression, he didn’t seem to be exaggerating things, either.

Lee Seong-Chul’s attitude became a lot more serious.

“Is the patient such an important person?”

“It’s not the patient herself, but the guardian, well.... The protection of the private information has been requested by the guardian himself, actually.”

Now that Lee Seong-Chul thought about it, Doctor Choi was being super respectful whenever he mentioned the legal guardian.

“Just who is this guardian supposed to be that you’re acting like this?”

What kind of a person was the guardian that the hospital had to honour the request for the protection of the patient’s information, as well as Doctor Choi being this polite?

“Have you heard about Mister Seong Jin-Woo?”

“Seong Jin-Woo?”

Was he a powerful politician? Or, a CEO of some massive corporation?

Lee Seong-Chul thought that he had heard of the name somewhere, but couldn’t quite recall the face, and helplessly tilted his head. As if he expected this to happen, the doctor in charge quickly offered up an explanation.

“He’s the Hunter who was evaluated as a rank S recently.”

“A rank S!!”

Here was the reason why Doctor Choi was being so cautious. Who would have guessed that the patient’s guardian happened to be a rank S Hunter?

‘This... It’ll be the end for us if we make a rash move and things go sideways as a result.’

The influence a rank S Hunter had over society was extensive, to begin with, but more importantly, if such a Hunter lost his cool and decided to rampage around, then....

Lee Seong-Chul nervously swallowed dry saliva when a rather unexpected name was brought up.

‘That sure was too close for comfort....’

His hardened expression suddenly softened into a cheery smile.

“Begin the discharge procedure right away.”

“Indeed, we should do that.”

“Yes, we must.”

A smile of a good-natured person remained on Lee Seong-Chul’s lips.

They should definitely release the patient now. What were they hoping to gain by getting on the bad side of a rank S Hunter? He quickly came with a logical-sounding excuse that contained the rough meaning of what both of them were thinking about.

“We surely can’t force a perfectly healthy person to remain cooped up in a hospital, now can we?”

“Indeed, Director.”

The doctor in charge quickly stood up from his seat.

And after he left....

“Whew....”

Lee Seong-Chul stared at the now-closed door to the director’s office and spat out a sigh of relief.

As soon as she got the call, Jin-Ah dropped everything and rushed to the hospital.

Jin-Woo had been sitting on a chair next to mom’s bed, and when he sensed his fast-approaching sister, quickly stood up. Right then, the door to his mom's hospital room was flung open.

“Mom?? Mom!!”

She hadn't even crossed the doorway yet, but Jin-Ah's face was already a messy mixture of streaming tears and snot falling from her nose.

“Oh, my gosh. My little girl, you've grown up so much.”

The last time their mom, Park Gyung-Hye, saw her daughter was when she was still in middle school. She gazed at her grown-up daughter with a surprised expression, but shortly afterwards, opened her arms wide to welcome Jin-Ah with a warm smile on her face.

When that happened....

“Mom!!”

Jin-Ah tightly embraced her mother.

Jin-Woo hesitated slightly. That wasn't something she should have done to a patient who regained her consciousness after four years of being in a coma. But, seeing his sister crying her eyes out like that while locked in their mother's embrace, he couldn't bring himself to stop her.

“Mom, Mom.....”

She always acted all grown-up, but in the end, Jin-Ah was still a kid inside. The energetic and brave everyday appearance of Jin-Ah overlapped with the current sobbing one, and that stung Jin-Woo's nostrils a bit.

“That is eno....”

Jin-Woo eventually moved in to separate Jin-Ah, but Park Gyung-Hye placed her index finger on her lips and slowly shook her head, her other hand still gently patting her daughter's back.

Jin-Woo sighed softly and took a step back.

As he looked on at his sister in his mom's embrace, as well as his mom's gentle and warm expression, a satisfied smile automatically formed on his lips.

‘My effort wasn't in vain.’

It felt like he was being fully rewarded for all the hard work he had put in right at this moment. Also, he felt as if something hard and stubborn stuck in the corner of his heart had finally melted down and was now flowing away, out of him.

In that case, should he leave the two of them alone for a while? At least, until his little sister found a way to get a hold of her overflowing emotions.

Since she was one smart girl, she'd know not to unnecessarily stress out mom. Only that, she needed a bit more time here.

Jin-Woo grinned a little and shifted his gaze outside the hospital window. As if to congratulate the reunion of his family, the weather outside was brilliantly sunny today.

Feeling a bit awkward from standing there and staring at the weather without saying anything, he decided to pull out his phone.

‘.....’

There was a scary amount of missed calls and text messages left on his phone that he couldn't even dare to attempt replying to a select few, never mind all of them. Jin-Woo scrolled the list of the missed calls and texts, before giving up and closing the window altogether.

‘Well, if it's something urgent, I'm sure they'll contact me again.’

He quickly gave up on replying and instead, accessed the internet browser.

But then....

‘...Heok!!’

He clicked on the online news portal without thinking too much, only to perform a grand facepalm.

[A flying monster spotted over the skies of Seoul?]

[The potential destination of the flying monster?]

[Hunters Association fails to respond. What about the safety of citizens?]

Photos of Kaisal were plastered all over the various internet news sites.

From the vicinity of his house all the way to this hospital, the distance between the two points was rather considerable, but he figured nothing serious would happen because he was travelling at such a high speed. But this....

‘...It was only a short flight, but we got photographed a lot, didn't we?’

The only fortunate thing here was that the photos didn't show him riding on the back of Kaisal.

He made up his mind to not care about what others thought of him when he summoned Kaisal near his house, but now that he was dominating the headlines, he sure felt conflicted now.

'Oh, well.'

Anyone would have their hearts in their mouths, seeing a monster flying in the sky like that. Jin-Woo scanned the news articles filled with a great deal of anxiety and told himself to be more careful in the future.

'There's no need to go out of my way to scare the public, anyway.'

Indeed, didn't he feel a certain aversion towards the Class of Necromancer because he was worried about failing to handle all the pointed stares of the public?

'However, if the frenzy over a winged lizard is this huge, then, uh, the responses to the gigantic Fangs would really be something else, no?'

While he was thinking of this and that....

Vrrr.... Vrrr....

His phone began vibrating.

'Who's this?'

He didn't recognise the number; after exiting the hospital room, he answered the call.

"Hello?"

A baritone yet still bright voice of an old man came out. Jin-Woo immediately recalled the owner of that voice.

"Association President?"

'Why is he giving me a call?'

What prompted the one-and-only Association President to give him a call like this? Jin-Woo noticed that there were several people walking to and fro within the hospital's corridor, so he quickly walked towards a more secluded area. He continued to speak in the meantime.

"What's the matter, sir?"

'...What news?'

Jin-Woo tilted his head a bit, before realising that this wouldn't do and asked again.

"I'm not sure what news you're talking about....?"

'Wow. I guess the speed of news getting around these days is nothing to scoff at.'

Jin-Woo readily admitted to his wrongdoing.

“I’m sorry about that. But I’ll make sure to be more careful next time.”

Only after hearing the confused voice of Goh Gun-Hui did Jin-Woo realise that he was deeply mistaken about something here.

‘Wait, wasn’t he calling me about Kaisal?’

If not, what else could the news outlets be talking about, instead?

The dual dungeon, the Red Gate, clearing the rank A dungeons, the ‘Bead of Avarice’, etc....

Now that he thought about, there were quite a few potential topics of contention, instead.

“.....Can you clarify what happened?”

“I’ve been spending some time in a location recently where contacting outside was difficult, actually.”

He wasn’t lying about that, technically speaking.

Goh Gun-Hui’s voice betrayed how surprised he was, but then, it became even graver than before.

According to Jin-Woo’s experience, this could only mean that the reason for this call should be brought up now.

Jin-Woo’s suspicion grew even larger compared to when he first answered the phone.

‘Calling me on the phone isn’t enough, so the Association President wishes to come here and see me personally?’

Just how much of an important matter was this to make someone as busy as him personally move?

Even then....

Jin-Woo glanced in the direction of mom’s hospital room.

‘I can’t ask the Association President to come here.’

He might have to come up with bullsh*t stories related to his mother if that happened.

“No, I’ll go over there, instead.”

“Yes, I will.”

That was far more simpler for him.

Quickly making the arrangement over the phone, and after telling his mom and sister that he had an errand to run and he’d be back a little later, Jin-Woo left the hospital.

Having spent way too long inside the Demon's Castle where there was no sunlight, his eyes were feeling a bit itchy as the warm rays fell on him. Jin-Woo furrowed his brows.

'Man, this is so cumbersome. Should I just summon Kaisei?'

He deliberated for a moment or two, before smirking to himself and walked towards a waiting taxi.

Chapter 111 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

The footage shown was quite a shocking one.

Shot from a CCTV camera placed high up on a stretch of road, the viewer could see how deserted this unknown street was; it was so quiet that, even after the footage had been greatly sped up, only a handful of cars drove by.

One might even end up suspecting that the road was located in the sparsely-populated outskirts of a city or even in a rural area.

The sped-up footage was slowed down greatly. And then, it happened.

A saloon appeared on the edge of the screen. It was moving fast enough that even when the footage had been slowed down, one could still sense its high speed.

But then, in the blink of an eye....

A black thing suddenly appeared before the speeding car. It was a dark lifeform, standing on two feet like a person. The car couldn't slow down sufficiently with this sudden development. However, no such thing as the car and the unknown lifeform colliding ever occurred.

Just before the collision happened, the car suddenly flew up in the air.

The dark lifeform easily flipped the mid-sized saloon speeding towards it with one hand, and then, dragged the unconscious driver out from the wreckage to devour the poor guy from the head.

Chomp, chomp....

That surely would've been the noise most likely to be captured by a mic, had the CCTV camera been equipped with one.

The footage came to an end there.

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze away from the giant TV screen filling up an entire wall of the Association President's office, and to Goh Gun-Hui sitting on the other side of the table.

The older man slowly put the remote down.

“Three hundred people.”

Unlike some others, he didn't speak about the neighbouring nation's misfortune with an easy-going attitude.

“That one ant managed to kill that many people.”

“Were the Japanese too slow to respond?”

“That’s not correct.”

Goh Gun-Hui shook his head.

“From what I hear, the Japanese Hunters only took 30 minutes to get to the location. But, in that short period of time, a small village was wiped off the map.”

Japan boasted one of the most advanced Hunter systems in all of Asia. And a country like that had to experience such a level of devastation, so what would happen if an ant entered the South Korean border?

Goh Gun-Hui had viewed that footage multiple times already, but he still was overcome with a chilling premonition of an impending crisis every time he did.

‘Before it’s too late, we need to destroy the ants once and for all.’

The subjugation operation would get underway in four days’ time. The Japanese had been demanding the release of the final list of all Korean Hunters participating in the operation for a few days now.

However, using his authority as the leader of the Korean side, Goh Gun-Hui delayed the announcement of the final list. The reason for that was simple.

Because no one could get in touch with Jin-Woo until now.

And so, after a long wait, the moment of the list being finalised had arrived. Goh Gun-Hui continued on with a trembling heart.

“We’ll go to Jeju Island and get rid of the ants found there.”

He formed a pleading expression next.

“And that is why we need your help, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

up, Goh Gun-Hui’s expression shifted to one of anxiety.

If Jin-Woo refused to participate, then there was nothing anyone could do. He was no longer affiliated with the Association, and he was not duty-bound to carry out the demands of the Association, either. In other words, the final decision rested solely on his whim.

After lengthy deliberation, he opened his mouth.

“I....”

After ending the meeting with the Association President, Jin-Woo stood up from the seat to leave, only to sense something and shifted his head in that direction.

‘What was that just now?’

In a place not too far from here, he sensed clashes of magical energy.

‘Could it be a dungeon break?’

Initially, he suspected a dungeon break happening nearby, but he soon realised that wasn’t the case. He couldn’t sense any presence of monsters, only the magic energy coming from various Hunters, instead.

“Did something happen?”

Goh Gun-Hui had stood up from his seat first and walked over to the doorway to bid Jin-Woo goodbye, only to turn around and question him when the youth failed to move from the spot.

“Well, I don’t think it’s anything serious, but.... It seems that Hunters are fighting each other nearby.”

“But, that can’t be.”

Goh Gun-Hui chuckled loudly.

Which foolhardy Hunters would dare to fight each other near the Association’s HQ? There was no way such a thing would happen.

‘No, wait.... The direction of Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim is looking at....?’

A possibility formed in Goh Gun-Hui’s mind.

“I believe that rank S Hunters are doing some light exercises in the gymnasium. Maybe you’re talking about that?”

‘...Light exercises, is it?’

If that was the case, then for sure, the continuous yet restrained clashes of magical energy made sense. Jin-Woo nodded his head.

“I see.”

Goh Gun-Hui’s eyes looking at the youth were filled with undisguised surprise.

‘He can sense something like that from this distance?’

The Association’s gymnasium was designed to greatly minimise the amount of magic energy leaking outside. In actual reality, even Goh Gun-Hui himself couldn't sense anything.

But then, not only had Jin-Woo sensed the minuscule amount leaking out from there, he even correctly guessed that different magic energies were clashing with one another, too.

'Just how highly attuned are his senses?'

It was simply impossible to even take a wild guess.

"....Ah, right! Would you like to take a look if you're interested?"

Goh Gun-Hui made a quick suggestion. It was a rare event to find all of the rank S Hunters in South Korea gathered in one place. Personally witnessing the abilities of other rank S Hunters from the sideline would do a world of good to Seong Jin-Woo, who had become a rank S himself only recently.

"I believe that Mister Goto Ryuji is also present there."

Jin-Woo was thinking of taking a look-see with an open mind, only to stop in his tracks.

"If you say Goto Ryuji, do you mean....?"

"Yes, it is him."

If you were a Hunter – no, even if you weren't a Hunter – you'd have at least heard of that name once, the name that belonged to one of the most powerful Hunters in existence.

"It is indeed that Goto Ryuji. He's currently staying in the country to aid in building a good repertoire and a sense of camaraderie in both the Korean and Japanese participants. Since he's planning to leave tomorrow, if you don't meet him today, you might not get another opportunity in the future."

Not only were Korea's best Hunters gathered in one place, but even Japan's best was also here too?

'Obviously, I can't miss this chance.'

Jin-Woo accepted Goh Gun-Hui's suggestion with a deeply interested expression.

At the same time, Goto Ryuji was doing his very best to stifle a yawn.

'This is supposed to be the abilities of Korea's best?'

How laughable.

No, they were actually pitiful.

The assessment of 'laughable' was made from an objective point of view, while the 'pitiful' bit came from him adding a bit of sympathy to that initial assessment.

'Rather than leaving the safety of the country to these people's hands, wouldn't it be far better to be under the protection of us, the Japanese, instead?'

Goto Ryuji formed a leery smile and surveyed the Korean rank S Hunters. Out of all the rank S Hunters he met in Korea so far, only one seemed to be somewhat 'useful' to his eyes.

'Her name's supposed to be Cha Hae-In, right?'

Even then, her abilities were only around the level of Japan's upper-rank Hunters. She fell way, way short when compared to the best Hunters Japan could offer.

'But, there's no helping it, is there?'

South Korea was a small nation, and its population wasn't that vast, either. Also, the person who had Awakened the greatest ability within the populace just so happened to be an old man who didn't have that many days to live and couldn't even fight properly.

'If it's Goh Gun-Hui, then he might be able to contend with some of our best on a similar level, but.....'

He could say that the Koreans had drawn a short straw on this one.

In any case, he was done with assessing the capabilities of the Korean Hunters. He had completed the real reason for his extended stay in Korea.

'They wouldn't even survive for five minutes if we withdraw during the subjugation.'

Thinking that there was no more reason to stick around, Goto Ryuji turned around to leave, but then, he spotted someone unfamiliar walking closer from the entrance of the gymnasium.

'Mm....?'

Goto Ryuji's brows quivered greatly.

He hadn't realised the approach of this unknown man even though they were in close proximity already. He was looking at the man with his own eyes, yet he still couldn't sense the other person's presence at all.

'Is he an Assassin-type Hunter?'

Goto Ryuji asked the Association employee tasked with translation next to him.

“Who is that man?”

The employee fidgeted with his glasses and stared for a long time, before finally recalling who the unknown man was and formed a smile.

“Ah. He’s the newly registered rank S Hunter.”

“Aha....”

So, that man was that Re-Awakened with no known reliable information available?

Goto Ryuji was thinking of spending the remaining time in Korea to unearth more about this man, but he now thought that this was actually better for him. He formed a bright smile and asked the Association employee again.

“Seems like he’s a pretty excellent Assassin?”

“Pardon?”

When the employee stared back with a strange expression, Goto Ryuji realised something was off.

“Did I make a mistake?”

“Oh, no. That’s not it. But, well...”

The employee pointed at Jin-Woo and spoke.

“He’s actually a Mage-type Hunter. Mister Goto.”

‘No freaking way?!’

Carrying a disbelieving expression, Goto Ryuji quickly accessed the Korean Hunters Association website and went through the list of rank S Hunters there.

The automated translation app allowed him to read the information on the Korean rank S Hunters right away.

[Seong Jin-Woo, rank S, Mage-type]

There it was. The profile image and the person’s face were a perfect match.

‘He’s really a Mage-type??’

Goto Ryuji got inwardly stunned by this and hurriedly raised his shocked face. By then, that man was already standing nearby.

‘So, this guy is Goto Ryuji, huh.’

Jin-Woo only needed one glance to recognise Japan’s most powerful

Hunter.

He was a tall man with a sharp sense of fashion. His beard was trimmed neatly, too. At a casual glance, one might mistakenly think that he was a famous Japanese actor.

‘But, why does he keep looking at me like that?’

Just as Jin-Woo was beginning to feel a bit unhappy at the continued gaze, the Japanese man performed a simple greeting with his eyes first.

Did he stare like that because they had never met before until now?

Jin-Woo didn’t think too much about it and reciprocated the light greeting, and took a look around.

In the middle of the gymnasium, the shirtless Baek Yun-Ho and a hulking middle-aged man with a huge frame were having a sparring session. Excluding Goto Ryuji, everyone else present was looking on at that with deeply interested expressions.

Swish-!!

Baek Yun-Ho slapped away the hand of the quickly-approaching man, spun his lower half, and sent out a powerful low kick.

Pah!

Contrary to expectations, though, the one to frown was Baek Yun-Ho.

‘Oho.’

Jin-Woo could tell why. In that briefest of moments, the giant man utilised a body reinforcement-type skill to defend his legs.

Judging from that huge body and the skill he used just now, he seemed to be a Tanker type, but his Agility Stat must’ve been rather out of the norm, as well. Should Jin-Woo chalk that one up to that man being a rank S?

The giant middle-aged man smirked.

“Instructor Baek! It won’t do for a young man like you to be this powerless.”

“I’m not an instructor, Mah Instructor-nim.”

The giant man referred to as Mah Instructor-nim chuckled genially and grabbed the belt of his dobok. Maybe because a guy with a physique of a Sumo wrestler was wearing a dobok, it kind of felt a bit out of place to Jin-Woo’s eyes.

“Well, in that case.”

The giant man fixed his attire for a moment before pouncing forward again, and Baek Yun-Ho unleashed his magic power to counter-attack. Both of them were carrying joyous expressions.

As Instructor Mah pushed forward, and as Baek Yun-Ho was pushed back, they both looked to be enjoying themselves.

It seemed that they were relishing this rare opportunity to unleash some of their powers that had to be restrained most of the time in this gathering of rank S Awakened.

“Even then, if Mister Baek Yun-Ho were to fight seriously, Mister Mah Dong-Wook wouldn’t be able to endure it.”

Choi Jong-In walked in closer to Jin-Woo and spoke up. The latter turned his head to look, prompting the former to nod his head in a greeting.

Jin-Woo reciprocated the greeting, and their conversation continued on from there.

“That person wearing dobok is the Shining Star’s Mah Dong-Wook.”

‘Ah.’

Jin-Woo was thinking to himself that he had heard of that name before, and it turned out that man was the Master of the Shining Star. He nodded his head and threw a question.

“It’s not like he needs to go easy on his opponent, so why is Master Baek hiding most of his powers?”

“He finds it a bit troublesome to reveal his powers in front of too many eyes.... Chairman Baek transforms into a real monster when he fights seriously, you see.”

Back in front of the Red Gate, Baek Yun-Ho did reveal a pair of beast-like eyes to Jin-Woo.

‘So, it’s not just his eyes that can transform, eh.’

Just like Baek Yun-Ho’s ability to transform, one would hear about top Hunters possessing rather unique abilities every now and then.

In a way, they were the possessors of monster-like powers. From other people’s perspective, Jin-Woo thought that he’d be seen like that, too.

‘A guy who can morph into a monster, and a guy who can summon monsters....’

When he thought about others finding him mystifying, just like how he thought of Baek Yun-Ho’s powers being weird, Jin-Woo couldn’t help but smirk softly to himself.

But, that was all.

He only found Baek Yun-Ho's ability to transform strange and nothing else. There was nothing interesting to look at in regards to the sparring between Baek Yun-Ho and Mah Dong-Wook.

'So slow.'

Jin-Woo didn't even need to concentrate, yet he could clearly read the attacks and counters of both men.

It was then.

"...Uh?"

Sensing something was off, Baek Yun-Ho stopped moving. Mah Dong-Wook also stopped at the same time, as well. And their gazes shifted to Jin-Woo simultaneously as if they had made a prior arrangement.

Maybe it was because Jin-Woo's boredom was too easy to see?

'.....?'

But then again, too many people were looking at Jin-Woo the same way for him to think that was the case. However, he got to figure out the reason soon enough.

'It's not me, but behind me....'

When he looked back, Goto Ryuji was standing there. The light glinting in his eyes was rather suspicious.

The interpreter next to the Japanese man spoke on behalf of Goto Ryuji.

"Hunter-nim? Mister Goto wishes to speak to you for a moment."

Jin-Woo knew that Goto Ryuji was standing nearby, but because he hadn't expected to be addressed at all, he could only form a confused expression.

'This guy, I sensed that he didn't seem right since a while ago, but now....'

Did Jin-Woo's unhappiness get transmitted? Because Goto Ryuji quietly threw out a rather unexpected question.

"Will you have a sparring match with me?"

REPORT

There wasn't any deeper meaning behind his actions. Goto Ryuji came to South Korea to personally confirm the capabilities of the top Korean Hunters with his own eyes. And now, he had developed a bit of curiosity after discovering someone a bit unique out of the lot. That was all.

'I'll soon find out whether he's really a Mage or not.'

Goto Ryuji refused to accept that the man standing right in front of his eyes wasn't a melee-type Hunter.

He needed more 'data'. In order to eliminate any and all form of unexpected variations, he simply had to acquire more data on Seong Jin-Woo.

'Well, half of it is for fun, though....'

Goto Ryuji smirked to himself.

The interpreter heard what the Japanese Hunter had to say, jumped up in surprise, before hurriedly asking a question.

"M-mister Goto, are you sure about this?"

"Please translate what I said to this man ad verbatim."

"B-but, even then...."

"Will there be a problem?"

Goto Ryuji asked back in a teasing tone. His voice seemed to ask why shouldn't he participate in the proceedings, when the Korean Hunters were already doing some 'light exercises'?

The interpreter continued to sweat buckets, before giving up in the end and replied to him.

"I... I understand."

He turned his head and met Jin-Woo's questioning gaze. The interpreter hesitated before opening his mouth.

"Mister Goto is asking... If you don't mind 'training' with him....."

There was no need for an extra explanation on what that training was supposed to be.

Jin-Woo's gaze shifted over to Goto Ryuji. The Japanese man was waiting for an answer with an unreadable smile on his face.

'You want to find out more about my skill level, is that it?'

There was no way that the world-famous Goto Ryuji would do something so eye-catching just to show off his abilities. If that was indeed his aim, he'd have asked either Choi Jong-In or Baek Yun-Ho, the leaders of the number one and two South Korean Guilds respectively, instead.

'I don't know what you're planning here, but...'

Judging from the undisguised stare from earlier on, it was more than likely that Goto Ryuji's interest was on Jin-Woo.

Even then, he didn't feel displeased by the Japanese Hunter's abrupt suggestion. No, rather than that, he was genuinely intrigued by the prospect of the fight itself.

He wanted to test out the strength he got to raise inside the Demon's Castle, and he was also curious about the abilities of Japan's top Hunter, too. Indeed, it wasn't only Goto Ryuji who was curious about his opponent's strength.

'.....Mm?'

Goto Ryuji stopped smiling as a thin frown formed on his forehead.

'He's smiling?'

He expected Jin-Woo to become flustered and then eventually try to back out, but then, the Korean Hunter simply displayed a certain relaxed vibe, instead.

Was there something he felt confident of? Or, was he smiling wryly after finding the current situation troublesome to handle?

The answer was revealed soon enough. Jin-Woo told something to the interpreter, and the latter jumped up pretty high in shock right away.

up, the interpreter looked as if he was doing his best to dissuade the youth, while Jin-Woo was all smiles as he tried to calm the former, instead. Since they were talking in Korean, Goto Ryuji couldn't understand a word being spoken and as a result, a frown grew progressively deeper on his face.

'What are they even talking about...?'

It should've only been either 'yes' or 'no'.

Why was the interpreter sweating buckets like that over a question with only two exceedingly simple available answers?

Just as Goto Ryuji's patience was about to run out, the interpreter spoke up while continuously sneaking glances at Jin-Woo.

“Uhm, excuse me, Mister Goto....”

If only there were no eyes watching right now, Goto Ryuji would've shouted at the man to stop wasting time and hurry up with it. Forcibly maintaining his smile meant that Goto Ryuji's brows were quivering greatly, as he waited for the interpreter's next words.

“Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim agreed to your proposal. However....”

“However?”

“He says he has a condition.”

‘A condition?’

Not only had the opponent failed to lower his tail and cower, but he also accepted the challenge straight away, and even put up an extra condition, as well. It was Goto Ryuji's turn to feel somewhat flustered now.

“And what is this condition?”

“Well, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim said that.....”

The interpreter took one last look at Jin-Woo, and the latter nodded his head.

“....He'll agree only on the condition that Mister Goto gives his all.”

Goto Ryuji's stare immediately shifted to Seong Jin-Woo.

‘Is he being serious??’

Seeing the expression on Jin-Woo's face, one could tell that he wasn't kidding around. Goto Ryuji tilted his head.

‘Wait... Maybe he doesn't know who I am?’

But, that couldn't be. Even if he didn't know before, the interpreter should've provided an explanation just now. Even then, for him to not cower and back off – was this the case of arrogance or a mistaken belief in himself?

‘....This might be fun.’

The smile was already wiped clean from Goto Ryuji's mug.

He was thinking of matching the opponent's pace and ending things after checking out Seong Jin-Woo's skill, but now, his thoughts had changed. Thankfully, with a rank S Healer nearby, there shouldn't be any big 'accidents' either.

“Alright, I accept.”

“Heok!”

The interpreter’s face paled immediately.

Hunter Seong Jin-Woo had just advanced to rank ‘S’, so he might not be able to contain his overflowing passion, but why was Mister Goto, who had experienced all sorts of trials and tribulations, behaving like this?

Unfortunately, the atmosphere had already gone past the point of no return.

“Who’s that guy next to the Japanese Hunter?”

“Isn’t he... Hunter Seong Jin-Woo?”

“What’s this? Are they going to spar or something?”

Soon, the rank S Hunters and Association employees within the gymnasium all gathered around the two men glaring at each other. As everyone was immersed in the developing situation, half of them looking on with worry while the other half in anticipation, Cha Hae-In also stood next to the Hunters and looked on at the duo.

‘Will he be fine...?’

Jin-Woo’s opponent was a man who managed to stand at the top of Japan, a country with over 20 rank S Hunters.

As for Jin-Woo himself, if one excluded the years he spent as a rank E, then he should be considered as a newbie who had been a rank S for only a few days now.

It’d be the right thing to stop Hunter Seong Jin-Woo from continuing on any further.

From Cha Hae-In’s perspective as someone affiliated with the Hunters Guild, Seong Jin-Woo was a benefactor who saved the lives of an entire team consisting of her Guild’s elite men and women.

She wasn’t some honour-less woman who’d do nothing and watch a benefactor get hurt from the sidelines.

However, she kept recalling the events of that day whenever she thought about dissuading him.

...The look Jin-Woo gave her, telling her not to interfere even when he was facing off against over one hundred High Orcs and a boss of a rank A dungeon.

When recalling that powerful, determined stare, she felt her chest palpitate, and unexplainable anticipation bubbled up in her heart. That was why she couldn't readily step forward, only to bite down on her lower lip in nervousness.

It was then.

“Are you feeling okay today with other Hunters around you?”

Before she had time to notice it, Baek Yun-Ho was already next to her to ask that question. They had gone on several raids together, so he knew very well of her strange physical condition.

“Well, it's not like I'll be able to continue blocking my nose in Jeju Island, so...”

Hearing her answer, Baek Yun-Ho nodded his head. It was her turn to ask next.

“You said before that you're an acquaintance with Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, yes?”

“Yes.”

Cha Hae-In remembered that the White Tiger Guild also received Hunter Seong Jin-Woo's help in the past, just like her own Guild did.

“In that case, shouldn't you try to stop Mister Seong Jin-Woo?”

“I guess that's the normal way of thinking.”

After all, the opponent today was none other than Goto Ryuji. Cha Hae-In tilted her head.

“If so, then why....?”

Baek Yun-Ho shifted his gaze and met her eyes before replying to her.

“It's the same reason as yours, Cha Hunter-nim.”

Flinch.

Cha Hae-In felt as if her inner secrets had been exposed by Baek Yun-Ho just now. Her always-taciturn expression displayed just a hint of change.

“I don't....”

“Don't you feel this strange anticipation in the air?”

....She couldn't deny that.

Even now, her heart was racing with a singular thought of 'If it's Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, then he might....' filling up her head.

“It's the same story for me.”

Baek Yun-Ho replied with a grin and looked back in Jin-Woo and Goto Ryuji's direction. His expression was filled with barely-checked anticipation.

'If Hunter Seong is really an Awakened who can grow stronger as per my expectation, then....'

This could be the chance to confirm that theory.

Goto Ryuji raised his fist first.

The interpreter standing nearby hurriedly left their side. Two rank S Hunters were about to have a smackdown. Not only that, one of them happened to be referred to as Japan's best, as well. A normal person would die simply from being too close in this situation.

Making sure that the interpreter had run off to a safe-enough distance, Jin-Woo belatedly put his dukes up as well. No, that's what he tried to do.

But then...

Swish!

Without a moment's delay, Goto Ryuji's fist flew past where Jin-Woo's head had been a blink ago.

The Japanese man's eyes grew wide.

'I missed?'

The attack was meant to floor Jin-Woo in one go and help Goto recover his damaged pride, but now, it was all for nothing. Jin-Woo evaded the punch by tilting his head out of the way, and then, he easily created some distance between them.

His reaction speed was surprisingly fast.

'And you still claim to be a Mage after that??'

What a bloody laughable notion that was.

Indeed, Goto Ryuji's eyes weren't mistaken. He didn't know the reason for the Korean Association hiding that man's true abilities, but without a doubt, Seong Jin-Woo was a melee-type Hunter. Not only that, definitely an Assassin, too. His agile movements and his silent steps were all the proof needed.

'You may be able to fool the others, but you can't hide the truth from me.'

The corner of Goto Ryuji's lips arched up.

'Allow me to peel off another layer of yours.'

....Right until everything you possess is brought up to the surface!

For the first time in a long, long while, Goto Ryuji was feeling genuinely pumped up.

After taking some distance away from the aggressive Japanese Hunter, Jin-Woo stood still and listened to his heartbeat.

Thump, thump, thump....

Indeed, his heart was beating faster. He could sense power on another level compared to other Hunters from Goto Ryuji.

However, the emotion filling up Jin-Woo's heart whenever Goto Ryuji's unbelievable aura touched his skin was this strong sense of belief in himself.

'So, that guy is the best in Japan....'

Only now could he truly recognise how much he had changed while raising his level to 97. His strong confidence was clearly visible on his face now. On the other hand, Goto Ryuji's expression was hardening.

'He's smiling again?'

How dare he, in front of me??

Goto Ryuji spat out a heavy breath.

The scarcely-believable amount of magical energy he emitted began to heavily press down the surrounding air. Hunters watching on were jolted by a nasty surprise.

'Shouldn't we stop them before something happens here?'

'Goto Ryuji, maybe he's thinking of really going for it now?'

However, there was a thin smile on Jin-Woo's face. This was what he wanted, anyways.

Goto Ryuji saw that Jin-Woo showed no signs of cowering even after he had unleashed his fearsome level of magic power, and felt something welling up from deep within.

His eyes gleamed dangerously just then!

Even before other Hunters had the chance to step forward and stop this bout, Goto Ryuji pounced like an angry predator.

The distance closed up in an instant; Goto Ryuji reached out with his hand; Jin-Woo leaned back in the nick of time and evaded the attack.

'....!!'

Goto Ryuji's eyes trembled imperceptibly.

'He dodged?!'

Was that also a coincidence, or....?

Even though many thoughts fled in and out of his head, he didn't stop his hands and continued to rain down his attacks. Too bad, not one of them could connect to his target; Jin-Woo always managed to dodge by a hair's breadth or repelled the incoming hits away.

'How could this be...??'

Cold sweat drops formed on Goto Ryuji's forehead.

Goto Ryuji and his brilliantly flashy attacks, and Jin-Woo who managed to dodge everything by the smallest margins imaginable. Other Hunters watched the duo and expressed their genuine admiration.

"That's some fierce attacks, alright."

"Hard to follow those movements with my naked eyes."

"Look, even Hunter Seong Jin-Woo is enduring pretty well, no?"

"Right, it's already pretty remarkable that he can evade the attacks from Japan's best to that extent."

Cha Hae-In shook her head multiple times inwardly.

'No, Hunter Seong Jin-Woo isn't enduring anything right now.'

Others could only see that Jin-Woo was being endlessly led around by Goto Ryuji's continuous stream of attacks, but in reality, it was completely the opposite. Cha Hae-In swallowed her saliva, feeling rather astonished at the moment.

'He's actually leading Goto in such a way that Goto has no choice but to keep attacking!'

If she was not wrong about this, then... Hunter Seong Jin-Woo had matched his own pace to the opponent's, so he could figure out more about who he was facing here.

Such a thing was only possible if his own level of abilities was several times greater than that of his opponent's.

'How can that even make any sense....??'

But, that nonsensical event was actually unfolding right before her eyes. And now, she couldn't help but think that the real reason to stop this sparring wasn't that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo might find himself in danger, but the other way around....

Just as Cha Hae-In's thoughts arrived at this point, she discovered Baek Yun-Ho next to her shuddering non-stop.

“C-Chairman Baek...??”

She called out to him in a soft voice, but he didn't respond. His eyes were glued to Jin-Woo and nothing else. She tried to read his expression, only to get stunned by what she saw.

‘His eyes....?’

Baek Yun-Ho's eyes were gleaming in yellow colour like that of a wild beast. His vertical-slit eyes were trembling softly in shock.

She looked on with a worried expression on her face, but he didn't even notice that someone was looking at him right now. Baek Yun-Ho was seeing everything clearly with his 'Eyes of the Beast'.

‘I... I was right!’

Jin-Woo's current level of power was incomparably greater than back when they last met in front of the Association building.

‘...A Hunter who can grow stronger!!’

Baek Yun-Ho's entire body shook from the unbridled shock.

It was then.

“...Ah!”

Baek Yun-Ho had been paying his utmost attention to Jin-Woo all this time, and when 'it' happened, he unconsciously spat out a frightened gasp. Cha Hae-In next to her also sensed this deeply chilling aura and hurriedly shifted her gaze.

“Ah!!”

A few seconds ago....

Goto Ryuji knew better than anyone else here that he had been suckered into Jin-Woo's pace.

He had been always referred to as the 'Strongest' back home, so it felt like his pride had been shoved down the gutter in its entirety by this development.

‘How dare he do this to me....?!’

The attack that he meticulously aimed at the opening also missed its mark, as Jin-Woo narrowly avoided it at the last possible second. Goto Ryuji grew enraged, and murderous intent began filling up his eyes.

'I'll kill him!!'

Jin-Woo's own eyes grew wider. He could acutely sense Goto Ryuji's killing intent pricking his skin.

'Murderous intent?!'

Jin-Woo's heart nearly fell to the pit of his stomach, then.

If someone formed a murderous intent towards him, the System would float up a message and issue an emergency quest right afterwards. What if he got a quest telling him to kill Goto Ryuji here...??

Tti-ring!

A mechanical beep resounded out right at that moment, and Jin-Woo quickly looked up.

[Warning! Discovered a subject with murderous intent nearby!]

Thankfully, it was still a warning message; there was no emergency quest, like back then with Hwang Dong-Seok or Kahng Tae-Sik.

However....

Swish-!!

Goto Ryuji's outstretched hand, aimed at Jin-Woo's eye, narrowly missed and ended up slicing his cheek just a little. If his reflexes that had reached the absolute limit, didn't react in time and tilt his head out of the way, he might have really lost his eye just now.

It was an attack that clearly carried the intent to kill, and it was clearly aimed at a vital spot of the human anatomy. Such a thing would never be accepted during a training match like this.

Grit.

In the blink of an eye, the atmosphere changed.

"Ah."

Baek Yun-Ho unconsciously spat out a frightened gasp.

The first person to sense the abrupt shift in the atmosphere was actually Goto Ryuji, however. Unfortunately for him, although his body understood the change, his head could not.

The chilly air roused sleeping goosebumps to break out all over his body, and all the hair on the back of his neck stood up. He had never, ever felt like this before.

‘This, what is this....?’

Even before his brain had the time to process anything, Jin-Woo grabbed his wrist, hard. Goto Ryuji tried to yank his arm out with all his might, but it wouldn’t budge.

‘What kind of strength is this....?!’

His gaze briefly lingered on his wrist, before moving on to Jin-Woo’s face. And he found an icy cold glare.

But what caught Goto Ryuji’s attention even more than Jin-Woo’s cold eyes were his right shoulder and his raised right arm. Jin-Woo’s arm was cocked back by a lot; a tightly-clenched fist at the end of that arm was taking an aim at Goto Ryuji’s unguarded face.

The air sinking lower all around Goto Ryuji pressed down on his shoulders. He suddenly couldn’t breathe anymore.

Why?

Why did he inexplicably think of the word ‘death’ right at this moment?

But, then....

“S-stop!”

Baek Yun-Ho and Cha Hae-In jumped into the fray purely out of instinct and grabbed hold onto Jin-Woo’s right arm.

The former was tightly hugging Jin-Woo’s shoulder as if he was trying to pull it down, while the latter was grabbing onto his wrist with everything she had.

When Jin-Woo looked back, Baek Yun-Ho hurriedly shook his head. Even Cha Hae-In was looking at him with anxious eyes, fear clearly visible on her face.

‘.....’

The desperate dissuasion of these two that didn’t even care about their own safety helped Jin-Woo to cool his agitation down somehow.

“Fuu.”

Jin-Woo let off a short sigh and released Goto Ryuji’s wrist.

The Japanese man rubbed his now-freed wrist and retreated quickly. Meanwhile, the interpreter hurriedly arrived near his side. Baek Yun-Ho quickly spoke to him.

“Let’s stop the sparring session here, since the mood seems to have turned for the worse. Please tell the Japanese for us.”

The interpreter nodded his head.

When Baek Yun-Ho’s words were relayed to him, Goto Ryuji proceeded to glare at Jin-Woo for a long time, before spinning on his heels to exit from the gymnasium without saying single a word.

“M-mister Goto!!”

The voice of the interpreter as he ran after Goto Ryuji sounded so pitiful. Baek Yun-Ho finally spat out a sigh of relief and lowered his head at Jin-Woo.

“Forgive us for butting in.”

“...”

“That man is supposed to lead the Japanese team in the operation a few days from now. I couldn’t just stand by and watch, even though there was a chance that something might go horribly wrong for us.”

Baek Yun-Ho cautiously studied Jin-Woo’s expression and asked.

“Did I do something unnecessary?”

“No, not at all.”

Jin-Woo readily admitted to it.

Baek Yun-Ho was right. If something happened to Goto Ryuji and that led to an unnecessary snag in the operation, then both countries might end up suffering severe consequences afterwards.

So, he never thought of assigning any blame on Baek Yun-Ho or Cha Hae-In after they interfered in the timely fashion.

“Wow....”

Now that the situation seemed to have calmed down, people absorbed in spectating on the sparring session between Goto Ryuji and Jin-Woo quickly approached him. The way they looked at him went through a noticeable change.

The first one to make his approach was the Master of the Shining Star Guild, the massive-framed Mah Dong-Wook.

“Huhuh!!”

Mah Dong-Wook laughed genially.

“To be able to walk away with only a small scratch on your cheek after having a bout with the one and only Goto, you're truly something else, young man!"

Regretfully, no one else seemed to have figured out what happened here besides Cha Hae-In and Baek Yun-Ho.

"Ooh!! You have really firm muscles! What an outstanding physique!"

Mah Dong-Wook touched Jin-Woo's shoulders and arms while expressing his genuine admiration.

"My Guild is full of Mage-type Hunters, so we're severely lacking in melee-types at the moment. Instructor Seong, if you haven't thought of a Guild to join, how about joining mine?"

"Excuse me, Mah Instructor-nim?"

Having been quietly observing the situation from behind until then, Choi Jong-In stepped forward and raised his voice.

"Yes?"

When Mah Dong-Wook turned his head, Choi Jong-In spoke up as if he was waiting for this moment.

"Hunter Seong Jin-Woo is actually a Mage-type Hunter."

A massive earthquake erupted within Mah Dong-Wook's eyes.

"What was that?!"

On the other hand....

Goto Ryuji escaped from the confines of the gymnasium and, after quickly distancing himself from the interpreter, he checked his wrist.

'.....'

His wrist was bruised black and blue all over. Even though the weather wasn't all that hot, there were cold sweat drops visible on his forehead. He pulled out his phone and dialled a familiar number. After a couple of rings, he could hear the sound of the phone's receiver being picked up.

Click.

"Association President."

Goto Ryuji did his best to calm his trembling voice.

"In South Korea.... There's an incredible Hunter in South Korea."

"More than likely, sir."

"I think there's a need to modify our plan a little bit, sir."

Matsumoto Shigeo didn't immediately say anything, but rummaged through something for a while instead, before finally asking a question.

"It's Seong Jin-Woo. He's a Re-Awakened, evaluated as a rank S recently."

"I beg your pardon?"

Such a name didn't exist?!

Did that mean the Hunter Goto Ryuji met just now was a phantom, an illusion? Well, he did kind of feel that he had been bewitched just now, though. However, didn't he also personally enter the Korean Association's website to confirm that that man was supposed to be a Mage??

"What do you mean, sir? How can Seong Jin-Woo not exist?"

"Are you saying Seong Jin-Woo isn't on the list?"

But, how could that be?

Unless Goh Gun-Hui had gone truly senile, there was just no way that he'd form a raiding party without the strongest member available.

Matsumoto Shigeo spoke in a calm manner from across the phone line.

As if to signify that there was no need to modify their plan at all, Matsumoto Shigeo spoke in a voice filled with conviction.

Baek Yun-Ho took a deep breath.

Even after the two men who turned the inside of the gymnasium chaotic had left, his heartbeat didn't want to slow down at all.

'Was such a thing even possible?'

Having witnessed something that he'd been hypothesizing in his head for real, Baek Yun-Ho had difficulty trying to hide his astonishment.

'An Awakened that can really grow stronger....'

Just what would be that man's true value? He couldn't even dare to imagine it.

This was his reason for standing back and watching on from the distance at the efforts of Choi Jong-In, Mah Dong-Wook, and Im Tae-Gyu as they tried to scout Jin-Woo. He remembered Choi Jong-In's confused stare directed at him, as he didn't even bother to sweet-talk the youth.

'If it was me, I'd probably never even think about joining a Guild with an ability like that.'

Indeed.

All the attempts to scout Hunter Seong Jin-Woo were a waste of time. However, there were all sorts of ways to form a good relationship with a brilliant Hunter that didn't involve scouting him.

Time to activate the 'Plan B', then.

It was then.

Vrrr....

His mobile phone suddenly began vibrating. Seeing that the vibration didn't last for long, it must've been a text message. Without thinking too much, he pulled his phone out and took a look.

It was an alert sent out by the Association. And it was the final list of the participants for the ant subjugation raid taking place four days from now.

Baek Yun-Ho skipped past the lengthy list of the Japanese Hunters and scanned the list of the Koreans, only for his eyes to widen in surprise.

He shot up from his spot in the wooden bench.

“Hunter Seong Jin-Woo isn't on the list?!”

REPORT

The mass media was whipped into a frenzy.

Where would you find another story that could stimulate the interests of the country's citizens even more than this news?

TV channels ran news segments related to this upcoming raid all day long, while every front page of newspapers was completely dominated by the topics of the united raid team.

However, it was only Korea's media that kept talking about this matter. Even though the number of Japanese Hunters participating in this operation exceeded the Koreans by three folds, no one thought it was strange that the Japanese media kept quiet over the upcoming event.

And when a handful of articles did appear online, the comments that followed said articles were negative in nature, to say the least.

↳ What did you expect when the Koreans are too weak to close a Gate by themselves?

↳ Why are you cleaning up the sh*t left behind by the Koreans?

↳ Are they going to compensate us for the damages those ants caused here or not?

↳ Useless Japanese Hunter's Association, and irresponsible Korean Hunters, why dontcha all kick the bucket together on Jeju Island? LOL

'Dong-sahng-yi-mong'. (TL note at the end)

While two parties thought of two different things regarding the same upcoming event, time continued to tick down towards the date of the operation.

In the meantime, these past few days proved to be the happiest Jin-Woo had been since his mother was admitted to the hospital.

Many things went through a change. First thing first – the Seong family returned to their home with their mom as soon as she was discharged from the hospital.

Clank....

When he opened the front entrance, the first thing he saw was the messy living room of the apartment, all thanks to Jin-Ah being alone while he was kept busy inside the Demon's Castle.

“...”

Jin-Woo began pinching his sister's cheeks, and with gentle laughter, Mom tried to stop him.

The very first thing their mother had to do after returning home from four years of coma, was to clean the house. Jin-Woo tried to dissuade her, but in the end, he couldn't win against her insistence. Eventually, the whole family rolled their sleeves up to clean up their home.

Once the house was spotless, the complexions of all three brightened up considerably as well. The apartment that had always felt empty and lonely after Mom's admittance to the hospital now seemed so full of life.

For the first time in a long while, Jin-Woo got to stretch his legs and go to bed without any worries in his mind. And on the next morning, when he got to the living room....

He got to truly appreciate the fact that his mother had returned when he saw the breakfast neatly arranged on the dining table. Park Gyung-Hye stopped cutting the spring onions, turned her head towards Jin-Woo, and asked.

“Did you sleep well, son?”

With still-sleepy eyes, he replied as a smile bloomed on his face.

“...Yes, Mom.”

The so-called expert continued to speak on the TV screen.

“The rate of evolution these ant monsters have shown is truly surprising to behold.”

A guest sitting next to the expert formed an exaggerated expression of surprise and asked.

“Monsters are evolving?! Wasn't the ant found in Japan, a lone mutated creature?”

“You're correct. When the mutated specimen increase in number and gain control of the whole horde, then we call that evolution.”

After that, the prepared video footage began playing. Ants, as they appeared during the first and second subjugation attempts, were displayed on the screen.

At first, they were no different from regular ants as they crawled on the ground. Just from their external appearances alone, they looked exactly like oversized super-massive ants.

But then, a short while later....

“This is the footage taken during the third subjugation attempt.”

The ant monsters were now walking on two legs like humans. The once-giant heads had shrunk down in size by a great deal, they were able to move around much more nimbly, and the four limbs acted like arms.

Its appearance looked as if half an ant and half a person had been mashed together to form a new creature. In only two years, the distinct characteristics of the ant species had been completely transformed into something else.

“And this footage of the ant monster was taken recently as it wreaked havoc in Japan.”

“Wow...”

The audience members in the studio all gasped out in shock at the footage being played. To their horror, the ant was now even closer in appearance to a human, and not only that, it even sported huge wings on its back.

The comedian appearing in this show as a guest flinched in great surprise and raised his voice higher.

“That thing can now fly?!”

“That’s correct. And that would be the decisive factor in the formation of the Korea-Japan united raid team.”

‘The Korea-Japan united raid team.’

When that term came out of the TV’s speakers, Jin-Woo wordlessly switched the TV off. In all honesty, he also didn’t want to miss out on this operation. His heart began racing so fast after he thought of all the experience points he’d get to earn when Association President Goh Gun-Hui requested for his participation in the raid.

However, his excitement cooled down in no time at all. And he was able to objectively and coldly analyse the situation.

‘It hadn’t even been one day since Mom woke up.’

More than that, his mom didn’t know that her son was a Hunter yet. He also recalled the sight of his mother staying up all night for several months after she heard the news of his father going missing inside the Gate all those years ago, too.

He couldn't bring himself to tell mom that he was going to Jeju Island when she was already carrying around such a painful memory, to begin with.

His lips didn't want to part and provide an answer. He wanted to spend some time with his family for a few days, at the least. And he definitely didn't want to delay the moment he'd been fighting for so long for some other matter.

“...I will...”

Jin-Woo barely made up his mind and spoke with great difficulty.

“...Not take part in the operation.”

The one thing far more precious than experience points, the reason why he gritted his teeth and endured everything in order to become stronger. He did not regret making this choice.

Except that, now....

↳ BTW, why is Seong Jin-Woo not on the Korean list?

↳ Your disposition won't change just because you've become a rank S, you know. Once a rank E, forever a rank E, dude. Prolly ran off to hide, nearly wetting his pants in the process. Kek.

↳ 21 Jap rank S Hunters + even the retired Hunter is gonna represent for Korea, yet.... where is Seong Jin-Woo?

↳ Why does he want to do that when he's a rank S? It's so embarrassing;;

Except that, all these anonymous pointing fingers who didn't even know of his situation were really getting on his nerves now. Or, to be more specific, it was his sister's stress level that got on his nerves, actually.

‘I don't really give a d*mn about what others think of me, and mom doesn't really go online, so it's fine on that front, but...’

...But, Jin-Ah liked to search for stuff like this in her spare time.

‘Tsk’.

Jin-Woo clicked his tongue and put his phone down. There was no helping it, what with the poor timing and all.

Mom had retired early for the day, and it was also still too early for Jin-Ah to come back from her studies. He was thinking of taking a stroll to get some fresh air and change his spoiled mood, but like a devil, his phone began ringing just then.

Jin-Woo checked the caller ID and a grin formed on his face.

Click.

“Hey, Jin-Ho.”

Now that Jin-Woo thought about it, was this kid still staying in that local motel even now?

“Where are you staying now? Is it the same motel?”

Hearing his giggling voice, Jin-Woo felt happy inwardly as well.

Yu Jin-Ho briefly updated Jin-Woo regarding the status of his life, before hurriedly continuing on after remembering the reason for the call in the first place.

What office space was he even talking about?

“What office?”

When Jin-Woo asked with a confused voice, Yu Jin-Ho confidently declared.

‘Yu Jin-Ho, this kid.....’

It seemed more than likely that this kid was under the grand delusion of developing the Guild he’d preside over as its Vice Master, and make it as big as the Hunters or the White Tiger in the near future. Jin-Woo slowly scratched his chin.

‘If I tell him that the raid team will consist of only me and no one else, he might flip out in shock here....’

He only invited the kid to join him in passing, but now that it was time to explain to Yu Jin-Ho the future of the Guild, Jin-Woo didn’t even know how he should go about it.

“What do you think, hyung-nim?”

Now that he was here, Jin-Woo could understand why Yu Jin-Ho sounded so confident on the phone. He scanned the empty office space and nodded his head.

Its location was pretty good.

“I specifically chose a place not too far from your place, hyung-nim.”

It was also tidy, too.

“I deliberately went for the newly-developed office spaces. I believe that the old saying goes something like ‘put new wine in a new bottle’. Don’t you agree, hyung-nim?”

Perhaps most importantly, the place was freaking huge.

‘.....’

“I’ll do my best to grow this Guild so it’ll surpass the five large Guilds someday, hyung-nim!”

Yu Jin-Ho was burning with unbridled passion, figuratively speaking.

“It’s fine for you to burn with passion like that, but please, leave me out of it....”

Jin-Woo pondered seriously about this quandary: Should he tell Yu Jin-Ho to just go back to Yujin Guild now, before it’s too late?

Well, he had this gut feeling that the Yujin’s Chairman, a guy who even froze his own son’s bank account, wouldn’t be so keen on taking his son back at this point in time. Seeing that Jin-Woo was in deep contemplation, Yu Jin-Ho formed an expression that cried out “Heok!”

“Hyung-nim.... You don’t like this place?”

“.....No, that’s not it.”

“Then, should I sign the lease contract, hyung-nim?”

“....Sure, why not.”

Judging from the size of the place, the monthly rental must’ve been crazy steep, but when comparing to the potential revenue stream of a Guild, it’d be a chump change at the end of the day.

“I guess it’ll be fine to let him dream a little bit longer.”

For now, Jin-Woo couldn’t tell the kid that it’d be only the two of them sharing this huge office space.

“Ah!”

Yu Jin-Ho suddenly clapped his hands.

“By the way, hyung-nim. Who do you have in mind for the remaining spot?”

“....The remaining spot?”

Did he make a promise to open up a spot for someone?

Since Jin-Woo wasn’t the type to forget his promises, he could only look at Yu Jin-Ho with a confused expression, prompting the latter to excitedly explain the situation.

“You need at least three people when creating a Guild, hyung-nim.”

The Master, the Vice-Master, and an employee.

Indeed, that was the minimum required composition of a Guild's founding members. The rule of the minimum number for a team raiding the least dangerous Gate out there, a rank E, being three people seemed to be related to this, somehow.

'Well, you will never find a Guild wanting to clear a rank E Gate, though....'

The founding members, was it?

Several familiar faces fledged in and out of Jin-Woo's head as he considered who could fill up the remaining vacant spot. The only condition being, they had to be Hunters, too. If it was at all possible, someone who didn't want to work as a Hunter ever again, and only there to make up the numbers.

'Why do I keep picturing women's faces....?'

He recalled the faces of the high school girl who decided to give up being a Hunter, as well as a certain female Healer who went back to her family home in the city of Busan, but they disappeared from his thoughts quickly enough. It was then.

"Ah, I almost forgot."

Yu Jin-Ho abruptly opened his mouth. Jin-Woo quickly asked him.

"Did you suddenly remember someone suitable for the spot, then?"

"No, it's not that, hyung-nim. Actually, there was someone looking for you."

"Me?"

"Yes, hyung-nim."

Jin-Woo couldn't help but get curious. Seeing that this unknown person had indirectly contacted him through Yu Jin-Ho, he or she must've done their thorough research.

'Yu Jin-Ho and I aren't known as associates publicly, after all.'

Indeed, if anything, others should see their relationship simply as one being the previous raid leader while the other being the member of that raid team.

'Even then, calling me through Yu Jin-Ho, is it?'

Jin-Woo's eyes narrowed to a slit just a little.

"Who was it?"

“I don’t know, hyung-nim. That person was definitely an English-speaking foreigner. Hold on.”

Yu Jin-Ho rummaged through his pockets, pulled out his wallet and extracted a piece of a memo from there.

“This person said that he’d be staying in Korea until the 17th, so he’d very much appreciate it if you give him a call, hyung-nim.”

Jin-Woo took the memo and found a number for a mobile phone as well as a hotel room number. He took a look at the back of the memo, but nothing was written there.

‘17th... that’s three days from now.’

An English-speaking foreigner – just who could it be? He couldn’t think of anyone he knew or fit the bill.

However, quite suddenly...

“....Looks like I’ll have to go home first.”

Jin-Woo’s expression hardened.

“Pardon? You’re going home already, hyung-nim?”

Yu Jin-Ho had been thinking of treating his hyung-nim to a delicious meal since it had been a long time they ate together. But now, he looked like a person who had lost his country. Perhaps a bit too callously, though, Jin-Woo didn’t even try to understand his dongsaeng’s feelings at all.

“I’m going ahead first.”

Yu Jin-Ho quickly hid his disappointed expression and quickly bent down in a polite bow, as usual.

“Okay, have a safe trip, hyung.... nim?”

When he raised his head, Jin-Woo was already long gone.

It was now that time in the day when the inky-black darkness dwelt on the hidden alleyways.

A female college student named Eun Ji-Min was on her way back home; her heart was pounding like crazy at the moment, however.

‘There’s no way, right....?’

Because, there was a man busy following her.

She hoped that they were simply walking in the same direction, and that had to be the reason why his footsteps were continuing right behind her like that.

'I saw something like this on a message board.'

In a situation like this one, it wasn't only the woman, but the man would be feeling rather troubled, as well. A man's walking speed should be faster or similar to that of a woman; if he tried to walk past her, she'd freak out, but if he tried to simply stay behind her, then he'd come across even more suspicious, instead.

On top of that, by going around the corner up ahead, she'd find herself in a secluded street with a broken street lamp, which could potentially make things even more awkward for the parties involved.

Eun Ji-Min took a glance behind her.

A man with a baseball cap pulled down low and his face staring at the ground was quietly walking on the street. Although it was suspicious, it was not a crime to wear baseball caps like that in public.

'Instead of letting this awkward walk-together thing carry on, maybe I should....'

Eun Ji-Min stopped walking as if she needed to tie her shoelaces, and eventually, the man walked right past her.

"Whew...."

After confirming that the man was gone from her sight, Eun Ji-Min spat out a sigh of relief. She then gathered her hands in mock prayer and closed her eyes.

'I'm really sorry about that, mister unknown uncle.'

She looked around her vicinity for a bit longer before tidying up her clothes. With a smile on her face, Eun Ji-Min energetically began walking again.

She had a mountain of assignments to get through! If she were to prepare for the end-of-term exams, running back home now would still leave her with not enough time.

'How wide was the scope again?'

Thinking about how she'd have to spend the whole night studying, her shoulders slumped dejectedly. But, as Eun Ji-Min went around the corner, her eyes widened.

"You make a noise, I'll kill you."

The man who walked right by her seconds ago was standing in the street corner with a kitchen knife and an insidious smile on his face.

“You know that.... a few people had died here already, right?”

“Ah.....”

Eun Ji-Min couldn't even scream. With a pale complexion, she stood there completely frozen.

The man lowered the white surgical mask on his face and grinned.

“Follow me.”

Tick, tick...

There was no one around them; only the broken street light flickered listlessly.

REPORT

“Ah... S-someone, s-save me...”

Eun Ji-Min somehow managed to squeeze out her dried-up voice and took a couple of steps back.

No, that’s what she tried to.

However, her feet didn’t want to move. It was as if heavy iron ingots were attached to her ankles. She could only stand there frozen as her tears began streaming down her face.

Meanwhile, the man scanned his surroundings.

Since the girl didn’t look like she’d be able to move, he was thinking of offing her here, right now. How fortunate that there was nobody around. Also, there wouldn’t be a CCTV camera of the Big Brother installed in a secluded alleyway like this one, as well.

‘That’s why I love this neighbourhood, you know.’

The man formed an evil grin and thrust the knife at Eun Ji-Min’s midriff.

But then, a hand shot out from the darkness and grabbed the knife.

“Uh??”

The man raised his head, only to find a strange youth standing there. Because of his hood, only the punk’s chin was visible. But he possessed a pretty d*mn outstanding physique.

‘Is he... wearing a glove or something?’

Not a drop of blood dripped down from the hand grasping the blade.

“Who the hell are you?!”

The serial killer tried to yank the knife out several times, but after realising that it wouldn’t budge an inch, he quickly let go of the knife’s grip and turned around. He rapidly escaped from the spot.

“What a strange son of a b*tch....”

The serial killer took a look behind several times and found that strange youth was following along, constantly scanning the surroundings while he was at it.

‘What the hell is up with this b*stard...?’

The serial killer changed his direction and led the youth to a deserted vacant lot, the place he originally wanted to drag that woman to. If that punk was protecting his hand with something, then it’d be fine to attack him elsewhere.

When he arrived at the destination, the serial killer slowed down, and gradually shortened his distance to the strange punk that had been keeping pace with him until then. Once their gap closed to around a couple of feet or so....

“Hey punk, who the hell do you think you are?”

The serial killer spun around and stabbed the youth in the chest with an awl he’d been hiding under his jacket.

“Do I look like an easy mark to you?! Huh?”

Stab!

The hand pushing the awl into the youth’s chest shook, hard.

‘...What the hell could be this hard?!’

A stab-proof vest? Or something else underneath his shirt??

The serial killer quickly threw out a question.

“What the f*ck?! You wearing something under your clothes or something?”

If this guy was able to sense magical energy, then he wouldn’t have asked such a stupid question. Too bad, the serial killer somehow failed to think of the word ‘Hunter’ even though his opponent didn’t try to retaliate after that second sneak attack. Instead, a quiet voice leaked out from under the hood.

“I’m curious about something.”

The voice naturally belonged to Jin-Woo. He discarded the kitchen knife of the serial killer to the ground.

“Why are you doing this?”

“What’s the matter? You wish to reform me or something?”

“Nope. Just curious if you have a reason or not. That’s all.”

The serial killer snorted derisively. He thought that, what with this punk jumping out of nowhere to save that woman, and following him all the way out here, he was looking at some weirdo masquerading as an ally of justice or something. But now...

'This kid's just a bloody idiot, isn't he?'

Or maybe, this punk was the same type of madman as he was?

The serial killer thought that maybe he could get away from here unscathed if he used his gift of gab, so he readily humoured the youth.

"A reason, is it? Well, if I were to really think of one... because it's fun?"

"Fun?"

"For some reason, whenever I see someone weaker than me, I just wanna torment that....."

....Person.

The serial killer didn't get to finish what he wanted to say. Instead....

"Uwaaaahk?! Uwahk!!"

Instead, he fell to the ground clutching his left ankle where his tendon had been sliced apart. When he raised his head, he realised that Jin-Woo was holding the kitchen knife even before he had the time to notice it.

'But, didn't he throw that away? Just when....?'

It was right then, Jin-Woo's shape grew blurry again.

"Uwaaaahk?!"

This time, it was his right ankle. The serial killer rolled around the ground in pain. Meanwhile, Jin-Woo leisurely rummaged through the serial killer's pockets now that the murdering b*stard wasn't going anywhere with his tendons cut in half. He soon found the killer's mobile phone and the wallet.

"You, you!! Who the hell are you, you son of a b*tch?!"

Jin-Woo ignored the venom-spewing serial killer and calmly dialled 119 to call for an ambulance. He then pulled out the ID card from the wallet to take a look.

, he placed the phone and the wallet back in the hands of the shivering serial killer and murmured quietly.

"Hand yourself over to the police before midnight tomorrow."

"What?!"

"....If you wish to keep breathing, that is."

He said all he wanted to say.

Jin-Woo got up from the spot and inserted one of his Shadow Soldiers inside the serial killer's shadow, before leaving a similar sounding order to that soldier.

'Although, I don't know how patient a High Orc's shadow can be, but...'

That soldier might not be good with patiently waiting around until the designated time, but well, carrying out the next part of the order should be the speciality of High Orcs.

"I'd prefer it if you keep living on."

The killer had to be alive if he were to repent for his sins for the rest of his life.

"J-just... what the hell are you?"

Jin-Woo left the serial killer shivering from pain and fear behind in the vacant lot. He could hear the sirens of an ambulance coming from afar.

He walked to a far enough location, and after confirming that there was no one nearby, he pulled his hood back.

"...Whew."

Thanks to the signal sent by the Shadow Soldier after discovering the serial killer, Jin-Woo was able to arrive just in time.

The 'Shadow Exchange'.

This skill was proving to be exceptionally convenient the more he used it.

'It's not the highest-ranked Rune Stone for nothing, is it?'

Jin-Woo formed a satisfied smile now that he got to experience the greatness of the Shadow Exchange once more in the last couple of days. He couldn't even begin to imagine just how much more useful this skill would get, once the skill level rose up high enough to sufficiently decrease the cooldown time.

And so, as he continued to walk back home...

'Mm?'

He abruptly raised his head to see that the moon was now in the middle of the night sky.

'Now that I think about it... it's already tomorrow.'

The Korea-Japan united assault team's raid. It was already here.

He wasn't even on the team, yet his heart was pounding this much in anticipation. So, what would the participating members be feeling right now?

Jin-Woo recalled the faces of the raid members he was acquainted with, and prayed for their safety as well as their success in the mission.

Late at night.

Goto Ryuji was still in the dojo inside the Japanese Hunter's Association.

In front of him, two men, and at his back, one other. He was surrounded by rank S Hunters, ostensibly the same rank as he was. Goto Ryuji took a deep breath, and just as his eyes flew open....

“Ta-ha-aht!!”

The Hunters biding their time powerfully pounced on him all at the same time. However....

Slam!

The ones to fall down were the three attacking Hunters.

“That was great!”

“As expected of Goto-san!”

“No one can measure up to your skills, sir.”

The three Hunters lying on the wooden floor of the dojo dusted themselves off and stood back up. This was only possible because Goto Ryuji had held back his power. Without saying anything, he lowered his head slightly to imply that they all did a good job.

‘As expected, there’s no problem with my physical condition.’

No, if he were to frankly assess himself, then he was at peak condition right now. Just from imagining how he'd swallow up South Korea, it felt like his condition was getting better and better all by itself.

So, how come....?

Goto Ryuji continued to stare at the dojo, now empty that the three Hunters had left, as the memories of that day still lingered on in his mind.

Seong Jin-Woo.

Just what was he?

‘.....’

The more he thought back to that day, the more bitter he felt. Soon, though, Goto Ryuji shook his head.

‘Well, it doesn’t matter now.’

Regardless of all else, that man Seong Jin-Woo wasn't taking part in this raid. And the Association President's plan would unfold without any mishaps.

Once South Korea loses almost all of her rank S Hunters, its leadership would naturally fall into Japanese hands. By then, the complaints of the Japanese citizens demanding for the appropriate reparations from the Koreans would have been transformed into rousing cheers of fanfare, instead.

When that happened....

'What can Seong Jin-Woo do all by himself?'

Didn't matter whether Seong Jin-Woo was a genuinely powerful Hunter or he simply came across that way through Goto Ryuji's momentary delusion, the fact remained that, him not participating in tomorrow's raid was for the greater benefit of Japan.

There was nothing to bother him now. The decisive moment would come tomorrow.

Inside this still dojo bathed in the cold moonlight, Goto Ryuji formed a quiet smile to himself.

"We'll be in your care!"

The managing director of a certain TV station deeply bowed his head to the lone cameraman. Such a thing was completely unheard of. However, the cameraman standing in front of the director was no ordinary man; he was an active Hunter and a proud holder of a rank A licence.

"The future of my station depends on this raid."

In order to win the exclusive broadcasting rights, the director had to spend over half of the station's total annual budget. There had been simply too many competing bids, and that's why he had to go all in.

But, then again, there was a compelling reason why he simply had to make such a brave business decision.

Not many rank S Gates opened up around the world. Even when one did open, it was still impossible to take the recording equipment inside to capture the footage of what happened in there.

In other words, this would be the one and only opportunity for regular citizens to witness an actual rank S raid in progress. As long as there wasn't another unfortunate event of a rank S Gate opening up somewhere else, that was.

On top of this, this broadcast wouldn't be a recording, but shown live. Sure, there would be a ten-minute delay to the live feed, but still.

Just how high would the audience rating reach?

70 percent? 80?

When the managing director thought back to all the potential profit margin to be had from selling the footage to the TV networks in other countries, he no longer felt regret in investing half of the station's budget in this venture.

'...As long as the raid doesn't end in failure!'

Indeed, no sane-minded viewer out there would ever want to watch the top-ranked Hunters get devoured by the monsters during the raid. No, even if there were, he couldn't let such footage be broadcast to the public, to begin with.

So, the director had staked everything he had on the success of the fourth subjugation operation.

Considering that, bowing his head several times to the cameraman tasked with capturing the all-too-important footage was indeed, nothing.

Heck, if the cameraman wished for it, the director was prepared to prostrate on the floor, even.

"Please don't worry too much, director."

The cameraman did his best to calm the shivering managing director down from his high anxiety level.

Even before he became a Hunter, he made his living as a cameraman. And after agreeing to take on this job, he made sure to study and polish his skills of wielding the camera even further.

Obviously, he didn't want to spoil the broadcast that the entire nation would be watching through some stupid mistake on his part. Of course, he'd get paid quite a big reward in return, too.

'He's going to give me a portion of the profit earned from the broadcast, after all.'

The cameraman had already earned plenty from being a rank A Hunter, but the offered amount was so high that it really excited him to no end.

If the operation ends in success, then he'd be able to earn an enormous amount of money and fame, perhaps as much as the rank S Hunters actually participating in the raid.

Wouldn't he become quite possibly the most famous rank A Hunter in South Korea?

A smile formed on the cameraman's face as all sorts of wonderful thoughts of the future bloomed in his head.

“By the way, I’m surprised that the Association President Goh Gun-Hui actually gave his permission to film this raid. I mean, that hard-headed man wouldn’t have allowed it simply for the sake of money, so....”

The station’s director nodded his head at the cameraman’s puzzled question.

“He said that the fee we paid will be split equally among all the Hunters participating today, actually.”

“Oh? In that case, why....?”

Why did he permit the filming of the raid?

The director cautiously voiced his educated guess.

“I think..... I think, perhaps he wishes to console the hearts of the citizens.”

The Korean Hunter’s Association had to swallow the bitter pill of defeat three times at the hands of the ant monsters. Because of the continuous failure, the Association had to suffer great losses, which in turn also led to the loss of the public’s trust. Meanwhile, the citizens felt increasingly powerless as the thought of these ant monsters being invincible took root in their hearts.

As the atmosphere of the nation festered like that, a chance to reverse this whole thing had suddenly landed on their laps.

‘You can tell how the public is responding by taking a quick look at the internet forums.’

The Association President wanted to take a step further than that. He wanted to capture the moment of victory and broadcast it live to the citizens.

His grim and perhaps desperate resolution to not fail could be gleamed from this decision.

The cameraman nodded his head after hearing the managing director’s explanation. He took a look at his wristwatch before standing up with a determined expression on his face.

“It’s time already. I’ll be on my way now, sir.”

The managing director once more bowed deeply to the cameraman.

“We leave everything to you, Hunter-nim!!”

Hunters began boarding the helicopter, as the spinning rotors issued deafening noises above their heads.

“...”

The constantly-smiling Mah Dong-Wook, the always-confident Choi Jong-In, and even Baek Yun-Ho famed for his positive personality, were all wearing sombre expressions.

The cameraman checked his recording equipment for the last time. The camera itself was designed to be fitted around the head so it should not impinge on his movement by much.

‘I wouldn’t have agreed to come if the camera was bulky and made it impossible to move.’

The place their helicopter was heading off to was perhaps the most dangerous place in the whole of South Korea – no, maybe, even the world. Thinking about their destination, the cameraman could only swallow his saliva down in nervousness.

No matter how hard he tried to stay calm, there was nothing he could do about the nervous tension slowly mushrooming in his heart. It was the same story for the rank S Hunters, as well.

In order to dispel the tension in the air, Baek Yun-Ho started talking to his ‘dongsaeng’, the one he was closest to.

“Hey, Byung-Gu. I really didn’t expect you to show up here today.”

Min Byung-Gu grinned in response.

“I thought that, without me healing you, hyung would be the first one to get killed today. I mean, you always jump on a monster whenever you see one, you know.”

“What the hell. Why do you have talk like that? Since when did I ever ‘jump’ on monsters??”

Other Hunters began giggling after hearing the two men chat.

Min Byung-Gu was the sole rank S Healer in South Korea. All members of the raid team were greatly relieved and happy to hear that he was coming out of retirement especially to participate in this operation.

There was a big difference in whether there was a Healer or not in a raid. After all, one would be able to fight harder without worrying about getting hurt when there was one.

As the tense atmosphere frozen stiff in nervousness gradually relaxed through Baek Yun-Ho and Min Byung-Gu’s conversation, Cha Hae-In sitting next to the former quietly asked a question.

“Chairman Baek. By any chance, have you spoken to Mister Seong Jin-Woo before coming here today?”

“Mister Seong Jin-Woo?”

“Yes.”

Baek Yun-Ho shook his head.

“No, I haven’t. But, why do you ask?”

“Ah... It’s nothing important, actually. I guess I’ve made a mistake.”

It was then.

Mah Dong-Wook broke out in genial laughter.

“Huhuh. Looks like it’s finally starting.”

The gazes of the Hunters present followed the direction he was pointing at. Through the window of the helicopter, they could see the darkened island that had become the land of monsters.

REPORT

The mutated ants discovered the helicopter's presence in the air and began flying up one by one.

Vuuonng...

Vuuonnnng.....

Maybe the number of specimens that could fly was low, because the Hunters could only see seven flying up to meet them.

“Let me take care of them.”

The sole Mage-type Hunter among the team, Choi Jong-In, stepped forward. His skill, 'Flame Spear', was called into action.

As soon as he was done casting his magic, seven bodies of floating flames drew long lines in the air to resemble burning spears and slammed accurately into the airborne ants.

Kwa-kwa-boom!!

It was difficult to kill a single ant monster with scattered firepower, but it was more than enough to burn away their wings.

Kiiieehk-!!

Kyaahhk-!

With their wings burnt off, the ants fell freely back to the earth. Choi Jung-In tightly clenched his fist while witnessing the result of his hard work. However, now wasn't the time to bask in the glow of his victory.

Choi Jong-In turned around and asked Mah Dong-Wook.

“What's happening with the Japanese side?”

The ants had noticed their approach and began moving now. Meaning, there was no more time for them to take it easy.

Crackle-!

Mah Dong-Wook paid attention to the radio receiver stuck in his ear. As a Tanker, he was named as the leader of the Korean side of the raid team.

“They say they have landed on the island now....”

Ka-boom!!

Just as he was done speaking up, there was a loud explosion from afar.

Boom!!

Kaboom!!!

As if that was the signal, several more explosion began ringing up from all parts of the island as thick, choking smoke plumes rose up. The fourth subjugation operation was now officially underway.

The Master the Reapers Guild, Im Tae-Gyu, looked out of the helicopter's window, and at the ground far below, a deep frown forming on his forehead.

Thousands of ants were pouring out of the ant tunnel, before splitting up into four smaller swarms to rush towards the four cardinal directions.

“That’s some creepy and disgusting thing to look at. Seriously, man.”

“Doesn’t it look like most of them have left the tunnel now?”

“...It does, doesn’t it?”

The once-lengthy lines of ants soon came to an end, leaving behind a massive gaping hole in the ground. That was the entrance to the ant tunnel.

The scale of the ant tunnel must’ve been rather incredible, because the entrance itself was as big as the mouth of a tunnel one would see commonly on the national highway.

And in the deepest part of the ant tunnel, the ant queen was waiting for their arrival.

This raid team only had one goal – to eliminate the ant queen.

“Everyone.”

Before they set off to invade the ant tunnel, Mah Dong-Wook gestured and gathered the raid team members around him. He even gestured towards the hesitant cameraman, too.

Everyone participating in this operation pressed their heads together.

“During hundreds of simulation runs, Japanese were only able to buy us one hour, tops. Which means, we need to kill the ant queen within that hour, no matter what.”

He didn’t bother to speak about the possibility of ‘if we fail’. Unlike the first three subjugation raids, there was no escape path this time around for them. They would be utterly cut off inside the ant tunnel.

Mah Dong-Wook studied the faces of each raid members, and they returned a nod, a look of grim determination clearly etched on each one.

‘These are the best individual team members imaginable.’

Unless there was another tragedy similar to Jeju Island happening in the future, one would never come across an opportunity to hunt together with members this capable ever again.

Mah Dong-Wook was deeply honoured to be the leader of this team.

They soon finished reconfirming their resolve, and then...

“Let’s go.”

From the helicopter, seven people, the six members of the raid team and the lone cameraman, jumped out.

“How long has it been since the Koreans went inside?”

Goto Ryuji threw out a question.

“Hold on.”

Now originally, it was Goto Ryuji’s job to communicate with the mission control centre. But, as he didn’t enjoy carrying around bothersome things, another Hunter was tasked with doing so. It was precisely this person that provided the answer.

“They say it has been less than 10 minutes.”

“Ten minutes, is it...”

Time to start the escape procedure, then.

Before they started withdrawing from Jeju Island, though, Goto Ryuji briefly scanned his vicinity. The corpses of the massacred ants were piled up on high.

The role of the Japanese in this raid, on the surface, of course, was to attract the attention of the ants. They didn’t even focus on killing the ants and concentrated on retreating in order to buy as much time as possible, yet they still managed to achieve such a feat.

‘The Koreans might find these ants as tough opponents, but they are nothing to us, the Japanese.’

The unbridled confidence caused the corner of Goto Ryuji’s lips to arc up. He kicked away an ant corpse hampering his steps to a far away distance and immediately issued the order to withdraw.

Finally, it was time for them to start moving towards the true goal of the Japanese team.

However....

“Excuse me, Goto-san.”

“Mm?”

The Hunter in charge of the communication formed a worried expression.

“I can’t get in touch with Team 3 from a while ago.”

‘Is it equipment malfunction...?’

The instances of equipment, that had gone through multiple meticulous checks, malfunctioning right before an important part of the mission, or during the important part itself, did happen occasionally.

The landing point of Team 3 was in the southern part of the island. Goto Ryuji’s Team 1 landed on the western part and they had been constantly moving south, so their distance shouldn’t be that great.

“What is the estimated distance between our current position and the last known position of Team 3 before the communication failure?”

“With our current speed, we should be able to get there within ten minutes.”

As expected, it wasn’t far. At this rate, Team 3 would never get to hear the order to withdraw and get left behind in the island, eventually meeting a very bad end for themselves.

‘.....’

When he thought about the next subjugation operation that would take place involving only the Japanese personnel, he simply couldn’t afford to have five rank S Hunters as KIAs.

Also, because Team 3 was planned to be deployed on the southern part of the island, which was the closest to the ant tunnel, the whole team was made up of the best of the best among Japan’s elite.

Losing them here meant that Japan would greatly suffer as well.

‘Well, I’m sure nothing bad has happened over there....’

Indeed, it must’ve been a minor error. Nothing to worry about.

After a short deliberation, Goto Ryuji decided on the next course of action.

“We shall head over there and take a look.”

The moment Jin-Woo stopped his usual daily run, the familiar mechanical beep rang out in his ear.

Tti-ring.

[Total distance ran: 10 km.]

[You've completed Running, 10 km.]

Completely the opposite to when he started doing the Daily Quests, Jin-Woo wasn't even out of breath. He had repeated these Daily Quests for so long, it simply felt like the part of his daily routine now.

Soon, along with the completion message, his rewards figuratively landed on his lap.

'Stats.'

Out of the three Stat bonus points he gained as a reward, Jin-Woo spent two on his Agility, while the remaining point was spent on his Strength.

[Stats]

Strength: 219

Endurance: 200

Agility: 230

Intelligence: 250

Perception: 200

(Available points to distribute: 0)

Reduction in the physical damage: 46%

Seeing that almost all of his Stats were now ending with a '0', a satisfied smile crept up on his face.

'If only I had one more point....'

Although it was regretful, he couldn't manufacture a point out of thin air, so there was no helping it. Still, looking at his Stat value that had risen up evenly like this, a smile automatically bloomed on his lips.

'Nice.'

After he raised Intelligence Stat to 250, he began maintaining a balance of sorts and made sure that not one Stat was left behind.

'All five Stats are indispensable to me.'

That was his final assessment after levelling up and raising his Stats for a long time. Regardless of which Stat it was, with their numerical values continuing to soar higher, he hadn't been disappointed once so far by their usefulness.

'That's why....'

He was planning to continue with this Stat balancing act for the foreseeable future – as long as there weren't any unexpected circumstances forcing him to change, of course.

Jin-Woo dismissed the Stat Window with a satisfied grin still etched on his face. He then took a look around him. His neighbourhood had always been on the quieter side, but today, he failed to spot a single soul so far. He could easily guess the reason why, though.

Jin-Woo pulled his phone out and confirmed the current time.

'I knew it.'

The Korea-Japan united team's raid would be in full swing by now. And pretty much every single citizen should be glued to their TV screens, too.

Jin-Woo turned around. His Daily Quest was already over, but the steps leading him back home were far more urgent than usual.

The operation was unfolding smoothly so far.

Just as the Japanese had predicted, Mah Dong-Wook's team didn't encounter any obstructions as they entered the deeper parts of the ant tunnel.

The inside of the tunnel resembled the cave-type dungeons in its layout. However, if there was one clear difference to note, then that would be the lack of illuminating stones. The Hunters had to provide light themselves to see where they were going.

'.....'

Gulp.

The cameraman thought that he had plenty of experience exploring dungeons before, but today, he just had to nervously swallow his saliva.

His current position was right at the back of the group. The team maintained a formation of Choi Jong-In standing right at the front to light their way using magic, while the other Hunters were sticking very close to him.

The cameraman also had a flashlight attached to his headgear for the purpose of filming.

Unfortunately, this darkness was infused with a heavy amount of magical energy. The flashlight didn't provide as much help as the magic from a rank S

Mage, and it could just barely illuminate a bit of space in front of his eyes.

Choi Jong-In voiced his opinion without giving it too much thought, and Mah Dong-Wook next to him nodded his head to express his agreement.

“Mm.”

As a leader and a Tanker, he was duty-bound to protect the Mage, Choi Jong-In, who should originally be stationed at the far back.

Was that the reason why? Mah Dong-Wook continued to glare at the surroundings with a pair of sharp, focused eyes. His usual, out-going demeanour was nowhere to be seen now.

It was the same story with Baek Yun-Ho, as well. He activated the ‘Eyes of the Beast’ even before entering the ant tunnel. He hadn’t spoken a single word and did his absolute hardest to latch on to any slight movement or deviation in the flow of the magic energy.

Both Min Byung-Gu and the cameraman also carried deeply tense expressions.

Only Cha Hae-In maintained that expressionless face of hers, silently walking forward while her hand rested on the hilt of her sword.

It was then.

“Look, over there....”

He must’ve found something in the distance, because Choi Jong-In raised his voice.

“...Huh.”

“Mm....”

The Hunters all gasped out in nasty shock.

Countless ant eggs were attached to the walls and the ceiling of this huge chamber with nary an empty space between them.

They could see dark-coloured larva wiggling inside the semi-transparent shell of each egg. There could only ever be one emotion they felt when facing this nursery area filled with gloomy, dreary atmosphere and a seriously terrible stench.

That would be ‘sheer disgust’.

“Don’t you think we should just burn all these away?”

Choi Jong-In spoke, his expression crumpling greatly.

For the first time since he entered this ant tunnel, Mah Dong-Wook formed a smile.

“I’d like nothing more than to do exactly that, but since we don’t have much time, let us not.”

Even if all of these creatures hatched, they would only live for no more than one year, at most. As long as they could kill the mother, they didn’t have to worry about these critters anymore.

“...Here they come.”

Baek Yun-Ho pointed towards the distant darkness and warned the rest of the team. Even before he made his warning, though, Cha Hae-In had unsheathed her sword already.

Mah Dong-Wook pulled the shield as large as his body right up to his chin and glared at his front.

Shashashasha....

A group of around ten ants appeared at the same time. As if they were born on Jeju Island and had gone through some sort of a mutation, all of them didn’t have eyes.

“Are they the queen’s guards?” Asked Mah Dong-Wook.

Choi Jong-In shook his head.

“No, they are not. Looks like they are here to guard the nursery area.”

“In that case, this shouldn’t be difficult.”

If they were regular monsters, not the guards of the boss creature, then there was just no way these critters could withstand the combined firepower of a raid team consisting entirely of rank S Hunters!

Knowing better than anyone else that there wasn’t a lot of time, Mah Dong-Wook jumped into the fray first.

“Let’s go!”

Hunters followed after him. Right behind them, flames flared out brightly from Choi Jong-In’s hands, and arrows fired by Im Tae-Gyu sliced up the air as they flew to their targets.

Just as Mah Dong-Woo predicted, the battle was concluded pretty quickly.

Kiiehhk!

The head of the last ant fell to the ground. Cha Hae-In wordlessly shook off the bodily fluids clinging onto her sword. Meanwhile, Mah Dong-Wook spoke up.

“Since the nursery area is right here, that means....”

Choi Jong-In provided the follow-up.

“...The queen’s lair is nearby.”

As the Hunters began checking their equipment before they rushed into the decisive showdown against the ant queen, the cameraman began looking here and there to capture more footage. But then, he gasped out in pure shock.

“Heok!!”

The gazes of the Hunters were immediately focused on him.

“I-I’m really sorry.”

Momentarily forgetting that the camera attached to his head was actually broadcasting to the rest of the nation, the cameraman hurriedly bowed towards the Hunters. Sensing something was afoot, Baek Yun-Ho approached the cameraman.

“Did you find something?”

“Ah, well, it’s just that.... Over there.”

The cameraman sheepishly smiled and pointed to the corner of the chamber.

“There’s a pile of empty eggshells over there, but like, one of them happens to be really, really big, you see.”

‘....!!’

Baek Yun-Ho’s eyes grew larger.

It was as the cameraman said. Most of the eggs containing regular ants were only about the size of a bicycle wheel, yet the one pointed out was as big as a grown man....

‘No, wait.’

The lengthy and ovoid shape of the egg was large enough to say that a fully-grown ant specimen must’ve emerged from it.

‘That’s also an ant egg??’

“....Just what the hell came out of that egg?”

Min Byung-Gu had walked closer before anyone had noticed it; there was a look of huge shock on his face as well. Baek Yun-Ho's expression was stiff for a brief moment, but he quickly changed it to a grin as he lightly slapped Min Byung-Gu's back.

"We're here to kill the queen. Let's not worry about anything else."

".....Right."

Min Myung-Gu carried an uneasy expression as he turned around to walk over to where the rest of the Hunters were. Before he joined the others, Baek Yun-Ho took one last look at that egg.

'That's just crazy....'

'This is just crazy....'

Goto Ryuji had to doubt whether his own eyes were working properly or not.

"Heok!!"

"Mm.....!!"

Other Japanese Hunters either convulsed in shock or muttered lowly under their breaths.

Goto Ryuji frowned deeply as he scanned his surroundings. The Hunters of Team 3 were found in the exact location where their communication had been cut off. All five of them were here, but without their heads.

The sight of their headless colleagues lying on the ground as corpses left a shocking mental imprint on the other Hunters.

'.....'

Goto Ryuji wordlessly massaged his temples, before approaching the bodies to check out their wounds.

'This wasn't done by a blade.'

The necks of the dead Hunters were all roughly bitten off.

'Just how much of a biting force was it for their necks to end up like this?'

While Goto Ryuji was stewing in his astonishment, one of his fellow Hunters walked in closer and angrily spat out.

"How dare these d*mn ants.....!!"

Goto quickly shook his head.

"It's not 'ants'."

“Pardon?”

“Whether this was the handiwork of an ant or not, there was only one enemy.”

“B-but, how can that be?!”

Goto Ryuji swallowed his saliva.

No matter how hard he searched, he couldn't see any hint of a battle taking place here. If ants pushed on with sheer numbers to annihilate Team 3, then he should've found corpses of dead ants or some other traces around this area. However, he couldn't find anything.

Also, the wounds on the dead Hunters – judging from the location of the attack, it was more than likely that they were killed by a single assailant.

‘How could a team of the best Hunters from Japan fall to a single monster....?’

If his guess was correct, then only a rank S dungeon's boss could do something like this.

Goto Ryuji quickly snatched the communication device from the Hunter next to him and spoke up.

“It's Goto.”

“Where is the ant queen? Did it come out of the tunnel?”

The magic energy detection camera mounted on the spy satellite. Only America, Japan and China possessed such technology in the entire world.

In reality, China had to hack the Americans to copy the camera system, so one could argue that only the USA and Japan truly possessed this technology.

The location of the ant queen, as monitored by the technology Japan so proudly boasted to the rest of the world, soon came out of the receiver.

“What was that?!”

Goto Ryuji stood right up.

He felt his heart nearly leap out of his mouth just then.

‘The queen didn't do this?!’

His breathing quickened. He realised that something was going terribly wrong here. Goto Ryuji hurriedly issued a new order.

“Issue the withdrawal.... Tell every single Japanese Hunter to escape from this island immediately.”

REPORT

Goto Ryuji ended the communication there, his expression remaining quite grim.

‘Did we miss something?’

In order to successfully achieve what they were aiming for, the Japanese considered all types of possibilities and variables.

However, the event of a team featuring five of the very best Japanese Hunters getting annihilated in one go like this - such a thing simply exceeded all their expectations.

‘Wait a minute....’

Something popped into his memory just then. There was an odd occurrence about four months ago.

The ant queen, being observed for 24 hours straight every single day, suddenly showed a massive decline in its magical energy emission. It was less than half of the usual amount!

The research team interpreted that as the lifespan of the queen coming to an end, and submitted several hopelessly optimistic reports. That was only until the ant queen began slowly recovering her magic energy, of course.

‘It took about a month, didn’t it?’

It didn’t take too long for the queen to regain its original magic energy output. All those researchers that spoke up about the lifespan or rather had to shut their mouths as this result obviously went against their expectations.

“Goto-san.”

The voice of one of the team members woke Goto Ryuji up from his reminiscence.

“...Mm.”

He had been kneeling on one knee in order to check the bodies of Team 3’s dead Hunters. He slowly stood back up. Now wasn’t the time to worry about anything else.

‘Did we come in far too deep inland...?’

Shashashashak....

Hundreds of ants had appeared behind him by then, and these monsters raised their heads up as if they were smacking their lips in anticipation of a tasty meal.

On the other hand....

The Korean team had entered the boss room, also known as ‘the queen’s chamber’. It took them 15 minutes to get here.

‘If we consider the fact that we’ll need roughly the same amount of time to get out of here....’

They still had around 30 minutes of wiggle room. Assuming that they should be able to shorten their return trip because they were already familiar with the path now, the remaining time was on the ‘more than enough’ side.

‘Very good.’

Having confirmed the time with his wristwatch, Mah Dong-Wook raised his head. Everything was going according to plan. What remained now was how should they go about bookending this operation.

Baek Yun-Ho used his ‘Eyes of the Beast’ to see through the darkness and accurately assessed the number of enemies present.

“The queen is at the rearmost location. There are eight guards in front of the target.”

The queen’s guards were incomparably stronger than the regular ants. It’d be too tough for one Tanker to take on the attacks of the queen and its guard monsters. From here onwards, Mah Dong-Wook needed another person to act as a secondary Tanker. He looked to his side.

“Hunter Cha.”

“Yes.”

“Can you take on the guard duty while I tend to the queen?”

“Leave it to me.”

Cha Hae-In’s reply was short and simple.

She served as the main Tanker during the raids of her Guild, the Hunters. So, performing the role of a sub-Tanker was easier than drinking cold soup for her.

Mah Dong-Wook shifted his gaze to the rest of the team. Every single member present here was a top specialist in hunting down monsters. Going through detailed explanations was a waste of time for them.

“Let’s go.”

As soon as Mah Dong-Wook turned towards the ants, Choi Jong-In created a massive ball of light and floated it up to the highest point in the boss room. That brightly illuminated the entirety of the chamber.

“Heok.”

The cameraman spat out a quiet gasp at the sheer size of the light sphere. He quickly began whispering towards a small mic located near his lips.

“As a rank A Hunter, I’ve participated in quite a few raids before, but it’s my first time seeing such a huge ‘Light’ magic like that. As expected of Korea’s best Mage-type Hunter!”

His voice entered the mic and got transmitted to the viewers throughout the entire country.

Not too long ago, he heard that the live broadcast he was filming had shot past the audience rating of 80%.

Feeling overly motivated now, the cameraman tried to step forward in order to capture even better footage, but then, Min Byung-Gu standing next to him at the back of the group hurriedly yanked him back by his shoulder.

“Keok?!”

At this absolute strength, the cameraman couldn’t offer any resistance and spun around to face Min Byung-Gu. His shoulder hurt so much that his mouth bobbed up and down all by itself.

‘How can a Healer be this strong....??’

There was no time to get shocked, though. The cameraman was now facing Min Byung-Gu who carried a completely different expression to when he was busy cracking jokes during the ride in the helicopter.

“This here is a boss room of a rank S dungeon. No one here is responsible for your life, except yourself.”

Hearing Min Byung-Gu’s anger-infused voice, the cameraman could only continue to nod his head, unable to form an intelligible reply.

“If you understand, then stay at the back. The real thing is about to get started.”

The overflowing energy of a rank S Hunter – even a Healer, who was supposed to be the physically weakest out of all the Hunter types, still could display an aura that easily overwhelmed a rank A Hunter. That was the difference between a rank S and a rank A.

Such monstrous beings were uniting together to start an intense battle, so what could a measly little rank A cameraman even achieve here? The cameraman felt his own powerlessness for the first time since becoming a Hunter, and hurriedly stood behind Min Byung-Gu. Sure enough....

“Here they come.”

A super-giant ant discovered the Hunters’ presence and shifted its six legs to slowly approach where they were.

“So, that’s the queen....”

Baek Yun-Ho nervously swallowed his saliva.

The taut, nervous tension was also writ large on the faces of other Hunters.

The absolutely commanding presence of the ant queen!

These men and woman had become the very first humans to witness the outer appearance of the ant queen, having sneaked past the wall of hundreds, thousands of ants to get here.

‘Today, we shall end the lifeline of these d*mnable ants for good.’

Baek Yun-Ho’s heart trembled as he thought about bringing that massive creature down. But, if they were to do that, then first of all....

Baek Yun-Ho’s glare that had been fixed on the ant queen now shifted lower to the ground.

‘We need to....’

Eight ants walking in front of the ant queen – they had to get rid of the guards first.

“Ha-ahp!”

As if he had read the minds of his fellow raid members, the main Tanker of the team, Mah Dong-Wook, rushed forward to the frontline. A thick vein protruded out of his neck as he shouted out.

“You d*mn ants, come and get some!”

His impressive roar!

The ants’ sights had degenerated now, but in return, their sense of hearing had become even more developed, so they immediately bared their fangs and claws before pouncing on Mah Dong-Wook’s position.

He quickly looked behind him.

“Hunter Cha! Now!”

Cha Hae-In had been running behind Mah Dong-Wook while maintaining a certain distance, and when she heard his call, quickly unsheathed her longsword. Grabbing the hilt in a reverse grip with both hands, she powerfully stabbed the ground.

Skill, ‘Tremor of Provocation’ - activated!

Khwack!!

With the sword stabbing the ground serving as the epicentre, magic energy radiated out in circular waves. The ant guards aiming at Mah Dong-Wook suddenly all changed their directions and jumped at Cha Hae-In instead, as if they had been entranced by something powerful.

‘There you go!’

Mah Dong-Wook inwardly fist-pumped the air as the monsters ran past him and towards Cha Hae-In. She was successful in attracting the aggro of the ant guards.

up, it was his turn.

Mah Dong-Wook quickly stepped in between Cha Hae-In and the giant ant queen trying to shuffle towards her.

“You’re mine.”

The ant queen must’ve been displeased by an enemy blocking its way, because it began bellowing out a high-pitched scream.

Kiiiiieehhk!!

Any old Tanker would have been suppressed by the sheer pressure and cover their ears from that horrifying screech, but such a trick wouldn’t work against Korea’s best Tanker, Mah Dong-Wook.

“Hap-!!”

He instead activated his skill, ‘Battle Cry of Provocation’.

Unlike Cha Hae-In, who activated an AOE aggro skill, Mah Dong-Wook activated one that only worked against a single target.

The ant queen stopped screeching out and glared at Mah Dong-Wook now. He had successfully attracted its aggro.

‘Yes!!’

And now, his role was to endure the boss’s attacks until his colleagues managed to kill off the ant guards and come to his aid. And that would be the role he felt most confident of performing in this world.

Mah Dong-Wook lifted up that heavy, large shield right up below his chin, the light of grim determination burning in his eyes. As he always had done, he began praying deep in his heart.

‘Please grant me the power to protect myself and my colleagues today.’

Kwa-ka-boom!!

Just then, a huge explosion resounded out from behind him, signalling the beginning of the raid of the ant queen, where countless lives were at stake.

“Grandpa, aren’t you going to watch? Hunters are supposed to show up on screen today.”

“Grandma, I don’t care.”

“Don’t be like that now.....The folks in TV said just now that they can really smash apart those ants today this time, so let’s watch together.”

“Argh. They all say the exact same thing all the bloody time. I told you, I don’t care.”

An old grandpa turned away on his chair and concentrated on the newspaper, instead. But then, a sound of him clicking his tongue came out from his slightly hunched back.

“Tsk, tsk, tsk. Even this newspaper is talking about those d*mn Hunters and nothing else. How boring.”

The old grandma cautiously closed shut the door to their bedroom as the grouchy voice of her husband continued to enter her ears.

“Uh-whew....”

Only until two years ago, her husband used to hold so much interest towards all the news related to Jeju Island. He was also a big supporter of Hunters, too.

Their one and only child was taken from them by the ants of Jeju Island, after all.

The despair that felt like their world was collapsing on them soon became deep hatred towards the ant monsters. Her husband donated a sizeable amount of money to the Hunters Association whenever there was a subjugation operation taking place to cheer on the participating Hunters.

He failed to fall asleep because of nervousness on the nights leading up to the operation dates, too.

However, the bigger the one's expectation, the greater the one's disappointment would be.

When the third subjugation attempt, where the Hunters promised to spare no effort to succeed, also ended up in failure with heavy losses incurred, her husband couldn't regain his wits for several days, looking all dazed and the like.

After that, her husband stopped talking about Hunters altogether. He stopped expecting, and stopped hoping for a miracle from them.

“Whew....”

The grandma sighed out once more and picked up the remote of the TV in the living room. When it was switched on, the host of the broadcast was in the middle of making his emotional speech.

The Hunters were getting ready to engage in combat just as she turned the TV on. The grandma gathered her hands in front of her chest and continued to watch on, her heart beating faster and faster in anxiety.

When the Hunters were injured, she averted her gaze while feeling sorry for them. When the attacks of the Hunters landed successfully, she clapped her hands in delight.

“Aigo! Aigoo!!”

That was the beginning. The terrifying-looking ant monsters began falling one by one from the fierce attacks of the Hunters. And whenever that happened, the roars and cheers of people shook and reverberated throughout the apartment building the grandma lived in.

“Aigoo! Aigoo!!”

Hearing that announcement, tears suddenly formed in the grandma's eyes.

First of all, she was thankful towards these Hunters who were risking their lives to protect other people.

Secondly, she recalled the face of her son as the boy celebrated him getting hired by a large corporation located in Jeju Island.

It was then.

Slam!

The bedroom's door flew open and the grandpa hurriedly ran out, his face burning with emotions.

“Dear....”

Even though grandma called out to him, grandpa didn't say anything, his reddened eyes glued to the TV screen and nowhere else. His tightly-clenched fists were trembling hard now.

The host held his breath and continued to observe the situation for a while, before....

The TV screen now displayed the stirring image of five Hunters rushing in at the same time from behind Mah Dong-Wook, who had endured commendably well against the ant queen's attacks.

Thick tears streamed down grandpa's face as he energetically punched the air almost out of instinct.

“Uwaaahhh-!!”

Inside the TV station.

As the phone calls of encouragements and support inundated the station's phone line, the station's director yelled out in pure, unadulterated joy.

“Sir, the audience rating has gone past 85% just now!!”

“We did it!!”

The director tightly clenched both of his fists.

The audience rating of 85%!!

Now that was a record that would never be beaten, even if the South Korean football team reached the final of the World Cup. And when he thought about all the profit coming from overseas, as well as the potential future revenue.....

‘A jackpot!!’

He plopped down on his chair and rubbed his face. All the other employees within the station's 'situation room' all breathed sighs of relief after seeing the happy face of their boss.

On the main screen showing the transmitted footage from the island, the Korean Hunters were busy making mincemeat out of the ant queen.

The station's director took out his handkerchief to pat down his sweat-soaked slick forehead.

‘Yes, very good! Very good!!’

The queen was on the brink of death now; all these Hunters had to do now was to finish off the ant monster and safely escape from the ant tunnel.

However....

Kyahhhhhhhh-!!!

“What the hell?!”

The director was jolted out of his senses and he quickly took a look behind him. One of the producers hurriedly lowered the volume. The director tilted his head this way and that, before walking closer to where this producer was.

“Producer Nah? What was that noise just now?”

“Ah, that was.... This is the real-time live feed coming from Jeju Island, actually. That screech came from the ant queen.”

“The ant queen made that noise?”

There was a slight delay between the broadcast being shown to the public and that of the real-time live feed coming in from the island. Since no one knew what would happen during the raid itself, it was decided that the real-time footage couldn't be shown to the public directly.

The station's director stared at the feed, before issuing an order with a smile on his face.

“Well, I think it won't do for a monster's terrible screech to come out when we're about to witness a historic victory. How about you edit that part out, or decrease the audio volume?”

“Will do, sir.”

This producer named 'Nah' nodded his head, and the director squeezed his right shoulder as a gesture of encouragement. It was then.

One of the station's employee hurriedly ran up to him with a hardened expression.

“Director, Producer Nah!!”

The director quickly turned his head around.

According to his personal experience, not once did the reports made by his subordinates carrying such expressions turn out to be a good one.

Even before the director heard the report, he was beset with this rather ominous hunch. Praying that he was wrong, at least for today, the director cautiously asked the employee.

“...What happened?”

Unfortunately, one's ominous hunches had a way of coming true. The employee spoke in a disconcerted voice.

“Sir, I just found out that Japanese Hunters are withdrawing from the island right now!”

“What was that?!”

Mah Dong-Wook spurred his teammates on.

“We’re almost there!! Let us just push a little bit harder, everyone!”

Just as his words implied, the ant queen was truly on its last legs. All they needed was a little more push, and that would be it.

There were hundreds of arrows stuck tightly together on the head of the queen fired by Im Tae-Gyu, and the creature resembled a hedgehog as a result.

Pi-ooong!

Kwa-jeeck!

Yet another arrow flew and struck the queen in the face. The creature screeched out as if it was in great pain and shook its head.

Kieeehhk!!

The queen quickly recovered its bearings and began spewing out poisonous acidic liquid throughout the boss room.

Splash-!!

It was such a wide-scale attack that several Hunters failed to escape in time. Their skins began burning up into black charcoal, but their wounds were restored in full by Min Byung-Gu’s healing magic.

Kiieehk!!

The queen was further enraged by the fact that its acid attack wasn’t effective, and bit down on Mah Dong-Woo in front of the group with its large, saw-like fangs.

Kwack!!!

However, Mah Dong-Wook activated the ‘Advanced Fortification’ skill to defend his entire body and managed to endure the queen’s attack.

One side of the ant’s jaw was blocked off by the shield, while the other side, with his left hand. While Mah Dong-Wook was buying more time in this fashion, a huge pillar of flames exploded out from the side of the ant queen.

Kwa-ka-ka-boom!!

It was Choi Jong-In’s magic doing its thing.

Kiiehk!!

The queen staggered and failed to balance itself. Baek Yun-Ho in his beast-type monster form, meanwhile, seized upon this chance and jumped up very quickly to rip out the queen's left fang with his bare hand/paw.

Kwajeeck!!

Deftly landing back on the ground, Baek Yun-Ho breathed heavily as certainty grew larger in his heart.

'The queen's finished.'

His extensive hunting experience told him so. This would be the moment when they finally kill the leader of an army of monsters that dyed this land black with the blood of their victims.

Just a little bit more, and it'd be done. When he thought like that, a certain powerful emotion welled up from deep inside his heart.

but then, the queen suddenly raised its head high up in the air. And....

Kyaaaaaaaaahhh-!!

A screech that was so loud that it almost ruptured the Hunters' eardrums reverberated throughout the entire ant tunnel. Baek Yun-Ho's eyes shook hard.

'What was that?! A roar of anger? Its death throes?'

No, it felt different from those. That screech sounded like a pleading call towards someone, something, which was still far away.

'It's calling for something?!'

When his thought process reached there, he felt an unexplainable chill run down his spine.

"We need to stop that thing!!"

Before Baek Yun-Ho could take another step forward, Cha Hae-In jumped up rather gracefully and swung down the sword she held firmly with both hands.

Slice!

The queen's head fell down to the ground first before she could land back on her feet.

Thud!!

The cameraman had been holding his breath as he bore witness to this battle of the rank S creatures. And finally, he was able to raise both of his arms up high in elation as tears formed in his eyes.

This was the moment when the curtains closed on the horrifying battle that lasted for 4 years.

“Pant, pant....”

The heavily-panting Mah Dong-Wook raised his thumb up towards his teammates.

Cha Hae-In also sighed out in relief. Choi Jong-In grinned as he adjusted his glasses, while Im Tae-Gyu punched the air. Everyone was expressing their delight over the victory in their own way.

Only Baek Yun-Ho among them was shuddering from this ominous and unexplainable chill taking root within the corner of his heart.

“Hyung, we just became the seventh raid team in the entire world to successfully clear a rank S Gate, so why do you look like....”

“Hold on.”

It was then. Mah Dong-Wook, who had been in communication with the command centre, suddenly formed an enraged expression.

There was no time for them to relax like this. He quickly called out to his teammates taking a short break nearby.

“The Japanese have withdrawn already, and the remaining ants are heading this way! We need to escape from here, right now!”

“What?!”

“But, don’t we still have some time left?!”

“20 rank S Hunters couldn’t even hold out for 30 minutes, never mind one hour?!”

When his teammates grew visibly flustered, Mah Dong-Wook spoke in a complicated voice.

“I don’t know the details, but... The Association is trying to find out what’s going on, but the Japanese have one-sidedly cut off the communication.”

“Those stinking sons of b*tches...!”

Choi Jong-In spat out some choice words in disgust.

If it were the Japanese Hunters down here and not the Koreans, would they have given up this early and withdraw? No matter what, though – one had to be alive first in order to get angry later.

To prevent unrest from breaking out among his teammates, Mah Dong-

Wook did his best to suppress his own feelings. With a calm face, he hurried with their escape from this place.

“Everyone, hurry!”

The members of the Korean raid team hurriedly ran towards the exit of the queen’s chamber.

However, the one running in the lead, Baek Yun-Ho, stopped in his tracks first.

“Ah.....”

“Hyung?”

Min Byung-Gun running right behind had to stop there, and as a chain reaction, everyone else came to a stop as well. Wordlessly rooted to the spot, Baek Yun-Ho’s gaze was fixed in one direction as his entire body began trembling noticeably.

“This, this can’t be....”

This couldn’t be happening.

No, such a thing shouldn’t even happen in the first place.

As he watched a shadow approach them, he recalled the tall, humanoid-shaped eggshell back in the nursery area.

‘This... you’re telling me that this is the power possessed by a single monster??’

Baek Yun-Ho’s complexion paled instantly.

Other Hunters feeling puzzled finally sensed something was wrong and quickly took a step back from the exit.

“What’s this?”

“Did the ants return here already??”

As the Hunters began falling into a confused state....

From the far side of the ant tunnel draped in darkness, a single winged ant was slowly walking towards the Korean Hunters.

REPORT

Cha Hae-In immediately felt something was very wrong as soon as she saw the ant monster leisurely entering the queen's chamber.

'There's... no presence?'

It was almost impossible to locate the creature without keeping her eyes locked on it constantly; that's how difficult it was to sense its presence.

There were only two beings out of all the Hunters and the monsters she met until now, that had this sort of effect on Cha Hae-In. One of them was this ant monster right in front of her eyes, and the other one was....

'...Mister Seong Jin-Woo.'

She inexplicably recalled Seong Jin-Woo, who had finally bared his hidden fangs at Japan's most powerful Hunter a couple of days ago.

What if that man stood in front of her as her enemy?

Shudder.

She couldn't breathe anymore as a crippling chill ran down her spine.

'.....'

Just imagining it alone caused her expression to harden considerably. The entrance of this unknown ant monster was definitely not good news for the Korean Hunters, who were still deeply fatigued from fighting the ant queen.

"That thing...."

"Something's wrong with that monster."

"It feels really creepy."

It wasn't to the extent of Baek Yun-Ho or Cha Hae-In, but other Hunters also felt a certain sense of incongruence here.

Gulp.

It was just a single monster, yet the atmosphere was shifting rather rapidly.

'What should we do?'

Mah Dong-Wook was inwardly worried. When faced with an unexpected situation, a leader had to make a quick decision. Especially so, when they were pressed for time like this.

‘It’s a monster, so we should just kill it, but....’

But.

Just why was he feeling this enormous sense of unease right now?

While they stood there pondering and hesitating, the ant monster narrowed the distance between them quite quickly. Its movements were so eerily quiet that goosebumps automatically rose up on their skins.

‘We don’t have the time to hesitate like this.’

By the time Mah Dong-Wook finally managed to suppress the warning bells rung by his instincts and made the next logical decision....

...The monster suddenly disappeared from his view.

“Where?!”

Mah Dong-Wook’s eyes opened super-wide as he hurriedly scanned his vicinity. The reactions of other Hunters weren’t all that different, either.

“Behind....”

The cameraman anxiously looking around belatedly located the monster and shouted out.

“It’s behind us!!”

The Hunters were startled by this and quickly turned around. With the speed none of them could see, the ant monster had slipped past the Hunters to stand before the dead corpse of the ant queen.

‘It went past us?!’

‘But, how....??’

Just like that, the Hunters of the Korean raid team finally got to see what Baek Yun-Ho saw earlier with his ‘Eyes of the Beast’.

Thump, thump, thump!

Their heart rate rapidly picked up and their breathing quickened in no time.

‘...That’s no ordinary monster.’

Cold sweat drops dribbled down Mah Dong-Wook’s forehead.

The ant monster quietly stared at the dead queen, not even showing a hint of interest towards the Hunters. But then, it raised its head and....

Kiiiiieeeeeehhhh.....!!!

It began screeching out a beastly howl so terrifying and loud that the entire ant tunnel began shaking from the reverberation.

Plop!

The cameraman was the first to lose all his strength in his legs.

Plop!

Plop!

The other Hunters couldn't withstand the sheer pressure as well, and they began kneeling on the ground one by one. Mah Dong-Wook too carried a look of pure disbelief as he tried to support himself off the ground.

'I... I'm kneeling because of a howl?'

Eeeehhhhhkkk...!!!

By the time the seemingly-never-ending howl came to an end, the only one standing still was Cha Hae-In and no one else. However, her two legs were wobbling noticeably too, as if standing upright was all she could do at the moment. Obviously, fighting back was out of the question here.

Only then did the ant monster display some interest towards the Hunters. With a clear hostile intent, to boot.

'...!!'

Cha Hae-In's eyes grew wider.

The creature's face was hideously twisted as it turned around to face the Hunters, as if it was expressing its anger at the death of the queen.

She did her best to calmly move her hand towards the hilt of her sword. However, the ant monster was a step faster than the speed of Cha Hae-In drawing her sword from her waist.

Piishuk-!

The ant monster literally blinked and reappeared right in front of her nose. Cha Hae-In's eyes shook hard. She didn't even have enough time to think about defending herself.

SLAM-!!

"Ahk!"

Being struck in the side of her head, Cha Hae-In flew away in a straight line and slammed into a far wall, before powerlessly falling to the ground.

Tumble....

Just one hit, and Cha Hae-In was rendered unconscious. All of her teammates couldn't hide their astonishment after seeing that horrible spectacle. Because... their strongest member had been knocked down in one hit, that was why.

Unfortunately, they didn't have any time to stay shocked like that.

They had confirmed the ridiculous power level of their new enemy. Through their experiences, these Hunters knew very well that their odds of survival would decline further the longer they remained hesitant as they were now.

As the main Tanker, Mah Dong-Wook took a step forward first.

“Hup-!!”

Mah Dong-Wook powerfully bear-hugged the ant monster from behind and strengthened both his arms.

With the strength that could easily uproot a full-grown tree, he squeezed hard at the ant monster's body. Thick veins popped up all over his arms and his neck. Unfortunately...

“Uwaaaahk-!!”

When the ant monster increased its strength for a bit, both of Mah Dong-Wook's arms fell off, just like that. He fell down to his knees.

“No!!”

Baek Yun-Ho pounced forward.

If he failed to draw that thing's attention away now, then Mah Dong-Wook would be killed off in an instant now that he lacked the means to defend himself.

Baek Yun-Ho gritted his teeth. White fur began sprouting up all over his body; his claws extended and he transformed into a ferocious beast, before pouncing on the monster.

Piishuk-!!

The monster disappeared from the spot again.

‘Where...?!’

Even Baek Yun-Ho's 'Eyes of the Beast' failed to follow the monster's movements.

The scream came from his behind.

“Uwaaahkk!!”

This time, it was Choi Jong-In, who was getting ready to cast his magic. The ant monster’s long claw left a lengthy, diagonal cut wound on his upper torso, and he fell to the ground with a pained moan.

About five paces from where he was, Im Tae-Gyu had been waiting for an opening while hiding his presence. He immediately fired an arrow containing his magic energy.

‘I’ll never miss in this distance!!’

His strong self-belief was contained within that shot.

Swish-!!

Too bad for him,

Grab.

A powerful tremor rocked Im Tae-Gyu’s eyes.

‘Heok?!’

The ant monster snatched the flying arrow and easily snapped it in half.

Crack!

Im Tae-Gyu hurriedly tried to nock his next arrow, but by the time he did so and raised his bow, the monster was already standing in front of him.

“....F*ck.”

POW!

Im Tae-Gyu was struck in the face and flew away.

Baek Yun-Ho attacked when the ant monster’s back was turned away from him, but the back of his head was grabbed by the monster instead, as the creature spun around in an instant. He was planted violently into the ground next.

Boom!!

Baek Yun-Ho’s body quivered from the impact.

Just as the ant monster was getting ready to slam Baek Yun-Ho to the ground again, Mah Dong-Wook dashed forward and shoulder charged the creature away.

Kwahng!!!

The ant monster rolled on the ground for a little while, before standing back up. Mah Dong-Wook’s arms had been severed for sure only a moment ago, yet he was attacking the creature with all his limbs completely intact.

The ant monster defeated Mah Dong-Wook again, and then, proceeded to defeat other Hunters again, too. Yet, the humans that should've stayed down with crippling injuries were attacking again, all fully healed in the blink of an eye.

Only then did the ant monster begin to recognise the existence of a Healer. The monster scanned the vicinity to find this annoying human.

However, Min Byung-Gu stayed calm under the pressure.

His lone self-defence skill, 'Camouflage'.

He was able to completely hide himself with this skill that was quite similar to the 'Stealth' skill, but there was a drawback to it: He couldn't move from the spot. Even then, that was more than enough for a Healer like him.

He simply had to stand still in one spot and continue to heal his teammates, that was all.

When the healing skill continued to fly in from an unknown place, the ant monster changed its tactic. It selected Mah Dong-Wook who looked the sturdiest among the Hunters, grabbed his leg, and dangled him upside down in the air.

'What is that thing trying to do now??'

Min Byung-Gu was taken aback with great surprise.

The ant monster then proceeded to slowly destroy Mah Dong-Wook. Min Byung-Gu carried on healing him as that happened.

He had no choice there. The moment he stopped healing Mah Dong-Wook, that man would be dead in less than a blink, after all. Sweat poured out in buckets as Min Byung-Gu continued on with the healing magic.

The ant monster traced the continuously-firing healing magic's origin, and then, its head swivelled in Min Byung-Gu's direction.

'It can't be?!'

His heart skipped a beat; he blinked, and the ant monster was gone from the spot.

'What the hell?'

Where did it disappear to this time?

'Byung-Gu!!'

Baek Yun-Ho loudly yelled out.

It happened, then.

Stab!

“Keok!”

Blood sprayed out of Min Byung-Gu.

The pain of being burnt alive came from below, and he took a look down to see a huge hole in his stomach. And the ant monster’s black arm emerging out of that hole.

He raised his head in disbelief and met Baek Yun-Ho’s gaze.

Min Byung-Gu spoke in a faltering voice.

“Hyung.... Run.”

“B-Byung-Gu!!”

Baek Yun-Ho tried to get up, but he couldn’t put any strength to his wounded leg.

Kwajeeck!

The ant monster tore into Min Byung-Gu’s head.

Kwajeeck! Kwajeeck!!!

“Uwaaaaahh!!”

Baek Yun-Ho staggered unsteadily and ran forward. The ant monster discarded the now-headless body of Min Byung-Gu and grabbed Baek Yun-Ho by his neck.

He struggled with all his might, but it was still insufficient to escape from the creature’s incredible grip.

Suddenly, the ant monster opened its mouth.

“Hyung.... Run.... Hyung.... Run.....”

“.....??”

Baek Yun-Ho was freaked out of his skull, his brows shooting up real high in shock and terror.

The ant monster was perfectly mimicking the speech pattern of Min Byung-Gu. If one subtracted the off-putting crack in its voice, one might even mistake it as Min Byung-Gu’s, even.

“Run.... Hyung.”

The ant monster repeated the same words for a long time, before looking straight into Baek Yun-Ho's eyes.

"You are all..... weak."

From the mouth of the ant monster, a familiar language flowed out. It sounded inarticulate, but for sure, it was still undeniably Korean.

"What the....?!"

Baek Yun-Ho's eyes widened even further.

"This side... Queen, dead..... Killing soldiers..... Not enough payment... your king, who?"

"....King?"

The ant monster strengthened its grip on Baek Yun-Ho's neck.

"Keok."

"Your king... where?"

Baek Yun-Ho's brain kicked into gear.

With the strongest person in the Korean team, Cha Hae-In, still unconscious, he needed to find someone who could buy him and the rest of the group a little bit of time.

And he immediately thought of the Japanese team that had abandoned the Koreans. More specifically, the strongest among the Japanese, Goto Ryuji.

"Out... Outside...."

"Outside...."

The ant monster raised its head up. It seemed to be searching for something, before speaking again in a satisfied tone of voice.

"...There..... A strong one."

And then, it discarded Baek Yun-Ho as if he was not even worth wasting time on, and disappeared from his sight in a scarcely believable speed.

"Keok, keok."

Baek Yun-Ho lay on the ground and panted out heavily. He quickly took a look around him.

This wasn't the time for this. Before that thing comes back, they needed to get out of here.

However...

Shashashasha.....

While they were engaged in the battle against that ridiculously overpowered monster, the swarm of ants had returned to the ant tunnel and were slowly encroaching upon the queen's chamber now.

“Hmm....”

Goto Ryuji sheathed his sword back in the scabbard. Corpses of ants were piled up like small hills all around him. At a quick glance, there must've been over a hundred of these creatures.

It was a perfect demonstration of the abilities possessed by Japan's strongest.

“Looks like we've taken care of most of them.”

“Yes, sir.”

His teammates nodded their heads while admiring the sight of the always-trustworthy Goto Ryuji. They thought that, as long as they stuck by his side, they at least would avoid the fate of getting killed off.

“Sir, I've been told that we'll be the last to withdraw.”

The Hunter receiving the transmission from the operations centre relayed the message. Goto Ryuji nodded his head and turned in the direction of the coast.

“This way....”

Goto Ryuji didn't get to finish his sentence.

Swish-!!

Because an ant monster suddenly appeared out of nowhere and was now standing before his group, that's why.

‘.....’

With a single glance, Goto Ryuji figured out the capabilities of the new enemy.

‘That isn't a normal ant at all.’

“Goto-san!”

His colleagues tried to step forward to help him, but he held them back.

“I'll handle this.”

Against an opponent this strong, his colleagues would only prove to be a hindrance, instead. Going at it solo would be simpler for him.

Trusting his judgement, the teammates heeded his order and retreated to a distance while leaving everything on his shoulders. Goto Ryuji unsheathed his sword with a circumspect look on his face.

“An ant.... You seem to possess a pretty strong aura.”

Perhaps the ant monster had also sensed his power, because it wasn't budging an inch from the spot.

But, that was to be expected – if that creature displayed even a hint of movement, Goto Ryuji was planning to slice it up into hundreds of fine little pieces.

It was then, the ant monster opened its mouth.

“You are... the king?”

“King?”

Goto's eyes opened wider.

An ant just spoke a human language!

However, it was already a well-known fact that intelligent monsters conversed in their own languages. So, it wouldn't be a stretch of his imagination to think that a monster would succeed in imitating human's languages.

A smirk formed on Goto Ryuji's face.

‘A king, is it....?’

When Association President Matsumoto Shigeo finishes building his empire of Hunters, then indeed, he was the one and only viable candidate to assume the throne, wasn't he?

“That's right. I'm the king.”

Kekek.

As soon as the desired answer came out of his mouth, the ant monster fully unleashed its magic energy.

Hwa-ahck!

Like failing to realise how big an iceberg was from seeing only its tip, Goto Ryuji misjudged the true power of the enemy from the small portion of its magic energy that leaked out. His eyes imperceptibly trembled.

‘This, what is this....?!’

The bone-chilling cold air woke goosebumps up on his skin, and all the hair on the back of his neck stood right up. He had experienced a sensation like this only once before.

‘.....Seong Jin-Woo??’

Slice.

Almost at the same time as the ant monster made its move, Goto Ryuji’s head fell to the ground.

“Uwaaahh!!”

The Korean team was currently surrounded by the swarm of ants.

Mah Dong-Wook fought; Im Tae-Gyu fought; Choi Jong-In also fought, and even the cameraman had to kill the ants. However, there was seemingly no end to the waves upon waves of ants.

“Pant, pant, pant....”

All sounds had stopped and all Baek Yun-Ho could hear was his own heavy breathing.

‘Is this the end?’

He quickly wiped the blood trickling down below his eyebrow with the back of his hand. With their lone Healer-type Hunter gone, they had no avenue to deal with these many monsters now.

This resistance was a futile one, indeed.

Even then, he couldn’t bring himself to give up – because, two of his most precious friends had lost their lives in this d*mn place. He definitely didn’t want to dig his grave where they were buried, too.

“Uwaaaah-!!”

He destroyed the head of yet another ant. However, countless more replaced the dead one and tried to pounce on him.

Kiiechk!

Kiiehck!!

Baek Yun-Ho powerfully shook off the ants and stood with his back against a wall. Like this, he at least wouldn’t get surrounded from all sides now.

“Pant, pant....”

He raised his head and searched for other Hunters. His colleagues, who had been fighting alongside him only a moment ago, could no longer be seen, their figures completely buried within the swarm of ants.

No way. He wanted to believe that it wasn’t possible....

He bit his lower lip, but then, was jolted out of his senses with a sudden presence appearing behind his back.

He spun around rapidly and threw a punch, but stopped before he reached his target. Because... the one standing behind him wasn't an ant.

'What... Who is this?'

It was, in fact, a 'soldier' decked out in black full-body armour.

This was his first time seeing one, but then again, he heard plenty of times before about this 'thing' from Park Hui-Jin who had been involved with the Red Gate incident.

'Isn't this....??'

Baek Yun-Ho cried out in surprise.

"Why is this thing here?"

It was then.

From the soldier, a familiar voice came out.

Chapter 118 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

One year before the Korea-Japan united raid team came knocking on the island....

The ant queen began thinking.

Other lifeforms that should've served as their food source had all disappeared from the island, and the incidents of its children devouring each other occurred frequently now. There was no source of food on this island to sustain the citizens of the queendom now that its population had swelled up to several thousand strong.

Abandon the existing nation and seek out a fertile land overflowing with other lifeforms to establish a new one – if the domination of the island was the queen's first task, then this problem would be its second one.

However, the queen remembered. It remembered all the powerful invaders that stepped on the island several times before.

The queen's forces managed to repel them, but the nation had to suffer great losses as well. Far too many of the queen's children had to be sacrificed. Would its children be able to defeat those beings if they went to another land?

It needed a single most powerful soldier to lead the citizens of the nation. And so, the queen decided upon the direction of their evolution.

Half a year later.

By gathering the magic power it already possessed, as well as all the nutrients it had amply absorbed before, the queen gave birth to a brand new life. It was the greatest combat weapon imaginable, born solely for the sake of dealing with the strong humans.

The queen's determination to create the most powerful soldier there was, combined with the original order of killing all humans it heard in its head, created a horrifying monster that simply exceeded all common sense.

The monster was born with the skill, 'Gluttony'.

By consuming its opponents, this new monster could turn their magic energy as well as a portion of their knowledge into its own.

The monster realised what its powers were early on and began devouring its own kin, but the queen left it alone. What this monster wanted was the same as the queen's desire, after all.

The queen was greatly happy as 'he' grew stronger and stronger day by day.

It was happy because 'he' had already exceeded the power of 'his' mother now. And without encountering a single hitch, the army 'he' would lead was getting closer to completion as well. That was why.

In the midst of that....

The human invaders entered this land once more. Their numbers were lower this time, but they were far stronger than before. However, the queen laughed at them.

In preparation of the ants waging war against humanity in another land, this should serve as a great opportunity to test out the powers of 'him'.

The queen, as usual, sent out all of the soldiers guarding its castle along with 'him'.

Just as the queen desired so, 'he' went out and completed the first mission 'he' was given. But when 'he' returned, the queen was already dead.

'He' was enraged.

And thankfully, there were enough strong humans left on this island that would serve as the outlet for 'his' rage.

First of all, the king of the humans was killed. And then, it systematically annihilated all the subordinates next to the dead king. One of the subordinates cried out before he got killed off.

He asked just what the hell 'he' was.

After devouring humans through the skill 'Gluttony', 'he' now possessed the ability to reason. 'He' then began thinking to itself.

'What... am I?'

Up until that point, 'he' was a soldier of the queen.

But now, with the queen's death at the hands of the humans, what should 'he' call itself now?

A sole existence that must lead the remaining soldiers of the queendom. 'He' only knew one word to denote such an existence.

'...King.'

'He' had killed off the enemy king already, so 'he' had definitely satisfied the requirement to become one now.

Grab.

The ant king bit onto the head of the remaining human. But, then....

Suddenly, the ant king's head swivelled in the direction of the ant castle. There was an enormous aura rushing out like a fierce storm from where the queen used to live.

That level of power couldn't have come from a common foot soldier.

‘.....A king?’

Immediately sensing that an enemy that could threaten itself had appeared, the ant king slowly rose up towards the ant castle.

Just what kind of a calamity was this?

The TV station's situation room used to be enveloped in the celebratory mood, but now, everything felt sombre and dreary like a funeral.

The 'live' broadcast showing up on the viewers' TVs suddenly got cut off with the entrance of a strange, winged ant monster. Understandably, they began flooding the station with phone calls of angry complaints and urgent inquiries.

Ringgg...!

Ringgg....!!

One of the employees walked over to the station's director and cautiously made his report.

“Sir, our communication network is about to collapse from all the calls made by the irate viewers.”

The station's director raised his head.

“So what? Are you suggesting that we should broadcast live the scenes of our Hunters getting ripped to shreds by a single ant monster??”

“N-no, sir.”

The broadcast got cut off just as the Hunters were getting one-sidedly beaten up by that mysterious ant monster. It was understandable that the curiosity of the viewers would skyrocket.

However, that didn't mean they could broadcast the scenes of Hunter Mah Dong-Wook getting tortured, nor the moment that Hunter Min Byung-Gu got devoured.

The director buried his face in his hands and let out a helpless moan.

The once-in-a-lifetime gamble where the fate of his station rode on, was now going down the drain because of one d*mn ant monster.

Heavy, grim silence filled up the situation room. No one person was brave or dumb enough to open their mouths now. Except for one, that was.

“Huh??”

The producer staring at the real-time feed with an ashen complexion suddenly opened his mouth.

“D-Director!!”

“...What now?”

“Someone just appeared in the location out of nowhere!”

The director didn’t bother to raise his head up and grimly replied.

“Unless it’s Jesus himself, don’t report to me every little thing that happens over there. Got that?”

“However...!!”

“...It’s all over.”

Realising that talking wouldn’t get him anywhere, the producer increased the previously-lowered volume up way higher.

Kiieehck-!!

Kiieehck!!

The situation room was immediately filled up with the screams of the ant monsters.

The director quickly raised his head up out of sheer shock. It wasn’t just him, either. Everyone present within the situation room all rushed to the live feed monitor. And soon, sounds of “Oh, oh!” came out amongst those watching the screen.

“...”

The director sitting there in a daze finally managed to lift his butt off the chair. When he came in closer, the employees stepped aside to let him through.

The screen of the live-feed monitor was reflected in the director’s eyes.

“Oh, dear lord..... Jesus holy Christ.”

The director suddenly began calling out to Jesus, which he didn't even believe in, to begin with, and hurriedly shouted out to the rest of the employees.

“What the hell are you all doing here? Why aren't getting ready to start broadcasting this?! Are you going to take responsibility if we lose out on the current audience rating?!”

The producer hurriedly tried to dissuade his director who didn't even bother to hide his boiling excitement.

“But, sir! If we start broadcasting again, we'll be showing the live feed, instead! There won't be any delay in the transmission, and everything will be shown in real time, sir! We won't be able to do anything if another emergency situation breaks out!”

The delayed transmission time of ten minutes between the feed and the broadcast had run out by now. Which left the director with the decision of going with either the real-time feed, or end the broadcast altogether right here.

“....It's all or nothing.”

“Pardon me?”

“We've already stopped broadcasting midway, anyway. Things won't get any worse than it already has.”

“Well.... I, I guess so...?”

A Hunter's sudden appearance was caught on the camera. No one could tell whether he was a Korean or a Japanese. Heck, it was unknown if he was a Hunter at all, but with his appearance, the director's gamble that seemed to be over for good suddenly gained one last shot at the glory.

The director issued a new order with a determined expression firmly etched on his face.

“Switch it on. Switch it on, now.”

He then pulled a chair closer to the producer and settled down there.

“Our station's fate rides on that man, you got that?”

“Euhhkhk!”

Even though he was being pushed into the figurative cliff, the cameraman didn't regret anything. Anyone would've dreamed at least once of doing something like this when they were young.

...To become a hero.

If that was impossible, then at least, to become a support to the true hero.

During the time he did menial jobs for the TV station and earned his experience that way, he never imagined that he'd be blessed with an opportunity to do so in his lifetime.

But then, he Awakened into a rank A Hunter, and by earning experience fitting for his rank, he was able to get to this point in his life. Thanks to that, he got to clearly capture the scene of Hunters proudly representing South Korea successfully raid the boss of a rank S Gate.

'I'm the one who caught that on film. Yes, me.'

And with the footage he captured, many people would come to know the valiant sacrifices these rank S Hunters made for the purpose of the extermination of the ant monsters. That was more than enough for him.

He felt like that all of his efforts spent in studying filming techniques and working as a Hunter was finally being paid off here. But, if there was one thing he was a bit regretful about, then that would be....

'Dad...'

His father, who looked after the cameraman all alone after they lost his mother to cancer. Thinking that he'd not get to see his father again, he felt a deep pain in his heart.

Kwajeeck!!

His shoulder was bitten, yet he couldn't feel a thing. His arm had stopped moving a long time ago.

He was originally a Tanker, so he was able to endure somehow, but this really was his limit.

Plop.

He knelt down on the ground. Even then, his head was filled with the thoughts of his father.

'Why did my last conversation with dad have to be me asking him if he had his breakfast?!'

If he knew this would happen, he might have talked for a lot longer.

'On that day, when dad came for a visit to Seoul, I should've cleared up all of my schedule....'

However, time was a ruthless, unrelenting b*stard and regret always arrived one step too late.

The cameraman raised his head. The horrifying fangs of the ant monster were nearing his head.

He no longer had any magic energy left to activate the 'Fortification' skill, so he wouldn't be able to defend against the monster's attacks now.

Tears formed on the edges of his eyes.

'Dad, I'm sorry.'

It was then.

Kwajeeck!!

Accompanying the noise of the outer shell being crushed, the bodily fluid of an ant got splashed on the cameraman's face.

"...Huh?!"

A blade emitting a cold, silvery gleam had cleanly stabbed through the ant's head.

The cameraman raised his head and followed the blade, only to find another 'ant' with a long red-coloured 'plumage' stuck to the top of its head standing there.

'Why is an ant attacking another ant?!'

No, that thing wasn't an ant!

The cameraman was mistaken because both were of the same black colour. What he saw was an unknown 'soldier' decked out in black armour from head to toe pulling his sword out from the head of the dead ant.

Plop.

The ant monster with a hole in its head powerlessly sagged to the ground.

"Just what on earth is.....?!"

When the black 'soldier' stepped aside, a youthful man with a somewhat familiar face approached the cameraman and shouted at him.

"Open your mouth."

"Pardon me?"

This man didn't even give the confused cameraman a chance to start a conversation; he simply grabbed the injured man's chin and poured down an unknown liquid down the throat.

"Keok?! Keok!!"

The cameraman nearly coughed his lungs out, but he still managed to swallow all of the liquid. He covered his mouth and asked.

“Who, who the hell are you?!”

However, the youthful man didn't even bother to respond and simply turned around to face the ants.

‘W-what the heck?!’

The cameraman was flustered greatly, but still, he stood back up.

‘...Wait a d*mn second here.’

His legs were moving again. But, was that all?

He belatedly realised it, but his arm was also fine after drinking that strange liquid.

‘What happened here? What’s going on??’

Did that man do something to him just now?

He couldn't come up with any other logical explanation besides that one.

It was then.

Quite out of the blue, the cameraman finally remembered where he saw that youthful man's face.

‘Could he be that guy?!’

Jin-Woo calmly scanned his surroundings.

‘.....’

Last time he got to meet the members of the Korean raid team in the Association's gymnasium, he had inserted one of the Shadow Soldiers in Baek Yun-Ho's shadow, just in case. What a relief it was that he did that.

It seemed that what he'd been watching wasn't a live broadcast, as the situation here was far worse than the stuff shown on the TV screen before it got cut off. He managed to save the weakest of the lot, the cameraman, first, but the other rank S Hunters were still surrounded by countless ant monsters.

‘What should I do now?’

The quickest way to deal with this situation would be to summon Fangs out and sweep these pesky ants away in one go with his trademark pillar of flames. But, if Jin-Woo did that, he couldn't guarantee the safety of the rank S Hunters.

So, he needed another solution here.

Jin-Woo quickly made his decision and turned his head towards Iron.

“Iron!!”

Iron tapped his chest in a manly manner as if to say, “Leave it to me!”

He then strode forward, his large frame shaking to and fro, before opening his shoulders wide to roar out at the top of his lungs.

Woowuhhhhhh-!!!

Tti-ring.

[Iron has activated ‘Skill: Roar of Provocation’.]

The effect of that was rather amazing. The ants attacking the Hunters all snapped their heads towards Iron’s direction simultaneously. And soon, they all rushed over.

“Nice work.”

Jin-Woo lightly tapped Iron on his back and summoned the two shortwords he got as rewards after killing the demon king.

‘The Demon King’s Shortsword.’

The pair of shortwords with a blue tinge to their blades gleamed threateningly under the light magic’s glare.

Kkiiiiieeehk!

Kiiechk!

When hundreds of ant monsters screeched out and pounced at the same time, his entire view was dyed jet black in an instant. Jin-Woo began gripping the hilts of the shortwords even harder. And then, he vanished from view.

Kiiechk!!

Soon, ants collided with the soldiers in a bloody battle to the finish.

In the meantime, Baek Yun-Ho, whose status was still better than everyone else, managed to move the injured Hunters to a safe corner. Thankfully, they were all still alive. The cameraman joined soon afterwards, and helped Baek Yun-Ho out.

Because Jin-Woo, or more specifically, Jin-Woo’s summoned creature, attracted the aggro of all the ants present here, he was able to safely finish this task.

“Pant, pant, pant....”

Mah Dong-Wook was leaning against the wall, his breathing rough and irregular. He then grabbed the arm of Baek Yun-Ho, who brought him here, and asked.

“W-what’s going on? Who’s fighting?”

Mah Dong-Wook’s eyes were unfocused. His eyes were injured and he couldn’t see properly.

Baek Yun-Ho placed his hand on Mah Dong-Wook’s hand.

“Instructor Mah. It’s fine now. Everything will be fine.”

“.....”

He then shifted his gaze over to Jin-Woo.

Other people may not have know it yet, but Baek Yun-Ho had a rough idea already on how powerful Seong Jin-Woo was in reality.

Baek Yun-Ho might have been greatly flustered when the black soldier suddenly vanished, only to be replaced by the youth, but he still ended up shouting out loud even before he consciously realised it.

He said, ‘please, help us.’

And then, after seeing the youth move towards the ants along with his summoned black soldiers, the sense of relief washed over Baek Yun-Ho; so much so that he nearly plopped down to the ground.

Sure enough...

Seong Jin-Woo proceeded to massacre and annihilate the ants that gave him and his teammates so much trouble at a frightening pace, as if those creatures were nothing but broken toys to be played around with.

Kiieehk!!

Screams of dying ants exploded out from everywhere and nearly made Baek Yun-Ho dizzy in the head. But, he still sighed out in relief.

‘It’ll be fine now.’

He wasn’t saying that to Mah Dong-Wook. No, he was telling that to himself. The hope of survival was rekindled in his heart. The aid from one Seong Jin-Woo was far more reliable and trustworthy than the 20-plus rank S Japanese Hunters combined.

‘...Looks like there’s no need for me to step up here.’

Baek Yun-Ho formed a smile and sat down next to Mah Dong-Wook.

All he could do now was to sit down quietly like this and watch Hunter

Seong Jin-Woo do his thing. He then drew the cameraman's attention towards Jin-Woo.

“You should keep the camera pointing at him. Because you're going to witness something amazing pretty soon.”

The incident of the Red Gate, and the incident during the raid of the Hunters Guild. This was Baek Yun-Ho's chance to personally witness the spectacle he had been hearing about all this time.

“Y-yes!”

The cameraman did his best to maintain his distance so he wouldn't get in the way and tried to capture Jin-Woo's actions with his camera. The work of the raid team's Hunters may have been finished now, but his own work was far from over.

Gulp.

The cameraman struggled to swallow his saliva.

Kiiiehk!

At the same time, an ant was split cleanly in half from top to bottom by Jin-Woo's hands. He then took a look around him. The number of ants had decreased significantly, and there were just over half of them remaining.

He killed so many ants that he had lost count now, but his breathing remained even and unperturbed. In all honesty, he found this place far easier to manage when compared to the uppermost floors of the Demon's Castle.

‘Should I increase my speed a bit more?’

Glance.

Jin-Woo sneaked a glance at the floor, and he immediately issued an order to the puffs of black smoke rising up from the corpses of the countless ants.

“Rise up!!”

REPORT

The cameraman felt a creeping chill crawl all over his skin.

‘Wha-what’s the meaning of this?’

What was about to happen here?

He was deep inside a cave where breezes shouldn’t exist, yet this eerily chilly air inexplicably brushed past his back.

‘Now that I think about it...’

Just as he began questioning whether the surroundings had become too quiet or not....

Kiiiiieehhk-!!

Thick, heavy screams resounded out within the queen’s chamber and countless black hands began shooting out from the ground.

Tuck.

Tuck....

The hands grabbed the ground, and began pulling themselves out.

“Heok!!”

The cameraman unwittingly gasped out in pure fright. His eyes were opened wider, and his breathing grew rough and heavy. He was a rank A Hunter yet he could scarcely believe the things taking place, so what would the viewers at home watching be feeling right now?

While the cameraman remained stewing in his own astonishment, the owners of the black hands finally emerged out of the ground.

‘Ant monsters?!’

At a casual glance, they looked like ant monsters, but then again, endless streams of black smokes were rising from their bodies. It was hard to tell whether these monsters were physical beings or made out of gases.

Wouldn’t one potentially get that sort of appearance if one carved out the statue of an ant monster using a block of black-coloured dry ice? Several hundreds of such things rose up from the ground.

The cameraman's heart beat so fast and so loud that he couldn't even breathe now.

Seeing that scene, Baek Yun-Ho too gasped out in shock as well. He was comparatively calmer than the cameraman, but that didn't mean he could close his slack jaw.

'All of those.... are his summons???'

Unlike the two speechless men, Jin-Woo was forming a satisfied grin at the new additions to his shadow army.

'Nice.'

Now, the number of his Shadow Soldiers easily overwhelmed the surviving ant monsters.

'With things like this, looks like I won't have to personally step out now.'

Jin-Woo stored the Demon King's Short Swords back to his Inventory. And then, issued the very first order to his new soldiers.

'Go. Don't leave any one of them alive.'

Kiiiiieehhk-!!

With the same intensity as back when the ant monsters flooded into the queen's chamber, Jin-Woo's new soldiers crashed into their enemies like a tsunami wave.

The once seemingly-endless swarm of ant monsters was now being swept away by the black tide.

Wooahhhh!!!

A huge cheering roar broke out inside the TV station's situation room.

The director shot up from his seat and clapped his hands in happiness.

"Yesss!! He's doing it!!"

Seeing those disgusting ant monsters being swept away like that, it felt like his tight chest was being pried open again. It was as if the ten-year-old indigestion plaguing him had finally been flushed away.

If only there were no other eyes watching here, he'd have asked the producer to screen capture that moment and have it sent over to him later – so he could relieve his accumulated stress even if it was several months later. Nay, several years later!

It was indeed very regretful to see the death of Hunter Min Byung-Gu. When the director saw the scene of the team's lone Healer die at the hands of that d*mn monster, he thought that the heavens were crashing down on him.

Even then, if the Korean Hunters get out of the ant tunnel safely with the help from that unidentified Hunter?

‘That’s all I ask for!’

The Korean team had already achieved its goal by killing the ant queen. With their only method of propagation gone, there was no need to even repeat the simple fact that the ants would eventually die out in the Jeju Island.

And then, what about the Japanese?

Indeed, what would happen to the Japanese team?

Since they abandoned the important mission right in the middle of it all and escaped with their tail between their legs, there was obviously no need to hand over the promised share of the loot. And not only that, the Koreans could even demand reparation from them, instead.

And of course, the footage of the raid selling like hot cakes would be the tasty icing on the cake, too.

The complexion of the director brightened like a midday sun.

‘Just where did this massive ball of fortune fall out from?!’

The director’s expression, as he continued to stare at the face of Jin-Woo in the monitor’s screen, remained somewhat confused. It was then.

Another employee hurriedly ran towards him.

“Sir!”

The director shot up from his seat, nearly freaking out of his skull.

“What is it this time?!”

The director’s expression hardened in an instant.

His heart began quivering, thinking that maybe another mishap occurred somewhere just as he was beginning to soak himself in the sea of happiness.

What with the situation arriving at this point in time, the director was quickly growing resentful of this dumb employee. He even wanted to reach out to cover that employee’s mouth and pretend that no bad news was afoot.

‘Looks like I’ve finally lost it....’

Completely unaware of what his boss was thinking of at that moment, the employee spoke hurriedly with an excited face.

“We discovered that man’s identity!”

The director's eyes opened up super-wide.

“What was that?!”

Inside the office of the Hunter Association's President.

Kwajeek!!

Goh Gun-Hui hurriedly lifted his hand off the crushed armrest. His private doctor sitting next to him turned to look at him.

“...Association President.”

“...It seems that I got overexcited just now.”

He unconsciously gripped too tight, and this happened. However, how could he not get excited by the scenes he was seeing right now?

Indeed, watching Jin-Woo's performance playing out on the giant screen made his emotions well up without him even realising it. If only his body permitted it, he'd have gone there to fight alongside, too.

“Getting overexcited is not good for your body, sir.”

Goh Gun-Hui nodded his head.

There was only one reason why he, as the Association President, wasn't present in the mission control centre. Didn't matter whether this subjugation operation ended as a success or a failure, there was a potential risk that he'd strain his heart simply by being there.

Even watching the broadcast like this carried enough risk, so the personal doctor had to set up a camp next to Goh Gun-Hui.

‘Maybe, it would've been better to not let him watch the broadcast.’

The personal doctor worried about his decision for a brief moment, but after seeing the expression etched on the face of the Association President, he soon shook his head.

Ever since the Hunter named Seong Jin-Woo appeared on the scene, that wide smile didn't want to leave Goh Gun-Hui's face.

[“Hey, that man, that's Seong Jin-Woo!”]

In that critical moment, as the despair quickly transformed into a loud cheer, the words Association President cried out still rung inside the doctor's ears.

Meanwhile, Goh Gun-Hui was beaming widely.

‘I can't believe this is happening.’

He then cautiously placed his hand back on the sofa's armrest. Unless he was holding onto something, his entire body would itch too much and he'd be unable to endure it.

'But, how did Hunter Seong Jin-Woo get there?'

Initially, he was greatly intrigued by this quandary. The island must be overflowing with the ant monsters, so how did he appear there without anyone else noticing it?

But, such a thing wasn't important right now.

No, the truly important thing would be that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo was there. And with that, the other Hunters had hope. Those two were the important things.

It was then.

Goh Gun-Hui's eyes grew extra large after witnessing the spectacle of Jin-Woo creating even more soldiers by extracting shadows out from the dead ant monsters.

'That friend, he lied to me, didn't he?'

Who could've guessed that there were well more than "only about a hundred" summons? Even at a casual glance, there must've been over 300, easy. However, Goh Gun-Hui didn't look like someone who'd been lied to.

No, a smile of contentment was filling up his face, instead.

'He said that he wanted to fight against the monsters, didn't he?'

Goh Gun-Hui could now understand a bit more of why the youth said those words to him back then. After all, he possessed such incredible power, so no monsters out there should faze him.

For sure, Jin-Woo looked like he was enjoying himself as he fought the monsters. It was to the extent that the viewers watching felt a deep stirring within their hearts.

However....

Why did Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, who so dearly wished to battle monsters that badly, asked to be left out of the Korean raid team?

'He must've had an important reason behind that decision.'

Goh Gun-Hui nodded his head. Without such a reason, there was just no way that a man who formed an expression like that during battle would willingly walk away from a raid team.

When his thought arrived at that point, Goh Gun-Hui grew very curious about what could possibly be Jin-Woo's reason.

Tang, tang!

Jin-Ah was studying in her bedroom, but she heard those loud noises and hurriedly came out to the living room.

"Mom??"

"I, I'm sorry. That was too loud, wasn't it?"

Jin-Ah shook her head.

Mom had already lowered the volume of the TV until not much could be heard so she'd not interrupt her daughter's studies. Jin-Ah didn't feel like unduly burdening her any more than that.

"Besides all that, what's going on? Is the TV broken?"

"Not sure. It just stopped working all of a sudden."

"Where's oppa?"

"He's right h...."

Mom turned around to look, only to gasp out in surprise.

"Oh, my?? Where did he go? But, he was here only about a second ago??"

Jin-Ah tilted her head and opened Jin-Woo's bedroom door.

"Oppa?"

He wasn't even in the bathroom, either. Jin-Ah proceeded to scour the entirety of the apartment before turning around towards her mom.

"What were you watching together just now?"

"The Jeju Island raid."

"...."

Suddenly, Jin-Ah was overcome with a certain ominous foreboding. Now that she thought about it, the entire apartment building was bustling with loud noises ever since a little while ago.

'No way....?'

Jin-Ah hurriedly ran back inside her room and switched on her phone. When she did....

Just as the vigorous, loud cheers exploded out from the floors above and below hers, Jin-Ah's eyes opened wider as she finally confirmed the scene playing out within her phone's screen.

“Oppa?!”

After utterly massacring every single ant monster found inside the queen's chamber, Jin-Woo stored his soldiers back inside his shadow.

Even now, ants that had been spread out to the rest of the island were scurrying back to the ant tunnel. He judged that his priority should be placed on guiding the Hunters out of here to somewhere safe before more ants showed up.

‘We have the injured here to worry about, too.’

Jin-Woo strode towards the Hunters. Beside Baek Yun-Ho and the cameraman, the rest weren't in a good shape. Cha Hae-In was still unconscious, and the three others had suffered some serious wounds, as well.

Jin-Woo asked while looking around.

“What about Min Byung-Gu Hunter-nim?”

Baek Yun-Ho shook his head with a hardened expression.

“...”

Not saying anything else, Jin-Woo brought out the potions and began treating the Hunters one by one. Since the potions would become useless once they leave his hands, he had to personally feed each of the Hunters.

“M-mm....”

After drinking the potions, Hunters began regaining their consciousness.

“What's this?”

Im Tae-Gyu quickly raised his upper torso up, touched all over his body, and spat out a gasp of amazement.

“What the....?”

Both Choi Jong-In and Mah Dong-Wook recovered from the numerous injuries on their bodies in no time.

“Hmm...”

“Cough, cough.”

Choi Jong-In had no clue on what had transpired here, so as soon as he laid his eyes on Jin-Woo, he was taken aback rather greatly.

“Mister Seong Jin-Woo? What are you doing here??”

“Let’s talk after getting out of this place first.”

“Oh....”

Choi Jong-In took a look around and nodded his head. They were still stuck inside the deepest part of the ant tunnel. This was no place to idly chat away, indeed.

“Instructor Seong!”

Having regained his eyesight, Mah Dong-Wook was able to reach out and grab Jin-Woo’s hands.

“Were you the one fighting off those ants? Thank you. Thank you so much!!”

Jin-Woo replied in the same manner to him as well.

“Let us get out of here first.”

“Got it.”

Finally, Cha Hae-In.

Standing before her, a frown formed on Jin-Woo’s face.

‘Something’s not right... her aura’s far too weak.’

While feeling a sense of foreboding, Jin-Woo raised her head and cautiously poured the potion down her mouth.

Sure enough, a message quickly popped up in his view.

Tti-ring.

[When the remaining HP is less than 10%, it is impossible to recover HP with healing potions.]

Jin-Woo’s expression crumpled.

When he slowly pulled out his hand supporting her head, it was soaked in her blood.

‘.....’

That ant b*stard.

That creature inflicted a fatal blow to the strongest person among the Korean Hunters, Cha Hae-In, with nothing but a single blow.

The sole reason why these Hunters were still alive wasn’t that they were strong. On the contrary, that b*stard simply toyed with them for a little while, that was all.

Jin-Woo's expression hardened.

'In any case, I gotta....'

Cha Hae-In's injuries took priority. If her wounds couldn't be healed by the potions, then she needed to get out of this island as soon as possible and get a Healer-type Hunter to heal her, ASAP.

"Let's hurry."

Jin-Woo carefully picked her up and stood up to leave. Other Hunters also stood up.

As they were preparing to leave the ant queen's chamber, Jin-Woo walking in front of the pack suddenly spat out a long sigh.

'.....'

Baek Yun-Ho could guess the reason why.

Jin-Woo entrusted Cha Hae-In over to Baek Yun-Ho. Suddenly dumped with the responsibility of carrying her around, Baek Yun-Ho formed a flustered expression, and he hurriedly raised his voice.

"I would like to help."

Jin-Woo looked at the Hunters present, including Baek Yun-Ho, and told them all in no uncertain terms.

"Do not ever step forward during the fight. It'll be faster that way."

"But, Mister Seong Jin-Woo, that means...."

Choi Jung-Hoon was still oblivious to what had transpired before, so he was about to speak up his opinion, but Mah Dong-Wook stopped him and shook his head.

He may not have seen the situation unfold with his own eyes, but through his perception, he was able to detect how Jin-Woo annihilated the swarm of ants from the beginning until the end.

Jin-Woo was right about this.

However, Baek Yun-Ho still butted in.

"Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim."

Jin-Woo turned his head to look at him.

"I understand full well that you're strong. I can confidently say that no one here knows that better than me. However....."

Baek Yun-Ho spoke with a serious expression on his face.

“However, you’ve already summoned far too many creatures by now.”

But, why would that be a problem? When Jin-Woo stared at him with a confused expression, Baek Yun-Ho got flustered and quickly added more explanation.

“You must’ve had exhausted a lot of your magical energy by now. What would happen if you completely spend them?”

‘Ahh... so that’s what he was talking about.’

Jin-Woo guessed from Baek Yun-Ho’s words that the other Hunters utilising the summoning magic had to be using a lot of magic energy to summon even a single creature.

‘I’m sure there aren’t any real reason to reveal that my Shadow Soldiers don’t need any magic energy, right?’

Even without him saying anything, his soldiers wouldn’t look like ordinary summons to these people’s eyes, anyway. So, Jin-Woo decided to change the story ever so slightly.

“My summons don’t require as much magic energy as you think. You don’t need to worry about me.”

“Excuse me?”

Both Baek Yun-Ho and the cameraman exclaimed out at the same time.

He controlled that many summoned creatures all at once, yet he was saying that the magic energy usage wasn’t high? Then, just what was his weak point, then?

‘.....’

Realising that explaining would take up too much time, he simply turned towards the cave up ahead, instead. With excellent timing, the waves of ant monsters were rushing inside the chamber.

‘Wow, there are still so many of them.’

Their side had someone in a critical condition. So, he couldn’t afford to waste time here.

Jin-Woo activated the Sovereign’s Territory for maximum efficiency. The ground beneath his feet was immediately dyed in black.

Just as he was done with preparations to call his soldiers back out again, an ominous, creepy air blew in from the other side of the cave.

‘.....?’

Jin-Woo shifted his gaze over to where that eerie aura was coming from. There was this one individual among the masses of ants. It looked similar to the others, but it was a completely different type of monster compared to the others.

‘Ah, so that’s the one.’

Jin-Woo instantly recognised the ‘ant king’. And likewise, the ant king recognised Jin-Woo as well.

Taking its time, the ant king slowly walked over to him.

“A human... you seem to possess a pretty strong aura.”

It even imitated Goto Ryuji’s speech pattern.

Hunters immediately recalled the nightmare of a few moments ago and flinched grandly as soon as spotting that ant monster. On the other hand, Jin-Woo showed no outward ripples and simply stared at the creature without saying a word.

Eventually, the ant king stood before Jin-Woo.

“Are you the king of humans?”

“....Huh, an insect that knows how to speak. Well, I’ll be.”

When Jin-Woo replied with a less than impressed expression on his face, the ant king’s own expression crumpled unsightly.

The power the queen bestowed it with, and the power it gathered through the ‘Gluttony’ skill - the moment the ant king unleashed all of its magic energy, its body suddenly ballooned up greatly in size. Its height, which used to be around the same as Jin-Woo’s, grew by at least 1.5 times taller.

The ant king then screeched out loudly right in front of Jin-Woo’s nose.

Kiiiiieeeeeehhhhk-!!!

Jin-Woo didn’t even blink once, and instead, a smirk formed on his lips.

“Yup, now you’re acting properly like an insect.”

And then, he himself unleashed his own magical energy.

“All communications with Goto and his team have been cut off?!”

The Association President Matsumoto Shigeo’s complexion became ashen. The Association employee next to him presented a receiver and asked politely.

“Would you like to hear the last communication, sir?”

Matsumoto Shigeo snatched the receiver away from the employee’s hand and put it on his head, before nodding once.

Soon, the recorded sound clip began playing.

Beep.

“That’s where the communication ends, sir.”

Matsumoto’s face, as he took off the receiver, was as hard as a rock. The creepy noises and the horrible screech the monster made in between the chatter – he couldn’t picture any other situation where those sounds would come out of.

‘An ant monster using a human language? And Goto Ryuji was killed by that thing?!’

Such an eventuality was not within his calculations. He and his compatriots had definitely planned everything out, and made preparations for every eventuality, so why....

The ends of Matsumoto Shigeo’s fingers trembled almost imperceptibly.

“....Sir?”

Only after he realised that the gazes of his employees were focused on his trembling fingertips did Matsumoto Shigeo carefully hide his hands. He quickly changed the topic.

“Where is the monster that.... No, where is the talking monster, right now?”

He couldn’t bring himself to say the words ‘the monster that killed Goto Ryuji’.

“What do you mean, disappeared??”

It was a creature capable of killing Goto Ryuji. So, how could the satellite equipped with the magic energy detection camera keeping a close eye on Jeju Island not pick up on such a powerful monster?

The employee seemed to have figured out what his boss was about to say, and he pointed at the monitor once more.

“That spot of light is the magic energy emitted from the monster at that moment.”

The magic energy detection camera displayed the emitted magic energy as spots of lights. The bigger the spot of light appearing on the monitor, the more powerful the existence was.

Once spots of lights belonging to Goto Ryuji and the Hunters around him disappeared, the larger, brighter light vanished quickly, as well.

“Oh, my god....”

Matsumoto Shigeo spat out a shocked gasp. The unknown enemy was in perfect control of its magical energy.

‘That was why.... Because it was such a monster, that....’

That was why the research team failed to notice the creature before.

It was, without a doubt, a perfect failure. And as a punishment, Japan just lost ten of her elite Hunters. Among them, the best Hunter in the country. For a result of a single oversight, it was very, very painful price to pay. Even worse, the price most likely hadn't been fully paid yet, either.

‘When that nonsensical monstrosity crosses the ocean and enters the country....’

Even though Matsumoto Shigeo tried to shake them off, the horrifying images continued to fill up his head. It was then.

“We found it! The b*stard has reappeared again!”

Matsumoto Shigeo's eyes shot open wider.

“Where is the creature?”

“It's inside the ant queen's chamber, sir.”

“....”

Only the ants returning to the ant tunnel, as well as the Korean Hunters facing off against them, remained in that place. They must be fighting with everything they had, but unfortunately, their opponent this time easily exceeded everyone's imaginations.

'In the end, even the Koreans will be finished for good.'

That's what he believed, but then, Matsumoto Shigeo's brows shot up instantly.

'.....???'

There was another spot of light that suddenly appeared right next to that horrifying monster.

"W-what's the meaning of this?!"

Matsumoto Shigeo gasped out in sheer astonishment and quickly looked at his employees. One of the employees, affiliated with the research team, urgently shook his head.

"It, it's also our first time seeing this, sir."

That spot of light was as big and bright as the monster's. No, maybe it was even bigger than that.

What was even more astonishing was the fact that there were hundreds of smaller light spots swirling around that large one.

Even the head researcher of Japan's research team, who had been analysing the spy images for many years now, had never seen such a phenomenon before.

'Ah....!'

Seeing the mesmerising sight of the sea of lights repeatedly separating into tiny pieces before gathering back together, all those present couldn't help but gasp out in admiration.

However, Matsumoto Shigeo didn't have the time to leisurely stew in his emotions right now.

"The Korean team! They must be broadcasting the raid even now, aren't they??"

If the Korean team was still strutting around like that, that could also mean that the broadcast was still ongoing. Matsumoto Shigeo was beset with curiosity and wanted urgently to find out just what was going on here.

"The Korean team's broadcast!! Bring that up to the main monitor!!"

When he shouted out, the super-large screen in the middle of the Japanese mission control centre was immediately filled with the image of a certain young man having a stare-down with an ant monster.

After seeing that man's face, Matsumoto Shigeo nervously swallowed his saliva. The lone strand of sweat trickled down his temple and pooled on the bottom of his chin.

'That man.... That man is the source of that massive light spot?'

And then, the giant ant monster standing in front of that man. That thing was at least over 1.5 times larger than regular ant monsters. They were only looking at the thing through the monitor, yet the sheer pressure emanating from that thing managed to quicken their heartbeats.

'.....'

Matsumoto Shigeo's expression hardened even further.

It was then.

The ant monster made its move.

The ant king's fist powerfully slammed into Jin-Woo's face.

SLAM!!

Jin-Woo's back nearly bent backwards, but he stomped down and withstood the hit.

'.....!!'

The ant king had struck with all of its might behind that punch, so it couldn't help but get taken by surprise.

"You can... withstand my power?"

The ant king struck out with a simple plan to kill this puny human in one hit, but instead of sending him flying away, the whole thing simply ended with his head turning slightly away.

Too bad, there was no time to remain surprised, because Jin-Woo's own fist flew in afterwards.

Swish-!!

SLAM!!

The ant king was smacked right in the middle of its face, and it flew away to crash into the wall on the far side of the cavern.

Kaboom!

As if a meteor had collided there, the wall caved in deeply. Although it was only for a short while, the impact force was powerful enough to shake the entire ant tunnel.

“What kind of an ant talks this much?”

When the ‘live’ broadcast got suddenly cut off, and the static screen showing the message of about the station encountering ‘technical difficulty’ appeared on their TV screens, countless viewers were left devastated and stunned by what they saw.

“The Hunters.... What’s happening to the Hunters?!”

“What was up with that ant just now?!”

“What the hell! How can you cut the broadcast off right there?!”

The scenes of an ant monster suddenly appearing without warning, and then, it proceeding to systematically dismantle the Hunters one by one....

The viewers celebrating after the death of the ant queen felt like a bucket of cold water was poured down on them by that horrifying scene. Not too long afterwards, the static screen with the ‘technical difficulty’ message went away and the emcee appeared there, instead.

With a sorrowful voice, he relayed the death of Hunter Min Byung-Gu. And he also added that the safety of the Hunters remaining in the ant tunnel couldn’t be guaranteed, either.

“God d*mn it!!”

“They got the ant queen, so why are they dying now?!”

“What about Japan?”

“Isn’t it supposed to be a united team or something? Where are the d*mn Japanese?!”

Some people raged on, some people worried about their safety, while some others grieved.

The news of the Hunters risking their lives potentially meeting with a grisly fate spread out like an uncontrollable wildfire. Weirdly enough, the audience rating actually rose up higher than ever before, even though the raid broadcast had been cut off for a while now.

The emcee’s expression brightened considerably after receiving an urgent message.

Those words were more than enough to inject much-needed vitality into the fatigued eyes of the viewers staying put in front of their TV screens.

Soon, the live feed was restored, and....

“What the heck?”

“This...!!”

The viewers were greeted by the black soldiers filling up their TV screens, and they all shot up from their seats.

They then saw those black soldiers fighting tooth-and-nail against the waves upon waves of ants flooding into the ant queen’s chamber. The camera moved around to take in the unfolding events, before locking onto a single young man.

He was too far away and it was hard to see what he looked like.

The viewers watching on with nervous tension all cried out in elation from that news. And then, they began cheering for that unidentified Hunter.

“Yes!! Go and smash them all!!”

“You’re doing great!! Push them back!!”

“Let’s go!!!”

And finally....

When that unidentified Hunter summoned an even greater number of soldiers to completely massacre the ants....

Woooooahhhh!!!

People punched the sky with their fists and celebrated wildly.

Those who had lost their families and friends to the ants and sought revenge shed tears as the cathartic moment played out in their screens. As if he was waiting for the perfect timing, the emcee’s heightened voice came out from the speakers just in the nick of time.

The eyes and ears of every single viewer out there were now turned towards their screens.

Just who was that man?

Just what was the identity of a man capable of rescuing rank S Hunters from a place crawling with rank S monsters?

And so, the viewers grew even more cheerful from the fact that a Hunter possessing such an incredible ability was not a Japanese, but a Korean like them.

Countless ants were soon taken care of in no time at all.

Just as the Hunters were getting ready to escape from the ant tunnel, yet another wave of ants appeared.

“Uh?! Uhhh??”

“Isn’t that...?”

The ant monster that appeared just before the broadcast got cut off the first time was now leisurely walking forward while pushing past the swarm of ants. Since there weren’t that many ants with wings to begin with, and the shape of its face was different from everything else, it wasn’t that hard to tell that monster apart.

The viewers were instantly thrown into confusion.

“What the hell? I thought that b*stard was already dead?!”

“Why is that thing appearing again?!”

The winged ant monster stood before Hunter Seong Jin-Woo.

Those viewers who understood a bit about the compatibility of different abilities grew deeply anxious when the two stood face to face.

“Aigoo! He’s going to get killed here!”

“Why would a Mage-type give up on the safety of distance like that??”

“It’s not too late, so run away!”

That monster was strong enough to blow away Hunter Cha Hae-In, a melee-type Hunter, with a single blow. They thought that it was beyond obvious how things would turn out now.

It was already distressing enough to see those two glare at each other in close proximity, but then, the d*mn ant monster suddenly grew larger and larger as well.

Every viewer watching their TV screens cried out in shock.

And then...

Pow!!

Those with weaker constitutions squeezed their eyes shut at that moment. They thought that the moment the monster’s punch found its target, the Hunter’s head would explode.

However, contrary to their expectations, the Hunter was fine.

‘Huh??’

‘A Mage withstood a punch strong enough to knock out the Tanker Mah Dong-Wook in one hit?!’

The eyes of the viewers grew wider and wider.

And then....

SLAM!!

The ant monster got shoved deeply into the cave wall.

“....”

“.....”

Most viewers required a little bit of time to process what just transpired.

But when the camera zoomed in on the ant king half-buried in the cave wall.....

Waaaahhhh!!!

Yet another round of loud cheering exploded out.

“Heok!!”

The cameraman’s jaw fell to the floor.

When Hunter Seong Jin-Woo was struck by the ant’s fist, he flinched in surprise. Even Cha Hae-In lost her consciousness from that hit.

But then, Hunter Seong Jin-Woo blew away the ant monster, instead. The very same monster, that toyed around with six rank S Hunters as if it was nothing. No wonder he’d gasp out a “Heok!”

‘Were the rank S Hunters that weak?’

No, of course not.

The Korean Hunters bravely fought and managed to defeat the rank S boss, the ant queen.

So, the mutated ant monster that made an utter fool out of those Hunters was the weird one. And Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, who blew away that weird mutated ant, was an even weirder one.

Gulp.

The cameraman suppressed his agitation and swallowed his dry saliva.

The reactions of other Hunters weren’t all that different, either.

While everyone was staring at Jin-Woo with excited eyes, only Choi Jong-In began looking around in his vicinity. And he could see mountains of ant corpses. He initially thought that those were the result of the Hunters working together while he was out cold. But now, having witnessed Jin-Woo’s power, his thoughts had changed.

‘Can it... Could it be.... Mister Seong Jin-Woo alone was responsible for....?’

After taking a rough count of the dead ants, Choi Jong-In’s eyes began trembling non-stop.

Kiiiiieehhkhk!!

A beastly screech exploding out without warning caused his head to snap back.

The ant king extricated itself out of the wall and displayed its rage. The air within the ant queen’s chamber was quivering noticeably.

‘Ho-oh?’

Jin-Woo stared at the ant king with a genuine surprise. The damage he dealt was far less than he thought.

‘Is it because... of the exoskeleton?’

The black, tough shell covering the entirety of that b*stard – whatever that thing was, it had already exceeded being a normal organic matter.

In that case, he’d use brute force to shatter that shell. The thing that could break one’s armour wasn’t a sword or a spear. No, it was a hammer.

Jin-Woo’s shoulder and arm muscles expanded, thick veins bulging visibly on his skin. The air grew thicker and heavier as it descended all around him.

The ant king stopped screeching and shifted its horrifyingly crumpled expression towards Jin-Woo.

“You dare!!”

As the two of them walked closer, the distance between them shortened faster and faster. Soon, Jin-Woo and the ant king stood right before each other again. And then, without a hint of hesitation or mercy, they began exchanging countless attacks, each thumping hit carrying all their might.

Slam!!

Kaboom!!

BOOM!!

The Hunters watching from the sideline were all stupefied into silence.

The shock wave from the collision of magic energy whenever Jin-Woo and the ant king exchanged blows rocked the ant tunnel itself. It was so severe that these top-ranked Hunters, renowned for their mastery over wielding their magic energy, felt their innards tumble.

“Woo-wuop...”

“Are you alright?”

“I, I’m fine.”

The cameraman was only a rank A, but he still tried his best to suppress the contents of his stomach from rising up. He was even experiencing vertigo, too.

‘Woo-wook....’

Even then – even as his complexion paled greatly, he could still maintain his smile all because....

Slam! Slam!! Slam!!!

‘How can a lone Hunter do that against such a monster....?’

....Because, he saw a ray of hope.

Kwa-boooooom!!

Hunter Seong Jin-Woo might be getting wounded from that exchange, but the outer shell of the ant king was definitely being broken as well.

Chapter 121 Fin.

REPORT

The ant king quickly sensed the ‘changes’ taking place on the body that it felt so proud of.

Crack.

Crack....

Its outer skin, most likely tougher and harder than any known metal on this planet, began developing cracks all over the place. On the other hand, the enemy was easily withstanding the ant king’s attacks.

‘It can’t be.’

An impossible hypothesis quickly entered the ant king’s head.

‘I... I’m losing out on physical strength?!’

Not only that, to a human less than half its size?

But, right at that moment....

CRACK.

It realised that the fresh wound on its waist from that powerful hit felt ‘wrong’. Even the sound coming from there was not too good to hear.

The exoskeleton lacked pain receptors, so the ant king had to divert its attention for the briefest of moments to confirm the status of its shell down there.

Sneak.

The result was rather shocking to behold.

‘...It’s cracked open!’

The small crack that was no more than just a nick had spread out to everywhere and was growing larger and larger. It was the same thing as a warning sign, telling the creature that there wasn’t a lot of time left.

The ant king quickly turned its head around. However, even if it was only for a brief moment, Jin-Woo wasn’t some amateur who’d miss this golden opportunity.

Ka-boom!!

The king's face spun to its side.

‘.....??’

The ant king staggered unsteadily for a second or two from the ridiculous impact force that ignored the ant king's forged steel-like shell on its face.

It managed to regain its balance before it took a step back, but by then, the follow-up punch was already closing in from below.

KWAHNG!!

The ant king's chin shot upwards.

‘How dare a human, who's inferior than a bug...!!’

While its head still pointing up at the ceiling, the ant king shot a glare full of murderous rage down below.

The power this human possessed – it was indeed great. However, unlike this human, who only had his physical strength to fall back on, the ant king possessed a variety of other powerful means at its disposal.

Such as....

The ant king's head snapped back down, and at the same time, it fired a poison needle out of its mouth. A tip coated in deadly poison attached to the tongue-like tentacle shot out like a bullet.

It was an unavoidable attack aimed at the enemy's face in this point-blank range.

Swish-!

The human deftly tilted his head out of the way to dodge the needle, but a smile still crept up on the face of the ant king as the result of its attack became clear. The needle still managed to scratch the human's cheek and left a small wound there.

‘It's done!’

That alone was more than enough.

Once, the ant king devoured a sea snail and somewhat coincidentally, absorbed a skill called ‘Paralysis Poison’.

One of the most fatal poisons secreted by the known lifeforms in this world had been transformed into an even more deadly substance within the ant king's body after it became a concentrated mix that contained the magical energy of the host creature.

It was indeed the worst poison imaginable, evolved forcibly by the skill, ‘Gluttony’.

‘You’ve really given me so much trouble, you human b*stard.’

Even the slightest scratch would result in complete paralysis in one’s nervous system within seconds; the victims would lose all sensations in their bodies and lose control of themselves.

The only thing remaining would be to systematically destroy the resistance-less enemy.

“....?”

As if the poison was doing its thing, the human formed a flustered expression.

“This is the power of the true king!”

The ant king smiled widely and smacked the human’s face. However....

Kwahng!!

The human raised his left hand and blocked it.

‘.....??’

The question of how he was still able to move lasted only for a second.

Ka-boooooom!!

The human’s right fist flew in from the other side and struck the ant king so hard that the monster was shoved down to the ground rather unceremoniously.

“Kiiiehk!!”

For the first time ever, a pained yelp shot out from the king’s mouth.

Tti-ring.

Jin-Woo confirmed the System message popping up in his view as that familiar mechanical beep rang out.

[Detoxification has been completed.]

‘I was wondering why it was celebrating all alone, but huh, is this why?’

Maybe that was the case because, for some reason, he could sense that the ant king showed much more panic when he moved without a problem just now.

What a mystifying thing this was.

He wasn’t talking about the all-powerful Buff getting rid of the poison, no, but the fact that he could actually sense the insect-like monster’s emotions.

Before he had realised it, he could sense what other monsters were feeling about.

‘Wait, was it from around the time I fought those High Orcs?’

Back then, he thought that he was able to decipher what those creatures were feeling by looking at their facial expressions and their gestures. However, that ant monster wasn't even what you'd classify as a humanoid creature.

Indeed, that thing had no other facial expressions other than crumpling it in anger.

‘Is this because of my Perception?’

Just as his Stat values had all increased by so much lately, his Perception Stat also had increased by a lot, too. It was possible that some other unknown, hidden abilities to his Stats were unlocked when they went past a certain threshold.

However....

‘...Now isn't the time to think about that, is it?’

Indeed, his priority lay with killing this thing and getting out of this place. Jin-Woo sprinted towards the ant king trying to push itself off from the ground.

‘.....!!’

He could definitely feel the ant king's nervousness on his skin now. His continued pounding resulted in the creature's exoskeleton almost being cracked open. Just a little bit more now!

He thought like so and closed the distance in the blink of an eye, before jumping up slightly in the air. And then, he kicked down.

Kwa-boom!!

However, the ant king had already vanished from the spot. Only the poor ground caved in from the impact.

“Where did it go?!”

“It disappeared??”

While the other Hunters hurriedly searched for the ant king, Jin-Woo calmly looked above him. The monster was flying in the air using its wings.

‘Well, I guess this is convenient.’

Jin-Woo smirked to himself.

What with him being able to sense the monster's fluctuating emotions, searching for its presence had become a step easier now. The emotion of confusion felt had changed to fear, before it changed once more to happiness.

The ant king had changed its strategy now.

'If that human's speciality is his strength, then there's no need to face him head-on.'

The ant king's true weapon was its speed. Even that foolish human who lied and said he was the king of humans, couldn't even react to the ant king's movements and lost his neck.

From the onset, the reason why the creature wanted to use physical strength to suppress the human was a type of desire to show off its kingly powers.

But, right now, the ant king had decided to throw away that selfish reasoning and focus all of its being in this battle from now on.

Shushushuk....

The enlarged body reverted back to its original size, while the claws in its hands grew even longer and sharper, like well-honed blades.

'Its claws....'

Jin-Woo studied the changes taking place in the ant king and realised that the creature would change how it attacked from here onwards.

Shururuk....

Two shortwords he summoned from the Inventory landed in Jin-Woo's hands.

Swiiiiish-!!

The airborne ant king shot down towards Jin-Woo. Its speed was incomparable to only a minute ago.

'.....!!'

Jin-Woo focused his senses.

Time slowed down, and every single movement the monster made entered his vision. In all honesty, Jin-Woo felt most confident when it came down to the contest of speed. He easily deflected the ant king's claw slashing down from above with his shortsword.

The follow-up attacks from the ant king landing on the ground, as well as from Jin-Woo spinning around, clashed violently.

Clang!! Claaaang!! Clang!!

As they exchanged offence and defence countless times, the ant king was now completely beset with unbridled shock.

‘How can this be?!’

The enemy was actually matching its speed. No, it wasn't only that – as the seconds ticked by, his movement speed was actually picking up as if his muscles had finally loosened up sufficiently enough.

‘How... How can such a....’

The ant king had been pushed back during the contest of raw strength, and now it was also being gradually pushed back in the contest of speed, too.

One step, another step....

As the number of retreating steps taken increased, so did the wounds appearing on the exoskeleton. The greater the monster's retreating distance became, the more confident Jin-Woo grew.

‘I can finish this.’

The mental shock this monster, this so-called ant king felt right now, it was being transmitted in full to Jin-Woo. Right now, that monster was greatly shaken up.

Compared to the Demon King Baran, this monster's strength, speed, and abilities fell some ways behind. No, maybe, it was on the same level as the dead Demon King, or even exceeded it in some regards.

Unfortunately, the current Jin-Woo wasn't the same as the Jin-Woo of back then.

Indeed, he had stepped up into a far higher realm with the rewards he had received after completing the Demon's Castle dungeon.

‘Here's the fruit of all my labours.’

Jin-Woo got to fully experience just how much his Stats had grown through this particular opponent. Along with the satisfaction derived from knowing that his Stats had been greatly enhanced now, even more stirring emotions welled up from deep inside his chest.

When the ant king took another step back, Jin-Woo took two steps forward. And then...

‘Vital Spot Targetting!’

Jin-Woo's skill stabbed straight into the ant king's torso.

The ‘Vital Points Targetting’ was a skill that inflicted additional damage if he had managed to stab the enemy's weak spots. With the monster's exoskeleton broken in several places, it was not an exaggeration to say that the creature's entire body was now the so-called weak spot.

Pa-ba-bak!!

Dozens of 'Vital Points Targetting' landed on the hapless monster.

['Skill: Vital Points Targetting' will now be upgraded to the ultimate version, 'Skill: Violent Slash'.]

'...Violent Slash?'

Having unlocked a new skill, Jin-Woo promptly used it.

It was then, his shortswords immediately sought out all of the ant king's openings and, literally in the blink of an eye, slashed out dozens of times.

Tadadadadada!!

"Kiiiiieehhckkk?!"

The ant king screamed out.

As the creature writhed around in pain, Jin-Woo swung his shortsword once more and sliced off its arm.

Slice.

The monster's long, black-coloured arm fell to the ground with a dull thud.

"Kiiehhk!"

By now, the ant king lost all semblance of pride or desire for revenge, and hurriedly fled to the air. Its instinctive desire to survive overruled everything. Unfortunately for it, Jin-Woo didn't allow for one moment of respite.

Sensing the approach of another being, the ant king took a look behind.

'A human... is flying?!'

Jin-Woo flung himself up using the 'Ruler's Reach' skill and proceeded to cut off one of the ant king's wings.

Plop!

The ant king crash-landed in an unsightly manner. During that short time of its fall, the ant king constantly thought about a way to escape from this incredibly dangerous predicament, even though confusion and fear threatened to paralyse it.

'I, I need to come up with something to overwhelm the enemy!'

Physical strength, speed, and even its hidden trump card, 'poison' all failed to work. It couldn't come up with anything.

Did it not possess anything that was better than what that human possessed?

Just before the despair set in, the ant king finally arrived at the right answer. It recalled the one thing that it held an advantage in over the enemy.

And that would be.... the headcount.

There was only one enemy. But the ant king possessed thousands of soldiers. Indeed, didn't it have brave warriors waiting for its orders by the entrance of the chamber right this moment?

The ant king staggered back to its feet, before pointing at Jin-Woo with its one remaining arm.

“Kiiiiieehhkk-!!”

As if they were waiting for that rage-filled screech, the waves upon waves of ants began flooding into the chamber.

‘Take this, human!!’

“Kiiiiieehk!!”

The king continued to screech out. It was to restore its crushed pride, and also to rouse the fighting spirit of its countless soldiers, as well. And so, as it confidently glared at the impudent human....

“...?”

From that side, a black 'wave' was rushing out now.

‘Go!’

Jin-Woo issued an order to his Shadow Soldiers.

The 'Sovereign's Territory' he had activated prior to the battle was still active. The Shadow Soldiers, enhanced a step further by this skill, marched towards the ants at a frightening speed.

Dududududu....!!

The loud footsteps reverberated throughout the ant tunnel.

‘And then.... You come out, too.’

Finally, Jin-Woo summoned Fangs out, as well.

As if it was feeling sheepish for being summoned all alone, Fangs looked around himself and scratched the back of his head. Jin-Woo handed over the Bead of Avarice and warned him in no uncertain terms.

“Aim only at the ants. Only at them. If even a single lick of flames land on the humans sitting over there, I will never summon you out ever again.”

Fangs enthusiastically nodded his head as if he was confident of doing exactly that.

Soon, Fangs grew super-large with the ‘Song of the Giant’ and spewed out that enormous pillar of flames.

Kuwaaaaaaahhhh-!!!

Although he had seen that plenty enough times by now, Jin-Woo couldn’t help but feel impressed by the sight regardless.

‘It’s kinda like his flame pillar is getting bigger every day, isn’t it?’

Was it because his level was also rising up?

Only Jin-Woo could come up with such a reaction since he had seen this spectacle before, but well, other people were thinking of entirely different things.

The Hunters hiding in the far corner holding their breaths while witnessing the battle between Jin-Woo and the ant king could only gasp out in pure astonishment at the emergence of this new ‘monster’.

A rather severe reaction also came out from their midst, too.

“T-that is his summoned creature?! What?! That’s a summon?!”

Im Tae-Gyu pointed at Fangs and raised his voice.

As for the other Hunters, no one could respond to him as their jaws were still resting on the ground at that moment. However, everyone was thinking of roughly the same thing.

How could that thing be classified as a mere summon??

From the way it looked, or the powers it possessed, that thing no longer looked like a simple summoned creature, but a demon king that had descended to this earth.

Whatever the case may have been, that totally nonsensical pillar of flames roasted the swarm of ants like there was no tomorrow.

The ant king began shuddering once more.

‘These... These are that human’s soldiers....??’

Less than one minute later, hundreds of the ant king’s soldiers were evaporated into ash and dust. It wasn’t some metaphor, either. The ant monsters coming into contact with that strange pillar of flames really did evaporate where they stood.

For the first time ever....

The ant king felt true terror towards another being for the first time in its life.

It also sensed an unscalable wall. The ant king finally learned that there was an enemy that couldn't be overcome, regardless of what power it tried to use.

This was a complete defeat, in every sense of the word.

But, how could such a thing be...?

'I was born to fight against the strong humans, so why....'

That was its sole calling. It hurried with its growth for that purpose. It even absorbed human's powers in order to facilitate that goal.

But to think, it still couldn't win against this one human....

The ant king began shivering and turned around to run. It just had to run away far, far away from this human. At least in this very moment, the thoughts of its glorious kingdom and its soldiers had completely disappeared from the ant king's head.

Using the healing skill taken from one of the dead humans, the ant king quickly regenerated its lost wing and took to the air again.

'Even if it's only a little bit further away.....'

But, it happened then.

Khu-woong!

Out of the blue, a powerful force pushed it down and planted the ant king flat on the ground.

"Kiiieehk!!"

It spat out a mouthful of bodily fluid.

Having utilised the skill 'Ruler's Reach' like a flyswatter, Jin-Woo quickly walked over to where the downed ant king was.

'I can't let this guy escape, obviously.'

It was a strong monster. He wanted to turn it into his Shadow Soldier no matter what. But, in order to do that....

'Killing it comes first.'

After discovering Jin-Woo approaching it, the look of sheer terror filled up on the face of the ant king, so much so that the creature looked almost pitiful to the onlookers.

“Kii, kiieehck!!”

In the end, the ant king began crawling on the ground to get away from him. That arrogant, dignified appearance it displayed back when it proceeded to toy around with the Korean Hunters – it was now long, long gone.

“Now you look like a proper insect.”

Jin-Woo closed in quickly, took aim at the back of the ant king, and activated his skill, ‘Vital Points Targetting’ – no, ‘Violent Slash’.

That brought up the message window.

Tti-ring!

[You have killed your enemy.]

[Level up!]

[Level up!]

‘Niiice!’

Jin-Woo clenched his fist. But his celebrations lasted only for a short while.

“Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim!”

He quickly turned around after Baek Yun-Ho called out to him, and found the latter’s complexion to be extremely poor. Jin-Woo quickly ran over to him.

Other Hunters rejoicing at the defeat of the ant king stopped and shifted their gazes over to Baek Yun-Ho, as well.

Meanwhile, Baek Yun-Ho continued to speak to Jin-Woo.

“Hunter Cha Hae-In is....”

Just as his unfinished sentence implied, Cha Hae-In’s vitality had declined so much that it was hard to even sense it now. The situation had deteriorated even further than before.

Jin-Woo’s expression quickly hardened.

Time had almost run out.

Even if he rode on Kaisel, just when would he arrive in his destination and just how long would he take to find a Healer to heal her?

‘I need another way....’

After some brief pondering, Jin-Woo came up with a method to save Cha Hae-In.

He finished checking her complexion and stood back up. He then turned towards the cameraman.

“Can you switch off the camera for a minute or two?”

Chapter 122 Fin.

REPORT

“Excuse me? The camera?”

“Yes.”

The cameraman looked at Jin-Woo with a flustered expression. But, Jin-Woo’s face was solemn, deeply serious, and unmoving.

“But, why the camera, all of a sudden...?”

Jin-Woo remained silent at the flustered cameraman’s question.

“...”

The cameraman couldn’t come to a decision here. Hunter Seong Jin-Woo was indeed his saviour. He’d gladly heed that man’s request, especially when he was also saving the lives of others here, too.

‘However, to ask me to switch the camera off....’

It wouldn’t be an exaggeration to say that every South Korean citizen must be watching this broadcast, right now. As a broadcaster, he found it hard to press the ‘off’ button on his camera under the current situation.

When he began hesitating like that, Jin-Woo chose to not waste any more time, and spoke up.

“If you don’t, I’ll just break it.”

Hearing Jin-Woo’s icy tone of voice, the cameraman flinched grandly. If Hunter Seong Jin-Woo decided to break the camera, then would the combined efforts of the Hunters present here even be enough to stop him?

The ‘why’ no longer mattered as he was left with no choice in the matter anymore.

“I-I understand. Hold on.”

The cameraman removed the head-mounted camera and switched the device off. After confirming the ‘power’ light of the camera was gone, Jin-Woo took Cha Hae-In back from Baek Yun-Ho.

‘I didn’t want to scare the cameraman, but....’

It couldn’t be helped if he wanted to save Cha Hae-In.

While holding her, Jin-Woo quickly scanned his vicinity. He then took a couple of deep breaths and closed his eyes.

‘What is he trying to do now?’

The attention of the Hunters were all gathered on him now. Soon, he opened his eyes. Finding the location of what he was searching for, Jin-Woo suddenly turned around and headed deeper into the ant tunnel.

His steps were brisk, but he never broke into a full-blown sprint in consideration of Cha Hae-In’s current condition. Others dazedly stared at his back, before quickly recovering their wits to run after him.

Finally, Jin-Woo came to a stop and cautiously put Cha Hae-In down. He then began removing the pile of ant corpses from around her.

“Heok!!”

Discovering something rather unexpected, the cameraman was the first one to gasp out in surprise.

“Mm....”

Other Hunters also let a stunned gasp to leak out from their mouths. Because, the cold, headless body of Min Byung-Gu was there. It was a gruesome sight to behold, where there was literally nothing above his neck area.

Only then did they venture to guess why Hunter Seong Jin-Woo demanded for the camera to be cut off. No one out there would want to witness that horrible scene, after all.

“Keuk.”

The closest person to Min Byung-Gu out of everyone present here, Baek Yun-Ho, squeezed his eyes shut and turned his head away. But then...

‘Wait a minute...’

He suddenly thought of something.

‘How did Hunter Seong Jin-Woo find where Byung-Gu was among all these dead monsters?’

The answer arrived soon enough in his mind.

Without the aid of a special skill, such a thing wouldn’t have been possible. The magic energy emission coming from humans and monsters were minutely different, but Jin-Woo was able to differentiate between the two and managed to locate Min Byung-Gu’s corpse before the emission from him completely dissipated.

If true, then that could only be described as an astonishing sensory perception. Such a task would be impossible even for Baek Yun-Ho's 'Eyes of the Beast', which was supposed to be a specialised trait meant for that kind of job.

After his thoughts reached up to this point, Baek Yun-Ho shifted his head back in the direction of Jin-Woo. Even at the risk of the final appearance of Byung-Gu being deeply etched in his nightmares, Baek Yun-Ho wanted to witness with his own two eyes just what would happen next.

'Hunter Seong Jin-Woo.... Just what are you trying to do?'

Cold sweat drops formed on his forehead as he alternated his gaze between Jin-Woo, Min Byung-Gu, and Cha Hae-In.

In the meantime, Jin-Woo took a closer look at the status of Min Byung-Gu. The black smokes were rising up from the corpse. Meaning, it was possible to perform the 'Shadow Extraction' on it.

And, sure enough....

Tti-ring.

[It is possible to perform Shadow Extraction on the selected target.]

The familiar mechanical beep and the System's message informed him in such a 'friendly' way that what he wanted to do was, well, doable.

Of course, Jin-Woo was cognisant of the fact that Hunter Min Byung-Gu could be turned into a Shadow Soldier the moment he heard of the latter meeting an unfortunate fate.

Only that he didn't feel like doing it.

To turn a blameless guy into an undead and use him as a soldier.... Even if the corpse belonged to a rank S Hunter, he'd still reject the idea outright. That was not something a human being should do. However...

Jin-Woo stared at Cha Hae-In's gradually paling face.

'...This is the best way.'

What if, in a situation where every second counted, he could entrust the gravely injured to the best Healer in South Korea? What was there to even think about here?

If the decision was left up to Min Byung-Gu himself, he'd have made the same call 100 times out of 100. Jin-Woo formed a solemn expression and issued an order to the shadow.

"Rise up."

However, the end result was different from what he expected.

Tti-ring!

[The Shadow Extraction has failed.]

Confusion and anxiety began entering Jin-Woo's expression.

Was this because the skill level was too low compared to the target's Stat values? Or, was it because he wasn't really feeling it with this particular Shadow Extraction?

Jin-Woo quickly shook off all distracting thoughts. And then, spoke up once more, his voice now containing his will.

"Rise up."

The desirable changes took place, then.

Uaaaaahhhh—!

A low, heavy sound that could be described as either a victorious roar or a scream resounded out from the distant somewhere, and an eerie wind suddenly swept past everyone. The eyes of the Hunters were shot open in shock as the creeping chill crawled down their spines.

"Oh, my god!!"

"That, isn't that...?!"

From Min Byung-Gu's shadow, a black hand rose up. As if it didn't want to go back inside the shadow again, the black hand powerfully grabbed the ground. And then, it began pulling itself out from the darkness.

'How, how can this be?!'

Baek Yun-Ho felt as if his heart would explode from what he was seeing right now. Other people might not see it, but his eyes clearly captured everything.

Min Byung-Gu's magic energy rising up from his shadow was slowly solidifying into the shape of a person. More specifically, a soldier decked out in jet-black armour.

And soon, the so-called 'summoned' creature finally revealed itself.

"...."

The Hunters were rendered utterly speechless and dazedly stared at the new summoned creature of Jin-Woo. And from this creature, they could sense the kind of magical energy that could only be felt from a top-ranked Hunter.

‘No, wait a minute...?’

The quick-witted Choi Jong-In flinched grandly in realisation as his brows shot up.

As everyone watched with bated breaths, Jin-Woo’s calm eyes were studying the shadow of Min Byung-Gu. When their gazes met, the new Shadow Soldier nodded his head.

The moment a shadow was transformed into one of his soldiers, it would immediately form a mental link with Jin-Woo. They would know what their sovereign wanted from them. Without needing any further orders, Min Byung-Gu’s shadow knelt down and began casting healing magic on Cha Hae-In.

Wuuoonngg...

As soon as the warm rays of light escaped from the Shadow Soldier’s hands, Cha Hae-In’s pale complexion began recovering gradually. This was the top level healing magic at work.

‘I knew it!!’

Choi Jung-Hoon was properly freaking out now. He was completely sure of his guesses, now that he had seen those lights heal Cha Hae-In. The identity of that black ‘soldier’ was none other than Min Byung-Gu!

By then, other Hunters were also beginning to realise what was going on here.

Mah Dong-Wook hadn’t been able to shut his slack jaw from the moment that black hand rose up from Min Byung-Gu’s shadow, but now, he was able to collect himself enough to finally express his astonishment.

“Instructor Seong, you... weren’t an ordinary Summoner, I see.”

Jin-Woo neither agreed or denied it.

However, just what kind of people were they, to begin with? Every single one of them was an excellent Hunter who each represented the largest Guilds in South Korea. They didn’t need to hear a confirmation to understand the gist of it.

“By any chance... Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim, you can utilise the powers of the deceased?”

Choi Jong-In asked with a nervous tension writ large on his face.

Jin-Woo simply nodded his head, once. Now that he found himself here, there was no more reason to hide his powers, nor did he want to mask it with lies, either.

‘Well, it’s not like these folks will fall for some random lies I cook up on the spot, anyway.’

Actually, he felt as if a load was taken off his shoulders now that he had revealed his powers to someone else.

Other people might fear it, but to Jin-Woo, he’d feel eternally grateful towards this power for helping him get to where he was. He was proud of the power of the Shadow Sovereign.

Seeing that confident look on Jin-Woo’s face, other Hunters began to fear the extent of his powers.

‘He can summon creatures using the powers of the deceased??’

‘Wouldn’t he become stronger and stronger as the battle becomes fiercer? What a scary ability this is....’

‘I don’t even know what to say anymore.’

To these Hunters, having bore witness to Jin-Woo’s ability today, this revelation left different types of impressions.

However, Baek Yun-Ho was privy to one more piece of secret info that others didn’t know.

‘Not only can his own powers continue to grow stronger, but he can also even control his vanquished enemies as his own summoned creatures. Wouldn’t that mean.....’

Hunter Seong Jin-Woo’s current level of power had already reached an unfathomable degree. But when Baek Yun-Ho thought about the kind of strength the youth would possess in the future, his entire body began shuddering uncontrollably.

Suddenly, the cameraman spoke up as if he remembered something just then.

“Ah! Then the reason why you requested the camera to be turned off was because....”

This power was capable of making the nation’s top Hunters scared. Anyone could’ve easily guessed the reason why Jin-Woo didn’t want to reveal such a power to the rest of the country.

It was around then that Min Byung-Gu’s shadow stood back up. The treatment process must’ve been finished, because there was a hint of crimson colour gently glowing on Hunter Cha Hae-In’s face.

‘Whew-woo....’

After confirming her status, Jin-Woo sighed out in relief. Although she was still unconscious, her breathing and her heartbeat had returned to normal. As a matter of fact, her wounds were completely healed now.

Jin-Woo patted the shoulder of Min Byung-Gu’s shadow. That was the gesture of appreciation for the job well done.

‘.....’

Jin-Woo guessed what kind of person Min Byung-Gu must’ve been when he was still alive, from the gentle eyes of the Shadow Soldier looking back at him.

Jin-Woo slowly took his hand away from the shoulder, and then...

‘Extraction cancellation.’

With a slight smile on his lips, he let the shadow return to the abyss.

No matter what, he didn’t possess the right to lord over this man as one of his soldiers, when Min Byung-Gu even sacrificed his life to fight against the monster threats. Indeed, he thought that such an act was not fitting for a fallen hero.

‘...Let’s get out of here.’

Putting aside the slight regret in his heart, Jin-Woo picked up Cha Hae-In from the ground.

After losing their two leaders – the queen and the king – the ant monsters scattered and fled to the ends of the island in order to hide from the Shadow Soldiers. The ant tunnel, once filled to the brim with ants, was now completely empty.

Jin-Woo took several steps forward before looking behind him to speak to other Hunters.

“Let’s get going.”

Their bodies and physical fatigue might have been recovered to some extent from the potions they ingested, but their mental fatigue had almost reached a breaking point by now. So, when they heard his suggestion, the expressions of the Hunters brightened up considerably.

It was now finally over.

Their smile-filled faces perfectly expressed their current emotions.

After they safely got out from the ant tunnel, they found a helicopter hovering in the air, having arrived in their location just now with an exquisite sense of timing.

“There they are! Hunters are coming out!”

“Yes!! Well done!”

The helicopter carefully descended and landed on the ground after its occupants discovered the exact location of the Hunters. The tired Hunters entered the vehicle one by one until only two people remained.

They were Jin-Woo and Baek Yun-Ho.

Jin-Woo was standing closer to the helicopter. He carefully handed Cha Hae-In over to Baek Yun-Ho.

“What are you doing, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim?”

“I still have some unfinished business to take care of on this island.”

Hearing that, Baek Yun-Ho could only smirk softly.

There were still plenty of ant monsters that had escaped death roaming around on the Jeju Island. If some other people said that they wanted to remain here, then Baek Yun-Ho would’ve questioned their sanity, but the man in front of his eyes was definitely not included in that group.

To fight monsters, you needed a monster.

Baek Yun-Ho thought that he wouldn’t get surprised anymore regardless of what Jin-Woo was planning to do on this island.

“Excuse me.”

Before leaving the island, Baek Yun-Ho threw out one last question.

“Byung-Gu.... No, wait. What will happen to the summoned creature that came out from Byung-Gu? Will he... stay as your soldier and continue to fight on?”

Jin-Woo shook his head.

“I’ve cancelled the summoning. It won’t be possible to see him again.”

Baek Yun-Ho nodded his head and formed a content smile.

“That’s a relief.”

“Pardon?”

“That guy, he... really hated fighting, you know? I’m sure that he’s thanking you right now, wherever he is.”

And so, the six warriors and one cameraman who had bravely fought on finally left the island of Jeju.

Their fight was over. However, it was merely another beginning for Jin-Woo.

‘I need only one more level up to hit 100.’

He’d get there no problem, considering the number of remaining monsters on this island. And besides, there were plenty of shadows waiting to be extracted back inside the ant tunnel, as well.

So, then – should he get started now?

‘First of all, I should take care of the ants that had run away....’

Jin-Woo formed a deep smile and summoned Kaisel out.

Inside the Japanese Hunter’s Association.

The Association President Matsumoto Shigeo switched the giant TV screen off, his expression one of deep sorrow and defeat. A monster strong enough to instantly annihilate ten of the best Hunters from Japan, was killed off by a single Hunter from South Korea.

‘How come, why, what is....?’

Matsumoto Shigeo’s trembling hands began tearing at what little hair remained on the side of his head.

A completely illogical event had unfolded in front of his eyes just now.

Thanks to that, Japan’s total combat potential had declined by over half, and even his position as the Association President was under threat now. If the Koreans also failed, then he might have tried to come up with some vague excuses to gloss over this whole thing, and then ask the international community for their help, but....

Not only had the Koreans managed to kill the ant queen, they even escaped safely from the clutches of the thousands of ant monsters as well as that mutated freak of an ant, too.

Seong Jin-Woo.

That one Hunter was responsible for smashing everything apart.

‘Seong Jin-Woo... Seong Jin-Woo.....’

Inexplicably, the contents of the phone call he shared with Goto Ryuji while the latter was still in Korea played back in his mind.

[“In South Korea.... There’s an incredible Hunter in South Korea.”]

["More than you?"]

["More than likely, sir."]

["....."]

["I think there's a need to modify our plan a little bit, sir."]

If only.

If only he paid attention to what Goto Ryuji was saying back then.

Wasn't he the most knowledgeable person when it came to understanding the differences of strength in Hunters? For the first time ever, such a man had assessed a Korean Hunter as "incredible", yet why did he.....

'Why was I so arrogant....?'

If they had completely analysed the capabilities of Seong Jin-Woo beforehand, they might have cooperated with the Koreans in good faith, and resolved everything without a single problem.

No, wait. Even if the Japanese didn't do anything, the Koreans might have stepped forward themselves to take care of the problem, instead.

But then, he ended up digging his own grave just because he resorted to underhanded schemes.

"A-Association President? Sir?"

Seeing how wane his face had become, the Association employee next to him began asking in a worried voice. However, Matsumoto Shigeo didn't bother to raise his head and simply waved his hand to dismiss the employee.

The employee bowed his head and left the office as if he was running away.

Matsumoto Shigeo's expression crumpled unsightly.

'There can only be one way out of this for me.'

And that would be to raise the Japanese Association back on its feet, and make it stronger than ever before. In order to do so, he needed just one man.

'Seong Jin-Woo....'

No matter what, he must reel that man in. With Goto Ryuji dying in vain like that, there was only one way to revitalise the Japanese Hunter's Association.

The entirety of Korea's citizens would have witnessed live the grand feats of Hunter Seong Jin-Woo so it would not be easy, but well, there was already precedence of a top Hunter abandoning South Korea, which meant there was still hope.

‘What should I do to reel Hunter Seong Jin-Woo over to this side?’

Matsumoto Shigeo’s brain, momentarily frozen from despair, began spinning rapidly again.

The Eastern United States.

Ringgg.... Ringgg.... Ringgg....

The phone rang endlessly off the hook.

Unable to endure that racket any longer, David Brennan angrily snatched at the receiver.

‘Which insane motherf*cker is calling me at this time of the night?!’

He was the director of the most powerful organisation in the States, the Hunter Bureau. Promising himself to find the son of a b*tch regardless of the method or cost and throw him in a jail cell if this turned out to be a prank call, he answered the call in a testy voice.

Click.

“Who is this?”

“Deputy....?”

David Brennan’s sleep flew away the moment he heard that familiar voice and he raised his torso up.

“It’s already pretty late. What’s the matter?”

“A video...?”

When he checked his mobile phone, there were seven missed calls as well as a video file. It seemed that he missed them all because he had muted the phone before going to bed.

“I understand. I’ll give you a call after watching the clip.”

“.....What do you mean by that?”

“What?”

David Brennan jumped up from the bed and took a look at the alarm sitting on the bedside bureau. It said ‘04:12 AM’.

He discarded the phone on the bed and ran towards the bedroom window to take a look, and indeed, the deputy director was waiting for him outside the front of the house with his car parked right there. Once their gazes met, the deputy director nodded his greeting.

David Brennan stared back somewhat dumbfounded, his head tilting to the side, before turning around.

‘What’s going on?’

Sensing that something big must’ve happened, he picked his phone up, the video clip still waiting to be played on the device.

Chapter 123 Fin.

Source: WEBNOVEL

REPORT

The video clip finally finished playing on the phone.

“...”

The footage of a raid taking place in a small nation to the Far East left a pretty hefty mental shock to David Brennan, the director of America’s Hunter Bureau.

“What do you think?”

The deputy director cautiously asked his boss. And the director was quick with his reply.

“Never mind what I think, aren’t you here in these early hours because you already know what I’m about to say? Am I right?”

That was indeed true.

It was already an uncommon occurrence for the director of the mighty Hunter Bureau and his deputy to have a meeting at four in the morning, but then, their meeting place also happened to be the kitchen of the director’s private residence, as well.

A heavy silence descended between two men sitting opposite side of the dining table.

Puff, puff....

The director replayed the video one more time as he sucked on his cigarette. He was still getting shocked by what he was watching. Especially when he got to the part where the Hunter summoned out black ‘soldiers’ to sweep away the swarm of ants, the director’s entire body shuddered noticeably.

‘.....’

What could anyone say after viewing this crazy video?

And so, as he continued sucking on another cigarette in silence....

The director’s wife came down from the upstairs bedroom in search of her missing husband, and called out his name after spotting the light in the kitchen.

“Dave? Is everything alright?”

When the director wordlessly gestured with his hand, the wife looked at him worriedly for a moment or two before going back to the bedroom.

Exactly three cigarettes later, the director quietly opened his mouth.

“What a waste of talent to be confined in a small country like South Korea.”

“I agree.”

“What do we know about him?”

The deputy director readily brought out a file containing all the pertinent information related to Seong Jin-Woo. The director scanned the files and formed a satisfied smile.

“Very good.”

It had been less than an hour since the raid came to an end on the island of Jeju in the country far, far east, yet the related data was already in his hands. Not only that, the file contained everything from that Hunter’s type as well as his close associates and relatives, too.

Now, this was the power of the United States, the Hunter ‘superpower’ in the world.

On the other side of the table, the deputy was smiling inwardly to himself.

‘We got lucky on this one.’

Sure, the swiftness of the American intelligence network was one thing, but luck played a big part, as well. To be more precise, the ‘Seong Il-Hwan’ incident.

An existence that could either be a human or a monster in disguise exited from a dungeon and claimed that he was a Korean Hunter. The data compiled back then still remained in the database of the Hunter Bureau.

In the current situation where no other nation even knew what his name was – with the exception of South Korea, of course – the Americans were able to get two steps ahead of everyone else.

‘God bless America.’

Indeed, if this wasn’t the heavens helping them out, then what was?

However, it wouldn’t do to get all worked up over a minor lucky coincidence like this one. No, it all depended on the abilities of the individuals involved when it came to turning a lucky coincidence into a genuine opportunity.

The deputy formed a pretty serious expression.

“His father went missing in a Gate, but he still hasn’t received any proper compensation until now.”

“H-mm....”

“And also, before he went through a Re-Awakening process, he risked death countless times to pay for his mother’s hospital fees.”

“....What an inconceivable tale that is.”

How could they treat the wife and the son of a hero this badly, when he lost his life fighting against monsters all for the sake of his nation? Such a thing was completely unimaginable in the US.

“And well, this isn’t confirmed information, but...”

The director lifted his gaze off from the files. The deputy took his time to build suspense and finally murmured out.

“Apparently, he hasn’t signed up with any Guilds yet.”

“.....!!”

Now that piece of news managed to perk up the director’s ears even more. He closed the file with a sombre expression on his face.

“This is a different matter altogether from Hwang Dong-Su’s case.”

When that familiar name was mentioned, the glint in the deputy’s eyes changed.

“Taking away two rank S Hunters from a single country.... That’d be akin to declaring that we are turning our backs on that particular nation.”

South Korea and America had been allied nations for a very long time. What the director was implying here was that the impact of this matter would mushroom into something rather substantial in the near future.

However, the deputy replied with a confident tone of voice.

“Even still..... Don’t you think he’s a talent worth all that trouble?”

“...”

Of course.

The director couldn’t deny that. So, he answered with a question, instead.

“Can you do it?”

The deputy answered with the exact same words he used back during the Hwang Dong-Su's case.

“I’ll do my best.”

Because of those four words, the deputy was able to quickly climb the career ladder to get to where he was now. As for the man that the deputy director had locked his sights on...

The United States of America already boasted two of the most powerful Hunters in the world, the so-called ‘Special Authority-ranks’ in their roster, but even then, the director David Brennan wanted to naturalise that youth as an American citizen.

The director placed his fourth cigarette of the morning in his lips and spoke in a grave tone of voice.

“Regardless of what conditions he puts forth, you will bring him over to this side.”

Jin-Woo rode on the back of Kaisal to hunt down and kill every single ant monster his Shadow Soldiers missed the first time around.

Kiieehhk!!

Yet another ant fell after getting struck by the skill, Dagger Throw. Jin-Woo didn't bother to step down from Kaisal and simply used the skill, Ruler's Reach, to easily retrieve his shortsword.

‘I must be pretty close to levelling up now.’

There weren't that many ants left to be found on the island. Jin-Woo really preferred that he'd get to level up by killing the remaining ants in this place.

First of all, just a single level up would take him to level 100. For Jin-Woo, who loved to see numbers ending in the multiples of five, 100 was such a fantastic level that he simply had to get there as soon as possible.

Since he hadn't booked any Gates, once he leaves Jeju Island he wouldn't have any other avenues to earn experience points for a while. As long as he didn't get lucky and another key to an instant dungeon popped out of the random boxes, or a dungeon break occurred near where he lived, of course.

‘Wait, it's not cool to think of a dungeon break as being lucky, is it.’

If a dungeon break occurred, then that meant one or more teams had failed in their raids. So, to him, it was far more preferable to get to level 100 in this place.

And, if there was another reason for doing so, then....

He ended up recalling a painful memory while trying to extract Hunter Min Byung-Gu's shadow.

The leader of the White Phantoms, Baruka.

After failing three times to extract his shadow, Jin-Woo couldn't convert him into his Shadow Soldier.

When he failed in his first attempt earlier in the day, his heart fell to the pit of his stomach, as the thoughts of 'Am I going to have another episode like that' filled his head.

'Well, I did manage somehow to succeed on my second try, but still...'

Wasn't this the case of 'A burnt child fears fire'?

There was no guarantee that the same thing as Baruka wouldn't happen later when trying to extract the ant king's shadow. That guy's Stat values were so high that comparing Hunter Min Byung-Gu to that monster was a time-wasting gesture.

Even if it was by a small margin, Jin-Woo wanted to increase his odds of successfully extracting that guy's shadow by raising his level. He was sure that, although there was only one level difference, it would definitely help out his cause.

'...Uh?'

After discovering something on the ground, Jin-Woo ordered Kaisal to land.

Kiihkh!

Kaisal flapped its wings and lightly landed on the ground. Jin-Woo climbed down from his back and scanned his surroundings.

'It was around here....'

He rummaged through the tall grasses, before discovering the corpses lying there hidden. A deep frown immediately formed on his face. He had discovered the bodies of the Japanese Hunters, lying here and there. There were several with their heads missing, but there was also one that got mangled beyond recognition, as well.

Jin-Woo took a closer look at the bodies.

'Pretty strong magic energy....'

Without a doubt, these people were strong. They didn't look like they would die in this place in such a manner. The fact that they did die so gruesomely could only mean that an extremely powerful 'something' had paid them a visit.

‘Probably the handiwork of that mutated ant....’

He was unconvinced that something else was responsible for this massacre. Well, when he was struck for the first time by the ant king, his jaw stung pretty sharply, didn't it? If it were any other Hunters, they wouldn't have been able to endure it even once.

Jin-Woo looked around the ground while feeling somewhat bitter, before his steps came to a halt on a certain spot.

‘This aura....’

Jin-Woo crouched down and took a closer look at the ground. The soil here was all muddy and sticky from a prodigious amount of blood having soaked the earth. A faint trace of magical energy emanated from the wet ground. He had encountered this magic energy emission once before.

‘.....Goto Ryuji.’

Jin-Woo searched his vicinity again. Goto's magic energy could still be felt, but his remains were nowhere to be seen. Most likely, he had been completely devoured by the mutated ant monster.

“Tsk, tsk.”

Jin-Woo could only tut to himself at the ultimately meaningless death of Japan's strongest Hunter, before standing back up again. With excellent timing, the Shadow Soldiers he dispatched to the all corners of the island reported back to him that the remnants of the ant monsters had been completely exterminated.

‘...In the end, I killed them all, huh.’

Every Korean citizen would 100 times out of 100 cry out in elation from that news, but Jin-Woo could only lick his lower lip in disappointment. Because, his level didn't go up in the end.

Now that there were no more monsters remaining, he figured that the only thing left to do would be to go back inside the ant tunnel to extract the shadows of the mutated ant and the queen. But then....

....His steps came to an abrupt halt.

‘Wait a second... there are still monsters remaining?’

His extended senses picked up the presences of monsters from nearby. Not only that, there were so many, too!

A smile quickly bloomed on Jin-Woo's face to replace the look of disappointment. He lightly jumped back up on Kaisel.

“Let’s go!”

Just as expected....

Jin-Woo’s expression brightened greatly as soon as he stepped inside the nursery area. There were countless eggs lining up the floor, pillars, and even the ceiling.

Seeing that there were wiggling movements from underneath the semi-transparent shells, these things were definitely monsters, too.

‘Not sure how much experience points I will get here, but...’

But then again, with this many monsters here, he was sure of making up for the lacking amount of experience points. Jin-Woo summoned out the Shadow Soldiers specialised in wide-range attacks.

“Gather around.”

Fangs and three Magic Soldiers stood in line, according to their grades.

Jin-Woo handed over the Bead of Avarice over to Fangs, and studied each of the four soldiers in turn.

“You all understand what you need to do, right?”

The Magic Soldiers all nodded their heads in unison. Jin-Woo pointed at the eggs.

“Begin.”

Right away, Fangs grew to an incredible height and spat out the horrifying flames at the eggs. The other Magic Soldiers finished chanting their magic and began chucking large balls of flames here and there as well.

Kuwaaahhhh-!

KWABOOM!!

Boom!!

Eggs had no means of resisting, and in no time at all, began to burn up and explode one by one.

Kiiehhhk!

Jin-Woo took a closer look at one of the dead ant larvae leaning against the corner of the broken egg. He discovered the corpse of an ant, near adulthood, just below the melted-down shell of the larva. As it turned out, every single one of them he saw sported a pair of wings, without exceptions.

‘If these things reached maturity and crossed the ocean with that mutated ant in the lead, then....’

Even though the queen was successfully subjugated, both South Korea and Japan would’ve suffered tremendous losses.

What a relief that he was able to stop that from becoming reality.

BLAM!!

Boom!!

Jin-Woo noticed that his boys were breaking out in buckets of sweat, and summoned the Demon King’s Longsword out from the Inventory.

‘Should I have a go with this one?’

Every time he moved this cool-looking blue-coloured longsword, arcs of electricity crackled up from the blade itself. He had stored it inside the Inventory after defeating the Demon King Baran back in the Demon’s Castle. There was a reason why he brought this longsword out instead of his main weapons, the daggers/shortswords.

....Because of the added magic attribute of the longsword.

Swish-!

When Jin-Woo energetically swung the sword....

Bzzzzz-!!!

Lightning crackled boisterously all over the place and caused the blue-coloured storm to kick up.

‘Ohhh!’

A wide smile formed on Jin-Woo’s face.

Although he couldn’t recreate the destructive might or the added ‘Stun’ effect as displayed by the Demon King, it was still more than enough to burn these ant eggs, that’s for sure.

‘Isn’t it too wasteful to leave inside the Inventory?’

Because he was already far too familiar with the daggers, he would probably never use this sword again in the near future, but still, he felt that this weapon was too good to be left forgotten inside his Inventory.

And so.... just how long did he spend wrestling with these eggs?

Eventually, he got to hear the familiar and very welcoming mechanical beep.

Tti-ring.

[Level up!]

‘Finally!’

Jin-Woo cried out in elation. Inwardly, of course.

He immediately returned the Demon King’s Longsword back inside the Inventory and headed straight to the ant queen’s chamber, leaving the mop-up operation to his Shadow Soldiers.

He found the mutated ant monster still lying dead on the same spot. Jin-Woo stood next to it.

His heart was already pounding hard from his intense desire to turn this mutated ant into his Shadow Soldier.

However....

He had learned that the power of concentration was critically important during his attempts to extract Hunter Min Byung-Gu’s shadow.

‘I gotta calm down.’

Gradually, Jin-Woo’s gaze grew colder, and his breathing regained its usual calmness as well.

‘.....Okay, good.’

His condition was now back to its peak.

Jin-Woo’s gaze shifted lower to the ground. Thicker and greatly more ominous black smoke compared to other monsters were oozing out of the mutated ant’s corpse.

Was this because the creature was so extraordinarily strong? So strong that Jin-Woo didn’t even know who to compare it to?

While thinking like that, he calmly extended his hands out towards the rising black smoke.

“Rise up.”

REPORT

Right at that moment....

The light within the ant queen's chamber suddenly dimmed and brightened back up over and over again, as if it was being illuminated by a dying fluorescent light bulb.

Jin-Woo raised his head. The large ball of light that Choi Jong-In floated up on the ceiling to help with the ant queen raid was flickering noticeably now.

'Is the magic about to come undone?'

At first, he absentmindedly thought like that.

However, it hadn't even an hour since the Korean Hunters stepped foot inside this chamber. So, how could the spell be dissipating already? Not only that, wasn't it a spell cast by a rank S Mage so he and his colleagues could safely carry out this potentially deadly raid?

There was no way such a thing could be true. In that case....

'.....Could it be?'

Could the Shadow Extraction he performed on the mutated ant be the cause? Just as this thought entered his mind....

Paht-!

The surroundings became completely dark.

He'd still be able to see around him thanks to his Perception Stat if there had been a sliver, a trace of light coming in from somewhere. But this all-encompassing darkness didn't even permit that.

It must've been a second or two later.

The darkness lingered on only for a briefest of brief moments before receding away – to reveal the mutated ant standing right in front of his eyes.

'.....!!'

Jin-Woo flinched grandly and took a step back.

If it weren't for the System message saying "Shadow Extraction was a success" appearing almost at the same time, he might have lashed out while thinking that the ant had come back to life or some such.

“Whew.... That surprised me.”

Jin-Woo spat out a sigh of relief.

Now that he calmly took another look at the creature from a step away, it sure did look a bit different from when it was still alive. From its body, streams of black smoke were continuously rising up.

‘So, this is that ant monster’s shadow....’

He couldn’t tell just how much of its original Stats had changed, but at least, the ominous aura it gave off seemed to have gone up a few levels. Jin-Woo stood before the ant’s shadow. He could clearly feel its enormous magic energy reserve.

The mutated ant becoming his soldier finally felt real to him now that he could stand right before the creature and sense its magical energy like this.

‘Hmm....’

He wanted to remain calm, but the corners of his lips continued to curl upwards.

Ba-dump, ba-dump, ba-dump!

His heart was pounding away madly like a child who got his hands on a toy he so badly wished to own.

Soon, the shadow’s information popped up in his view. Jin-Woo’s eyes narrowed to a slit as he read the info floating above the shadow’s head.

[?? Lv.1]

Commander grade

Jin-Woo began clenching his fists tightly after confirming its grade. A new one just made its appearance. Which could only mean this guy possessed the kind of power that was on another realm compared to his other soldiers.

‘Well, that’s obvious when considering its original abilities while it was still alive....’

Just the name of the new grade alone implied that this soldier was not your average, common soldier. This was the fruit of his labour for having worked so hard to own this shadow. It was then.

Shu-wook.

The shadow knelt down after meeting his gaze with Jin-Woo’s. Without a doubt, the ‘absolute loyalty’ that affected all the other Shadow Soldiers also applied to this guy, as well.

'Nice.'

stop, the ant queen.

Jin-Woo formed a satisfied smile and turned around. But, then....

"Oh, my king...."

Jin-Woo's steps came to an abrupt halt after he heard that voice coming from behind him. He never thought that he'd got scared that easily, but at least in this moment, he did feel like his heart had taken a nasty tumble down to the pit of his stomach.

....Could it have been auditory hallucination?

Jin-Woo looked behind him. Even without doing that, he could tell with his acute senses that there was nothing there besides the ant's shadow. That shadow was still kneeling on the ground, his head deeply bowed.

'.....'

Jin-Woo studied the shadow as he slowly turned around.

"Was it you?"

The shadow opened its mouth as if he was waiting for this moment.

"Please grant me... a name....."

Although it sounded a little inarticulate, the ant's shadow was definitely speaking back to him.

The helicopter containing the Hunters headed straight back to the city of Seoul.

Tatatatatata-!

The Association President Goh Gun-Hui had been anxiously waiting for their arrival, so when the helicopter landed on the landing pad located on the Hunters Association, he quickly went over personally and opened the vehicle's door.

"How is Cha Hae-In Hunter-nim's condition?"

The gazes of the Hunters all shifted towards where Cha Hae-In was. She still hadn't recovered her consciousness yet, and was lying on top of a blanket laid out on the helicopter's floor.

"Hurry! This way!"

Two rank A Healers, waiting just outside the landing pad, hurriedly sprinted forward as soon as Goh Gun-Hui issued his order. But, when they began checking out her condition,

“...??”

“...??”

They exchanged puzzled glances with each other.

“What’s going on?”

When Goh Gun-Hui asked them, they answered almost at the same time, making it hard to tell who was the first to open his mouth.

“She’s not injured anywhere.”

“She’s perfectly normal.”

“Are you saying that there’s no need to treat Hunter Cha now?”

The Healers nodded their heads. They also explained themselves a bit further.

“Not sure who did it, but truly incredible healing magic was cast on her. Because of that, we don’t need to do anything here, sir.”

Goh Gun-Hui was feeling genuinely flustered now.

When he last confirmed Cha Hae-In’s condition through the live broadcast, her injuries looked quite severe. And also from a report he received, her condition was so bad that she failed to regain her consciousness until now.

That was why he had urgently searched for and found a couple of rank A Healers, and had them on standby here. But now...

‘There’s no need to heal her?’

Goh Gun-Hui swept his gaze all over the unmoving Cha Hae-In. For sure, her complexion didn’t look so bad. It was almost as if she was fast asleep.

Just what transpired after the camera was turned off?

Goh Gun-Hui tilted his head in confusion.

‘They didn’t have a Healer over there, too....’

After all, their sole Healer, Min Byung-Gu, met with a grisly fate, didn’t he?

Goh Gun-Hui asked the team leader, Mah Dong-Wook.

“Just what happened back there, Hunter Mah?”

“That is....”

As Mah Dong-Wook fell into a dilemma, wondering how he should go about explain this situation, one of the Healers hurriedly shouted out.

“She’s waking up!”

Everyone’s attention was focused on her in an instant. Goh Gun-Hui carefully sat down near her head and asked her.

“Cha Hunter-nim, can you hear me?”

Cha Hae-In slowly opened her eyes.

“Where....?”

“You’re inside the helicopter. Currently, it’s landed on the Hunters Association, and we are planning to escort you to the hospital very soon.”

“A hospital....”

Cha Hae-In briefly looked around her, before taking a deep breath. The scent of Hunter Seong Jin-Woo had permeated throughout her body. She stared at Goh Gun-Hui with unfocused eyes.

“....Did Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim show up there?”

She was supposed to be unconscious all this time, so when she mentioned Seong Jin-Woo’s name, other Hunters were all inwardly taken by surprise. Instead of a verbal answer, Goh Gun-Hui slowly nodded his head.

A thin smile formed on Cha Hae-In’s face.

‘I knew it... it wasn’t a dream.’

Cha Hae-In had briefly woken up, but she fell back into a deep slumber again. After confirming that her breathing was stable, Goh Gun-Hui ordered his subordinates to take her to the hospital, so she could get some much-needed rest.

Only then did he notice that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo wasn’t in the helicopter. He shifted his gaze back to Mah Dong-Wook.

“By the way, where is Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim?”

Having heard that question from the side, Baek Yun-Ho quickly butted in to provide an answer.

“Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, he... chose to stay behind.”

“What do you mean, stay behind?”

Goh Gun-Hui formed an expression of someone who couldn’t understand.

As far as he knew, this helicopter fitted with the magic energy engine flew non-stop from Jeju Island to get to this place.

It didn't make any pitstops in the middle of the trip, so exactly where did that man chose to stay behind? Goh Gun-Hui asked again.

“Where did he choose to stay behind?”

“He told me that he still had business to take care of on Jeju Island.”

“...Are you saying that he didn't even get on the helicopter in the first place?”

While Goh Gun-Hui asked, sounding quite flustered, Baek Yun-Ho smiled sheepishly and nodded his head.

“Yes.”

“How is it that you're able to talk?”

“I just.... can.”

The ant's shadow kept answering Jin-Woo's questions, but regretfully, none of them were much of a help.

The ant monster could talk as a shadow because it knew how to talk when it was still alive – could that be it?

‘...No, wait.’

Jin-Woo shook his head.

Before he was turned into the now-trustworthy knight ‘Iron’, the former Hunter Kim Cheol not only knew how to speak, but he was actually a human being in the first place. Even then, having a conversation with Iron was still impossible.

It was the same story with Min Byung-Gu. He was unable to say a single word before he returned to the void. And then, Fangs also shut his mouth for good after becoming a Shadow Soldier, even though he used to be such a chatty monster while still alive.

So, how come...

How come only this guy could talk?

There was only one obvious difference between this guy and those who couldn't talk.

‘Grades....’

Unlike his other soldiers with grades of 'Elite Knight' or simply 'Knight', this guy came with a new grade called 'Commander'.

It was possible that one would be able to talk after reaching a certain grade. As he didn't have any solid proof yet, this was the most plausible explanation he could think of.

'That means, my boys will all start talking as soon as they level up high enough....'

It seemed that yet another reason was added to the list of 'why the levels of soldiers must be raised up higher'. Jin-Woo thought for a little while, before throwing that one question to the ant's shadow, the one he always wanted to ask his soldiers before.

"I'm the one who killed you."

"..."

"Yet, you still wish to serve me?"

"I...."

A completely unexpected reply came from the ant's shadow.

"I didn't die, but... through the power of my liege... I am reborn."

The shadow then raised his head. And while meeting Jin-Woo's gaze, it continued on.

"Within me... elation... overflows. I shall follow my liege... for eternity."

Ba-dump!

Why did it happen? Was it because he felt the shadow's true feelings?

Jin-Woo's heart pounded powerfully right at that moment when the ant's shadow swore his eternal loyalty. He placed his hand on his chest to somehow calm his wildly beating heart. It quickly regained its usual calmness.

It was then, the ant's shadow lowered his head again and pleaded with Jin-Woo once more.

"Oh, my king..... Please, grant me... a name...."

The talk had reverted back to the beginning.

This sure came across as a rather different experience to Jin-Woo, now that he was hearing the plea of the subject directly from itself, rather than from some prompts of the System.

A name, a name.....

From the get-go, he didn't pay all that much attention to the naming of his soldiers, but....

'But even then, it's a bit too much to call it ant this and ant that, right?'

There were already hundreds of similar ants like him now in Jin-Woo's army, so it wouldn't do for a Knight Commander to be saddled with a name like 'Ant', now would it?

That was why.....

Jin-Woo pondered for a little while, before a smirk formed on his face.

"....Beru."

He recalled the name of an author who became famous through the novel called 'Ants'. (TL note at the end)

He readily made up his mind after only thinking about it for a very short time.

"You name will now be Beru."

After Jin-Woo granted him the new name, Beru lowered his already lowered head even further to the ground as if he was truly moved by the gesture.

"I am grateful... my liege."

The information floating above Beru's head had already been amended by then.

[Beru Lv.1]

Commander grade

'It's done.'

Feeling genuinely pleased with his choice of the name, Jin-Woo turned towards the queen's corpse. Now, it really was the turn of the queen to get her shadow extracted.

Maybe he got a confidence boost from successfully transforming Beru into his Shadow Soldier – because, the queen's Shadow Extraction turned out to be a rather painless affair.

"Rise up."

Kiiaaahhhhk-!

Accompanied by the scream that sounded like the death throes, the Beast Soldier resembling the ant queen emerged out from the shadow.

“Nice!!”

Jin-Woo expressed his delight at the continuous successful extractions, but then, began tilting his head after discovering something rather odd.

‘What’s this?’

His connections to the Shadow Soldiers who were originally ant monsters suddenly grew fainter after the queen’s shadow materialised. It almost felt as if a pale grey fog was covering up the threads connecting them.

“Beru.”

Even before he finished calling it, Beru had already approached Jin-Woo’s side.

Step.

If it weren’t for his Perception Stat that had climbed past the 200 mark, Jin-Woo would never have followed that movement properly with his naked eyes alone. Such a creature was one of his loyal soldiers now. Jin-Woo felt his confidence soaring up even higher from that realisation.

“You know what’s going on here?”

Jin-Woo asked while pointing at the queen’s shadow with his chin. Beru knew everything there was to know when it came to the inner workings of the ant army so it made sense to ask him.

He politely made his reply.

“The ruling of the ant army... it’s the queen’s innate ability.”

‘Aha.’

So, did that mean the authority to control the army of ant shadows would automatically be handed over to the queen?

‘But, that is a bit...’

Even though the queen was subservient to him, he thought that it wasn’t okay to entrust the control of all of his ant soldiers. Because, he’d have to issue orders through the queen every single time.

Jin-Woo scratched his chin for a bit, before asking Beru again.

“Okay, what about the reason for the decrease in the queen’s magic energy?”

“Most of the queen’s magic energy... is for propagation. Propagation is impossible.... without a body, that is why...”

Jin-Woo cut him off there.

“That’s why it only has half of its original magic power?”

“That is correct... my liege.”

By piecing together what Beru had said, the queen didn’t seem to have much of a use for Jin-Woo. After a short deliberation later, he decided to cancel the summoning altogether. He didn’t have any reason whatsoever to keep around a subordinate who had no use but only continued to drain his limited resources, now did he?

Kiiieehhk-!

The queen’s shadow instantly became smoke and scattered in the air.

[Number of stored shadows: 570/570]

His shadow was now packed to the brim with soldiers, so....

‘...So, the only things remaining here are the magic crystals.’

Jin-Woo took a look around him. Top grade magic crystals only seen within rank S Gates were rolling on the floor like common pebbles.

Since there was no one watching here, and he was the one who killed the majority of them, he could have swept them all up if he wanted to do so. However, Jin-Woo gave up on that idea.

He heard that these crystals would be used to compensate the victims, as well as to rebuild the Jeju Island to its former glory. Jin-Woo wasn’t exactly hurting for cash, so he wouldn’t covet after other people’s stuff.

‘Still, I’m sure no one will mind me taking this one.’

Jin-Woo took out the magic crystal from Beru’s original body. It was a beautiful pitch-black magic crystal that resembled a gemstone. After pocketing the magic crystal, Jin-Woo summoned out Kaisel.

Kiiaahjk!

Kaisel flapped its wings and finished getting ready to fly in an instant. Jin-Woo lightly jumped on his back and took one last look at the queen’s chamber.

The place once filled with unbridled chaos was now enveloped in this eerie silence.

‘.....’

The Jeju Island expedition was now over.

Jin-Woo's gaze shifted away from the interior of the chamber and towards the exit.

"To home."

And then, Kaisal powerfully flew up in the air.

REPORT

Kaisel landed in front of the Hunter's Association building.

Kiiaaahk-!

Naturally, stunned folks of the Association all came running outside when a massive monster suddenly descended in the middle of Seoul – not only that, right on the front lawn of the Hunter's Association, no less.

Hunters of the Monitoring Division, normally tasked with detecting the approach of all beings possessing magical energy, also ran outside with various weapons in their hands.

But, their complexions all lost colour after Jin-Woo hopped off from the back of the creature.

'Return.'

Kaisel heeded Jin-Woo's order and immediately disappeared into his shadow.

Meanwhile, people gathered here began recognising who he was.

'W-was that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo's summoned creature?'

'He can even control a monster like that, too??'

All these people had seen Jin-Woo's ability through their TV screens. So, it didn't come as much of a surprise that he could control a monster.

Jin-Woo walked over to an Association employee he recognised and addressed him. This person was a Hunter working for the Monitoring Division and was often seen accompanying the Association President.

"I'd like to speak to the Association President."

You wouldn't normally get to meet the President just because you wanted to. Even a government minister had to wait for a whole week for a meeting with Goh Gun-Hui.

However, who here was brave enough to tell that to the young man in front of their eyes?

A Hunter, who wasn't originally a member of the raid team, suddenly appeared out of nowhere and easily disposed of the ant monster – a monster so powerful that it toyed around with several rank S Hunters.

So, wouldn't the Association President be dying to speak to this man more than anyone else right now?

The Association employee quickly replied.

"The Association President is in the hospital at the moment."

"Is he feeling unwell?"

Jin-Woo asked while remembering that the Association President's health wasn't so good, to begin with. It was possible that he somehow worsened his condition because he watched the raid broadcast.

"No, not at all. He went over to observe the situation with Hunter Cha Hae-In."

Jin-Woo nodded his head. Did that mean it'd be hard to meet him today?

Just as he was preparing to leave, the employee continued on.

"Let me call the President on the phone. If you will, please wait for a little while at the reception room."

"Got it."

Jin-Woo felt relieved. There was something he wanted to tell the President as soon as possible, actually.

Cha Hae-In was admitted to the largest Association-designated Hunter hospital there was. Goh Gun-Hui quietly waited for the examination results, and soon, his personal doctor approached him with some news.

The Association President hurriedly asked.

"How does she look?"

"We haven't performed an in-depth examination yet, but... she seems to be 100% normal, at least outwardly speaking. She's resting comfortably at the moment."

"I see..."

Goh Gun-Hui nodded his head, thinking 'I thought as much' to himself.

The doctor was alongside Goh Gun-Hui when they watched the raid together. Cha Hae-In's current condition was as much of a mystery even for him.

"Her complexion was really poor from the massive haemorrhaging, so how did her condition improve in such a short period of time?"

“...”

Goh Gun-Hui had already been debriefed by the Korean raid team members, but he chose to keep his mouth shut here.

‘Would he even believe me if I tell him?’

...The fact that Hunter Seong Jin-Woo ‘borrowed’ the power of the dead Hunter Min Byung-Gu to heal Cha Hae-In?

Hunter Seong Jin-Woo wanted the camera turned off, because he didn’t want to reveal his powers.

The Association President wasn’t stupid enough to reveal that information so carelessly to other people. Other Hunters were thinking along the same line as well.

“The rank A Healers I had on standby managed to save her.”

“She looked to be in such a precarious position.... Well, it’s a relief that the treatment was carried out in time.”

Thankfully for Goh Gun-Hui, the doctor seemed to have believed him.

“Ah!”

The personal doctor opened his mouth again after recalling something just now.

“Sir, it’s regarding Hunter Seong Jin-Woo.”

Goh Gun-Hui’s ears perked up after Seong Jin-Woo’s name was brought up.

“What about Hunter Seong Jin-Woo?”

The doctor was quick to continue, having seen the light glinting in Goh Gun-Hui’s eyes change like that.

“You know that his mother was a patient in our hospital, yes?”

“The Eternal Sleep disorder, right?”

“That’s correct.”

Goh Gun-Hui did get to read up on Jin-Woo’s family back when the investigation to the youth’s background was still ongoing. He suddenly thought of the worst possible scenario and asked, his expression hardening rapidly.

“It can’t be.... Did she pass on?”

The doctor shook his head.

“The exact opposite?”

“I heard that she actually woke up from the ‘final sleep’ stage and was discharged recently.”

“Are you telling me the truth?!”

“Those in the know are in a huge uproar over this whole thing, sir. We may not have made any official announcement, but well, it did happen in our hospital, so....”

The higher-ups of the hospital naturally saw today’s raid, as well. And that meant they continued to talk about Seong Jin-Woo’s matter, and eventually, even Goh Gun-Hui’s personal doctor got to hear about it.

“But, Eternal Sleep was cured? Was that even possible?”

“I believe this is the first time ever in the world, sir.”

“When did she wake up?”

“Most likely....”

The doctor confirmed the date in his head.

“About five days ago.”

“.....”

Now it made sense.

The day he asked Jin-Woo to join the raid, and the day the youth’s mother woke up, were almost the same.

‘Hunter Seong Jin-Woo’s father went missing inside a Gate, didn’t he?’

A wife who lost her husband to the Gate. Hunter Seong Jin-Woo would’ve found it very hard to leave such a mother behind all alone to participate in the Jeju Island raid. Not to mention, to participate in the subjugation operation that had failed three times in the past as well.

Goh Gun-Hui reflected on his carelessness for failing to check upon his situation.

‘That’s why he couldn’t participate in this raid.’

Jin-Woo’s situation, and the feats he performed today, combined to wash away the misunderstanding that almost managed to block up his chest. Goh Gun-Hui’s heart began racing once more.

He really liked this young man. Such a man was a rare breed, indeed.

It was then, an Association employee approached him.

“Sir.”

“Did something happen?”

“We couldn’t get in touch with Hunter Min Byung-Gu’s family.”

“You mean... His mother?”

“Yes, sir.”

That was to be expected. She learnt of her son’s passing through a d*mn TV. She then called the Association on the phone, her voice trembling non-stop. The Association had no choice but to be honest with her.

“I’ll go and see her personally.”

“Sir, you’re planning to go there personally?”

“A parent is about to hold a funeral for her child without his body. You really think she’s in any state of mind to pick up a phone?”

“B-but, sir.”

“I’ll go and speak to her personally and inform her of everything that happened. And I’ll express my condolences as well.”

“...Understood, sir.”

The employee turned around with a hardened face. But then, his phone began ringing quite noisily and made him stop.

He saw that the call came from the Association, so he got permission from the President to answer it.

“Mm? There’s someone who wishes to speak to the Association President? What?! It’s him?”

Goh Gun-Hui shook his head.

“Tell them I’m not meeting anyone today.”

The employee covered the phone with his hand and quickly spoke up.

“Sir, the person who wishes to speak to you is... Hunter Seong Jin-Woo.”

“Hunter Seong Jin-Woo??”

Goh Gun-Hui opened his eyes wide and retracted what he said just now right away.

“Tell them I’ll be there shortly.”

Jin-Woo got to the Association President’s office under the guidance of an employee. He was then asked rather affectionately as soon as he settled down on the couch.

“Would you like something to drink?”

Jin-Woo was about to decline the offer, only to feel a bit of thirst creeping up on him. Now that he thought about it for a sec, he hadn't taken a sip of water even though he had fought such an intense battle.

“Water will be fine.”

“Thank you very much!”

“...?”

What was he so thankful about?

The employee's face reddened after blurting his words out from sheer nervousness. He placed the bottle of water in front of Jin-Woo and deeply bowed his head.

“If you need anything else, please don't hesitate to call me.”

“I will.”

Jin-Woo thought the employee's attitude was far more cautious and sincere than the last time he came here.

‘It's probably because of the raid broadcast.’

He guessed that the attitude of many people, as well as the way they looked at him, would change greatly from now on. Not too long afterwards, Goh Gun-Hui entered the office.

“Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim!”

Jin-Woo tried to get up, but the Association President Goh Gun-Hui dissuaded the youth from doing so.

Jin-Woo just returned from Jeju Island. And he even fought a mutated ant monster that almost annihilated a team of rank S Hunters.

So, the current Jin-Woo was a VIP among all VIPs.

Goh Gun-Hui was definitely not planning to treat with disrespect a person who saved the lives of South Korea's rank S Hunters.

Goh Gun-Hui settled down on the couch opposite to Jin-Woo, rather than in his usual spot at the seat of the honour.

“I've heard what transpired inside the ant tunnel.”

“Ah, I see.”

In that case, this talk should proceed quite swimmingly, then. Jin-Woo felt that this was for the better. Goh Gun-Hui continued on.

“Also, I’ve been informed on how you got here, as well.”

Countless witnesses saw Kaisel flying now. There was no way the President of the Hunter’s Association wouldn’t hear about it.

“Did you get to Jeju Island while riding on the back of that creature?”

Well, Jin-Woo used ‘Shadow Exchange’ to reach the island, but was there a reason to reveal all of his cards here?

Jin-Woo was rather economical with his words.

“Something like that.”

This was the same thing as him making a confession that the flying monster appearing in Seoul a few nights ago was his doing. But, this would prove to be more convenient if he were to continue riding on Kaisel from now on.

“So, that was the case.”

It was as expected. The Association President nodded his head.

Jin-Woo was able to utilise the powers of dead monsters. So, it’d not be such a strange thing for him to ride around on the back of a creature if he managed to kill a flying monster somewhere.

Goh Gun-Hui’s curiosity had been satisfied now. And it was time to get to the main topic.

“You said you wanted to speak to me....?”

“Yes.”

“Is something the matter?”

“I’ve taken care of all the ants on the island.”

“Excuse me??”

Goh Gun-Hui jumped up from his seat.

“You managed to kill every single one of those ants?!”

“Yes.”

Jin-Woo confidently replied.

“You won’t encounter any problems when entering Jeju Island.”

“But, how....”

No, Goh Gun-Hui could already guess the ‘how’ of it.

The TV camera caught the sight of hundreds of Jin-Woo's summons. If those things combed every inch of Jeju Island, then it wouldn't be a problem for him to annihilate every single ant in such a short period of time.

The important point here was, of course, entry into Jeju Island was possible now.

And it also signified that they would be able to retrieve Hunter Min Byung-Gu's remains resting deep within the ant tunnel, too.

Goh Gun-Hui was greatly troubled by the fact that the remains of Hunter Min Byung-Gu had to be left abandoned there until the ant monsters were all gone, but now....

The ends of his eyes reddened up with emotions. He then wholehearted thanked Jin-Woo.

"Thank you very much, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim."

Inside a suite of South Korea's top luxury hotel.

Although his presence had been buried under the huge news of the Jeju Island raid recently, it was still an undeniable fact that one of the world's most powerful Hunters had taken up a temporary residence there.

Thomas switched off the monitor still playing the video of the raid. He had already seen that recorded video three times by now.

Laura, who stood next to him, asked him. She accompanied him to Korea as his sole subordinate.

"What do you think, sir?"

"Well... it's as you can see."

He leaned against the couch and placed his legs on the coffee table.

Thomas had fair blonde hair and a high nose. A seemingly never-ending happy smile was deeply etched on his sunglasses-wearing face.

"So, are you sure that's the Hunter Mister Hwang was investigating?"

"Yes."

"And he asked you what would happen if he killed someone in Korea?"

"Yes."

Thomas ordered the potential connection between Hwang Dong-Su and Seong Jin-Woo to be secretly investigated as soon as Laura made her report. And, as it turned out, there was only one connection between the two.

That would be Hwang Dong-Su's older brother, Hwang Dong-Seok.

He and Seong Jin-Woo entered the same dungeon together, but only the latter walked out alive, while the former went missing.

No one would question what happened inside a dungeon. That had become common sense throughout the world now.

“So, it's revenge, is it?”

“Most likely.”

“And here I thought that he had no family. He hid it pretty well.”

“I heard that Mister Hwang's brother was meticulous in hiding the family connection, sir.”

“Probably because he was involved in shady stuff, that's why.”

So shady, in fact, it'd greatly affect his own younger brother if the word got out. Laura used her silence to indicate her agreement.

And then... the Jeju Island raid happened.

“I guess it will become far harder to meet Seong Jin-Woo now, what with an incident like that taking place.”

“I believe so.”

Laura replied confidently.

There was only one reason why the Master of Scavenger Guild, as well as one of the most renowned Hunters in the world, Thomas, gave himself some time off and came to this small nation. And that was to meet Seong Jin-Woo.

More specifically, he wanted to find out what might happen if Mister Hwang did get to have a go with Seong Jin-Woo for real.

He told the management of the Guild that he was coming here to scout yet another rank S South Korean Hunter.

“I really wanted to meet him, too. What a shame this is.”

Thomas's voice was thick with the emotion of wistfulness.

Laura cautiously asked him from the side.

“As I thought... It'd be for the best to prevent Mister Hwang from encountering Hunter Seong Jin-Woo, yes?”

“Well.....”

Thomas slowly scratched his chin, before replying to her with a smirk.

“The South Korean government did save Mister Hwang’s life, that’s for sure.”

The Korean government immediately blocked Hwang Dong-Seok from entering the country. After all, he did abandon his mother nation to emigrate to the States as soon as he was evaluated to be a rank S, didn’t he?

The whole thing could’ve turned into an international incident, but Thomas was able to utilise the time earned that way to come and visit Korea first.

Too bad, Mister Hwang wasn’t someone who’d simply give up just because he was refused entry to a country. Especially so, if his purpose was revenge.

In all honesty, Thomas didn’t have a stuffy personality. He had no thoughts of stopping Mister Hwang at the risk of being on the end of his hostility when the latter wanted to avenge the death of his family member.

But then, that man was an important asset to Scavenger Guild. And that was precisely the reason why Thomas thought of finding out the exact skill level of Seong Jin-Woo, who was also ranked S.

Because, it’d prove to be troublesome if Mister Hwang ended up kicking the bucket, instead.

However....

The impression Thomas got from seeing Seong Jin-Woo was that, the American should be thanking the lucky stars right about now.

“No matter what, never let Mister Hwang step a foot inside South Korea. With that, hopefully, these two won’t run into each other.”

“Understood. I’ll also withdraw the legal procedures.”

“I should be the one to talk to Mister Hwang. That friend’s got a fiery personality, so I guess I’ll have to do my best on this one.”

Laura studiously jotted down everything her Guild Master said on a memo pad. But then, a question popped up in her head.

“What if... even after we did all this, the two of them end up fighting.... What will you do then, sir?”

“Laura. Don’t you know me?”

Thomas grinned deeply.

“Mister Hwang is Scavenger Guild’s asset. And Scavenger is my property.”

His lips might be smiling, but the eyes hidden beneath the sunglasses certainly weren't. He always wore a pair of sunglasses to hide his incredibly sharp eyes.

He sat back up straight and lowered his voice.

“I will never forgive anyone who dares to touch my property. Even if that's the American government itself.”

One person's power equalled that of an entire country.

His name was Thomas Andre.

One of only five in the entire world. This was the confidence that only a Special Authority-rank Hunter, an international powerhouse, could possess.

REPORT

“Let us escort you back home, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim.”

The Association President Goh Gun-Hui hurriedly made that offer as Jin-Woo stood up to leave.

“If you wait for a minute, one of our agents will bring a car around. How about going home with that, instead?”

“....”

Jin-Woo had fully understood that the Hunter’s Association, and especially its boss man, Goh Gun-Hui, were feeling extremely grateful towards him.

However, that didn’t mean he wanted to be treated like royalty even in something as minor as this.

It wasn’t as if his home was too far away and he needed to borrow a car, either. If he wanted to save on time, he might as well ride on Kaisel. Or run all the way back home, which would actually be quicker, instead.

That’s why Jin-Woo declined the offer.

“Thank you, but I’ll be fine.”

However, Goh Gun-Hui shook his head and insisted on it.

“I believe that... it’ll be more convenient for you to get a ride home.”

“What do you mean by that....?”

Goh Gun-Hui approached the window and spoke to him.

“Could you please come over this way?”

Jin-Woo also walked over to the window, and that’s when he saw it.

....Outside the window.

Less than one hour ago, the front entrance of the Association used to be sparsely populated. But now, a huge crowd of people had gathered there and he couldn’t see any openings at all.

“All these people came here to see you, Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim. They have heard that you came for a visit in the Association.”

Jin-Woo didn't have to ask how these people knew.

'Well, I did fly on Kaisal to get here, so....'

In this day and age, everyone walked around with a minimum of one camera on their persons. The images of Jin-Woo riding on Kaisal, and disembarking in front of the Association, spread through the medium of SNS like wildfire. And sure enough, online reporters were also among those who heard of the news.

Just one headline was all that's needed. The article itself wasn't even that long, either.

'Who is the owner of the monster that landed in the Association?'

The article stated that the monster was definitely not what one would call average, and that it was jet-black like a shadow. Finally, the article went on to posit that it was most likely one of Jin-Woo's summoned creatures, as it looked similar to what millions saw on their TV sets.

Those who heard the news and came here to confirm the truth, and those who only wished to meet Jin-Woo in person, combined to create this massive throng of people gathering right on the front lawn of the Association building.

A flood of emotions welled up inside Jin-Woo as he stared at all these people.

Goh Gun-Hui also stared at the crowd in silence for a while, before he calmly opened his mouth.

"I'm sure that you're aware of it by now... Our countrymen had been thirsting for a victory."

South Korea became the sole nation on Earth who lost a part of their land to monsters after a catastrophic dungeon break occurred on Jeju Island four years ago.

Many countries outwardly expressed their solidarity but inwardly, they were mocking the Korean Hunters for their uselessness. By the time the third subjugation operation ended in failure, that sentiment reached its peak.

Two years of humiliation later....

People learned of the news that the fourth subjugation attempt would be a joint operation with the Japanese. There were some sceptical voices mocking the Koreans for their inability to deal with the monsters without the aid of the Japanese. Unfortunately, that was the actual hard truth.

But then....

The mighty Japanese and their twenty-plus rank S Hunters turned tail and ran away from the raid. Yet, Jin-Woo suddenly made his appearance along with his black soldiers. It was understandable that people would go absolutely crazy about him.

Exactly like how one would quench his thirst in an oasis, the citizens witnessed Jin-Woo's feats and threw away their sense of powerlessness. Many viewers had to pour out onto the streets, unable to contain their unbridled joy. And when they heard of Jin-Woo's whereabouts, they ended up running over here.

“Of course, I’m sure you can also fly away using your monster.”

Goh Gun-Hui gently chuckled from the side.

“However, I believe that you should go downstairs in consideration of the crowd. Because, the people... need a hero, you see.”

Jin-Woo pushed open the glass door and exited from the Association building. All chaos suddenly died down right away.

Everyone gathered here kept their mouths closed and quietly stared at Jin-Woo.

“....”

“.....”

Many areas of Jin-Woo's clothes still sported traces of battles he fought.

There were blotches of ant monster's bodily liquid, and some part had been torn open at the hands of the mutated ant monster, too. However, not one person here made fun of Jin-Woo's current appearance.

No, the citizens simply stared at him in silence while feeling a certain boiling something well up from deep within their chests.

Jin-Woo quietly stared back at them as well. Just as the heavy silence descended between him and the citizens....

“Hunter-nim, please. This way.”

Woo Jin-Cheol was now tasked with guiding Jin-Woo, and he faithfully carried out his duty.

The agents of the Monitoring Division went ahead and created a path forward while asking the crowd for their understanding; citizens moved aside without any complaints whatsoever.

However, there was a sole exception.

A grandpa walked in front of Jin-Woo when there wasn't that much distance left to the waiting car.

"Hunter-nim...."

One of the Monitoring Division's agents tried to stop the grandpa, but he hesitated somewhat after seeing the tear-soaked face of the old man, before he had to take a step back. Because, Jin-Woo held the agent back, that's why.

The grandpa was finally able to stand before Jin-Woo. Thick tears streamed down his face and he called out to the young Hunter in a choked-up voice.

"Hunter-nim.... Thanks to you... My son, he can close his eyes and rest now."

The grandpa faltered as strength left his legs. Jin-Woo quickly supported him before he fell.

The grandpa held on to Jin-Woo's hands and arms and kept bowing his head over and over again.

"Thank you, Hunter-nim..... Truly, I....."

"I only did what had to be done. Please, do try to stand up."

Woo Jin-Cheol helped with assisting the grandpa, and then entrusted the still-crying old man to his subordinate. He leaned in closer and whispered to Jin-Woo.

"Hunter-nim. The crowd is getting larger. Perhaps we should get going...."

"Alright."

Jin-Woo nodded his head. Woo Jin-Cheol opened the car's rear door and held it there.

Jin-Woo took one last look at the crowd before climbing into the car.

It was unknown who started it first.

Someone within the crowd quickly lowered his head as soon as meeting Jin-Woo's gaze as a sign of a thank you, but then, everyone followed suit and did the same. Greetings filled with genuine appreciation came back to him wherever his eyes swept by.

".....Hunter-nim."

Woo Jin-Cheol's anxious voice woke Jin-Woo up and only then did he fully climb into the car.

Woo Jin-Cheol entered the front passenger's seat while his subordinate settled into the driver's. Eventually, the car drove slowly away from the Association's grounds.

Without saying a word, Jin-Woo gazed outside the window.

The crowd kept looking at the car right up until it could no longer be seen.

He leaned back on the seat and placed his hand on his pounding chest.

Ba-dump, ba-dump, ba-dump....

His heart was beating fast as the wonderful sense of accomplishment filled him up.

He initially felt at a loss when the Association President suggested that he should meet with the crowd. But now, he was glad that he didn't just walk past them.

It felt like every single gaze he met were his reward for a job well done.

It was then....

"Ah!"

Woo Jin-Cheol hurriedly looked behind him after Jin-Woo inadvertently cried out.

"Did something happen, Hunter-nim??"

"....No, it's nothing important."

Jin-Woo remembered only now that he broke the TV without an explanation, just so he could reduce the shock his mom might feel. He helplessly massaged his forehead.

'Just how am I supposed to explain all this?'

Sure enough....

He switched his phone back on to find 13 missed calls from home.

It was pandemonium in online forums, too. But, that was to be expected.

The Jeju Island subjugation raid was the very first time Jin-Woo made his public appearance, ever since getting his rank S licence. It was the same thing as him making his public debut.

And during his first public appearance, he overwhelmed the mutated monster ant that freaked out everyone, and then, swept away thousands of ants blocking the escape route with his summoned creatures.

Like the excited fans pouring out into the streets after a match, those who witnessed the raid broadcast all logged online to voice their opinions.

└ Wow.... I'm speechless....

└ But, I thought that you can't call out that many summoned creatures?

└ My ten-year-old tumour got cured from watching the assault of Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim's summoned creatures.

└ By the way, mister? That tumour must've been a minor one since you had it for only ten years.

└ It was so cool. It was the best.

└ I lost my parents four years ago on Jeju Island. I know that Seong Jin-Woo Hunter-nim won't read this, but....

The operation managed to capture the interest of all South Korean citizens. It was no wonder that various online forums were overflowing with the stories related to the raid. And Jin-Woo's name always cropped up in those discussions.

Also, a hot debate regarding how high Jin-Woo's skills should be rated opened up among the netizens famed for their love of comparisons.

└ With his powers, shouldn't we say that our country now also has a Special Authority-rank in our midst?

└ Eiii. With only that? You should limit your intake of Kimchi soup per day. (TL: a Korean idiom, "drinking Kimchi soup". Means you're putting the cart before the horse.)

└ But, why not? He almost solo cleared a rank S dungeon, and the gap between him and other rank S Hunters is pretty vast, you know?

└ Hunter Seong Jin-Woo's record isn't extensive enough. If his skills are for real, then people will acknowledge him sooner or later.

└ In any case, man, he was so freaking awesome.

└ A rank E is only a bit better than a regular person, so how can someone like that become so strong?

└ Is Hunter Seong Jin-Woo a Re-Awakened?

└ Lots of people don't seem to know that Seong Jin-Woo is a Re-Awakened. He applied to have his private information protected right away, so.....

Of course, there were some people among many who felt mighty uncomfortable about Jin-Woo, as well.

└ But, hold up.... If Seong Jin-Woo participated in the raid from the get-go, Min Byung-Gu wouldn't have died, right?

↳ He wanted to be left out in the beginning, so why did he show up in the middle?

↳ Looks like guys above mine haven't seen the article put up by the Association explaining themselves yet.

↳ What article? Links please.

The contents of the article went like this.

Even though he was ranked S, Jin-Woo lacked experience in entering high-ranked dungeons. Therefore, the Association chose to keep him in reserve nearby in case of an emergency, instead of making him join the raid team from the beginning. Once the situation became dire, they decided to insert him right away.

It was a hastily-cooked up story, but it proved to be enough to convince the masses.

'This is the best I can do for Hunter Seong Jin-Woo.'

Goh Gun-Hui's quick response was able to stop the sharp arrows of criticism from pointing at Jin-Woo, while also managing to keep the latter's private affairs out of public limelight.

Thanks to that, some people denounced the inability of the Association to properly gauge the capabilities of their own Hunters, but no one pointed the fingers of blame in Jin-Woo's direction.

No, Jin-Woo's acclaim only rose even further in the eyes of the public.

The situation was at its worst point, with the Japanese team tasked with buying time having withdrawn from the island and the Korean team facing certain annihilation. Yet, he didn't complain once and jumped into the ant tunnel all alone.

↳ I wouldn't have been able to go in there, even if someone pushed me from the back, 'cuz I'd get scared sh*tless. Other rank S Hunters were getting massacred in there, so why should I?

↳ Agreed.

↳ What did he think about when he entered there?

↳ Shouldn't Seong Jin-Woo be the true role model of all the Hunters out there?

↳ Shouldn't those idiots slagging off Seong Jin-Woo for not participating beg for his forgiveness right about now?

↳ LOLOLOL That's why you shouldn't yap on like that when you don't know anything.

Jin-Woo was fast becoming the most famous Hunter in South Korea, much to his fluster. Even though he had requested for the protection of his private information early on, his fame continued to soar higher.

Two days later.

Military personnel and Hunters landed on Jeju Island to recover the remains of Hunter Min Byung-Gu.

They were from the Yeongnam District's Guild, the 'Knight Order'. Although they were one of the five large Guilds representing South Korea, they lacked a rank S Hunter in their midst and therefore, couldn't participate in the raid.

They sensed their reputation diminishing from this event, and volunteered for this mission. Thanks to that, the matters had progressed rather swiftly.

Hunters had to take the lead after seeing the specially-trained soldiers hesitating somewhat.

"Oii, stop it and come on, already."

"I'm telling you, there isn't a single detectable magical energy on this island. Argh, you guys are far too distrustful."

Hunters walking forward far up ahead waved at the soldiers. The hesitant soldiers cautiously followed from behind, but they still kept their guards up.

From the Hunters' perspective, that sure was one frustrating sight to see, but there was no helping it. Regular people couldn't sense magical energy, nor were they able to fight against the monsters. So they could only be overly cautious like that.

"Tsk, tsk."

The Guild Master of the Knight Order tutted unhappily, and placed his hands on his waist while scanning his surroundings.

'Huh....'

His jaw dropped all on its own.

The closer they got to the vicinity of the ant tunnel, the greater the number of dead ants strewn about on the ground.

Nay, they resembled small mountains now, instead.

The Vice Guild Master, a close friend and a fellow Hunter who he fought alongside for a long time, helplessly shook his head.

“Hyung-nim.... Can you believe this? You telling me that a lone Hunter did all of this?”

“.....”

The Knight Order Guild also took part back during the third subjugation operation along with countless other Hunters. That’s why they knew better than anyone here how scary these creatures could be.

“To think that those ants ended up in this sorry state....”

“Wow.... That kid, Seong Jin-Woo or whatever his name was, he’s no ordinary man, that’s for sure.”

The Vice Guild Master continued to look around at his surroundings and spoke while sounding a bit fed up.

“How did he even manage to wipe out every single ant on this huge island??”

“I wonder about that myself.”

The elite members of the Knight Order, pretty well versed in all things monster-related, could only gawk in astonishment at the piles upon piles of dead monsters.

Eventually, though, their astonished steps brought them to the entrance of the ant tunnel.

“Hyung-nim, I can see it.”

“Yup, me too.”

Hunters came to a stop in front of the ant tunnel so they could enter it together with the soldiers. The latter group was still a bit of distance away. Since there wasn’t much to do during the wait, the Guild Master lit up a cigarette. The Vice Guild Master also lit one up for himself.

But then....

The Guild Master furrowed his brows after seeing that lit cigarette powerlessly fall from the Vice’s lips.

“Oii. What’s the matter?”

“H-hyung-nim!!”

The Vice Guild Master urgently slapped the Master’s shoulder as he pointed to the front. The latter finally realised that something was off and quickly turned his head to the front.

“Heok!!”

A distinct shadow of a man appeared in the entrance of the tunnel.

The wide-eyed Guild Master flinched in surprise, before opening his mouth up to speak.

“Y-you, who... are you?”

REPORT

The Master of the Knight Order Guild, Park Jong-Su, had to doubt his own eyes. Because, there was a good-looking foreign man leisurely strolling out of the ant tunnel's entrance at that very moment.

But, that was just impossible.

'The ants being completely wiped out should still be a top secret, so how could this be??'

Everything found rolling around on the ground was literally the top-grade magic crystals. So, the Association decided to keep the annihilation of the ants a secret in order to prevent those enterprising souls from taking their chances here, at least until they could come up with a suitable solution to this problem.

So, only a few select people knew that there were no monsters left on this island.

'It's only to the extent of the Association entrusting the mission to us, the military, and then....'

And then, Hunter Seong Jin-Woo.

However, Park Jong-Su could confidently bet his entire life savings that the man standing in front of the ant tunnel was definitely not Seong Jin-Woo.

How could anyone forget that man's face? Not only was he the most talked-about Hunter in South Korea, but he also occupied the top spot on the Knight Order's must-scout list.

Park Jong-Su asked again.

'I asked you who you are! Why are you coming out from there?'

It was unknown whether the foreigner didn't understand a single word coming out of his mouth or wasn't planning to answer in the first place. No, that man just stood there, smiling brightly.

The Knight Order's Vice Master, Jeong Yun-Tae, got right next to Park Jong-Soo, his suspicious eyes firmly locked on the foreigner.

'Hyung-nim. Is that guy even a human?'

“I.... I’m not sure, myself.”

They couldn’t sense any magic energy emission from the mysterious man, so he couldn’t have been a Hunter nor a monster.... But, for some reason, he was also emitting this strange aura.

Jeong Yun-Tae always had been the ‘act first, talk later’ type of a guy. But even he had to take a step back and cautiously observe his surroundings after sensing the ominous aura.

Unfortunately, soldiers didn’t possess the Hunter-like sensory perception. They belatedly discovered the foreigner’s presence and hurriedly raised their firearms.

Park Jong-Su quickly dissuaded them, fearing that they might end up inadvertently killing someone.

“Oii, oii! Don’t shoot! He’s not a monster!”

“Is he a human, then?”

“Well, that is.... Maybe?”

Park Jong-Su could only nod his head with a somewhat unconvinced expression.

‘You can only be a human being if you’re not a monster.’

Park Jong-Su’s limited scope of knowledge meant that he could only arrive at this faulty conclusion.

The military commander briefly nodded his head.

“Understood. From here onwards, we’ll handle the affairs of that person.”

“Pardon me? I thought you guys came here to take Hunter Min Byung-Gu’s remains back home?”

“Our orders were to secure the remains of Hunter Min Byung-Gu, as well as to control the situation on the island itself.”

Park Jong-Su stepped back, having understood the gist of it.

If they weren’t dealing with monsters or other Hunters then the Knight Order didn’t have to get involved here. Besides, they wouldn’t get mired in unnecessary headaches this way, too.

The commander shouted at the mystery man.

“You are currently inside a restricted area. Please follow my orders to the letter or you’ll be fired upon.”

“...”

The mystery man continued to smile, not a single hint of nervousness visible on his face.

Gulp.

Soldiers swallowed their saliva while thinking to themselves, “Are we really going to open fire at him?”

This was an expected response from these soldiers who had never pulled the trigger on another human being before.

Hunters were also carrying tense expressions now. They began thinking that there was something strange going on with this situation when that mysterious man continued to smile like that.

It was then – the man slid his hands inside the trouser pockets.

‘That man.... Is he really a human being?’

Could anyone stay so nonchalant when these many guns were pointing at them?

Park Jong-Su’s expression gradually hardened. Meanwhile, the nervousness of the soldiers reached their peak when they could no longer see the mysterious man’s hands.

“Hold your fire!! Hold your fire! Not yet!”

A thick vein popped up on the commander’s neck as he shouted at his soldiers.

But, then....

“Commander, look!”

The commander quickly turned his head towards the mysterious man as soon as he heard that urgent call. That man was slowly opening his mouth.

“...??”

He couldn’t understand the language being spoken here.

It wasn’t that he had never heard of it, but more like it didn’t even originate from Earth, to begin with, judging from the way that man sounded and how he enunciated the words.

“What?”

“What is he saying?”

While the soldiers were at a loss from this situation they had never encountered before, Park Jong-Su's lips were busy flapping open all on their own.

“M-monster language??”

One could sometimes meet intelligent monsters in higher-ranked dungeons. What that man said sounded almost like the language spoken by those creatures.

“Which means, is that....”

Before the commander could finish his sentence with “....is that a monster?” the mystery man pulled his hands out from the pockets.

Blam-!

An ear-splitting boom reverberated throughout the land.

When that mysterious man behaved in a suspicious manner, one of the well-trained special forces soldiers ended up reflexively squeezing the trigger.

‘Heok!’

The commander's stunned eyes quickly locked on to the man.

The bullet, failing to dig into the man's smooth forehead, fell to the ground with a light thud. The smile on his face was already gone.

“It, it's a monster!”

“It's not a human!”

Their cries lasted only for a brief moment because, as soon as that man's eyes changed colour to red, everyone here felt an incredible pressure tightly squeezing down on their hearts.

“Ah, ah-!!”

“Argh....”

But, then...

Snap!

Like puppets with their strings cut, the soldiers and Hunters all collapsed to the ground along with the sound of a crisp finger snap. That mysterious man wasn't responsible for this event.

He looked behind him and testily spoke up.

“What do you think you're doing?”

There was a short-statured middle-aged man standing behind him now.

“There’s no need to make a commotion here. I just put them all to sleep.”

The middle-aged man also wasn’t speaking in the language of humans.

“...Indeed.”

The mysterious man sounded rueful, but still agreed with his new guest nonetheless. The middle-aged man shifted his gaze towards the interior of the ant tunnel and asked.

“Did you confirm it?”

The mysterious man nodded his head.

“How strange.”

The middle-aged man’s gaze now shifted over to the collapsed Hunters.

“Why is ‘he’ helping out these humans?”

“Who knows what ‘he’ is thinking? If you’re curious, why don’t you go ask ‘him’ personally?”

“...I’ll decline.”

The middle-aged man shook his head before continuing on.

“We commence with the hunt as planned. Nothing has changed.”

“Got it.”

The middle-aged man lightly twirled his hand in the air. A black Gate small enough to let a person through opened up there.

“Oh, by the way.”

The middle-aged man stopped briefly and looked behind him when the mysterious man called out to him.

“I think one of them is here.”

“You mean, here in South Korea?”

“Since we’re here, how about we take care of that guy, first?”

The middle-aged man closed his eyes slightly. Soon, the information the mysterious man was talking about flowed into his head. However, the middle-aged man didn’t look wholly convinced.

“If it’s around here.... Let’s leave it to his hands.”

“You don’t want to get involved, is that it?”

“It’s fine to think of it that way. It doesn’t matter.”

The middle-aged man and his trailing voice soon disappeared along with the Gate itself.

After confirming that the black Gate was closed for good, the mysterious man muttered to himself.

“What a coward....”

He took a look at all the unmoving humans lying on the ground. They were only knocked out for a little while and should regain their consciousness soon enough.

“Hmph.”

The man snorted derisively and extended his hand towards the humans. However...

‘.....’

He quietly withdrew his hand.

“Well, there’s no need to raise a commotion.”

He also entered a small Gate and disappeared from the spot, as well.

Late at night.

Jin-Woo was sitting on his bedroom floor, busy taking a closer look at his shortsword. Currently, he was holding the ‘Demon King’s Shortsword’, a weapon that proved its worth several times over during the battle against the mutated ant monster.

[Item: Demon King’s Shortsword]

Rarity: S

Type: Shortsword

Attack: +220

A shortsword taken from the Demon King, Baran. Using two ‘Demon King’s Shortswords’ will activate a set effect.

Set effect ‘Two Becomes One’: Extra attack power equal to the current Strength Stat will be added to each shortsword.

His eyes almost bulged out when he first saw that attack power, as well as its additional attribute. In fact, he now forgot how many times he re-read that information.

His reaction was justified, though. The ‘Baruka’s Dagger’, a rarity A item, only boasted the attack power of 110, after all. He searched through the Store just in case, but not many of the rarity S daggers being sold there exceeded 200 in their attack power.

‘Not only that....’

He really liked the fact that, when wielding both Demon King’s Shortswords at once, his Strength Stat would be converted and added to the weapons’ existing attack power.

His current Strength Stat had far exceeded the 200 mark, and was fast closing in on 250. And now, such a high Stat value would be added to the weapon’s attack power as well?

If he omitted the last digit and added up the numbers, then he’d still get to a frightening four times the attack power of what ‘Baruka’s Dagger’ possessed.

‘This is why it felt so good when I swung them around back then.’

Other Hunters would froth in their mouths like madmen and pounce on these shortswords, if they were able to see the item’s information like he could.

What about the longsword’s specs, then?

[Item: Demon King’s Longsword]

Rarity: S

Type: Longsword

Attack: +350

A longsword containing the power of the Demon King, Baran. Swinging the sword will activate the effect, ‘Tempest of White Flames’.

Effect ‘Tempest of White Flames’: Summons a persistent thunderstorm within the designated area.

A longsword had to be wielded with both of his hands, while he could hold one shortsword each in his individual hands. This meant that, quite obviously, the former would boast better attack damage than the latter.

However, the additional effect the longsword had been blessed with was not ‘obvious’ at all.

‘I can perform an AOE attack just by swinging this thing?’

It was a weapon that would no doubt prove its worth during a fight against multiple opponents.

He still felt chills run down his spine whenever he thought back to how Baran's magic attacks rendered his Shadow Soldiers into a bunch of helpless sitting ducks.

Of course, the sword's effect wasn't as good as Baran's magic, but it was still an excellent trump card to hold onto, nonetheless.

'If it weren't for my dagger skills, I might even consider using this longsword, instead....'

Jin-Woo was about to take a swing with the sword, only to stop himself in time.

'.....'

The hours were getting late; but then, you'd still wake up from your sleep in sheer fright when a lightning strikes in the room next to yours, now wouldn't you?

He didn't want to shock his mother any more than he had already. So, he cautiously put the sword down.

'Well, what a relief it was, at least.'

Indeed, it was a relief that his mother didn't object to his decision.

That day, Jin-Woo explained everything that happened to him to his mother, minus the stuff about the System, of course.

He told her that, he coincidentally went through a Re-Awakening and became a rank S Hunter, and that he'd like to continue working as one in the future, too.

Mom was worried about him but eventually, decided to support her son all the way.

The sole condition his mom put forward was that he was forbidden from pushing himself too far.

'But, well, if I'm in a situation where I have to push myself to that extent, then....'

Jin-Woo shook his head since his imagination was about to take him to a pretty dark and horrifying place.

It was then, he abruptly remembered something else his mom told him.

Mom added that she had never heard of someone else's voice before and after that day, as well.

'I guess Mom still hasn't gotten over Dad yet.'

Even then, his mother didn't try to stop her only son from being a Hunter. It was proof that she trusted him. Jin-Woo didn't plan on betraying that trust any time soon.

Survival.

That had always been his priority, his end goal.

He only got to this place precisely because he didn't give up and struggled right till the end during one of the most dangerous moments in his life.

'...Alright.'

Now that his biggest worry, his mom saying no, had been addressed, there was nothing stopping him from entering dungeons now. He'd establish his own Guild, monopolise high-ranked dungeons and quickly raise his levels even higher.

Jin-Woo's heart began beating faster and faster.

'Well, now I have a different reason to raise my levels, don't I?'

Shururuk...

Igrit revealed himself after Jin-Woo called him out.

This guy had been with him for the longest time out of all his soldiers.

'Not only that....'

He was also the lone Knight-grade soldier the System gifted him with.

In other words, one could say that Igrit was the closest to the System out of all his soldiers currently.

"I'm sure you'll be able to talk once your grade goes up, right?"

Jin-Woo had so many things he wanted to ask Igrit. Of course, he couldn't hear any answers from his trusty knight yet.

"..."

Igrit replied with silence, as usual.

If silence could be seen as words, then wouldn't this guy qualify to be the most talkative soldier in the whole world?

Jin-Woo smirked to himself and scratched the side of his head. He then carefully picked up the Demon King's weapons to store them back in his Inventory.

'Inventory....?'

But then, Jin-Woo's eyes caught a flash of light being reflected off an object.

‘...What was that?’

Jin-Woo’s eyes opened wider.

An item was gleaming brightly inside his Inventory.

Chapter 128 Fin.

REPORT

The mystery item was a black key.

The key he found inside the ‘Cursed’ Random Box was shining brightly as if to remind him of where it had been hiding all along.

Jin-Woo stared somewhat dazedly at that arresting sight before he cautiously put the weapons in his arms down on the floor again. He then reached into the Inventory and tightly grasped the black key.

‘.....’

And, when he opened his hand again....

[Item: Key to the Karutenon Temple]

Rarity: ??

Type: Key

‘You have met the required condition.’

A key allowing you entry into the Karutenon Temple. It can be used at the designated Gate.

The location of the designated Gate will be revealed after the predetermined time has been reached.

Remaining time: 417:06:52

The item information he couldn’t see before was now filling up his view.

‘...Karutenon Temple?’

Jin-Woo began tilting his head in confusion.

What was going on here? He was pretty certain that he had never heard of that name before. So how come it sounded so familiar to him?

‘No, hold on. I... have heard of it before.’

He carefully combed through the maze of his memories until he finally recalled what he was searching for, and his brows shot up in response.

‘The dual dungeon!!’

More specifically, that name was etched on a stone tablet held by a statue, found in the ancient temple located right at the end of the dual dungeon.

The memories of that fateful day were coming back to him one by one.

‘Right, definitely....’

The voice of Song Chi-Yeol ahjussi, as he read the first line of that stone tablet, suddenly rang so vividly around in his ears.

[“The laws of the Karutenon Temple.”]

Indeed, that stone tablet’s texts indicated that the name of the temple filled with those terrifying statues was none other than ‘Karutenon’.

It couldn’t have been a simple coincidence that the name carved into that stone tablet, and the name of the temple in the key’s information, was exactly the same.

Which could mean.....

‘I can go back inside that place with this key?!’

Jin-Woo’s eyes grew wider in stunned silence.

The memories of that day, indistinct and hard to recall as if they were enveloped in a veil of fog, suddenly returned to him in their full, gory detail.

‘Could it be....?’

No, this was no longer in the category of ‘Could it be’ anymore. The System was definitely summoning him – summoning him back to the place where it all began.

The key that emitted the bright light all on its own, perhaps fearing the distinct possibility of him never bothering to read its information; and then, there was the name of the location where this key was supposed to be used, written so clearly that he’d never miss it.

No matter how he tried to slice it, there was little doubt that the System was summoning him there.

Oddly enough, Jin-Woo was getting curious about something else as well. Why was this happening now, of all times?

‘Is it somehow related to the quests I received from the Demon’s Castle?’

This black key, and the ‘Cursed’ Random Box it came from, was the ‘unknown reward’ he chose to receive at the end of the ‘Collect the Souls of Demons! (1)’ quest.

Hoping that maybe there was a connection here, he quickly checked the ‘unknown reward’ he got from the ‘Collect the Souls of Demons! (2)’ quest.

‘Title.’

Along with the familiar “Tti-ring!” of the mechanical beep, the information regarding his new Title, the one he got as the reward, rose up to his view.

[Title: Demon Hunter]

‘You have not satisfied its conditions.’

He hoped that something might have changed, but well, too bad; it was the exact same story as the first time he received that Title.

‘Okay, so that one wasn’t it.’

up, he began reading the item descriptions of the Demon Sovereign’s Accessory set, which he got to complete after killing the Demon King, Baran.

[Item: Demon Sovereign’s Ring]

Rarity: S

Type: Accessory

Perception +20. Intelligence +20.

When worn together with ‘Demon Sovereign’s Earrings’ and ‘Demon Sovereign’s Necklace’, set bonuses will be unlocked.

Set bonus effect 1. All Stats +5

Set bonus effect 2. All Stats +10

He took a closer look at the information provided, wondering if another, hidden, set effect had been unlocked, but that wasn’t it, either.

‘In that case....’

There was only one other possibility remaining now, and Jin-Woo shifted his gaze towards the information appearing above his Title column, towards the final suspect.

[Name: Seong Jin-Woo]

[Level: 100]

[Class: Shadow Sovereign]

[Title:.....]

Out of all of those, his gaze stopped moving at his level.

There it was, his level ‘100’, the one he just barely got to reach after massacring every single ant monster, as well as every egg and larva found on the island of Jeju.

‘The condition this key’s been talking about has to be this.’

That was the most plausible explanation he could come up with.

Because he could take out, or put back, any item inside Inventory with nothing but his thoughts, he’d never really paid much attention to what was inside his storage. Unless he got a new toy he needed to put away, of course.

That was most likely why he only got to discover the changes to this key a couple of days after he reached level 100.

Heck, if it wasn’t for him suddenly coming down with an urge to spring clean his Inventory after he took out those weapons from there earlier, he wouldn’t even have discovered the key’s presence, at least not for a long while.

Good thing that he discovered it before it was far too late.

‘417 hours... that’s about 17 days from now. I still have over two weeks left.’

The System hadn’t lied to him once until now. So, the Gate in question would definitely open up in the location as noted in the item’s information.

‘I gotta start preparing myself....’

Just as those thoughts raced past in his head, Jin-Woo gasped out in surprise.

‘Hold on... was I really planning to walk in there again?’

“Ha, haha...”

A wry chuckle leaked out of his mouth without him realising it.
